57,192. Then in that branch what would his aspirations and expectations of promotion be if this new scheme were put into operation?—They might range over the service as a whole, but they would be confined to that service.

2 June 1915.]

MR. CHRISTOPHER JOHNSTON BISSET.

[Continued.]

57,193. But in that service what could he legitimately or naturally expect?—In that service one entering might expect to reach one of the better-paid posts as depute and possibly to be appointed as Sheriff Clerk.

57,194. You have told us that preferably you think the Sheriff Clerk himself should be a solicitor?—Yes.

57,195. But apart from that a man might even get to that post?—Yes.

57,196. Is there any legal obstacle at present to a young man on the Sheriff Clerk's staff being promoted from one particular place to another, from one Sheriff Clerk's staff to another Sheriff Clerk's staff?—No, there is no legal obstacle.

57,197. Could nothing be done in the direction of stimulating such a practice short of creating a Civil Service basis underlying it?—The difficulty is that each Sheriff Clerk appoints the members of his own staff, and you cannot get over that unless you make it a single staff and a single system.

57,198. Supposing it were made a single staff, is the promotion to be automatic, or how is it to be regulated?—I suggest that it should be regulated by the Committee.

57,199. Then if a young man went into the Sheriff Clerk's staff at Forfar, would it be the duty of the Committee to keep a fatherly eye on him, and in due time have him put to Edinburgh or Glasgow?—Yes.

57,200. I am asking, as I say, purely for information. Would this Committee be permanently and continuously engaged in considering the proper appointments for this staff?—You are dealing with a staff which is not large in itself—220 or so—and not many vacancies will occur in the course of a year, so that it does not appear to present much difficulty.

57,201. Upon the occurrence of any vacancy your suggestion is, that this Committee might fill it up by promotion?—Yes.

57,202. Your suggestion of a Civil Service basis would also, I gather, import better conditions as regards pension?—Yes.

57,203. And probably better conditions as regards salary?—Yes.

57,204. Those objects, I suppose, might be effected if the Treasury so willed it, without putting the staff on a Civil Service basis?—Yes.

57,205. What I rather wanted to get from you was, apart from these naturally coveted advantages, what advantages the young men would get over what they have now got. You have told me that you think they would be more freely promoted by the Committee from one place to another than they are at present. Is there anything else that occurs to you that would be a new feature of advantage to them?—No, nothing else. It is really a question of promotion, increment, salary, and pension.

57,206. I think I understand that. Your own commission, you say, you think was signed by the Secretary for Scotland?—Yes.

57,207. But I suppose there is no doubt that the appointments of Sheriff Clerks are really made by the Lord Advocate?—There is no doubt about that.

57,208. And so long as matters are not put on a Civil Service basis, I understand you have nothing to say against the method of appointment?—No.

57,209. A question was put to you about political appointments. I do not propose to discuss the general question at this moment, but I will ask you this one question: Has it ever occurred in your experience that a solicitor of no particular party views, and of outstanding excellence, who wanted to be a Sheriff Clerk, has been passed over in favour of a prominent party politician who was a solicitor and wanted the post?—As a matter of fact, the men who aspire to such posts are usually the men who have been associated in some way or other with politics in the county. For that reason, probably, quite a number of suitable and eligible men do not apply, and do not think of the posts at all.

57,210. Such a case as I put to you has not occurred in your experience?—It may have occurred, but it is not within my own personal knowledge.

57,211. (Mr. Boutwood.) To go back to Lord Dundas's last question, I suppose, as a matter of fact, you would not know, except quite exceptionally, if such a case had occurred, because you do not know what names go before the Lord Advocate?—No, I do not.

57,212. (Mr. Graham Wallas.) You told Lord Salvesen's Committee that, at that time, only 60 out of the 150 clerks to Sheriff Clerks, who were not deputes, received salaries of over 60*l.* a year?—Yes.

57,213. Is that roughly true now, do you think?—I do not think there has been any substantial improvement since that time.

57,214. The majority of those people are doing whole-time work?—Many of them.

57,215. Those salaries are disastrously low?—Yes, they are very low.

57,216. With regard to any of those people—the better-paid deputes, say—does the Treasury lay down any regulation in assigning you a sum of money for their salaries, that they shall give their full time to the work?—No.

57,217. Then the question whether the clerk who receives a portion of the Treasury grant for office expenses gives his full time to the work represented by that grant is a matter purely for the Sheriff Clerk to consider?—Yes.

57,218. If, in fact, a particular Sheriff Clerk received a considerable quantity of money out of the Treasury grant and gave the whole of his time to his private work, it would be nobody's business to complain?—If the business is well done the money is earned, and I do not think anybody would complain, or would have any right to complain.

57,219. A certain sum of money is allotted to you by the Treasury, to be used in providing the salaries of clerks; you have to account to the Treasury for that by sending in the clerk's receipt for the money?—Yes.

57,220. But there is no regulation requiring that any service for the Government should be done for that money by that particular person?—Oh, yes; one is bound to provide an adequate staff, in so far as the allowance assigned will permit.

57,221. Services have to be done by you or your officials; but there is no regulation that any service for the Government shall be done by any particular official?—Not by any particular official.

57,222. And, in fact, I suppose, in almost every case, the gentlemen who sign those receipts do a considerable amount of work in the private service of the Sheriff Clerk?—No, not in the private service of the Sheriff Clerk in cases where the Sheriff Clerk is not in private practice.

57,223. I am assuming the case where the Sheriff Clerk has a private practice, or other posts, or other means of making money?—In such cases, which, however, are not the majority, the person appointed as depute or clerk on the establishment, may also be a clerk in the Sheriff Clerk's personal office as law agent, and discharge duties there; but that occurs in the smaller counties, and is not a typical case by any means.

57,224. You tell us in your précis that it very often happens that the senior depute also holds the office of Auditor of Court which enables him to secure private audits as well. Would you mind expanding that last phrase?—The work that the auditor does as Auditor of Court is the auditing of accounts relating to actions.

57,225. What we call in England "taxing"?—Yes, that is one thing; but the fact that a man is auditor of the Sheriff Court brings him audit work of a different class, namely, the audit of a law agent's business account for work which need not be judicial work. I mean ordinary law agency work. Such accounts are very frequently referred to the Sheriff Court auditor for the purpose of audit or taxation.

57,226. Then a solicitor, whose accounts will be audited later on by a depute, or, in some cases, by the Sheriff Clerk himself, who holds this post of auditor, may, if he likes, bring those accounts beforehand to the Sheriff Clerk or his depute and have them audited for him as a matter of private business arrangement, and then, having paid him his fee for that, may bring them to him later on to be audited as part of the business of the Court?—No, that does not happen; the two things are quite different.

2 June 1915.]

Mr. CHRISTOPHER JOHNSTON BISSET.

[Continued.]

57,227. Part of the ordinary audit in a lawyer's business is preparing accounts for what we call "taxation"?—Do you say part of the auditor's business is to prepare accounts for taxation?

57,228. No; part of the business in a lawyer's office is to prepare the accounts in such a way that they should pass the taxing master?—Yes.

57,229. You say that the man who is what we call "Taxing Master," and you call "Auditor of Court," also acts as auditor in the private business of a solicitor, and I ask you whether it ever happens that when he does so he deals with the same accounts as will afterwards be presented to him for the official audit?—No.

57,230. You cannot conceive that possible?—No, I do not think that would happen at all.

(Mr. Coward.) It would not be possible here.

57,231. (Mr. Graham Wallas.) What is the exact work which a man who is auditing the private accounts of a lawyer does?—The private accounts are the accounts of the law agent against his client for work other than judicial work—for other than taxed costs in a court process.

57,232. (Mr. Coward.) They might be trust accounts?—They might be trust accounts, or an ordinary account for any kind of business that a law agent had done for a client.

57,233. (Sir George Paul.) Just an ordinary business account presented by an agent to his client?—Just an ordinary business account.

57,234. Extra-judicial?—Yes.

57,235. But the auditor would not take up the audit, or the taxation, unless with the consent of the client and solicitor?—The account would be referred to the auditor by the client and his solicitor.

57,236. (Mr. Graham Wallas.) You say the fact that he holds the office of Auditor of Court enables him to secure private audits as well. What is the exact meaning of the word "enables"?—This extra-judicial business comes to him because he holds the appointment of Auditor of Court.

57,237. (Sir George Paul.) And because he is supposed to be a person of experience, in whom the parties have confidence; but they might quite as well go to an accountant or another solicitor?—Yes.

57,238. But they know this Auditor of Court has more experience in taxing accounts than an outsider, and they go to him?—Yes.

57,239. (Mr. Graham Wallas.) Do you find that a wholly satisfactory arrangement?—Yes.

57,240. You told us that the Sheriff Clerks who have been appointed of late give a good deal of personal attention to their business, and that if it be true that certain Sheriff Clerks only sign a document once in every three months, being busy lawyers, and having the work done in their office, that probably refers to appointments under earlier and now abandoned conditions?—And to the part-time appointments.

57,241. Supposing in fact a Sheriff Clerk does leave the whole of the work in his office to his clerks and deposes and does nothing but a few formal acts himself, who is to know that?—The Sheriff or the Sheriff Substitute. Of course it is a very common thing for subordinates in an office to think that their superiors do nothing.

57,242. I know; but has the Sheriff or the Sheriff Substitute any right to complain if the work is done, but not done by the Sheriff Clerk himself?—I think the Sheriff would, no doubt, be satisfied if the work were satisfactorily done, no matter who did it, unless the matter appeared to the Sheriff to be one calling for attention in the public interest, in which case, no doubt, the Sheriff would act.

57,243. The question whether in fact the Sheriff Clerk does any work at all or whether it is all done by his clerks and subordinates is a matter for his private conscience?—Yes. He is directed by his commission to do the work, and if he does not do the work, then he is not complying with the terms of his appointment.

57,244. But there is no sanction for that?—You mean no one is placed in authority over a Sheriff Clerk to tell him what to do or that he is wrong if he does not do it?

57,245. Yes?—Probably not. The Sheriff Clerk is not the servant of the Court, but is an independent public officer. He would be under supervision and subject to correction and direction by the Lord Advocate or by the Secretary for Scotland, I imagine.

57,246. But there is no machinery by which the Lord Advocate can find out whether the Sheriff Clerk is doing any work himself or leaving it to his officials?—He has all the usual channels of information.

57,247. The newspapers?—Not always the most reliable sources.

57,248. You tell us you think it would be rather a good thing if Sheriff Clerks gave up their outside appointments, provided that their salaries were made sufficient. Would you mind expanding that? What do you think would be a sufficient salary for a Sheriff Clerk to get for his full time?—I put it in this way: some of the deposes have salaries up to 500*l.*, and I do not think that a Principal Sheriff Clerk ought to have less.

57,249. Your own salary is 750*l.*?—Yes.

57,250. Do you think that sufficient for a full-time post?—I have not asked for any increase for some time.

57,251. Had you a larger sum than that in your mind when you said that a Sheriff Clerk if he is asked to give his full time ought to receive sufficient and ex hypothesi an increased salary?—That, I think, would depend on the importance of the work. For example, you could not ask the Sheriff Clerk of Lanarkshire to serve for 750*l.*

57,252. (Chairman.) Is it the case that only one Sheriff Clerk has a higher salary than 750*l.*?—Yes, that is the case of Lanarkshire.

57,253. (Mr. Graham Wallas.) You told us that the Sheriff Clerk is now appointed by the Secretary for Scotland, but it is well understood that he is chosen on the responsibility of the Lord Advocate?—Yes.

57,254. Have you ever heard it discussed or considered whether that does involve any responsibility on the Secretary for Scotland—whether, for instance, the Secretary for Scotland could refuse the nomination of the Lord Advocate?—I am not in a position to speak about that. I do not know.

57,255. You told us very kindly and frankly that your own appointment was due to your political claims?—Yes.

57,256. Would you mind telling us—as many of us are active politicians—what those political claims were, roughly?—At the time of my appointment I was, and had been for a number of years before that, the Secretary of the Dundee Conservative Association, and had acted as agent in several contests in Dundee.

57,257. The recognition of political claims by appointments of that kind is not confined in Scotland to Sheriff Clerks, but is general throughout all the minor appointments?—It is not confined to minor appointments.

57,258. Then throughout the whole legal service recognition of services of that kind by appointment to offices is general, is it not?—Yes.

57,259. You say you do not think it hurts the legal service, because there are plenty of good men who are also politicians (like yourself and myself), and who do the work, in fact, well?—Yes.

57,260. Have you ever thought about it on the other side—from the point of view of whether it is good for politics. In America, for instance, where a corresponding system prevails, it is argued that it is not very good for the political life of the country that it should be capable of being said that men are in politics, as the Americans say, not purely for their health. Have you ever thought of that side?—Yes; but the conditions in Scotland are entirely different from those that prevail in the United States. I think you must judge of a system by its results, and I would apply that test to the system in Scotland.

57,261. But there is a certain danger surely where that system prevails so widely of both unfounded and well-founded suspicion of political motives?—Possibly; but you must have some system, and this has worked pretty well in the past. Anyhow, it is rather a wider

2 June 1915.]

Mr. CHRISTOPHER JOHNSTON BISSET.

[Continued.]

question than that with which I came prepared to deal to-day.

57,262. You know the recommendations of Lord Salvesen's Committee, and of Mr. Watt and Mr. Haldane and others on that Committee?—Yes.

57,263. Can you, speaking from memory, give, with regard to the Sheriff Courts and the Sheriff Clerks, any recommendation of that Committee which has been carried out?—I am not aware that any of their recommendations has been carried out so far.

57,264. Have you ever heard any reason assigned for that?—It has been stated in Parliament from time to time that the matter was under consideration, and that a scheme would be prepared shortly, but it has not yet come.

57,265. But have you ever heard any reason assigned for the fact that none of those numerous and very important recommendations have been carried out?—No.

57,266. Now a question on a technical point about the Sheriff Substitute. May a Sheriff appoint Substitutes so as to cover, in fact, all his work, if he so desires?—No. The Sheriff does not appoint any of the salaried Sheriffs' Substitutes.

57,267. Then may the salaried Sheriff Substitute cover all the work of a Sheriff?—No. The Sheriff in his judicial functions is an appeal judge who exercises appellate jurisdiction in the sheriffdom.

57,268. (Mr. Clynes.) Do you think there is any general desire to put an end to political influence?—Do you mean in regard to appointments to the Sheriff Clerkships?

57,269. Yes?—I have not heard of any general desire to that effect.

57,270. You have admitted that there have been considerable political influences and many political considerations operating in respect of these appointments, and you have suggested an alternative method of appointment. I am asking if you know of any general desire to put an end to that political influence?—I have suggested that a different method of selection might be possible under an entirely different system which would deal with the whole staff from top to bottom. There is no doubt a desire within the staff itself for such a change, but with respect to the present appointments to Sheriff Clerkships, I have not heard any very definitely expressed wish. You mean the expression of public opinion, I suppose?

57,271. Not so much public opinion, but opinion in the legal circles from which these appointments are made?—No. I think it has come to be quite a recognised and understood thing, and people are reasonably content with it as it exists.

57,272. Do you think then that any stern desire or any stern attempt to repress the use of political influence would be resented by those concerned?—No.

57,273. (Sir George Paul.) I have nothing to ask you on the general question, but there are one or two questions upon a very subordinate matter which you spoke of in your evidence; that is, as regards registration for preservation in the Sheriff Record books. Your county registers, I suppose, are kept in Forfar?—Yes.

57,274. Your headquarters are in Dundee?—Yes.

57,275. For the purpose of registration for preservation, the writs given in for registration are kept in the Register House in the county, because it is supposed they are in safer custody there than with the owner or the owner's solicitors?—Yes.

57,276. What accommodation have you for keeping these writs that are deposited with you and the registers? Have you fireproof safes, or what?—At Forfar the accommodation is very good and sufficient. There is no difficulty about the custody and preservation of these writs. Several large strong rooms have been provided, which are fireproof.

57,277. That may be so as regards a large and important county like Forfar, but in some of the smaller counties outside they are kept in a very slovenly way?—I believe that is so.

57,278. I know the Deputy Clerk Register has very strong views on the subject, and he thinks those writs that are kept in that slovenly way in those small places should be all brought up to Edinburgh and kept safely?—I believe the sheriffs have looked into this question within the last two years with a view to making recommendations to the Court-house Commissioners where such accommodation was not sufficient. I think the matter was taken up and dealt with by the sheriffs within the period I have mentioned.

57,279. In order to get improved accommodation in counties rather than that the documents should be sent to the general Register House in Edinburgh?—Yes; feeling varies in different localities. Sometimes these local registers are pretty largely used; in other counties their use has been almost discontinued.

57,280. I suppose, in point of fact, most of the deeds and wills recorded for preservation are sent to Edinburgh?—Yes, the great majority of them; but there are places like Aberdeen, for example, where the recording of deeds within the county is quite extensive locally, and law agents there would, I feel pretty sure, resent any movement for a change. They prefer the local control of such deeds for sentimental and practical reasons.

57,281. (Sir John Kempe.) As regards the registration of deeds, is any general index kept of all the documents at the different registries in the different counties and at the central registry?—There is no central jurisdiction; each county stands by itself in that matter.

57,282. Then, when a search has to be made, you have to find out as best you can where the deeds are kept. There are no means of finding out in what county your deeds have been registered?—Yes; only deeds relating to the particular county would be registered in a county register.

57,283. Then, if you do not know in what county your deed is registered, you have to search throughout all the counties; there is no general index to show you where to go to?—You would know that if a deed related to a particular county it would be registered within that county in the register of that county. It would not be registered in another county.

57,284. (Sir George Paul.) The will of a person domiciled in Aberdeenshire or Forfarshire would be recorded in the register of Aberdeenshire or Forfarshire?—Yes.

57,285. And nowhere else?—Nowhere else, except in Edinburgh.

57,286. (Sir John Kempe.) As to the salaries which you suggest for the clerks, I understood you to say that the salaries at present given are not very high, partly because there are certain outside earnings?—That is not the only reason; but that is, or may be, one reason.

57,287. What other reason is there?—The other reason is that a Sheriff Clerk's allowance is limited by the Treasury, and he cannot do better than the allowance enables him to do.

57,288. Then you might hope to get a better class of clerks if you had a rather better scale of salaries?—Yes, I think that would be the result of the whole scheme I have suggested.

57,289. But you are fairly satisfied at present with the clerks you get?—Yes, they are quite a good class.

57,290. You do not think it absolutely necessary to pay higher salaries, as you get a very fair class of clerks at present?—Yes. They themselves think they ought to receive better treatment, and I agree with their view. The fact that they are good servants of the public at a small salary does not debar them from entertaining expectations of an improved position.

57,291. Quite so; but your suggestion would be that their pay should be based upon the present pay plus the earnings, or something of that kind. A scale should be made which would be based so as to cover earnings and pay and give to all the clerks—those who get earnings outside, and those who do not—the benefit of the new scale?—The special circumstances with regard to the holding of offices would require to be taken into consideration on the fixing of a salary and the determination of an appointment at the commencement of the scheme. There is no other way of dealing with it; you must take each case by itself if you are going to start a system and fix a salary for that post.

57,292. But you propose, as I understood, a general class of clerks and deputies with general scales of pay for them to cover all established positions?—Yes.

2 June 1915.]

MR. CHRISTOPHER JOHNSTON BISSET.

[Continued.]

57,293. And you base that upon something. Have you any idea in your mind what sort of scales of pay you would give?—No, I have not considered that. You would have to consider the existing members of the staff. You might take them at the salaries they at present receive, and provide for reasonable increment over a certain period, and fix a maximum salary in each case. You might find it necessary to divide the staff into two, three, or four classes with different minima or maxima. That would be a matter for arrangement.

57,294. But you said, I think, that all the members of your staff, deputed and clerks alike, are available for any work, and they all take their share of the work together. Could you separate the clerks and put them into classes according to the work they do in each case? Could you classify the work?—Not more than it is classified at present, but that does not prevent you from classifying the members of the staff with respect to the minima and maxima of salaries.

57,295. You pay them not according to the work they do but according to the length of their service, I suppose?—You would have to take both into consideration.

57,296. What do you do now—pay them according to length of service or according to the work they do?—Very often when a man is appointed to a post he receives less salary than he ought to get, but he will receive additions as other vacancies occur. He will receive additions to his salary whenever a portion of the allowance is released by the occurrence of a vacancy. That is all one can do just now.

57,297. Then the result of the suggested alteration would be a considerable increase of expense?—I think so. I do not think such a scheme as this can be brought into effect without increasing the charge on the Treasury.

57,298. Could any part of the earnings of the clerks who earn something outside be handed over to the Exchequer?—If the Treasury took over the fees for audit work, for example, they would have that additional source of revenue; but they would have to provide an addition to the salary of the man who does the work of audit. I think it must be faced that such a scheme as this will entail considerable additional expense on the Treasury.

57,299. There is nothing to be diverted to the Exchequer sufficient to pay the extra expense. You could not get out of their earnings sufficient to meet it?—You could only do that by increasing the fees payable in the Sheriff Courts, and, of course, you would save something by reducing the number of Sheriff Clerks from 33 at present to 15 in the future.

57,300. You said that in the Scottish offices, unlike the English offices, all branches of the law, almost, are dealt with in the Sheriff Clerk's Office—Probate, Chancery, and all the different branches of English law are dealt with in one office?—Yes. The jurisdiction of the Sheriff Court is such as to include a number of such branches as you name.

57,301. I suppose you are not familiar with the English legal departments?—No, I am not.

57,302. There it is impossible for any one clerk to master the different branches of the law which have to be dealt with in his department. In Scotland is a man assigned to one particular branch—on one day to Probate, another day to Chancery, and another day to something else?—Yes; in practice, one clerk does a particular branch of the office work, but in offices like ours all the members of the staff in a few years become familiar with nearly all the branches.

57,303. You find that they can do that?—Of course you get specialists, for example, in the commissary branch and in the criminal branch, especially in the larger counties—men who have been years in those posts, and whom it may be desirable to retain in them on account of their special experience rather than transfer them to another branch; but, speaking generally, the senior members of the staff become familiar with all the work of the office.

57,304. To enable a man to do that you think he must have had experience of the law before he comes into your department?—It is not so much to enable a man to do that, but for more general reasons I suggest that they should be qualified law agents.

57,305. I see amongst the Sheriffs Substitute there is one post called the "Sheriff of Chancery," which is among the Consolidated Fund salaries. What is a Sheriff of Chancery?—I am afraid any statement from me on that subject would not be helpful.

57,306. He has not a county?—No, he has special duties.

57,307. Has he a staff?—Yes.

57,308. Has he a separate office in Edinburgh?—Yes, an office in Edinburgh, but I am not familiar with the working of that office.

57,309. You do not know what the Sheriff of Chancery has to do different from other sheriffs?—I am not prepared to say. No doubt you will get evidence upon that from some other source.

57,310. (Mr. Matheson.) Mr. Shipley asked me to ask you one question. Is your business in Dundee done in a public office or a private one?—In a public office.

57,311. An office provided by the Government?—An office provided by the Court-house Commissioners for the county.

57,312. Then you do not have to pay rent for it?—No; the Court-house buildings are erected out of funds provided partly from county sources and partly by the Treasury.

57,313. Is that so in the case of most of the Sheriff Courts?—That is so in the case of all the Sheriff Courts.

57,314. Do you consider your office is satisfactory?—Yes.

57,315. (Mr. Graham Wallas.) There is no restriction on the question whether in those buildings the business done is private business or public business?—The building is provided for a variety of purposes. The Courts are there; also the Sheriff Clerk's Office and the Procurator Fiscal's Office; some of the County Offices may be there also—the County Clerk's Office, or the County Treasurer's Office. As a rule, when the county erect such a building, they provide accommodation for a number of services.

57,316. But there is no real regulation or understanding that a Sheriff Clerk shall not do his private business—he and his clerks—in that office?—That would be a matter for arrangement between him and the Court-house Commissioners.

57,317. (Chairman.) You said that you considered the present salaries of the clerks in the Sheriff Court office to be too low?—Yes.

57,318. Can you say how those salaries compare with the salaries of similar clerks in the private offices of law agents?—Compared with lawyers' clerks in the same town there is probably not much difference. I do not say that lawyers' clerks are well paid, though.

57,319. You are not prepared to say that the Sheriff Court clerks are worse paid than lawyers' clerks private service?—No. I think it probably happens in the Sheriff Clerk's office that a man will stay for a long time at a smaller salary than he would receive if he were in a lawyer's office, in the hope that he may be ultimately appointed depute at a higher salary.

57,320. As depute he would get a higher salary than anything he might expect to rise to in a law agent's office?—He has a salary which may not be higher than the post of cashier or head clerk in a lawyer's office, but it is a public appointment, and the man has a certain position in the locality which he would not have as a mere clerk.

MR. HENRY HILTON BROWN (Procurator Fiscal of Midlothian), called and examined.

57,321. (Chairman.) You are Procurator Fiscal of Midlothian?—I am.

57,322. How long have you held that office?—Since 1912.

57,323. Had you been Procurator Fiscal in other places before that?—Yes, I had been Procurator Fiscal of Elginshire and of the eastern division of Fifeshire.

2 June 1915.]

Mr. HENRY HILTON BROWN.

[Continued.]

57,324. How long in all?—Altogether, Procurator Fiscal for 22 years.

57,325. Are you also Secretary of the Association of Procurators Fiscal in Scotland?—Yes, also since 1912.

57,326. Does that association include all the Procurators Fiscal?—I think so, with one exception.

57,327. May we take your evidence as representing the views of the association?—I know their views so thoroughly that I think you may take it that I shall state them, but I have no authority to represent them.

57,328. First of all, what are the duties of the Procurator Fiscal?—I think the shortest definition is that he is within his district the chief executive officer in matters criminal of the Lord Advocate, the King's and Lord Treasurer's Remembrancer, and the Sheriff. It is a very complex office which he holds. It has been evolved out of a curious historical process; and by a system of adaptation, and by applying to the present purpose what was perhaps designed for a different purpose, the office has arrived at its present position. It is exceedingly complicated. Perhaps I might just tabulate the duties: First, there is the investigation and preparation of all criminal cases arising within his district which are competent for trial before the High Court of Justiciary or the Sheriff Court; that is to say, he examines the witnesses, takes down their written statements, collects all productions, and obtains medical and other reports, and so on; and submits the whole for consideration by the Crown Counsel where the case requires that.

57,329. Does that include all criminal cases except those minor cases which come before Burgh Courts or Justices of the Peace?—All cases which are to be tried either in the High Court of Justiciary or in the Sheriff Court—everything except the Justices of the Peace and the Burgh Magistrates. He has the investigation of all those cases; and then, secondly, he has the prosecution of such of these cases as are tried before the Sheriff Court either on indictment or summary complaint. Perhaps I should say that when I say criminal cases, I use the word as including the quasi criminal, that is to say all that immense mass of statutory prosecutions arising under various acts of Parliament.

57,330. In the case of prosecutions in the High Court of Justiciary, does he hand over the case to the Lord Advocate?—The Lord Advocate and his deputies prosecute all cases before the High Court of Justiciary, but the Procurator Fiscal prosecutes all cases either on indictment or on summary complaint in the Sheriff Court. The third point is the investigation of sudden, violent, or suspicious deaths, accidents, suicides, and so forth—in fact to a great extent the duties which are discharged by coroners in England. Then in those cases where a public inquiry is held under the recent statutes dealing with what are called industrial accidents, he also conducts the public inquiry before a sheriff and a jury of seven, but that is only applicable to a limited number of accidents which occur in industrial employments.

57,331. The inquiries into sudden death are not, as a rule, public inquiries?—They are all confidential in practice, with the exception of those I have mentioned, and those cases which the Lord Advocate in his discretion orders to be tried by public inquiry. Fourthly, there is the collection on behalf of the Exchequer of fines, forfeitures, or penalties imposed in the Sheriff Court within his district. I may add that he also acts as agent for the King's and Lord Treasurer's Remembrancer in cases of treasure trove and in cases of estates which fall to the Crown as ultimate heir. Then, fifthly, he has the investigation within his district of fires, explosions, and similar occurrences, the removal of dangerous buildings, the committal of dangerous lunatics, the examination into applications for naturalisation, and many like matters.

57,332. Does the supervision of buildings apply everywhere?—Not unless he has a complaint in regard to a building being in a condition dangerous to the lieges. In the case of a building reported to him as being dangerous to the lieges, it would be his duty in the public interest to make inquiries and probably to take steps for the removal of the danger. Lastly, he has the investigation of complaints and other matters upon which he is requested by the Lord Advocate to report, and that involves a very varied and wide class of work, in which a large and wise discretion must be exercised. The Lord Advocate receives numerous complaints from the lieges upon all sorts of matters, and these, arising within the district of the Procurator Fiscal, are sent to him for report to the Lord Advocate.

57,333. Will you give us one instance to explain the nature of those inquiries?—There is the very frequent complaint of a man that he has not received justice; it may be in a civil court or any sort of court, but he complains to the Lord Advocate that the matter has not been attended to by the proper tribunal. As a matter of course that comes to the Procurator Fiscal for inquiry into the facts to ascertain the truth of the matter, and then it is reported to the Lord Advocate, and his lordship deals with the matter as it may seem fit in the public interest.

57,334. Has a Procurator Fiscal also certain duties in relation to local bodies?—In a very large number of cases the Procurator Fiscal has to prosecute on behalf of local bodies under a large number of statutes.

57,335. Do you include those cases under the first head you have given—the investigation of all criminal cases?—Yes, and perhaps under the second heading the prosecution of such cases as are tried before the Sheriff Court.

57,336. How many Procurators Fiscal are there?—Scotland is divided into about 50 districts, and there is one Procurator Fiscal for each of these districts.

57,337. Then a county is often divided into more than one district?—The larger counties are so divided. The tendency has been for some time to endeavour, if possible, to consolidate, and perhaps that may be extended further than has yet been done.

57,338. How is the remuneration of a Procurator Fiscal fixed?—The salary of a Procurator Fiscal, on appointment, is always a matter of special consideration by the Exchequer. On each appointment the Exchequer fixes the salary after consideration of the duties of the office.

57,339. Is the salary often changed on a vacancy?—I think it is very frequently changed. Usually the Procurator Fiscal, who has retired or died, has been for some time in office, and may have had his salary increased from time to time, and therefore when a new man comes in, the Exchequer very probably thinks it is desirable to return to the original figure.

57,340. Does the fixed salary constitute the whole of his remuneration?—No, his remuneration is made up of several elements. The first is a fixed salary paid quarterly by the Exchequer; secondly, there is an allowance paid by the County Council in lieu of fees for investigations and proceedings which are made and conducted by the Procurator Fiscal, but which are not chargeable to the Exchequer. In addition to that he has the fees or allowances in lieu of fees for prosecutions undertaken by him on behalf of various public bodies but which are not chargeable to the Exchequer. Then he has fees for his concurrence in private prosecutions in which imprisonment without the option of a fine is competent. A private prosecution of that sort in Scotland is now almost unknown, and the fee, which was only half a crown, has become so seldom paid that that source of income is practically negligible.

57,341. Is the Procurator Fiscal's assent necessary in all prosecutions of that kind?—In all cases where imprisonment without the option of a fine is competent.

57,342. What is the object of that—to prevent vexatious prosecutions?—I fancy that is the object.

57,343. The Estimates for Law Charges and Courts of Law in Scotland contain a statement of the salaries of Procurators Fiscal; one column gives the salary and another column gives the total remuneration in a particular year in addition to the salaries voted. That column of extra remuneration includes, I suppose, the whole of the remuneration which you have mentioned, namely, the remuneration from the fixed allowance from the County Council, the fees for prosecutions for public bodies and the fees from private prosecutions?—That is so.

57,344. May we take it that the figures in the Estimates represent the whole of the remuneration of a

2 June 1915.]

Mr. HENRY HILTON BROWN.

[Continued.]

Procurator Fiscal?—Yes, I think so. It is made up from figures supplied by the Procurators Fiscal themselves, and should include everything which the Procurators Fiscal receive.

57,345. Does the fixed salary include anything besides the Procurator Fiscal's own remuneration?—Yes. With the exception of Edinburgh City and Glasgow, it includes the salaries of clerks and office expenses. In Edinburgh City and Glasgow an allowance is still paid separately to the Procurator Fiscal for clerks' salaries and expenses.

57,346. In your own case the salary entered in the Estimates is 1,500*l.* a year, and I understand out of that you have to provide for the expenses of your own office—the salaries of your deposes and clerks?—The salaries of deposes and clerks in my case are paid out of it. It is somewhat special in so far as the Stationery Office allows a certain amount of stationery for the office as well.

57,347. Have you to provide your own office?—No. Procurator Fiscal provides his own office, so far as I am aware.

57,348. How is the office provided?—It is always part of the county buildings. It is supplied, I understand, by the county in some form. I have never investigated what is the exact source of the provision. In every sheriff court house there is provided an office for the Procurator Fiscal and his clerks.

57,349. Then, substantially, the amount of the salaries of deposes and clerks has to be deducted from the salary of the Procurator Fiscal in order to arrive at his actual remuneration?—Yes, and stationery where it is not allowed. The position as regards stationery is now very complicated; some have one arrangement and some another. I have had a different arrangement in all the counties where I have been. In some counties, also, the Sheriff Clerk has to provide a clerk to the Procurator Fiscal to write precognitions. In other counties the allowance for that is included in the salary.

57,350. In your case, what is the staff which is paid out of your allowance?—Three. I have two deposes and a clerk, but I also get from the Sheriff Clerk the assistance of a clerk for precognitions.

57,351. What are the functions of your staff?—The deposes must be prepared to take my place in my necessary absence, and discharge exactly the same powers and duties as I have myself. The clerk is simply engaged in ordinary clerical work.

57,352. When you are there, do the deposes assist you in your work, or is it only in your absence that they perform your functions?—It is impossible, of course, in a county like Midlothian, for one person to conduct the precognitions, and also to attend to the Summary Courts, so that one of the deposes is very generally engaged in the Summary Courts with the ordinary cases. I take summary cases myself when they are of importance, and I take all jury cases on indictment, and most of the precognitions I see to myself.

57,353. From the figures you give us I see the salaries of your two deposes and clerk amount to 650*l.* a year in all?—That is so. I might explain that, as far as the Exchequer is concerned, the Exchequer simply pays me 1,500*l.* a year quarterly.

57,354. And leaves it entirely to you to fix the salaries of your assistants?—Yes, entirely. The Exchequer and I quite understand what is paid to the assistants, but that is not part of any arrangement made. They have no concern with that whatever, except that they pay me quarterly amounts.

57,355. What is your tenure of office?—The Procurator Fiscal is not removable from office except by the Secretary for Scotland for inability or misbehaviour upon a report by the Lord President of the Court of Session and the Lord Justice Clerk.

57,356. That is under section 23 of the Sheriff Courts (Scotland) Act, 1907?—Yes.

57,357. What is the tenure of your staff?—The deposes hold each a commission for one year from 1st January. A new commission is made out every year. That commission contains a clause that they are removable at any time, either by the Lord Advocate or myself.

57,358. Do they give their whole time to their duties?—In my office they do.

57,359. Do they in most of the offices?—No, in very few of the Procurators Fiscal offices in Scotland are there full-time deposes. I do not believe that there are more than half a dozen full-time deposes in Scotland. The greater number of the Procurators Fiscal appoint as deposes some local solicitor who acts either as a personal friend or for the consideration of an honorarium; they are honorary deposes; but in the larger districts, such as Edinburgh and Glasgow and some other places, there are salaried deposes who devote their time to the work.

57,360. Do the Procurators Fiscal, speaking generally, give their whole time to their duties?—With the exception of a very, very few who are allowed to engage in private practice. It is a condition in all the modern commissions that the Procurator Fiscal shall devote his whole time to the duties of his office.

57,361. I see in some cases the salaries are very small?—In some of the smaller districts they are very small.

57,362. In the case of the Procurator Fiscal of Kinross the salary is only 65*l.* a year. That, of course, would not be a whole-time appointment?—I rather think the Procurator Fiscal is engaged in private practice in almost all the small places.

57,363. By whom are the Procurators Fiscal appointed?—Now entirely by the Lord Advocate. Perhaps, to understand exactly the office, a word as to its history would be necessary. The Procurator Fiscal was originally simply the law agent of the sheriff—an ordinary law agent appointed by the sheriff—and paid fees as between solicitor and client in the ordinary way. Then by degrees a connection between the Crown Office and the Procurators Fiscal was established, but for a long time in the same way the Procurator Fiscal was paid by fees and rendered accounts for fees like any other law agent to the Exchequer. Then about 1850 or 1851—the middle of the last century—the Exchequer adopted an arrangement by which Procurators Fiscal were to get fixed salaries, calculated upon the basis of an average of so many years' fees, subject to a deduction. Gradually, later on, they began to introduce this principle of restricting the Procurator Fiscal to his duties; but up to that time the Procurator Fiscal, like any other law agent, engaged in general practice freely. Then he was appointed by the Sheriff, held his office from the Sheriff, and the tenure of his office endured with the Sheriff. In 1877 he was given a permanent tenure of office, subject to good behaviour; but the appointment then was changed, and after that time it was vested in the Sheriff, with the approbation of the Secretary of State, and that continued until the last alteration was made, when, under the Sheriff Courts Act of 1907, the Lord Advocate was vested with the sole power of appointing the Procurators Fiscal. Every Procurator Fiscal was free to practise up till a matter of 35 years ago. Then for a time the Procurators Fiscal were allowed to engage in such offices of a public nature as the Sheriff might approve; the commissions contained a qualification to that extent. But in all commissions issued since the Act of 1907 the Procurator Fiscal has been bound to devote his whole time to the duties of his office. There are, however, still left a very few men who were appointed under the old system, and who still engage in private practice.

57,364. Is there any statutory qualification for appointment?—None.

57,365. Do you think there ought to be?—I think it would be a very wise thing to have a qualification. I think a Procurator Fiscal should invariably be a fully qualified law agent who has had a certain number of years' practice. I think it is very important that that should be so.

57,366. In practice have the persons appointed to be Procurators Fiscal had experience as law agents?—The greater number of them are fully qualified law agents, but in a few cases a Depute Procurator Fiscal, who has

2 June 1915.]

MR. HENRY HILTON BROWN.

[Continued.]

had considerable experience, has been appointed, and in one or two cases, I believe, a Sheriff Clerk Depute has been appointed Procurator Fiscal.

57,367. You suggest that he should have, say, five years' standing as a qualified law agent as a necessary qualification for appointment?—I think it would be very desirable. In a Procurator Fiscal you require a man who has a broad knowledge of the Law of Scotland, not merely of criminal law, but of all forms of law. Crime is infinitely varied in its character, and in cases of fraud, for instance, or embezzlement or of bankruptcy frauds in particular, a man would find himself very helpless in investigating the charge if he did not know what were the ordinary rules and how business was conducted.

57,368. Would you make the qualification of law agent obligatory, even in cases where a depute was appointed to be a Procurator Fiscal?—That, of course, is a very difficult question. Personally, I may say that I think no Depute Procurator Fiscal should be appointed to be Procurator Fiscal unless he is a qualified law agent. Many of them are. Of course to make that rule would cut out those deputies who are not qualified law agents, but I have a difficulty in suggesting any alternative qualification which could take the place of the law agent's professional standing.

57,369. You would not consider it sufficient that a man should have served for a certain number of years as a depute?—That, of course, is what has been recognised as a sufficient qualification, though I hardly think myself, for an efficient Procurator Fiscal, it is a sufficient qualification. After all, the experience in the Procurator Fiscal's Office is very much in a groove and in one line, and does not give the broader qualifications necessary for the varied duties of the Procurator Fiscal.

57,370. What has been the principle on which appointments have been made by the Lord Advocate since 1907?—There have been many cases of promotion either of Procurators Fiscal from a smaller district to a larger district, or of Depute Procurators Fiscal appointed to be Procurators Fiscal. There have also been law agents appointed who were not previously Procurators Fiscal.

57,371. Have those appointments been of a political character or not?—One cannot help thinking that that element might have entered into the appointments, but we have no knowledge of what led to them.

57,372. We have had evidence with regard to other appointments made by the Lord Advocate that it is perfectly well known and recognised that political considerations are entertained, and do form a large element in the method of selection. Does that apply to the same extent to Procurator Fiscal appointments?—It may, but I know as a fact it does not always.

57,373. But it does in some cases?—There is no doubt that in the cases of some appointments the gentlemen appointed were known to be members of the party to which the Lord Advocate belonged, but, of course, they were all law agents of long standing, much longer standing than I have suggested as sufficient qualification.

57,374. The staff of the Procurator Fiscal are, you told us, appointed by the Procurator Fiscal himself?—Invariably. Of course one must qualify that to this extent, that the deputies require the concurrence of the Lord Advocate in their appointments, and, as a matter of fact, it is the concurrence both of the sheriff and the Lord Advocate, because before the Lord Advocate gives his concurrence we have to get the concurrence of the sheriff. I presume that is because the sheriff is supposed to know the standing and qualifications of the gentlemen who are proposed as deputies.

57,375. You have told us that you think it desirable that all Procurators Fiscal should be whole-time officers, and the whole-time system has been gradually extended?—Yes.

57,376. Would it be possible to apply the whole-time requirement throughout, or will some changes of organisation be necessary for that purpose?—On the question of restriction my views are that if the district is of sufficient size to provide an adequate salary for a qualified man, and also to give sufficient occupation to a qualified man, restriction from private practice is desirable; but if the district is too small either to provide an adequate salary or to give a man sufficient occupation, there may be some doubt whether restriction is advisable.

57,377. Are there many districts which are at present too small to satisfy those conditions?—There are a number of districts that, I think, are too small just now.

57,378. Would it be desirable to amalgamate those districts in order to make them full time?—I think, with judicious consideration, taking into account the local circumstances, it might be desirable to consolidate in many cases.

57,379. Have schemes been prepared from that point of view?—Yes, a scheme was prepared some time ago by the Association of Procurators Fiscal which, I believe, is at present before the Lord Advocate. The general basis of the scheme was that there should be one Procurator Fiscal for each sheriffdom—not the county or the district—and that he should be assisted by highly-qualified deputies in the more important divisions of the sheriffdom. If that scheme could be carried out it would reduce the numbers of Procurators Fiscal to about 16 I think, but it would very largely increase the number of full-time deputies and of clerks. If that scheme were adopted, it would be possible to lay down some more stringent qualification as regards the persons who were to be appointed Depute Procurators Fiscal.

57,380. (Sir John Kempe.) There seems to have been one amalgamation last year—Jedburgh and Duns?—That was exactly on that scheme, Berwick being included with Roxburgh.

57,381. (Chairman.) Would not you, by a scheme of that kind, transfer part-time service from the Procurators Fiscal themselves to the deputies?—Undoubtedly, but I assume if any such scheme were adopted, it would be part of a larger scheme, because I think then some form of service would require to be constituted for the deputies and clerks.

57,382. We will come to that question presently. I understand from what you say now that you are in favour of a reduction in the number of posts of Procurators Fiscal in such a way as to make it possible to arrange that all should be whole-time posts?—That the deputies should be full-time deputies.

57,383. And that all the Procurators Fiscal should be full-time officers?—That is so, but at the same time the scheme which has been suggested is perhaps rather broad in its details just now. I can quite see that a great deal of modification would be necessary. I do not mean to say that it will be ever possible to reduce the number of Procurators Fiscal in Scotland to 16. Some of the districts are really too wide.

57,384. The difficulty is, I suppose, that in the thinly-populated part of the country the distances are so great that you cannot have a single man dealing with matters in all parts of a district which is large enough to give whole-time occupation?—Yes, that is what causes the difficulty at present.

57,385. And if you make an appointment of a single Procurator Fiscal to deal with a district of that kind, owing to the distances, you will still have to have deputies in different points in that district, and at those points there will not be enough work to make the depute a whole-time officer?—You must bear in mind that the duties of Procurators Fiscal are like no other professional man's. No one can tell where serious crime will occur. A very serious case sometimes occurs in the most outlying district. You will probably remember that the most serious criminal trial of the last half of the last century occurred at Ardlamont, a little outlying place in Argyllshire. The consequence is that, in framing your machinery, you must be prepared for the immediate investigation of serious crime in the most outlying parts of these large districts; so a scheme of that kind will require very careful consideration.

57,386. Looking at this difficulty, and looking at the question generally, will you tell us what modifications you would suggest in the present organisation of the service?—The subject is really so complicated that generalisation is hardly possible to be of any value or any practical use. What I really suggest should be done is, that a gradual system of enlargement of the

2 June 1915.]

Mr. HENRY HILTON BROWN.

[Continued.]

districts should be adopted, as far as the circumstances of each district would admit of it, and that a higher standard for Depute Procurators Fiscal should be laid down, in order that they may be qualified to take their share in discharging the duties in those large districts.

57,387. Would you also introduce a regular system of promotion in a service organised in the manner you suggest?—With a certain amount of limitation. For instance, I do not think that there should be a hard and fast system of promotion, that after a man had been so many years in the service as a Procurator Fiscal he should be necessarily eligible for whatever post fell vacant; because a man might be 20 years Procurator Fiscal in a certain district in Scotland, and not by that means be specially qualified to take charge of one of the large districts if it came in his way.

57,388. A system of promotion does not necessarily mean an automatic system?—I think a system of promotion is highly desirable, tempered by discretion to judge of the suitability of the man who is going to be promoted.

57,389. By a system of promotion, as I understand it, the normal method of filling the higher posts would be, not by direct appointment from outside, but by selection of some one already in the service occupying a less highly-paid post, provided always that there is a person in such a position who is suitable for the more important post. Is that the system you would approve of?—That is exactly the system I should approve of, and, no doubt, in course of time a system of that kind would gradually work into shape, because young men would be taken in to fill the smaller posts, and step by step would rise in the Service.

57,390. How far down would you carry that system? Would you start with the clerks or with the deutes?—It would depend, of course, upon the qualification you are going to put upon the deutes. If you are to establish the qualification that a Depute Procurator Fiscal must be a qualified law agent, then I do not see why it should not start with the clerks. If the clerks are qualified law agents they can become deutes, and pass up then to Procurators Fiscal.

57,391. But could you get qualified law agents for a clerk's salary?—I hardly think you would get a qualified law agent as clerk.

57,392. Your clerks, I understand, are generally young men with comparatively small salaries?—In almost all the offices of the Procurators Fiscal that is the case, with the exception of some of the large districts where a well-paid clerk is required, and I do not suppose that there are more than perhaps half a dozen or ten of those in Scotland just now. In all the other offices in small districts, the rule is simply to employ young lads who come in to learn the work, and after they have been a certain number of years in the Procurator Fiscal's office they pass on to other work.

57,393. You could hardly expect to recruit men for posts like that who would be of the calibre suitable for promotion subsequently to the post of Procurator Fiscal itself?—As matters stand just now that would be so. There are no clerks at present who could be promoted, or very few.

57,394. If you had a system of promotion, it would apparently apply to the Procurators Fiscal and the deutes?—Yes; that is to say, assuming—and I make that an essential point—that you raise the qualifications of the deutes.

57,395. You would apply to them the qualification of five years' standing as a law agent?—I think they should certainly be qualified law agents at any rate, whether they had actually practised or not. Perhaps we might hold that qualification as law agent with a certain number of years' experience in a Procurator Fiscal's office would fit them for the position.

57,396. In a service of that kind, do you suggest that all the offices should be made pensionable?—Yes, it is certainly desirable that they should all be pensionable, from the Procurator Fiscal downwards.

57,397. At present neither the Procurator Fiscal nor his deutes are pensionable?—Not one, and that arises from the history of the office. In those days when the Procurator Fiscal was simply a law agent, the member of a firm doing a large business, the question of pension did not arise. His duties as Procurator Fiscal were simply added to his other duties. The time when the pension should have been put on was the time when they restricted the Procurators Fiscal to the duties of their office. That time was missed, and now we have the anomaly that the Procurators Fiscal have to spend their whole lives in the employment of the State, and if they fall into ill-health in advancing years there is nothing for them to fall back upon.

57,398. Are you aware that the Commissioners who inquired into the Courts of Law in Scotland in 1871 made a unanimous recommendation in favour of retiring allowances for Procurators Fiscal who were not paid by fees?—Yes, and we have again and again endeavoured by memoranda and petitions to successive Lord Advocates to have that done. We have succeeded in persuading one Lord Advocate after another of the justice of our cause, only to find his lordship pass away to the Bench or somewhere else, and we have to begin again with the next.

57,399. Can you say why the recommendation of the Commission of 1871 has not been carried out?—Undoubtedly the difficulty has arisen through the traditional recollection of the fact that the Procurator Fiscal was a law agent in actual practice. I do not think the Exchequer has fully realised yet that the Procurator Fiscal is not in actual practice. At all events the difficulty has arisen with the Exchequer.

57,400. Do you find any difficulty as regards establishing a pensionable service of the kind you contemplate, in the fact that work is done for local authorities as well as for the Central Office?—Undoubtedly that is a difficulty.

57,401. How do you meet that difficulty?—There are two ways, both of which have been suggested. One is, that the Procurator Fiscal should prosecute in the public interest all offences that are of a public nature. I see no logical reason why he should not.

57,402. What is the position at present? How does it differ from that?—At present there are a considerable number of cases as to which the Exchequer say: "We will not be responsible; we will not pay the expenses of those cases; we will not take any concern with them whatever." Then those cases have to be prosecuted at the instance of various local authorities or local bodies.

57,403. What sort of cases are those?—For instance, cases under the Sale of Food and Drugs Acts. That is a case where the penalty goes to the local authority, and therefore the Exchequer very justly say: "We are not getting the penalties and we will not pay the expenses." There are a number of cases, too, under the Diseases of Animals Acts; there are proceedings under the Lunacy Acts, and a number of cases of the same kind where the Exchequer say: "We will not adopt these cases." The cases have to be prosecuted, and therefore they are prosecuted by the local authorities, who ask the Procurator Fiscal to prosecute for them. In those cases they either pay the Procurator Fiscal by fees or by an allowance in lieu of fees, but they have always to be made the subject of special arrangement with the Procurators Fiscal. It would be much more satisfactory if all these cases could be taken over by the Exchequer and recognised as Exchequer cases.

57,404. In such cases would you still have to act under the instructions of the local authority?—If it was thought necessary that the local authority should exercise a certain control over these cases no doubt that would be so, but I do not see any difficulty in arranging the matter if that were the difficulty, because in many cases the Procurators Fiscal, even in Exchequer cases, act along with local bodies of one kind or another.

57,405. The difference under the system that you propose is merely one of meeting the expenses?—That is so. The Procurator Fiscal, in virtue of his office, really prosecutes only those cases which are prosecuted on behalf of the Exchequer, but as public prosecutor he prosecutes in other cases on behalf of various public

2 June 1915.]

Mr. HENRY HILTON BROWN.

[Continued.]

bodies. If those were all combined the difficulty referred to would disappear. All fines would then go to the Exchequer and all expenses would pass through the Sheriff's accounts to the Exchequer in the usual way. That is one way of doing it. The other way would be to allow the present system to continue, but to make the Procurator Fiscal account to the Exchequer for all sums which he received from these local bodies and let him receive from the Exchequer whatever salary might be thought fit; and if he were employed by any local authority to prosecute, if he recovered anything, let him hand over to the Exchequer what was paid to him. If there is to be any question of a pension scheme, I think the Exchequer would justly demand that all the Procurator Fiscal's income should come from the Exchequer.

57,406. Would a change of that kind involve an additional charge upon the Exchequer or not?—Some time ago the association went into that question pretty fully, and we thought that by various expedients the matter might be so arranged that there would be really very little additional burden thrown upon the Exchequer.

57,407. Is the main difficulty in making a change of that kind the financial question?—Partly the financial question and partly the difficulty of dealing with vested interests. There are some awkward vested interests to be dealt with. There is the question of the Justice of the Peace Court, for instance. In the large majority of counties the Justice of the Peace Courts simply deal with questions under the Licensing Acts, the Excise Acts, and the Roads Acts, and similar things; but in other counties—for some reason which I do not know—they have a large jurisdiction in crimes at common law, assaults, and breaches of the peace, especially in Lanarkshire, where, I believe, they have more than 1,000 cases of that sort a year before the Justice of the Peace Courts. You have certain vested interests there. The Justices of the Peace would, no doubt, require to be consulted and carried with any arrangement which was contemplated.

57,408. When you speak of a vested interest, do you refer to any financial vested interest?—There is the financial vested interest of the Fiscal of the Justices of the Peace, who, of course, is receiving a large salary, and if the matter was swept away to the Crown it would deprive him of his office, and, no doubt, questions would arise. You may say that there are just the three inferior courts in Scotland—the Sheriff Court, in which the Procurator Fiscal is already prosecuting most of the cases, the Justice of the Peace Court, and the Burgh Courts. I do not think the Burgh Courts need trouble us in this consideration, because their jurisdiction would not involve any difficulty, I think, in such an arrangement as we propose.

57,409. It is a question of the Justice of the Peace Court?—That, to my mind, is the greatest difficulty in the way, and I think, probably, if it had not been for the Justice of the Peace Court, the difficulty would already have been solved; it has been under consideration for a long time.

57,410. That is, to a considerable extent, a question of judicial procedure with which this Commission is not concerned. The way it affects us is, that unless the whole of the remuneration of the Procurator Fiscal is paid by the Exchequer, there would be a certain difficulty in putting the service on an established and pensionable basis?—That is so.

57,411. You tell us that you see, at any rate, no insuperable difficulty in introducing changes of that kind?—There really is no difficulty if the question is fairly met; but, of course, there is always the other alternative, that the moneys received from these other sources might be handed over to the Exchequer.

57,412. At present is there any fixed age for retirement for the Procurator Fiscal or his staff?—Not in the more recent appointments. There was for a short time a practice introduced of making the commission of the Procurator Fiscal expire ipso facto on the attainment of the age of 70. This, I notice, has not been repeated in the more recent commissions. It is not in my present commission, for instance, though it was in the one I had in Fife. That has, I suppose, arisen from two facts: one was that it was obviously illegal, and if the Procurator Fiscal could not be dismissed, except by a certain legal process, it was hardly a fair thing to take into his commission a means of dismissing him. The other reason was that it must be quite apparent that it was hardly a fair thing to expect that the Procurator Fiscal on the attainment of 70 would simply walk out of his office without the slightest provision made for his old age or anything else.

57,413. If the service were made pensionable, do you consider that a limit of age for retirement should be introduced?—Yes, that would be necessary, and probably the age of 70 might fairly be fixed in the case of Procurators Fiscal. Sixty-five is, I think, the Civil Service age, but in the case of a Procurator Fiscal he generally enters upon the office pretty late in life. A Civil servant begins as a young man and goes on during his whole life. The Procurator Fiscal enters on his office late in life, and then the duties of the office of Procurator Fiscal are such that every year additional experience adds to the value of the officer; and, therefore, if he is fit for the discharge of his duties, I think the age of 70 might be fixed as the age for retirement, but also allowing liberty to retire somewhat earlier in the event of physical incapacity.

57,414. What is the usual age of a Procurator Fiscal when he is appointed?—Very few Procurators Fiscal get a chance of appointment under 40.

57,415. If you had an established service with promotion of the kind you have suggested, the age of original appointment would probably be lower?—Undoubtedly. You might appoint a comparatively young man to a small district, and then he would be promoted by degrees.

57,416. So that your difficulty as regards the age of retirement would be removed?—Yes. Perhaps I may say, on the question of promotion, that at present the few salaried deputies and clerks that there are, are quite eligible for promotion from one district to another, but the matter rests entirely with the Procurators Fiscal themselves; they make the appointments and therefore they have the opportunity of promoting from one district to another if they find a suitable man.

57,417. If an established service was set up, do you suggest that the deputies should still be appointed by the Procurator Fiscal himself, or do you propose some other method of appointment?—I fancy that in that case it would be necessary to have some other form of appointment. If the Exchequer is to be to some extent responsible for these men, it would naturally expect that the Crown should have some direct voice in the appointment. Of course the Crown has now. All appointments of deputies are made with the concurrence of the Sheriff and the Lord Advocate, so that there is already a certain amount of check there, and that might be extended a little further.

57,418. A somewhat similar problem arises with regard to the staff of the Sheriff Courts, and the witness who was here this morning suggested that if you had a combined service the proper authority to select for promotion by transfer from one county to another, would be a committee of Sheriff Clerks. The corresponding body in this case would be a small committee of Procurators Fiscal. Would a system of that kind be workable?—I must confess that I have a rooted objection to appointments being made by a committee if it can be avoided. There are two objections to it: one is, that the larger the committee the larger the extent of wire-pulling which can be put in force. Another and more important one is, that you lighten the degree of the responsibility of the appointing officer. I think it is very important, in a case of this kind, that you should have responsibility fixed very distinctly upon one particular person.

57,419. But if you are adopting a system which involves transfer from one county to another for the purpose of promotion, is there not some difficulty in giving the power of appointment to a particular person?—For one thing there will not be such a very great number of appointments. Unless you adopt some such system as was suggested of enlarging districts and appointing qualified deputies to the charge of sub-districts, there are really very few appointments to be made.

2 June 1915.]

Mr. HENRY HILTON BROWN.

[Continued.]

57,420. If the number of Procurators Fiscal is diminished the number of deputes would necessarily be increased?—Yes.

57,421. So that on the system you suggest the question would become one of more importance than at present?—It would; but I am inclined strongly to favour the power of appointment, both as regards Procurators Fiscal and their deputes, being vested in the hands of the Lord Advocate. The Lord Advocate, through his deputes and the Crown Office staff generally, has the means of knowing the qualities of every Procurator Fiscal in Scotland in a way no committee, or other person, could possibly attain. I think, as regards Procurators Fiscal themselves, the appointment in the hands of the Lord Advocate himself is undoubtedly the better method; and as regards the deputes, if the appointments were made by the Lord Advocate with the concurrence of the Procurator Fiscal, who is interested, I think the difficulty could be got over.

57,422. (Sir John Kempe.) You said that the expense of placing the Procurator Fiscal and his staff on an establishment could probably be arranged without extra charge on the Exchequer?—Yes, I think so.

57,423. In the only case which appears on the Estimates—Jedburgh and Duns—the cost of the two, 1,100*l.*, is now reduced to 950*l.* That is a reduction of about one-seventh. That reduction, I suppose, takes into account the additional depute who had to be appointed?—I think there was only one depute appointed there—the depute at Duns. I think the Procurator Fiscal at Jedburgh himself simply works, as in the other smaller districts, with an honorary depute.

57,424. Does that case represent, do you think, the total reduction which would be made by an amalgamation of that kind, because I see that for those two districts, Jedburgh and Duns, the Procurator Fiscal now has the second largest salary of all the districts excluding Edinburgh and Glasgow, the highest salary is Dundee, and Jedburgh and Duns together, 950*l.*, is the second in the whole list?—Yes.

57,425. Do you suggest that that represents the only permanent reduction, or is that only temporary until a further vacancy occurs, when a further reduction may take place. It seems a very high salary for these small places?—That would be subject to consideration when a vacancy did occur.

57,426. That was the way in which you thought the expense might be covered by reductions of that kind?—Yes. Under the scheme which was suggested it was ascertained that a considerable reduction in the actual salaries might be effected undoubtedly.

57,427. And out of that the clerks would have to have rather higher salaries. You consider the clerks and deputes are not overpaid at present?—With the exception of about half a dozen districts the clerks are just boys who are getting the usual allowances paid to boy clerks in the district where they are. We have hardly yet got what you might call an efficient staff of clerks. Under the present system there are not enough places for them. If a re-arrangement were made there would be more clerks employed.

57,428. You said that the duties of the Procurator Fiscal had been historically built up. I suppose they are all statutory; they have been built up by one man being given the different duties, all being statutory duties?—I rather think, on the contrary, that hardly any of the Procurator Fiscal's duties are statutory at all. I think his office has almost entirely grown up on common law. There are very few statutes that mention the Procurator Fiscal. He is mentioned under one of the Railway Acts in regard to fatal accidents occurring on railways, but very few of his duties are appointed by Act of Parliament. He has just begun originally as the adviser of the Sheriff. I fancy that the Sheriffs appointed these agents partly because some of the Sheriffs were resident in Edinburgh and required somebody to look after crime within their sheriffdom, and also partly because they were responsible for the fines of the district, and required to appoint somebody to collect them. They just gradually grew up, and after a time the system of reporting to the Crown office was adopted, and naturally it came to the Procurator Fiscal to make these reports and attend to them. The whole thing has really grown up of itself.

57,429. But there is no recommendation for altering that part of the arrangement. The duties would remain as they are; you would not re-group them, or anything of that kind?—I think not. It has grown up in a sort of haphazard fashion, as it were; but it has grown into a definite system which everybody understands, and it really works very well.

57,430. And it is an economical way of doing it for one man to look after it all. With regard to promotion by transfer, you said the present Lord Advocate approved promotion by transfer?—Yes.

57,431. You also said that the salaried deputes are eligible for promotion; therefore, I suppose it can be done, if the Lord Advocate approve, without any alteration of the law?—Without any alteration whatever if the Lord Advocate thinks fit just now to promote anybody, either a Procurator Fiscal or a depute.

57,432. But it is not done, because it is merely not the custom to do it?—It has been done. There were two depute Procurator Fiscals appointed within the last year or so to important posts. There are several cases that I could recall in which Depute Procurators Fiscal have been appointed to be full Procurators Fiscal; but the difficulty in a great measure is what I said, that very few Depute Procurators Fiscal are qualified law agents, and there is a certain delicacy in promoting to a position of that sort a person who has not the professional standing.

57,433. (Sir George Paul.) The Lord Advocate is the chief of the Criminal Department?—Yes, the head.

57,434. And the Procurators Fiscal are practically his assistants?—Yes, each in his own district.

57,435. Locally, in your own special localities?—Yes.

57,436. Do you think that, being the head of the department, he can select his Procurators Fiscal better than a committee could?—That is my opinion.

57,437. As regards promotion, the Lord Advocate cannot be expected to know throughout Scotland men suitable for promotion. What do you propose as regards bringing that under his notice?—The relationship between the Procurator Fiscal and the Crown Office is so close just now that there is a succession of weekly or daily communications, and, indeed, the Lord Advocate and his staff have a very thorough and complete knowledge of the qualifications of all the men throughout Scotland. As a matter of fact, there has been established at the Crown Office a waiting list on which these Procurators Fiscal, who are desirous of promotion, are allowed to place their names.

57,438. And the deputes?—I do not suppose there would be any objection to a depute putting his name on it, but so far it is only the Procurators Fiscal who do so.

57,439. The Lord Advocate could get confidential reports upon deputes or Procurators Fiscal in the various counties, so that he might see those well reported upon for promotion?—It is quite true he would not have the same opportunity of knowing regarding the deputes, though I fancy almost all the deputes who have been long in office are well known at the Crown Office.

57,440. The getting of information might be easily arranged?—When the Advocates Depute come down to the various circuits to deal with cases the Procurator Fiscal and his depute in charge of the case there generally attend, and therefore, I fancy, the Advocates Depute get personally acquainted with all the principal Depute Procurators Fiscal.

57,441. Then the Procurator Fiscal, I suppose, must necessarily be a man of very considerable experience, because, as I understand from you, he has to collect evidence in very difficult cases, for instance, in murder cases?—That is so.

57,442. He has to take the examination of witnesses and collect the evidence for the Crown counsel?—Subject to instructions from the Crown counsel the Procurator Fiscal conducts the whole inquiry in all those cases.

57,443. Which requires a considerable amount of ability and tact?—And experience.

2 June 1915.]

MR. HENRY HILTON BROWN.

[Continued.]

57,444. For instance, there was the great Ardlamont case that you referred to. That was a very difficult case, and I suppose the evidence in that case had to be got up very much by the Procurator Fiscal of Argyllshire?—Yes, it was got up by the Procurator Fiscal; but I rather think that in that case the Procurator Fiscal of Argyllshire was assisted by the then Procurator Fiscal of Midlothian, though I am not quite certain. At all events the whole evidence in that case was got up by the Procurator Fiscal.

57,445. There was a case which happened within your own jurisdiction, the famous Markinch case, where the body was thrown into a wood?—That was in my predecessor's time, and the whole inquiry was conducted by him. There is another point not to be forgotten, and that is, in many of the cases in the Sheriff Court where the Procurator Fiscal conducts the prosecution, the defence is conducted by solicitors of the first rank, and very often with the assistance of counsel, so that the Procurator Fiscal must be a man who has sufficient forensic qualifications to be able to conduct such a case. He can always get the assistance of Crown counsel in difficult cases, and Crown counsel do appear in the Sheriff Court in a case of importance; but still there are a large number of cases in which the Crown counsel do not appear, and which the Procurator Fiscal must conduct himself.

57,446. The Procurator Fiscal collects the evidence under the instructions of Crown counsel?—That is so.

57,447. (Mr. Graham Wallas.) The Treasury allowance to a Procurator Fiscal includes the allowance to his clerks, we are told, in the Estimates. Does the Treasury ask whether all or any of that sum of money does go to the clerks?—So far as I am aware, no inquiry is made. The Exchequer issues quarterly an order for the amount, and the Procurator Fiscal is required to maintain his office efficiently.

57,448. Whose business is it to see that the work is efficiently done?—No doubt the Sheriff in the first instance has the duty of superintending the administration of justice within the county, and the Sheriff himself would see that the work was being efficiently discharged. In addition to the Sheriff, the officials at the Crown Office are seeing the procedure in every case of importance, and they would soon see whether the work was being efficiently conducted or not.

57,449. Do you know in your recollection any cases that has happened where there has been a serious complaint of inefficiency against a Procurator Fiscal?—I do not recollect any. I think, on the whole, that the Procurators Fiscal in Scotland have discharged their duties very efficiently, and very free from censure of importance.

57,450. There has been no case of failure that appeared from old age?—I am not aware of any case in which there has been a miscarriage of justice through the failure of the Procurator Fiscal.

57,451. At present you suggest that a Depute Procurator Fiscal might, during his period of service as a clerk, acquire qualifications as a law agent, and that would be one way of securing that he might afterwards be promoted to Procurator Fiscal?—Yes, I think if he were in earnest, there would be no difficulty in his doing so, and if he were not in earnest he would not be the man suited for the appointment.

57,452. Is it the case that in the Procurator Fiscal's office a clerk would be allowed, if that period of service counted for apprenticeship, to qualify as a law agent on that period of service?—I should think, as the qualifications for law agent are just now, it would be rather difficult. It would be necessary if such a qualification were to be made that some facilities should be given by which deutes might have the opportunity of qualifying themselves.

57,453. Those facilities depend in part upon the position of the professional organisation?—Undoubtedly, but there is the difficulty of apprenticeship. Many of the deutes have not gone through the apprenticeship required under the Law Agents Acts. Some provision would require to be made by which that requirement could be met. I do not see any difficulty in arranging it.

57,454. In some cases there are honorary deutes for Procurators Fiscal in the outlying districts?—In the majority of cases I would be inclined to say that that is so.

57,455. What is the motive that inclines a man to take an honorary deuteship?—Personal friendship, I think, to a great extent.

57,456. Does he get a few fees, or does he do his work for nothing?—It is rather the other way about. The fact of a man being an honorary deute is sometimes the occasion of his having to give up the defence of a case in which he would otherwise have been called upon to act. The usual rule is that the Procurator Fiscal asks one of his personal friends to act for him, but in some cases, as I say, there is an honorarium given, but not so large as to be worth much.

57,457. We were told this morning that there was a scheme suggested by which the number of Sheriff Clerks in Scotland should be reduced in the outlying districts to bring the total number down to something like 15. Do you think that in those outlying districts it would be possible that the same gentleman should hold the office of Sheriff Clerk and Procurator Fiscal?—The qualifications for the two offices are entirely distinct.

57,458. But do not you think a skilled professional man of considerable experience as a law agent, both in criminal law and other business, could do it pretty well?—Yes, but you would not get such a man to fill the office in an outlying place.

57,459. But the combined office might be made an important and well-paid office?—It might be made more valuable in that respect, certainly. The requirements for a Sheriff Clerk or Sheriff Clerk Depute are simply that he understands Court procedure, but that is only a very small part of the qualifications of a Procurator Fiscal.

57,460. But I am assuming that you could get an experienced law agent who has had the all-round experience of a law agent which includes Court procedure and criminal law. If you appointed him as Sheriff Clerk he would forget his criminal law, but if you appointed him to both offices he would keep the knowledge of them both up?—But who is to act as Clerk of the Court?

57,461. Is it quite impossible that the man who is deute should do both things?—It is. You would only have one man who could act as the Clerk of the Court. The Procurator Fiscal could scarcely write up the findings upon summary complaints; if he did, I am afraid there would be allegations of corruption or injustice.

57,462. You told us you believed that in order to secure good appointments it was necessary to concentrate public and personal responsibility in the hands of one person, namely, the Lord Advocate?—Yes; for myself I have great confidence in an appointment made in that particular manner.

57,463. One of the conditions of carrying out such public and personal responsibility is that the best man possible should be appointed?—Undoubtedly.

57,464. And any other consideration, except that of the qualification of the man for the post, should be excluded?—As far as possible.

57,465. Do you think, taking the history of Scotland for the last 20 or 30 years, the concentration of responsibility for legal appointments in the Lord Advocate has in fact excluded political considerations?—Speaking of my own personal experience, I would say that in many cases I know there have been appointments made which are not political at all.

57,466. There have been appointments made which are not political, but surely that does not prove that there have been no appointments made which are political?—No; but there is a good deal of misunderstanding on that question of political appointments. If a good man gets the place, what does it matter what party in politics he belongs to? Really the system has worked wonderfully well. The men appointed have been good men and done their duty well. Of course if one could eliminate politics altogether it would be a good thing, but it is not easy to do it, because officials are human and they cannot altogether deprive themselves of a personal bias.

2 June 1915.]

MR. HENRY HILTON BROWN.

[Continued.]

57,467. But you would agree that the concentration of it on one man has not in fact eliminated that consideration?—The curious thing is that, since the patronage was vested entirely in the Lord Advocate, we have had a remarkable breadth of appointment in Procurators Fiscal. Taking the last considerable number of appointments, they have been either promotions of Procurators Fiscal or of Depute Procurators Fiscal. We have had very few men taken in from outside in the last seven or eight years. I can only recollect three outside appointments.

57,468. (Lord Dundas.) As I understand, as regards the present organization of what I may call the Department of the Procurators Fiscal, you have suggested one or two possible improvements?—Yes.

57,469. You said something about fixing a standard of qualification for the Procurators Fiscal and their deposes as one part of the improvement?—I think that very important, if it could be done.

57,470. And you mentioned the matters of pension, and so forth?—Pensions are a most important matter.

57,471. And the extension of the districts and consolidation of them?—Yes, with a certain measure of discretion and judgment. I am not inclined to advocate an extremely hard and fast enlargement of jurisdictions.

57,472. No, but beyond these quite legitimate topics, are there really any definite claims in your improvement for alteration of the present arrangement?—Like all other officials we have grievances. I do not suppose any officials have not, but apart from these mentioned I do not know that there is much I need press.

57,473. Within the very narrow limits of the Procurator Fiscal's service, do you really think there is much room for putting things on what is sometimes called a Civil Service basis, or anything of that sort?—If the main point could be conceded, that the Procurators Fiscal shall always be selected from the body of qualified law agents of standing who have actually been in practice for a certain number of years, or from deposes who have a sufficient qualification, I think that the other matters could be arranged.

57,474. There is no legal difficulty, as matters stand just now, about deposes being transferred from place to place or anything of that sort, if it were thought desirable?—There is no difficulty whatever in the way of that.

57,475. By the necessities of their position, I take it the Procurators Fiscal are in almost daily communication with the Crown Office in Edinburgh about the matters of their routine?—Almost daily.

57,476. And nearly as much, naturally, necessarily in contact with the four Advocates Depute who serve under the Lord Advocate in the Crown Office?—Yes; as they take the different circuits in rotation every Procurator Fiscal at one time or other comes under each depute.

57,477. You report as a matter of routine to the Crown Office on matters of sudden deaths and the like?—Yes.

57,478. That is a Procurator Fiscal's duty, and then, if Crown counsel are satisfied that there is no case for inquiry they simply mark, "No proceedings," and back it comes to you?—That is so.

57,479. On the other hand, if any doubt occurs to the mind of Crown counsel, they instruct you to make further inquiries in the matter?—That is so.

57,480. As regards the crimes on which you report, I suppose the Court for trial and the mode of trial are dictated to the Procurator Fiscal by the Crown counsel, the Advocates Depute, under the advice, if necessary, of the Lord Advocate and the Solicitor-General?—That is so.

57,481. With all that intimate touch between the Procurators Fiscal and the Crown Office, is it not pretty apparent that the Lord Advocate has the means of acquainting himself exceedingly well with the quality of men that he has in Procurators Fiscal, and even in deposes all over the place?—That is the case. They know at the Crown Office exactly what is the qualification of almost every one of the Procurators Fiscal. With regard to the deposes there is perhaps more difficulty, but after a length of time in their appointment they get familiar with them.

57,482. Even in the case of Deputes Fiscal I suppose the Advocates Depute, when they go and prosecute on circuit, come in contact with them?—Undoubtedly.

57,483. So they also come within the actual purview of the Lord Advocate of the day, so far as they necessarily should?—They do.

57,484. Are these among your reasons for thinking that the Lord Advocate has means at his disposal of a better and juster knowledge of the situation than any committee of advice or the like could have?—That is what I feel; that his Lordship has opportunities of knowing these details which no committee would have.

MR. PETER FRASER MACKENNA, LL.B. (Procurator Fiscal of Ayrshire (Ayr District)), called and examined.

57,485. (Chairman.) You are Procurator Fiscal of the Ayr district?—Yes, of Ayrshire.

57,486. How long have you held that post?—21 years.

57,487. Are you a solicitor?—Yes; before that I was a solicitor, a bank agent and a land agent.

57,488. You have heard the evidence given by Mr. Brown?—Yes.

57,489. Are there any points in that evidence which you would wish to supplement or modify in any way?—I think that on the whole I agree with what Mr. Brown has said; but there are one or two points which I think might be none the worse for some emphasis. I do not know that one would quite gather from Mr. Brown's evidence that we do regard ourselves as having a very distinct grievance, particularly, I think, with regard to the prolonged failure to carry into effect the recommendations that you, sir, quoted from that Commission that sat so far back as 1871, with regard to pensions. That has really been a burning question with us for many years. The case for pensions is much stronger than it was in 1871. Procurators Fiscal were not then restricted, and since 1871 they have been increasingly subjected to the disabilities which attach to the Civil Service. As Mr. Brown said, we have convinced one Lord Advocate after another that in all fairness, in analogy with other public servants, we should have pensions; but the difficulty is, that the Lord Advocate, by political vicissitudes, moves off, and we are still left as we are. Might I just say, that it was with some little misgiving we found our case being brought before the Commission. We are quite glad to appear, of course, and glad of the opportunity of having our position stated, but the position is that we seemed—at least, we fancied ourselves—about to realise our expectations in these matters. We were told by the present Lord Advocate's predecessor that there was in existence a Bill to give effect to these matters, and even that he had the promise of legislative facilities from the Prime Minister for carrying that out. The present Lord Advocate said, just the other day in Parliament, that the matter was under consideration. Now we have some little concern lest the fact that it is before this Commission may cause the matter to be shelved. No doubt ultimately a recommendation, such as we would hope to get from this Commission, would be a strong lever; but we are apt to get impatient, and Royal Commissions, of course, cannot report without some delay, and an inevitable delay follows before their recommendations, however strongly worded, get legislative effect. We do feel very strongly upon that point, and I confess that I see a feeling of something akin to bitterness growing up in the minds of Procurators Fiscal on that matter.

57,490. Have you known cases in which men who have arrived at an advanced stage of life and who would be anxious to retire, have been prevented from retiring through the absence of a pension system?—I think that is so. I think there are cases to-day of that sort where they would wish to retire and cannot, or will not, do so.

2 June 1915.]

Mr. PETER FRASER MACKENNA, LL.B.

[Continued.]

57,491. You mention, in the précis you have given us, the fact that there is no provision for leave of absence, either by way of holiday or on account of sickness?—I think that is a very serious matter for the men in smaller districts.

57,492. Is not that provided for by the system of deputed?—It is not, although there may be a depute. Take a Procurator Fiscal in a small district with, perhaps, just enough work to keep himself busy. You must understand that a Procurator Fiscal must give his own personal attention to his work, and he cannot have an understudy who is sufficiently in touch with things, or sufficiently experienced to take his place if, from the desire of a holiday, or from illness, he has to go off.

57,493. What does he do, in fact?—He does not go away.

57,494. Does he never get a holiday?—I have had only one holiday in 21 years, and I know of many Procurators Fiscal who cannot take one.

57,495. But you have one depute who is remunerated and two honorary deputed?—Yes.

57,496. Are none of the three capable of taking your place for a short time?—I do not think they are, because I do my work myself. I like to be busy, and I keep my work going, and I have no sufficient understudy to allow me, with confidence, to go off and leave my work.

57,497. What is the remedy that you suggest for that?—I have thought over remedies, naturally, and I am afraid I have not been able to find one, but I think that should be taken into account in the general estimation of the situation of Procurators Fiscal. The fact that in the smaller districts they are subject to that difficulty should be an increased reason for opening up promotions to officials in smaller districts. I think it should also be taken as a reason for giving them better emoluments than they now have, and also for giving them retiring allowances. I do not think there is any direct corrective to it.

57,498. Would it be possible to have one or more supernumerary Procurators Fiscal?—Peripatetic?

57,499. Yes, peripatetic, who could be sent to take the place in a Procurator Fiscal's absence on a holiday or through illness?—That is the only suggestion which occurred to me as feasible. I do not say it is not feasible. There might be one to stand by for an emergency; but it would be difficult to arrange in order to provide a definite holiday. I do not know any other case where an official's responsibility not only is unceasing all the year round, but is quite unabated. We are responsible all the year round; Sunday and Saturday, vacation and session, makes no difference to us. Crimes take place; people die and accidents happen at all times, and our work is emergency work and has to be done at once.

57,500. The work appears to be of such a nature that a competent person sent down for the occasion could at once take up the work and continue it during the absence of the Procurator Fiscal?—Probably better than the immediate Procurator Fiscal could; he would have more varied experience. It is not simply crime I mean, but every case of sudden death has to be disposed of. A Procurator Fiscal has at once to take that up because the burial cannot take place until he is satisfied. So that his work is emergent and must be immediately carried through. May I refer to the fact that we differ from the Civil Service in this respect: there is no increase of pay with length of service, which I think is the rule that generally obtains throughout the Civil Service; but it does not apply to us at all. The Treasury attitude to us—and I think it is the Treasury that we are up against, if I may use the phrase, in most of these matters—seems to be that they employ us to do a definite bit of work, and when they have paid us for doing that their contract ceases. But we would wish them to be consistent in that matter, and where duty is piled on to one, as it is, they should take that into consideration; that is to say, if it is to be piecework it should be piecework throughout.

57,501. Is not that taken into consideration in fixing from time to time the salaries of the Procurators Fiscal?—I am not aware that it is. I have known one case where an official was able to authenticate an addition to his work of 50 per cent., and the Treasury contented themselves by giving him a 5 per cent. increase to his salary, which was not sufficient to cover the extra outlay that the additional work had entailed on him. What I refer to is this. It is the great body of legislation which takes place now. Take the Motor Car Act, which added enormously to the work of Procurators Fiscal; the Merchant Shipping Act; the Mines Act; the National Insurance Act; the Old Age Pensions Act, and so on; every one of those involves additional duty, and very often very intricate duty, on the Procurators Fiscal.

57,502. Have they involved additional expenditure for staff and assistance?—Yes, I think so. I think there are many cases where it must inevitably involve additional outlay for staff, and there is no corresponding consideration given.

57,503. Is not that taken into account when the question of salary is raised?—In the first place it is left to the Procurator Fiscal to raise the question himself, and it is an invidious position for an official to be always hammering away at the Treasury and asking for more. I think it would be much better to have an automatic increase, as takes place in other services, with length of service, and correspondingly increased efficiency.

57,504. That matter would be met to some extent if a system of promotion were introduced, such as has been described by Mr. Brown?—Yes, I think it would; but on the occurrence of every vacancy the Treasury seems to think it its duty to cut down salaries. There are cases where they have put on a restriction from general practice, and have imposed an age limit for retirement—an illegal proceeding, as has been pointed out—and in the face of those two things, and the increased cost of living, have reduced the salary.

57,505. What is your view as to an age limit for retirement?—Of course a pension has that as its sequel. If there are to be retiring allowances there must be an age for retirement.

57,506. If retiring allowances are to be granted, what age would you fix for retirement?—I am not sure that 70 is not too high. You have to remember that 70 might be all right enough for one with a concentrated district; but take a rural Procurator Fiscal in a rural district, he is liable to a sudden call at any moment, perhaps, to a remote part of his district, involving exposure to the weather at all hours. I am not just sure that a normal man of 70 could actually meet that requirement.

57,507. You would be inclined to suggest a lower limit because of sudden calls and the amount of travelling?—I should suggest 70 as a compulsory age, but 65 as an optional age.

57,508. The ordinary Civil Service limit is 60 as an optional age, and 65 as a compulsory age?—Yes; but, as Mr. Brown pointed out, there is the consideration that Procurators Fiscal do not come on the scene, as a rule, until somewhat advanced in years. That, as you, sir, suggested, might become a thing of the past.

57,509. Are there any other points to which you wish to call attention?—Might I revert to the question of the retiring allowance, because that is a matter which we do feel very strongly upon. You, yourself, indicated that that might be complicated by the fact that a Procurator Fiscal does work for other local bodies. There is also a complication that Mr. Brown omitted to mention, and that is a little historical. The Procurator Fiscal was originally paid from local sources, and the Government took over, piecemeal, responsibility for his payment; but the residual liability rested, and to-day rests, with the counties who have to make the Procurators Fiscal a certain payment for the residual part of their original duty. Now that is a source of great friction, where friction ought not to be, between the Procurators Fiscal and the local authorities. The local authorities are not alive to their obligation, and they naturally resent having to pay an official whom they have no control over. I think that should be wiped out, and that the Government should take over the total responsibility for the payment of Procurators Fiscal,

2 June 1915.]

MR. PETER FRASER MACKENNA, LL.B.

[Continued.]

which would do away with one of the reasons that are urged against us having retiring allowances. I think we can put forward this: we Procurators Fiscal have been able to effect a considerable number of public economies by improvements on the system of criminal procedure, and I am quite sure that the economies that have in that way been effected would much more than meet any additional call that would be made on the public purse for the provision of retiring allowances. I might mention one: dealing with the case of persons who want to plead guilty and have their cases quickly disposed of, there was a provision introduced into the law at the instigation of a Procurator Fiscal, which I am sure has saved thousands and thousands of pounds to the country, in addition to being in itself a very admirable improvement in criminal procedure. Of course we admit that we are bound to do our best, and we claim no credit for these improvements; but we do say, that if the money that we have in that way saved to the Treasury was reckoned up, it would easily cover the slight additional cost that would be involved by giving us retiring allowances. It is invidious to draw comparisons, but we cannot help drawing comparisons between ourselves and the Sheriffs and Sheriffs Substitute. No doubt they are on a different level from what we are, but their case is somewhat analogous, and we cannot shut our eyes to the fact that Sheriffs Principal, although they are not confined to the duties of their official work, but have the facility of practising otherwise, do have a right conferred on them by Parliament to annuities, and on a favourable scale. Similarly, Sheriffs Substitute, who have had a somewhat similar history to ourselves, also have the right to retiring allowances. Then, in the Act of 1907, there was introduced a provision to meet the case of a Sheriff Substitute who might be incapacitated temporarily through illness; and he is in this position, that he gets his place filled for him and draws his salary.

57,510. Which section is that?—Section 16.

57,511. That applies to absence through ill-health?—Yes. We have no analogous provision.

57,512. That section enables the Secretary for Scotland to make an interim appointment of a person to discharge the duties of a Sheriff Substitute during his absence from ill-health?—Yes; and to pay that interim person out of moneys provided by Parliament.

57,513. Do you suggest a similar arrangement in the case of Procurators Fiscal?—It would be welcomed. There are one or two cases of Procurators Fiscal who have broken down, and cannot retire because they have no right to retiring allowances.

57,514. What has been done in those cases?—They have just had to make their own arrangements for carrying on their work.

57,515. They have employed a depute to do the work?—I expect so.

57,516. (Sir John Kempe.) Does the Procurator Fiscal give his whole time to the office, or does he take other work?—Formerly he did not give his whole time, but was a solicitor, sometimes in very extensive practice. The rule of restriction was introduced, largely, I think, owing to some trouble in the West Highlands and in some mining districts, where incompatibility of interest arose, and it was suggested that the public interest did not get the attention it ought to have got, and in consequence of that the policy was adopted of restricting a Procurator Fiscal to the duties of his office. That policy has been generally followed. The difficulty, of course, is the small district; you want to give a man sufficient to do. On the other hand, the necessity for restriction, unfortunately, is greater in those small districts, because the possibility of a conflict of interest is obviously greater in a small place than in a large one, and that is really the difficulty about restriction. The only way in which I think it can be met is by consolidation of districts, and one has to remember that the facilities for travelling which the motor car gives lessen the difficulty to a very considerable extent.

57,517. In the cases where you say you have new duties put on you without more salary or more provision for help, are those cases confined to the districts where a Procurator Fiscal gives his whole time or are there some in small districts where he does not give his whole time? Where a man gives his whole time already, would they decline to give him more salary or more staff, or only where he gives part of his time to his duties?—They do decline.

57,518. In both cases?—I think so. They do not give a staff as a rule. The Procurator Fiscal, except in one or two isolated cases, gets a lump sum, and has to run his office accordingly. This increase of work goes on, and there is an increase of his own personal work by new legislation of some sort. It increases the call on his own personal service. I make no complaint of that, although it should be remunerated, but it really involves actual increased outlay for staff, and there is no way in the meantime by which that is met, except by a Procurator Fiscal making a definite complaint and an application for rise of salary, and I have given one instance showing the way in which, in that instance, it was met.

57,519. Your impression is that there are cases in which the Treasury has actually refused to give more remuneration or anything more for staff where the Procurator Fiscal gives his whole time?—Certainly.

57,520. (Mr. Graham Wallas.) On the point of how to secure the carrying on of the Procurator Fiscal's work in sickness or through the need of a holiday, do you think in large closely-populated districts it might be possible to appoint a sort of Assistant Procurator Fiscal, drawn from the same type of experienced law agent and capable of taking the place of his principal?—I do not know that in a district such as you predicate the difficulty exists, because in such a district he would probably have constantly in his employment an understudy who could take his place. I am rather referring to the case of the man who is outside and not in an important thickly populated district, but who is in a rural district, say, and who, from the conditions of his work, cannot have any person with him who can effectively take his place.

57,521. But the understudy in a big district is not a man definitely appointed as assistant Procurator Fiscal, but probably is an elderly man who has worked his way up from being clerk in the office?—But he is there as depute, however he has come to be so. In some cases a depute is a solicitor brought from outside and appointed. He is there as depute, and has had experience of that work.

57,522. I am thinking of the further difficulty of pension. If you want a pension system it is desirable that the normal period of service should be rather long, and it is undesirable to have 15 years' service from a man and then pension him for life. If it were the custom to appoint future Procurators Fiscal at about 35 years of age as assistant Procurators Fiscal, and let them have a rather long period of service, it would be more economical from the point of view of the Treasury to pension them later?—Certainly.

57,523. If, in the thinly populated districts, it was desirable to make an interim appointment, and to send someone who knew the work thoroughly well to take the place of a man who for the moment was sick or wanted a holiday, one of those young assistant Procurators Fiscal might well do that job?—Certainly, if the whole scheme was organised.

57,524. It would be very easy to organise it in the Lord Advocate's Office?—I do not see any difficulty.

57,525. You rather pressed the point that the work of the Procurator Fiscal is not merely the work of sitting in an office and writing on paper, but it requires a certain measure of actual physical efficiency?—Certainly.

57,526. One would suppose a priori that where the appointments are made without limit of age and with no pension, you would find in any considerable service a certain number of men who are past the period of full physical efficiency. Has that in your recollection ever happened?—It is rather an awkward question to ask me, is it not?

57,527. Well, take it of people who are now dead—I am not asking for names. Can you remember, of those who are now dead, anybody who stayed on after the period of full efficiency?—I think the system

2 June 1915.]

Mr. PETER FRASER MACKENNA, LL.B.

[Continued.]

inevitably involves that, does it not? A man will not give up if he has no retiring allowance. As I have heard said, so long as he can sign his name, he will get his work done for him.

57,528. And it is not an office to which the public remain indifferent. The good government of a district rather depends on the mental efficiency of the Procurator Fiscal?—I think so.

57,529. (Lord Dundas.) You mentioned incidentally a statutory improvement about prisoners pleading guilty. No doubt you mean Section 31 of the Act of 1887?—Yes.

57,530. The ostensible author of that Act was Lord Advocate Macdonald?—I have heard Lord Advocate Macdonald say himself he was indebted for it to Mr. Hart of Glasgow. That is my reason for saying so.

57,531. I wanted to know why you said it, and I am glad you have told me?—I have always understood that Lord Kingsburgh said so.

ONE HUNDRED AND THIRTY-SEVENTH DAY.

Thursday, 3rd June 1915.

PRESENT:

SIR HENRY BABINGTON SMITH, K.C.B., C.S.I. (Chairman).

The Hon. LORD DUNDAS.

Sir JOHN PRESCOTT HEWETT, G.C.S.I., C.I.E.

Sir JOHN ARROW KEMPE, K.C.B.

Sir GEORGE MORISON PAUL.

Mr. ARTHUR BOUTWOOD.

Mr. JOHN ROBERT CLYNES, M.P.

Mr. CECIL COWARD.

Mr. PERCY EWING MATHESON.

Mr. ARTHUR EVERETT SHIPLEY, F.R.S.

Mr. GRAHAM WALLAS.

Mr. E. W. H. MILLAR (Secretary).

Mr. THOMAS SWINTON PATERSON, B.L., S.S.C., called and examined.

57,532. (Chairman.) You are Principal Clerk of Bills in the Court of Session?—I am.

57,533. How long have you held that post?—Since May 1907.

57,534. What had been your previous experience?—Before that I had been in practice as a solicitor before the Supreme Courts in Scotland for over 20 years.

57,535. You gave evidence before the Committee on Minor Legal Appointments in Scotland in 1910?—I did.

57,536. In your evidence before that Committee, which we have now before us, you stated very fully the nature of the business which comes before the Bill Chamber?—I did.

57,537. It will, therefore, be unnecessary for the Commission to go into that matter in detail, but it would be convenient if you would state very briefly the principal heads under which the Bill Chamber business comes?—The work of the office may be conveniently stated to be as follows: I. Suspensions, Suspensions and Interdict, &c., initiated by Note and corresponding with the old procedure by Bill from which the title "Bill Chamber" is derived. The Note may be refused, but if a prima facie case is made out, only the interim regulation of the rights or possession of parties can be dealt with in the Bill Chamber, and the Note is passed to the Outer House for further procedure. II. Bankruptcy Proceedings finally transferred from the Inner House to the Bill Chamber by the Bankruptcy Scotland Act, 1856. III. Numerous applications specially directed to the Bill Chamber under various statutes, including Railway and Canal Valuation Appeals, Appeals under the Public Health Acts, Petition under the Titles to Land Consolidation (Scotland) Act, 1868, and Applications under the Small Landholders (Scotland) Act, 1911. IV. Petitions presented to the Junior Lord Ordinary under the Distribution of Business Act, 1857, viz.: "All Summary Petitions and applications to the Lords of Council and Session which are not incident to actions or causes actually depending at the time of presenting the same." And in particular (1) Petitions under the Entail Acts; (2) Petitions and Applications under any of the General Railway Acts or under the Lands Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Act, 1845, or under any local or personal Act; (3) Petitions and Applications relative to money consigned under any statute or law subject to the order, disposal, or discretion of the Court of Session; (4) Petitions and Applications for the Appointment of Judicial Factors, Factors loco tutoris or loco absentis, or Curator Bonis, or by any such Factors or Curators for extraordinary or special powers or for Exoneration and Discharge; (5) All Petitions, Applications, and Reports under the Pupils Protection Act, 1849. Extracts of Decrees pronounced under heads I, II, and III are prepared and issued by the Bill Chamber under head IV by the Extractor of the Court of Session. V. Bills authorising the issue of Signet Letters for various forms of diligence and execution, and Fiats in terms of the Personal Diligence Act, 1837, and the Conveyancing (Scotland) Act, 1874, and other Statutes dealt with by the Clerk of the Bills. VI. Under Codifying Act of Sederunt E.N.I. A Register of Orders of Courts having jurisdiction in Bankruptcy in England and Ireland in terms of 46 and 47 Vic. c. 52 and for or in the course of winding up a company in terms of the Companies Consolidation Act, 1908, Sections 180 and 290. In Bankruptcy proceedings, especially Petitions for Sequestration, the responsibility of examining the vouchers and evidence produced and scrutinising the proceedings rests entirely with the Clerk of the Bills and his staff, and to a modified extent this applies also to all unopposed Petitions and Applications, though the Orders are granted by the Lord Ordinary.

57,538. Are there any other matters dealt with in the Bill Chamber which are not included in that summary?—An important and responsible duty falling on the Clerk of the Bills is the determining of the sufficiency of the Caution in Suspensions and Suspensions and Interdicts, &c., passed on caution. He has also to be satisfied of the sufficiency of caution found by Interim Factors appointed under Section 14 of the Bankruptcy (Scotland) Act, 1913.

57,539. You mention that extracts of Decrees pronounced under heads I, II, and III, that is to say, in the case of Suspensions, Bankruptcy proceedings, and certain special applications, are prepared and issued by the Bill Chamber?—Yes.

57,540. But that extracts under head IV are prepared and issued by the Extractor of the Court of Session?—Yes. If you call them Junior Lord Ordinary Petitions, that will define the exception.

57,541. Why is there that different procedure as regards extracts?—The Bill Chamber in former days

3 June 1915.]

MR. THOMAS SWINTON PATERSON, B.L., S.S.C.

[Continued.]

was of course a separate department more completely than it is now, and when the Extractor of the Court of Session was appointed to extract all the decrees of the Court of Session, the Bill Chamber was excluded, and the Clerk of the Bills continued to prepare his own extracts. That was before the Junior Lord Ordinary Petitions were transferred to the Bill Chamber in 1889; therefore, when the Junior Lord Ordinary Petitions were transferred in 1889, the Extractor of the Court of Session still continued to extract as he had done up to that time, the decrees under those petitions, but what had been Bill Chamber work before that, that is to say, decrees falling under Bill Chamber work at an earlier date than that, continued to be extracted by the Clerk of the Bills.

57,542. You have therefore experience of two systems: in certain parts of your work you prepare the extracts yourself, and in other parts the Extractor prepares them?—Yes, that is so.

57,543. Which do you find the most convenient and satisfactory?—I do not find any real inconvenience in either. I have a larger staff than that in any other office, and I do not think it would be possible for the other offices in the Court with just two clerks to each office to prepare their extracts. With me, where I have three clerks, it is not so great a difficulty, and I have as you know a clerical assistant who does all the writing in those cases; besides, as a rule, the extracts that I have to prepare are not nearly so long as many of the extracts in the Court of Session.

57,544. Is it mainly a question of available staff, or is there any difficulty in preparing the extracts?—There is no difficulty in preparing the extracts that should not be met by any clerk of court; it would merely mean a good deal of trouble with the clerical staff.

57,545. I gather from what you have said that the work of the Bill Chamber is very varied, and some of it of an urgent character?—Yes.

57,546. I see that Lord Salvesen's Committee in their report state: "The duties of the Principal and Assistant Clerks are very varied and responsible, much more so than those of the depute clerks and their assistants in the Outer House"; do you confirm that?—Well, I think it is quite true, but I do not care to say very much about that, lest I should appear to depreciate my colleagues.

57,547. What is your present staff?—I have an Assistant Clerk of the Bills, an Ordinary Clerk of the Bill Chamber, and a Clerical Assistant.

57,548. Lord Salvesen's Committee made certain recommendations with regard to the salaries of yourself and your clerical staff; have those recommendations been carried into effect?—I think, so far as my assistants are concerned, they have been. Nothing has been done with regard to my own salary.

57,549. That committee also recommended an alteration in the hours of business; they recommended that the hours should be extended to five on ordinary week days instead of four; has that change been made?—No, but when the additions were made to the salaries of my assistants the Treasury stipulated that in the event of an increase in the hours no further addition of salary was to be expected.

57,550. Why has that recommendation as regards the hours not been carried into effect?—It can only be carried into effect by an Act of Sederunt, because the hours are fixed by Act of Sederunt; and that has not yet been passed. I anticipate that it will be done soon.

57,551. To whom would it fall to take the initiative in carrying out this recommendation?—I should fancy the Principal Clerk of Session.

57,552. It would be for him to move the Court to pass an Act of Sederunt?—It would be for him to introduce the matter to the notice of the Lord President. I think he has done so. I think the matter is being considered.

57,553. Are you yourself appointed by the Crown?—Yes.

57,554. On the recommendation of the Lord Advocate?—On the recommendation of the Lord Advocate.

57,555. How is your staff appointed?—The Assistant Clerk of the Bills and the Ordinary Clerk in the Bill Chamber hold appointments from the Crown on the recommendation of the Lord Advocate. The Clerical Assistant is appointed by myself.

57,556. How do they stand as regards pension?—The Assistant Clerk and the Ordinary Clerk in the Bill Chamber are entitled to pension; the Clerical Assistant is not.

57,557. You yourself are entitled to pension, I suppose?—I am.

57,558. Were the Assistant Clerk and the Ordinary Clerk appointed from outside or by promotion from lower posts?—The present Assistant Clerk, Mr. Duncan, entered the Bill Chamber in 1899 as Clerical Assistant. After serving three years as Clerical Assistant he was appointed in May 1902 Ordinary Clerk, and in November 1905 Assistant Clerk; you will find that on page 57 of the Minutes of Evidence of Lord Salvesen's Committee.

57,559. And the present Ordinary Clerk?—The present Ordinary Clerk was appointed the other day by the Lord Advocate, he only presented his commission to the Court about a week ago. The former Ordinary Clerk, Mr. Carragher, died rather more than a month ago, and he had been Clerical Assistant prior to his appointment as Ordinary Clerk in January of this year.

57,560. He succeeded Mr. McLaren?—Yes, Mr. McLaren also had been Clerical Assistant before he was appointed Ordinary Clerk in the Bill Chamber.

57,561. Had the Ordinary Clerk who has just been appointed served as Clerical Assistant?—No.

57,562. Where did he come from?—He came from the outside. I understand that he was conveyancing clerk with Messrs. Duncan, Smith, and McLaren, S.S.C. Edinburgh, and had been a conveyancing clerk with them for some 16 years. He is a law agent.

57,563. What is his age?—I do not know; but I think he must be pretty nearly 40. I cannot speak about that.

57,564. Do the Assistant Clerk and the Ordinary Clerk in the Bill Chamber hold Civil Service certificates?—No.

57,565. They have direct Crown appointments?—They have direct Crown appointments.

57,566. Your Clerical Assistant is not entitled to pension, and naturally does not require a Civil Service certificate?—That is so.

57,567. Do you consider that previous legal experience is necessary for your staff?—Certainly.

57,568. Experience in a law agent's office?—Well, I think that for the posts of Ordinary Clerk in the Bill Chamber and Assistant Clerk of the Bills, with the salaries that they have now got, there should be no difficulty in securing that any man appointed to either of those offices should hold the law agent's qualification or something equivalent thereto, such as a degree in law. I think that for those offices such training is so highly desirable that it might perfectly well be made a condition of their appointment when they are entering the service. If there are other men who have not such qualifications, either serving as Clerical Assistant in the Bill Chamber or serving in other departments of the Court of Session and gaining experience in that way, I do not think that they should be excluded, because it would be a serious thing to simply block every chance of promotion to a man; but I think that when new men are entering, and if they are appointed to one or other of these offices, a law agent's qualification or its equivalent should be insisted upon.

57,569. (Mr. Boutwood.) I may have missed the point; what are their salaries?—The Assistant Clerk's salary begins at 300*l.* and rises to 475*l.*; the Ordinary Clerk in the Bill Chamber's salary begins at 200*l.* rising to 300*l.*

57,570. (Chairman.) What is the relation of your department to the Principal Clerk of Session?—We are under the supervision of the Principal Clerk of Session.

57,571. Is that under the Clerks of Session (Scotland) Regulation Act, 1889?—Yes, with the Amending Act of a year ago.

57,572. In practice what does supervision mean?—I am not quite sure that I can give you a very good instance of it. I cannot say that I have ever seen it put in force.

3 June 1915.]

Mr. THOMAS SWINTON PATERSON, B.L., S.S.C.

[Continued.]

57,573. In matters of discipline, for instance?—It would refer to all matters of discipline, and in such cases I know it has been exercised. Also the Principal Clerk of Session has important duties in regulating matters between one office and another in the Court of Session.

57,574. Do you mean as regards the distribution of work between the different offices?—Well, to some extent; for instance, there is one man away just now, an Assistant Clerk of Session, serving with the colours, and the Principal Clerk of Session has to arrange for that man's work being done. In a case of that kind, of course, it falls to him to make such arrangements.

57,575. In a case of that kind would he be able to draw upon your staff for an assistant?—I suppose he could. As a matter of fact, I think there is an understanding that he draws to some extent upon the judge's clerks.

57,576. (Lord Dundas.) I think he has taken a judge's clerk, has he not, to fill the vacancy of the man who has gone to serve with the colours?—He has done so, and I think there is some authority for doing it; but I cannot tell you that just now.

57,577. (Chairman.) Does the Principal Clerk of Session intervene at all in the internal arrangements of your office, in such a matter as the exact allotment of work between different members of your staff?—No.

57,578. That is entirely in your own hands?—That is entirely in my own hands.

57,579. In any grave matter of discipline would you refer to him?—Yes.

57,580. If it was a question of suspension, that is in his hands and not in yours?—Yes, in his hands under the Lord President; I think that is the way it is put in the Act of 1889.

57,581. He has power to suspend with the approval of the Lord President of the Court?—Yes.

57,582. But dismissal rests with the Court, does it not?—Yes.

57,583. Do you find the present organisation satisfactory?—I find the present organisation of my own office perfectly satisfactory.

57,584. Would there be any advantage in drawing closer the connection between your department and the other branches of the Court of Session Offices?—I do not really quite know what is meant by that.

57,585. I understand that at present promotion may take place into or out of your office from or to the other departments of the Court, but that that is an exception and not the rule?—That is so.

57,586. Would there be an advantage in treating the whole of the staff, including your office, more as a single whole for the purposes of the work of the Court?—Before the Report of the Committee on Minor Legal Appointments we felt that very strongly. When I went to the Bill Chambers in 1907, I found that Mr. Antonio, the former Clerk of the Bills, had repeatedly made representations through the Principal Clerk of Session to the Lord Advocate, on the position of his assistants; they had been appointed when they were young men at salaries which were less than had been paid to the men holding the same offices before their time; and they felt that, as things then stood, they had almost no chance of promotion, because the vacancies in the Court of Session itself amongst the assistant clerks were so often filled up by the Lord Advocate's clerk. The matter was put, I think, very strongly before the Committee, and, as the result of their Report, I believe—at least, partly as the result of their Report—the office of Lord Advocate's clerk has been allowed to lapse.

57,587. Is there at present no Lord Advocate's clerk?—Not in the sense that there was until within the last few years. The last Lord Advocate's clerk was Mr. Roxborough, who was clerk to Mr. Ure, now Lord Strathclyde; he was appointed an assistant clerk. After that, the work of the Lord Advocate's clerk—the work up in London here and the special work of Lord Advocate's clerk—was done by a clerk appointed from the Scottish Office. The first man who did that work was Mr. Ford, who is now the Keeper of the Minute Book in the Court of Session.

57,588. A clerk appointed out of the Scottish Office would, when the Lord Advocate went out of office, revert to his work in the Scottish Office, and therefore there would not be the same occasion for providing for him by an appointment in the Court of Session?—I do not know the inner workings of the thing, but that seemed to be what happened.

57,589. That change, you believe, took place in consequence of the recommendation of Lord Salvesen's Committee?—It took place after Lord Salvesen's Committee reported.

57,590. But I see that Lord Salvesen's Committee made an express exception in favour of the Lord Advocate's clerk?—Yes; but at the same time Lord Salvesen's Committee made very strong recommendations regarding promotion.

57,591. But they particularly excepted from their objections to outside appointments the case of the Lord Advocate's clerk, which seems to imply that it was a case that might continue?—I think, perhaps, I went too far in suggesting that the one was the consequence of the other; but, at all events, the appointment of Lord Advocate's clerk has not been filled up since Mr. Roxborough was appointed Assistant Clerk of Session. That, of course, does not necessarily mean that there will be promotion, but, I think, the men have hope that as a matter of fact promotion will be easier, that there will be more opportunities now.

57,592. I gather that you think it desirable that promotion should be from within the office?—Yes, I think it ought to be; otherwise, if you put a young man in there, he after a time loses heart.

57,593. You are in favour of treating the Bill Chamber Office and the other offices as far as possible as a single organization for the purposes of promotion?—Yes. The work in each office, of course, differs a little from that in the others; the work of the Bill Chambers differs quite distinctly from the work of the Outer House, but if you have a man with legal training, who has been doing work as an Assistant Clerk of Session, I see no reason why he should not be appointed Assistant Clerk of the Bills. He would have a good deal to learn probably in connection with Bankruptcy procedure and some other technical procedures that we have, but there is no reason why he should not do it.

57,594. Is there any reason why an Ordinary Clerk of the Bill Chamber should not learn the work of an Assistant Clerk of Session?—No, there is no reason. What is required for all these appointments is a good general legal education.

57,595. Your office is at the Register House?—Yes.

57,596. Suggestions have frequently been made that the offices connected with the Court would be better placed in the Parliament House than in the Register House, and Lord Salvesen's Committee made a recommendation in that sense. Do those considerations apply strongly to your department?—They probably apply more strongly to my department than to any other, because with the other departments the work comes on regularly, and you know beforehand that it is coming on; with my department there are so many urgent matters that occur in the course of a day that have to be laid before the Lord Ordinary that it would certainly be a great advantage to me; but I think for all the offices it would be an advantage if the Clerks of Court could have their rooms in Parliament Square. That, however, would need to apply to the Extractors Department, I think, as well as to the Clerks of Court, and probably to the Accountant of Courts Department, because otherwise there would be just as much inconvenience in removing processes from the Clerks of Court to the Extractor or to the Accountant, and that difficulty would counterbalance any advantage of being up in Parliament Square.

57,597. If all those departments were moved to the Parliament House, would there be any drawbacks to be taken into account in the other direction?—I suppose that some agents would feel it a little less convenient.

57,598. Why is that?—Because almost all the agents' offices are on the north side of the town, and the Register House is more convenient for the agents and their clerks attending in the afternoon than the Parliament House would be.

3 June 1915.]

Mr. THOMAS SWINTON PATERSON, B.L., S.S.C.

[Continued.]

57,599. They, or at any rate their clerks, must have to attend constantly at the Parliament House?—Yes, but then the great number of interlocutors are interlocutors pronounced on the Motion Rolls.

57,600. Are you speaking now of the Bill Chamber work or of the work of the Court generally?—Both, the work of the Court generally. Those interlocutors are pronounced in the morning, and the agent or his clerk is in attendance when that is done, but copies of those interlocutors cannot be obtained then; the interlocutors have to be written and signed, and they are sent down to the Register House about lunch time, and are obtained by the agents in the afternoon. Now you see the same thing would apply, the interlocutors could not be ready in the morning when, probably, the majority of the agents would be leaving the Court, and they would have to come up or send up in the afternoon.

57,601. Are the agents not in attendance at the Court in the afternoon?—Not many of them.

57,602. (Sir George Paul.) If that is an inconvenience at all it is a very small one. It is as easy for most offices to send their clerks to Parliament Square as to the Register House, is it not?—Yes; it is not a serious matter.

57,603. It is not worth considering?—I do not think it is myself, but still it is just one little trouble. Some of those agents will have to do a good deal of work themselves, and they might feel it.

57,604. But it is just about as near to the Parliament House as to the Register House?—It takes, perhaps, an additional ten minutes or quarter of an hour.

57,605. Would you say as much as that?—Yes, I think so, if you allow both for going up the Mound and going down again; but I do not think it is a serious matter.

57,606. I think we may dismiss it almost?—Yes, quite.

57,607. (Chairman.) Is there at present an age limit for retirement?—70.

57,608. For yourself?—Yes, for myself and for the Assistant Clerk and for the Ordinary Clerk of the Bill Chamber.

57,609. That limit is fixed in the Commission?—Yes.

57,610. Do you see any reason why the ordinary Civil Service limit of age should not apply?—I do not think the age limit of 70 is too high. Take my own case. I was 45 when I was appointed. Well, 65 would be a very short period to run for earning a pension, for instance, and I think, if appointments are to be made from the outside of men who have been in practice and who have had some experience, 65 would certainly be too early.

57,611. If the normal course of appointment to the higher posts were by promotion from below, that consideration would have less force?—Yes, it would, of course, because then a man's pension would be earned from the time that he entered one of the junior offices; it would certainly have less force. But looking round the men in the Parliament House, agents, for instance, practising in the Parliament House, I do not think that 70 is too old an age to fix in the case of those offices.

57,612. (Lord Dundas.) Is it the case that the Bill Chamber is in activity all the year round?—Yes, it is.

57,613. I mean that even when the Court of Session is in vacation there is always, is there not, one of the judges in rotation, in Edinburgh, as Vacation judge?—Yes, that is so.

57,614. And to him the work of the Bill Chamber is brought?—Yes.

57,615. So the Bill Chamber work goes on all the year round?—Yes.

57,616. You told us that the Principal Clerk of Session exercises, or is supposed to exercise, some sort of supervision over your department?—Yes.

57,617. In practice, I suppose, he really does not interfere much with you in any way, does he?—No, certainly not.

57,618. But however that may be, would it in your view be feasible—I only ask you because other witnesses said something about it—to put upon the Principal Clerk of Session the duties of the Principal Clerk of the Bill Chamber as part of his work; I mean practically abolishing your own office and putting it into the other gentleman's office as part of his work?—I cannot see how it could be done at all. It would really come to this, that whoever was at the head of the Bill Chamber Office itself would necessarily do the duties of Principal Clerk of the Bills.

57,619. Do you find that the duties of your office fairly occupy your time?—Yes, they fairly occupy my time as a rule. I do not say that there are not occasions when one could do more, but, as you know, in the Court the work fluctuates considerably.

57,620. No doubt. Then you told us that before you became Clerk of the Bills you were a solicitor in practice before the Supreme Courts?—Yes.

57,621. Is it your view that the Principal Clerk of the Bills ought to have been such a man—a solicitor in practice?—I think so.

57,622. Why do you think so; tell us a little about it?—You see, I found myself that the ability to understand the difficulties that an agent has in the rather technical procedure that we have in the Bill Chamber enables me to make the working of the office a good deal smoother than I think it would be if one had not from experience sympathy with the little difficulties that occur to agents in procedure, that sometimes they are not just quite familiar with. Much of our Bill Chamber practice is not of every day occurrence in most offices.

57,623. I suppose that agents, especially perhaps the smaller agents, do come to you very often for advice as to how they are to proceed in your department?—Yes, every day.

57,624. Have you found that your own experience as a practising solicitor enables you to give them advice which you could not have done if you had been a mere clerk?—That is what I mean.

57,625. Is that, to your mind, a consideration in favour of appointing the Bill Chamber Principal Clerk from the outside?—I think so.

57,626. You were asked some questions by the Chairman in regard to the possible drawing closer of connection between the Bill Chamber and the other offices. I appreciate the answer that you gave, but when you spoke of other offices, I suppose you meant other offices of the Court of Session proper?—Yes.

57,627. You were not thinking, for instance, of the Justiciary Office?—No.

57,628. Drawing together the Justiciary Office and yours in that sense would never work, would it?—I do not think so.

57,629. What do you say about the Teind Office?—The Teind Office would be another exception. I am quite sure that no ordinary clerk of Court would undertake the Teind Office work.

57,630. I understand that you think that some degree of circulation might be reasonable and feasible between clerks in your office and the ordinary clerks of the Court of Session?—That is so.

57,631. There is some little circulation at present of that sort, is there not?—Yes.

57,632. Only one other point. Do I rightly understand from you that the office of Lord Advocate's clerk has been abolished?—I do not say abolished, but it has not been filled up.

57,633. Do you mean that the present Lord Advocate is without a clerk? I am only asking for information?—There used to be a man appointed Lord Advocate's clerk with quite a substantial salary.

57,634. Take it in this way. The Lord Advocate, of course, is always a gentleman in the forefront of practice at the Scottish Bar?—Yes.

57,635. He must have had previously to his appointment a clerk of his own when at the Bar?—Yes.

57,636. It used, I think, to be the practice that he generally appointed that gentleman to be his clerk as Lord Advocate?—That is true.

57,637. Has that gone out of vogue?—That, I think, has gone out. He must still have an Advocate or counsel's clerk for his private work, but not a Lord Advocate's clerk in the old sense.

3 June 1915.]

MR. THOMAS SWINTON PATERSON, B.L., S.S.C.

[Continued.]

57,638. What has become of the clerk of the present Lord Advocate, who used to be his clerk?—He has been appointed a Depute Clerk of Session, Mr. Smart.

57,639. Is not that the latest appointment of depute clerk?—That is the latest appointment, but he never held the old office of Lord Advocate's clerk.

57,640. Was he appointed very shortly after the appointment of Mr. Munro to be Lord Advocate?—Yes.

57,641. You tell us—and I have no doubt you are right—that the post of Lord Advocate's clerk, with the emoluments attached to it that you speak of, has not been filled up since that?—I understand that that is the case.

57,642. You mentioned Mr. Ford; he came from the Crown Office?—I thought he had been appointed from the Scottish Office to do the work of the Lord Advocate's clerk.

57,643. (Mr. Graham Wallas.) In Lord Salvesen's Committee, Mr. Watt in his separate memorandum stated, "The principle of pooling the clerical, registry and record keeping part of the work might with advantage be extended, so as to provide that, instead of the Bill Chamber, the Extractor's Department, and Teind Office undertaking such work for their several provinces, they would be restricted severally to their expert duties, and the work of the nature described should be done for them, as for the Inner and Outer House, by a General Clerical and Registry Branch. This might help to do away with some of the nondescript posts existing in the subordinate offices." You remember that recommendation?—Yes.

57,644. Do you know whether it has ever been discussed?—No, but I do not quite see what it refers to. In the Outer House each judge has a depute clerk and an assistant clerk, that is all, the depute clerk attending in the court primarily, and the assistant clerk attending in the office; they do all the copying, all the writing that is required for their office.

57,645. But you know that in the English Department, for instance, although the department contains many branches having separate functions, there is one register for the whole department; all letters coming in are registered for the whole office?—Yes.

57,646. In the same way there is one typing department, and all documents that want copying are sent up to the typing department that is common to all sections of the office?—Yes.

57,647. Would that not be possible in your case?—There is no need for it; you must have the two men there for attendance upon the court and for the conduct of the office, and those men do all the writing that is required.

57,648. Now with regard to the appointment as Lord Advocate's clerk, I understand that in the estimates for this year there is a provision made for 350l. a year for clerical assistance for the Lord Advocate?—Yes.

57,649. That is the post you refer to, I suppose?—I suppose so.

57,650. And what I understood you to say was that in the past that salary was received by the gentleman who had been the personal clerk to the Lord Advocate when he was at the Bar, and that when the Lord Advocate left office it was then his custom to appoint him to one of the higher clerical offices at the courts, and that it hindered promotion?—Yes.

57,651. Now the Lord Advocate still has been at the Bar, and all Lord Advocates have been at the Bar, have they not?—Yes.

57,652. And they practically always have had personal clerks of their own?—Yes.

57,653. Is it not the case, then, that that simply shifts the difficulty backwards—that instead of the Lord Advocate desiring to promote his clerk when he leaves office, he would naturally now desire to promote his clerk on coming into office?—That, of course, may happen; it may work out in that way; but the personal clerk of the Lord Advocate before he took office might probably be clerk to a number of other counsel; and when he became Lord Advocate's clerk he would have to drop the work that he had for other counsel, and therefore when the Lord Advocate ceased to hold the office of Lord Advocate he would be left stranded a bit if he did not get an appointment.

57,654. But a gentleman occupying so distinguished a post as anybody likely to become Lord Advocate would have the main services of a clerk to himself, would he not?—Not the entire services.

57,655. Now, in fact, the present Lord Advocate on being appointed did appoint his personal clerk to a highly-paid office?—That is true.

57,656. At the age of 67, I think?—I do not know.

57,657. And the effect of such an appointment in blocking promotion is precisely the same as if it took place on the Lord Advocate retiring, is it not?—It would be. As a matter of fact, this year three promotions took place. Mr. Antonio, who was Ordinary Clerk in the Inner House, was appointed a Depute Clerk in the Inner House; Mr. McLaren, who was Ordinary Clerk in the Bill Chamber, was appointed an Assistant Clerk of Session; and Mr. Carragher, who was Clerical Assistant in the Bill Chamber, was appointed Ordinary Clerk in the Bill Chamber. He died shortly after his appointment.

57,658. We were told by a witness yesterday that it was a well understood fact, with regard to the promotion in the patronage of the Lord Advocate, that if the person appointed had no personal claims upon the Lord Advocate, political claims were by tradition in Scotland recognised. Would you agree that that is the tradition?—Yes, I think that is the tradition.

57,659. The witness who said that told us very frankly what was the nature of his political claim. I do not want to ask you if you would rather not answer, but it would interest us as showing the actual working of the system, if you would tell us what in your case was the political claim?—I acted repeatedly as election agent for Liberal candidates, and I acted for many years as secretary of the West Edinburgh Division Liberal Association.

57,660. I thank you very much.

(Sir George Paul.) In the evidence submitted to Lord Salvesen's Committee on behalf of the Bill Chamber clerks, it was stated: "The work in the Bill Chamber has increased in recent years, and as it proceeds without intermission—there being frequently considerable pressure during Vacation, as well as many attendances outwith the office hours—an addition to the staff is required. The work is more arduous, more technical, more continuous, and demands more care than in most of the other offices, and the remuneration of the staff should be substantially increased." Is your staff sufficient?—Yes. I have no difficulty in regard to my staff.

57,661. I see in your précis you say: "With regard to my post of principal clerk, I have found my own experience as a solicitor in general practice so valuable in enabling me to appreciate the agent's point of view and his difficulties, that I am strongly inclined to think that the post should be filled from the outside." You would not make that a hard and fast rule, I suppose?—No, certainly, I would not make it a hard and fast rule, but I do not think that a man would necessarily be qualified for the principal clerkship because he had been a good assistant clerk.

57,662. Not necessarily, but it might be so?—It might.

57,663. For instance, I see that Lord Salvesen's Committee reports that your present assistant is highly competent for his duties. It might be that he was perfectly qualified to succeed you?—It might; he is a very capable man.

57,664. So I understand. I suppose, as regards your duties, that you do not know when they begin and when they end?—That is quite true, even regarding the hours of the day. I do not know when my duties begin and when they may end. I have had attendances at all hours. I think I troubled Lord Dundas once at about 11.30 p.m.

57,665. (Lord Dundas.) You did, and I was rather indignant.—The attendances I have had have gone on sometimes till nearly midnight.

3 June 1915.]

Mr. THOMAS SWINTON PATERSON, B.L., S.S.C.

[Continued.]

57,666. (Sir George Paul.) So that every day, in fact, it may be pretty much the same?—Not every day, but it might occur any day. I remember once getting a judge out of his bed to transact business.

57,667. That occurs occasionally, I suppose?—Yes.

57,668. That shows that your duties may never end—I mean that you cannot prescribe the hours?—Yes.

57,669. (Sir John Kempe.) You said that the ordinary clerk in the Bill Chamber might look for promotion to the Assistant Clerkship of Session. I see that the Assistant Clerk of Session has the same scale of salary as the Ordinary Clerk of Session. Have they different duties altogether?—I do not quite understand.

57,670. The Assistant Clerk has a scale of 250*l.*, rising by 15*l.* to 400*l.*, and the Ordinary Clerk of Session has also a scale of 250*l.*, rising by 15*l.* to 400*l.*?—The Ordinary Clerk of Session is really the Assistant Clerk of the Inner House. The Assistant Clerk of Session is an assistant clerk in the Outer House. I did not know that their salaries were the same. They used not to be, but under the new regulations it may be so.

57,671. The new scale is the same for those two?—Yes.

57,672. (Sir George Paul.) The Assistant Clerk in the Outer House is better paid than the Ordinary Clerk in the Inner House?—Apparently not, now; he used to be, but apparently now they get the same scale. But the Assistant Clerk of Session, and, if that is right, the Ordinary Clerk in the Inner House, have larger salaries than the Ordinary Clerk of the Bill Chamber, so that he would look for promotion to one or other of those offices.

57,673. (Sir John Kempe.) He might be made an Ordinary Clerk of Session, in fact?—He might.

57,674. They have the same sort of duties, so that he could take either of them on?—Yes. Of course, you understand that a man could not go into one of those offices without having something to learn; he would need to learn the particular work of the office, but he would be perfectly able to learn it in a very short time.

57,675. Are the differences in the salaries in the Bill Chamber and in the Court of Session based upon the different difficulties of the office?—I would hardly say that. Perhaps I am prejudiced, but I think that the Ordinary Clerk in the Bill Chamber has quite as difficult duties as, and perhaps more difficult duties than, the Assistant Clerk of Session; but then, of course, he always has me as Principal Clerk or the Assistant Clerk of the Bills to take the responsibility from him—to relieve him of responsibility.

57,676. Then, does the Ordinary Clerk of Court of Session have anybody to take the responsibility from him?—Not quite in the same way, because the Ordinary Clerk in the Inner House and an Assistant Clerk in the Outer House are alone in the Register House, so that they have to act on their own responsibility there.

57,677. In an earlier part of your précis you say: "An important and responsible duty falling on the Clerk of the Bills is the determining of the sufficiency of the cautioners in suspensions and suspension and interdicts, &c., passed on caution." Is he solely responsible; does he have the last word as to responsibility?—Practically. Certainly, since I went there, the responsibility has never been taken from my shoulders. I suppose if I refused to accept a cautioner it would be possible for the party to appeal to the Lord Ordinary and show that I was wrong and get a direction, but I am not sure that it would be competent.

57,678. You have no pecuniary responsibility if you make a mistake?—Yes. I would be responsible for any mistake in the validity of the bond.

57,679. In what way responsible; do you mean that you would have to pay up the loss?—Yes.

57,680. (Sir George Paul.) But not for an error of judgment as to the sufficiency of the surety?—I believe I would not be responsible for an error of judgment regarding the sufficiency of the security, but I would be responsible if there were any technical fault invalidating the bond.

57,681. If you made a mess of the bond, in fact?—Yes.

57,682. (Sir John Kempe.) Do you cover yourself in any way by insurance?—No.

57,683. I suppose the responsibility is not very great?—I do not feel it weighing very heavily upon me, but I think it is there.

57,684. (Sir George Paul.) Are these bonds of yours printed?—Yes, they are printed.

57,685. Printed forms?—Yes, but there is a good deal blank; there is a good deal to fill in.

57,686. Necessarily as to particular cases?—Yes.

57,687. (Mr. Matheson.) Are you satisfied with the type of man that you get for your ordinary clerks?—I have been very fortunate with the men I have had. My present assistant, who has been assistant since I went there, is a very capable man. The former Ordinary Clerk of Bills, Mr. McLaren, was an equally capable man, and my former clerical assistant was a very good man. I think my predecessor had chosen very competent men, for they all came in as clerical assistants while he was Principal Clerk.

Mr. JOSEPH CAMPBELL PENNEY, called and examined.

57,688. (Chairman.) You are Accountant of Court?—Yes.

57,689. How long have you held that office?—Twenty-five years.

57,690. You are a chartered accountant?—Yes.

57,691. Had you been in practice as a chartered accountant before your appointment to Accountant of Court?—Yes.

57,692. Will you tell us what the work of your department is?—It is divided into two branches, the Judicial Factory Department and the Bankruptcy Department, and it largely consists of audits of accounts.

57,693. Taking the Judicial Factory Department first, what work does that department deal with?—I have to do with curatories and guardianships: Court of Session Judicial Factories, and Testamentary Trusts, and Sheriff Court Judicial Factories.

57,694. Does the work consist in auditing the accounts of the factories and curatories that you have enumerated?—Practically controlling the management of the property of pupils, minors, absent persons, and persons under mental incapacity.

57,695. When you say controlling the management, does that mean actually managing or supervising the management by somebody else?—Supervising the management by somebody else.

57,696. Does that supervision amount to more than an audit of their proceedings?—Well, I have to discuss what shall be done with pupils and minors as regards their education, and in fact everything consistent with their well-being.

57,697. The curators or factors have to consult you on matters of discretion as well as on matters of account?—Yes.

57,698. On the question of the education of a ward you have to be consulted?—Yes.

57,699. Not merely on questions dealing with property, but questions relating to persons as well?—Yes, and the allowances to wards.

57,700. Do you also have to deal with questions of estate management, for instance?—Yes.

57,701. Questions of leasing or selling property?—Yes.

57,702. You would be consulted on such matters?—Yes, and I would report to the Court of Session on special points, such as the sale of property.

57,703. On matters of a technical character, such as the sale of property or the investment of funds, do you give your decisions on your own discretion, or do you consult experts?—I get valuations and consult experts with reference to the sale of property and also I have to report the result of my investigations to the Court, who then decide whether the property shall be sold or

3 June 1915.]

Mr. JOSEPH CAMPBELL PENNEY.

[Continued.]

not. With regard to the investment of funds, I also take special advice, if necessary, from brokers.

57,704. You are also custodian of money consigned in Court?—Yes, all moneys consigned in Court.

57,705. That is to say, in the Court of Session, I suppose?—In the Court of Session.

57,706. You have no charge of money consigned in local courts?—No, not in Sheriff Courts.

57,707. Are you responsible for the investment of money consigned?—No.

57,708. What is done with it?—It is placed on deposit receipt with the different banks.

57,709. It is never invested?—No.

57,710. Then, besides that, there is the work you have mentioned of auditing the accounts of factors and curators?—Yes.

57,711. Is that a large part of the work?—That is a large part of the work.

57,712. Is there an annual audit of all such accounts?—Yes, and there are over 2,000 different audits every year.

57,713. You mention that you submit a report each year on the dealings to the Court?—Yes.

57,714. Can you give us a copy of your last report?—Yes (handing in the same).

57,715. Turning now to the Bankruptcy Department, will you describe its work?—I have to superintend the conduct of all trustees and commissioners in sequestrations, to keep a register of their transactions, to report their discharges, and to receive and register the unclaimed dividends. I also audit under remit the accounts of trustees under private trust deeds and fix the trustees' commissions.

57,716. Does that refer to Trustees in Bankruptcy?—Yes, private Bankruptcy trustees.

57,717. Does the Judicial Factory Department or the Bankruptcy Department constitute the larger part of your office?—The Judicial Factory Department.

57,718. What is the staff of each?—There are five clerks in the Judicial Factory Department and five in the Bankruptcy Department, but there is also the Cashier's Department which has seven clerks, and that is largely taken up with the Judicial Factory Department.

57,719. Your total staff is 17 in addition to yourself and the principal clerk?—That is so.

57,720. To what do your duties mainly refer?—The general superintendence of correspondence, the revision of all audits, the consideration of the investment and fixing of commissions, the final adjustments and signature of reports, meetings with factors, agents, and beneficiaries, and attendance on the judges of the Supreme Court.

57,721. For what purposes do you have to attend the judges?—I report to the Junior Lord Ordinary, who frequently asks me to attend to explain points in the reports. I have also sometimes to report factors under my charge for neglect of orders, and I have to attend then to explain the reasons; and there are also questions of commission which come up under the Junior Lord Ordinary in chambers. When the different factors and myself do not agree about the amount of commission to which they are entitled, that has to be reported and I have to attend then.

57,722. That is finally decided by the judge?—By the Junior Lord Ordinary. Then in Bankruptcy I have the supervision of the progress of sequestrations, the consideration of appeals by trustees with regard to their commissions, and the revision of special reports and inventories lodged.

57,723. The duties of the clerks, I suppose, consist in carrying out audits and other minor duties under your supervision?—Yes, under my supervision.

57,724. What is the nature of your appointment; is it a Crown appointment?—Yes.

57,725. On whose recommendation?—On the recommendation of the Secretary for Scotland.

57,726. Is it in fact made on the recommendation of the Secretary for Scotland or on that of the Lord Advocate?—I should think probably the Lord Advocate for the time, I really forget now what it was in my day.

57,727. Who appoints the clerks?—I do, subject to the approval of the Secretary for Scotland, and subject also to the salaries fixed by the Treasury.

57,728. Where do you get your clerks?—I have been in the custom of getting boys by advertisement and training them up as clerks, beginning at small salaries and going on to the maximum fixed by the Treasury, 150*l*. I find that is the fairest and best way for the office.

57,729. Are your staff entitled to pensions?—Some of them.

57,730. How many?—Seven.

57,731. Do you appoint in the first instance to your unestablished staff and fill your established posts by promotion from the juniors?—That is so.

57,732. At what age do you get boys to come in?—About 15 to 16.

57,733. That is to say, directly after they have left school and before they have had any other experience?—Generally, yes.

57,734. What is your opinion as to competition as a means of selecting your staff?—I think it would hardly work. I do not think the office is big enough, vacancies are rare.

57,735. It would be possible, would it not, to have competition in combination with competition for other offices of a somewhat similar character?—In Scotland, do you mean?

57,736. Yes?—Yes, it might.

57,737. As you do not require any previous professional experience of any kind for boys who enter your office, there would be no difficulty on that head in recruiting by competition?—No, none.

57,738. Have your established staff to obtain Civil Service certificates?—Yes.

57,739. Do you know whether those are given under Clause 7 of the Order in Council?—That is so; they have all been passed in without examination on a special certificate.

57,740. Is a knowledge of Scotch law required for the work?—A knowledge of Scotch law is most necessary.

57,741. How do the boys who are appointed under the present system acquire that knowledge?—I make them attend the Scotch law classes in the university, and they also attend evening classes of a technical nature, such as chartered accountant apprentices have to attend, and as they gradually work up in the office they learn the work.

57,742. You require, of course, boys who are able to become capable accountants?—Yes.

57,743. How do you test their qualifications when you select them?—I get their school reports, and I also get certificates from their schoolmasters; and I must say that I have been very fortunate in the boys I have got. I select them from a number after seeing them personally, and they have turned out very well.

57,744. Then you are satisfied with the present method of appointment?—Yes.

57,745. But do you prefer the present method to a system of competition?—Yes, if my suggestions as to slight increases in some of the clerks' salaries were given effect to.

57,746. What are the hours of business at present?—Seven—from 9.30 to 4.30.

57,747. The staff attend regularly during these hours?—Yes.

57,748. Is there a full day's work for the whole of your present staff?—Yes, a full day.

57,749. What holidays do they have?—They get a month and the usual public holidays.

57,750. Is the work fairly evenly distributed over the year?—Yes, the audits fall at four terms in the year—the four quarters—so that it is distributed over the whole year.

57,751. Is there any age limit for the retirement of your staff?—There is no age limit.

57,752. Do you think there ought to be one?—Yes, I do.

57,753. Is there any reason why the ordinary Civil Service limit should not apply. That limit, as you are aware, is 65, with power of extension in exceptional cases up to the age of 70?—Yes, I see no reason why it should not apply, except that the salaries should be increased a little if there is to be a limit.

3 June 1915.]

Mr. JOSEPH CAMPBELL PENNEY.

[Continued.]

57,754. Looking at the question of a limit by itself, you think the Civil Service limit would be suitable?—Yes, I think so.

57,755. Have you any suggestions to make as to any modifications in the organisation or arrangement of your office?—It is 20 years since the Treasury fixed the present arrangement, and I think the time has now come for some change in it. In the suggestion I put in my précis I note that there are seven permanent clerks, and I think the permanent clerks should be increased to 12—that means increasing the permanent salary list and decreasing the grant made to me for supplying outside clerks.

57,756. (Mr. Matheson.) How many clerks, as a matter of fact, have you besides the seven?—There are 18 altogether including the head clerk—that is 11.

57,757. (Chairman.) The 18 includes two boys and two female typists, does it not?—Yes.

57,758. Apart from them you have 14?—Yes.

57,759. Of whom seven are at present established?—Yes.

57,760. And you suggest that five more should be established?—I suggest that 12 altogether—five more—should be established.

57,761. Are the five who you suggest should be established the two unestablished in the Judicial Factory Department, and the three unestablished in the Bankruptcy Department?—Yes.

57,762. Leaving two unestablished clerks in the Cashier's Department?—Yes.

57,763. What are your reasons for suggesting that change?—If there is to be an age limit, I do not think the present salaries are adequate, and I think you get more work and better work out of a man who knows that his salary will go on increasing by small amounts, and that when he retires he will get a pension.

57,764. When one of your unestablished clerks is promoted to an established post, his service for pension counts from the date of his promotion and not from the date of his original appointment, I suppose?—I hope it will be from the date of his original appointment. We have not had an opportunity of testing it yet.

57,765. You have not any clear decision upon that point?—No; but it would be very unfair if he only got it from the date of his getting a permanent appointment.

57,766. At what age have recent appointments to the established staff been made?—The last was one who was appointed at the end of last year owing to the death of an established clerk.

57,767. What was his age?—39.

57,768. Is there any substantial difference between the work done by established clerks and that done by unestablished clerks?—The established clerks do the more important work; for instance, the bigger audits.

57,769. (Mr. Boutwood.) Why should not the whole of your staff be established?—I see no reason why.

57,770. You have 14 clerks, and you propose to establish 12 of them?—Yes.

57,771. I wondered why you left out the two?—The reason was that I propose to abolish these posts as they fall in.

57,772. So that in future the whole of your staff should be established according to your view?—I hope so.

57,773. (Chairman.) You say in your précis that while the differences of Scotch law procedure may make it impossible to bring the department entirely within the lines of the regular Civil Service, it would be advisable to place it as far as possible under Civil Service rules with regard to the salary, hours of service, sick and other leave, superannuation, etc. Why do the differences of Scotch law procedure make a difficulty as regards bringing it within the lines of the regular Civil Service?—I refer there to the entry of the ordinary Civil servant in the second division of the Civil Service.

57,774. But your boys learn all they know about Scotch law after they enter the department at present?—Yes.

57,775. Would there, therefore, be any difficulty in recruiting by a different method boys who would equally learn all they know about Scotch law after entering the department?—None, if they were of the same age.

57,776. And as good material as the present?—Yes, and as good material; but I think the present second division Civil servant starts at about 18 with a salary of 70*l.*, and goes on by increments to 190*l.*

57,777. You would prefer to recruit them rather earlier, as you do at present, at 15 or 16, and to continue their education after they have entered?—Yes; and besides, my boys start at 15*l.* A second division Civil servant starts at 70*l.*, and I think he would be dear at the money for the first three or four years.

57,778. Do the boys work the full seven hours a day?—Yes.

57,779. And also during the evening?—Yes.

57,780. You do not find that a full day's work interferes with their educational work?—No, they get away for one of the seven hours for the college Scotch law classes.

57,781. You mention also in your précis that provision might be made for a deadlock in promotion. I do not understand what that refers to?—I was afraid it would be a little unintelligible. I think that if there is no promotion for a clerk in the Civil Service, but he has been for a certain number of years in the Service, by a special order he is promoted to a higher grade.

57,782. You would like to see some provision of that sort?—Yes. With us promotion is very slow.

57,783. (Sir John Kempe.) With reference to the duties that you have in your office, you said that you had to look after minors' education, and so on; is that incidental? I suppose originally your appointment was as accountant only; has the rest of the work grown up because of the convenience of your looking after the children as well as their money?—Yes.

57,784. Will that be continued to your successor?—Yes.

57,785. Is there no Court superintendence or anything like the Court of Chancery?—I am practically the Court of Chancery in Scotland.

57,786. There is nothing over you?—No.

57,787. If you did not undertake the duty the children would not be looked after at all?—There is no one except the factor, who has charge of the property, he would be the only person who would do so.

57,788. Then nominally you look after the factor, not after the children; you have to see that the factors and guardians do their duty?—Yes.

57,789. It resolves itself into your looking after them, practically, and consulting them?—Yes.

57,790. (Chairman.) Is there no appeal from you to the Court?—Yes, there is an appeal.

57,791. Supposing that a factor did not agree with what you thought proper to do for a ward, he could appeal to the Court?—Yes.

57,792. Does that appeal go to the Junior Lord Ordinary?—Yes.

57,793. (Sir John Kempe.) Can you tell us how many wards you have?—I do not think I could say in numbers exactly, but I have a great many.

57,794. (Sir George Paul.) Pupils, minors, and lunatics are all under your charge?—Yes.

57,795. I suppose it is mostly with reference to the allowances that you give that you have charge of them; you have no charge of their persons?—No; I have no charge of their persons, but I have a kind of hold over them because of the allowances.

57,796. Because you keep the purse; you have the power of the purse?—Yes, because I keep the purse.

57,797. Then as regards promotion in the superior offices, have you always been able to fill them up by promotion?—Yes.

57,798. So that you have never had to go outside?—I have never had to go outside.

57,799. Except for the juniors?—Yes, except for the boys.

57,800. And you find out about them, after they have left school at the early age of 15 or 16, from the schoolmasters, just in the ordinary way, and you satisfy yourself with regard to them?—Yes, I advertise, and get a long list of applications. I choose those whom I consider the best and make inquiries about them, and just gradually sift them down to the best.

3 June 1915.]

Mr. JOSEPH CAMPBELL PENNEY.

[Continued.]

57,801. So that on the question of competition, it would be simpler to have competition for the junior posts, and more naturally among the boys, before they began to specialise?—Yes.

57,802. In what department do you put the boys? I see they are listed as beginning at book-keeping?—Yes.

57,803. Then, if they are satisfactory, they might have an appointment in the Bankruptcy or the Judicial Factory Department; that is how you work it?—Yes.

57,804. As regards a knowledge of Scotch law, I suppose for an ordinary chartered accountant you require a certain amount of knowledge of Scotch law; your clerks go to the classes, do they, just as if they went in for the ordinary accountants' examination?—Yes, I try to follow the accountants' preparatory examination as much as possible.

57,805. But you send your boys to college?—Yes, to the university.

57,806. To learn Scots law. What classes do they attend?—The Scots law classes; they are generally just kept at them; these are the most important classes.

57,807. You see that they attend that and know something of Scots law?—Yes.

57,808. You have no examination of them afterwards, such as accountants have?—No. I tried to introduce the system of taking apprentices who would pass the Chartered Accountants' examination ultimately, but the Chartered Accountants Society objected; they said I had no right to do it; so I only succeeded in having one.

57,809. (Mr. Graham Wallas.) Do you know that we proposed in an earlier report to create a class of clerks who would be called the junior clerical class, who were to begin at 50*l.* a year and mount up by rather slow degrees to 200*l.*? Would that class fit your office, do you think, better than the class which is now called the second division?—It might, except that I would have the same objection, that 50*l.* is too much to pay for a commencing salary.

57,810. Boys in Edinburgh are rather more frugal in their life than in London, you think?—Yes.

57,811. What is your relation in financial matters to the King's Remembrancer. You have this large balance over which you have a certain amount of control, twelve millions; what is your relation with regard to that great sum of money to the King's Remembrancer?—Nothing to the King's Remembrancer. These twelve millions which I have to supervise are the investments and the value of hereditary property held by all the different factors under my supervision.

57,812. Then what is your relation to the British Treasury in that matter; you have direct contact with the Treasury as regards this sum?—This money is retained in the hands of these different factors; it does not come before the Treasury at all. The only thing I have connection with the Treasury in is in the handing over of unclaimed dividends and consignment receipts after seven years' retention.

57,813. You are responsible to a certain extent for the treatment of lunatics with property, are you not?—Yes.

57,814. How do you ascertain how their treatment is carried on; have you any inspectors to aid you?—No, I do not do that, but there is a Board of Lunacy in Scotland who attend to that, and I am in contact with them. If I think there is any case in which the ward is not being sufficiently supplied, that he is not getting well enough looked after, I report to the Board.

57,815. But how do you ascertain that—from common report—or how do you ascertain whether a lunatic, perhaps at the other end of Scotland, is being sufficiently looked after?—His accounts come before me for audit every year, and I take the amount that is spent on his maintenance and compare it with the amount of his income; and if I think that more might be favourably expended on him I make inquiry.

57,816. Then the Lunacy Board would send down one of their inspectors and satisfy themselves on that point?—Yes.

57,817. (Lord Dundas.) You are an officer of the Court, are you not?—Yes, I am.

57,818. And as such, you are directly responsible to the Court?—Yes, I am.

57,819. But as such an officer, you exercise supervision over the various classes of estates that you have mentioned to us?—Yes.

57,820. You have charge really of the estates and not, except indirectly, of the persons, have you not?—That is so.

57,821. Among other estates you look after, I understand, are those in the hands of what is called curator bonis in Scotland, namely, one who looks after the estate of a mentally unfit person?—Yes.

57,822. Or a factor loco tutoris, one who looks after the estates of minors or pupils?—Yes.

57,823. Or a factor loco absentis, who looks after the estate of someone who is away or cannot be found?—Yes.

57,824. Then, of course, there are numerous what we call judicial factors, who are persons appointed by the Court where trustees have been superseded by the Court and such like?—Yes.

57,825. I dare say there are other estates of the kind that you could mention if necessary?—Yes.

57,826. But in regard to all of these, you are directly subject to the control of the Court?—Yes.

57,827. (Chairman.) Besides the estates in the hands of factors which you supervise, you mention that you yourself are custodian of moneys consigned in Court?—Yes.

57,828. In that case you are dealing with the money yourself, not supervising somebody else who deals with it?—That is so.

57,829. To whom are you responsible in respect of those moneys?—They are deposited in the bank in my name as Accountant of Court, and I am responsible to the Court in so far as these cannot be uplifted except by Order of Court.

57,830. Does anybody audit your accounts in respect of those consignations?—No.

57,831. You are not responsible to anybody except the Court?—No.

57,832. There are no accounts, except the mere fact of deposit and ultimate withdrawal of deposit?—That is all.

57,833. Is there no accounting for interest on deposits?—The bank accounts for interest on deposits when they get an Order from the Court authorising a sum to be paid with interest.

57,834. In the meantime it merely accumulates?—It just accumulates.

57,835. (Sir George Paul.) Under one of the Judicial Factors Acts trustees have power to place the audit of their accounts under the supervision of the Accountant of Court, have they not?—Yes.

57,836. Is that done to any extent?—I am sorry to say not to any extent.

57,837. Perhaps less as regards numbers than as regards amounts?—Yes, the numbers are few, I think only about 20 or 30, but the amounts are large—several estates of nearly a million.

57,838. Important trusts?—Yes.

57,839. But not the small trusts so far?—No.

57,840. (Lord Dundas.) Can you not give us even a rough estimate of the total number of factories that you have, just to give the Commission some sort of idea?—I have over 2,000 factories, as they are called, that is to say, there are 2,000 different men who have to report to me every year. They send in annual accounts, and I have to audit their accounts.

57,841. (Chairman.) Those accounts have to be audited every quarter or every year?—Every year; but I have divided them so that so many come in each quarter, so as to spread the work. Then on these 2,000 audits I have to report to the Court; on every audit I lodge a report with the Court.

57,842. Is that report contained in this printed volume which you have handed in, or is there a separate and detailed report as well?—The report is not in that volume.

57,843. This is merely a summary?—Yes, just a summary of the different estates.

3 June 1915.]

Mr. JOSEPH CAMPBELL PENNEY.

[Continued.]

57,844. (Sir John Kempe.) I suppose, in the case of those estates where you pay the money into the bank, there is nothing to be done with the money at all; it is merely resting?—Only resting until it is settled to whom it shall go.

57,845. (Mr. Graham Wallas.) Into what bank do you pay that money?—One of the Scotch banks. I practically do not pay it in myself; it is paid in by the person who holds it.

57,846. Who is responsible for the choice of the bank into which the money is paid?—The Acts direct it to be paid into any of the banks in Scotland established by Act of Parliament or Royal Charter.

57,847. Who decides which of the five special banks shall receive the deposit?—I think that is done just by the agent of the party who has the money; so long as it is one of the special banks it does not matter which bank it is.

At the North British Station Hotel, Edinburgh.

ONE HUNDRED AND THIRTY-EIGHTH DAY.

Wednesday, 9th June 1915.

PRESENT:

SIR HENRY BABINGTON SMITH, K.C.B., C.S.I. (Chairman).

The Hon. LORD DUNDAS.
Sir DONALD MACALISTER, K.C.B.
Sir JOHN ARROW KEMPE, K.C.B.
Sir GEORGE MORISON PAUL.
Mr. ARTHUR BOUTWOOD.

Mr. JOHN ROBERT CLYNES, M.P.
Mr. PERCY EWING MATHESON.
Mr. ARTHUR EVERETT SHIPLEY, F.R.S.
Mr. GRAHAM WALLAS.
Miss HALDANE.

Mr. E. W. H. MILLAR (Secretary).

Dr. DAVID MURRAY, LL.D., called and examined.

57,848. (Chairman.) You are a law agent and conveyancer, practising in Glasgow?—I am.

57,849. What is your firm?—Maclay, Murray & Spens.

57,850. You are also a member of the Faculty of Procurators in Glasgow?—Yes, I am.

57,851-2. You are giving evidence on behalf of that Faculty?—Yes.

57,853. You were also a member of Lord Low's Committee on Land Registration in 1897?—Yes.

57,854. The evidence which you are prepared to give to-day relates specially to the Register House Departments?—Yes.

57,855. And more particularly to those which relate to the registration of deeds concerning land?—Yes.

57,856. At the head of those departments there is the Deputy Clerk Register?—Yes.

57,857. The Deputy Clerk Register at present also performs the duties of Registrar-General for the purposes of the registration of births, deaths, and marriages?—Yes.

57,858. Do you consider it right for those functions to be combined with the other functions of the Deputy Clerk Register?—I think that the position of registrar of births, deaths, and marriages is entirely foreign to the duties of the Deputy Clerk Register. Personally, I think they would be better separate.

57,859. We had evidence from one witness, the King's and Lord Treasurer's Remembrancer, that the work of the two offices was, in his opinion, not more than could be performed by one man, and in his view it was convenient that the two offices should continue to be combined?—From that point of view I agree. I do not think that the duties are more than can be undertaken by one man, but the two classes of duties are very different. The Deputy Clerk Register is the representative of the office of the Lord Clerk Register, which was a great office of State in Scotland and charged with entirely different duties. There is no doubt that the two things can be carried on as they are now, but I would be inclined to say that the register of births, deaths, and marriages should be under a separate officer. If they are carried on in the Register House, then the Deputy Clerk Register would necessarily exercise control, but I do not think he should be the registrar. I understand that the present arrangement has arisen entirely from the monetary side; it is a question of salary and economy.

57,860. Given that the two functions can be performed by the same person, they are not incompatible with one another, and there might be economy?—That is so.

57,861. Your suggestion is that it would be better to have a separate officer of lower rank specially charged with the work under the supervision of the Deputy Clerk Register?—Yes. For instance, I think the previous Deputy Clerk Register, Sir Stair Agnew, used to sign certificates himself, but now they are signed by the chief clerk. That is an illustration of the suggestion that an officer of lesser rank might really be the registrar.

57,862. Turning to the Register House Departments proper, we may take it that those include the Sasine Office, the Register of Deeds, and the Record Office? Yes, they do.

57,863. The Commission have had evidence as to the work done at the Sasine Office, the system of registration in general, and the staff by which it is performed. I understand that the points on which you wish to make observations are in particular the system of control of the Register House Departments and their relations to the various authorities?—That is so.

57,864. I find that in the Report of Lord Low's Committee the history of the control of these offices, and in particular of the Sasine Office, is set out fully and in detail, and is summed up in a paragraph which I will read: "We find that under the existing law the control of the Sasine Office is vested as follows:— (1) In the Treasury lies the power to fix the number of the staff, their salaries and emoluments, under the Acts of 1817, 1868, and 1879, and also to fix the fees in the Sasine Office under the conditions laid down under Section 25 of the Land Registers Act, 1868. (2) In the Secretary for Scotland is vested the disciplinary control of the Keeper and his staff. (3) In the Deputy Clerk Register the powers in Sections 9, 10, 20, and 24 of the Act of 1868 as regards the forms of indexes and abridgements, and of direction and initiation, as well as the general powers and superintendence in use to be exercised from early times by the Lord Clerk Register under control of the Court. (4) In the Court of Session in so far as its original powers have not been taken away by the

9 June 1915.]

DR. DAVID MURRAY, LL.D.

[Continued.]

"Act of 1868." May I take it that that is a correct summary of the present position as regards the control of the Sasine Office?—Yes.

57,865. To make it complete it would perhaps be well to state the system of appointment. At present are all the appointments made by the Secretary for Scotland?—I think so far as regards the Sasine Office the Keeper of the Register of Sasines should have a large say in the appointment of his own staff.

57,866. I was asking, in the first place, as to the existing system. Is it the case that appointments, except so far as they are made by Civil Service competition, are in the hands of the Secretary for Scotland?—Yes.

57,867. They were originally in the hands of the Lord Clerk Register, and were transferred from him to the Treasury in 1879, and from the Treasury to the Secretary for Scotland when the Secretary for Scotland was created in 1885?—Yes.

57,868. At present the system is that the appointments are in the hands of the Secretary for Scotland except so far as they are made by open competition?—Yes.

57,869. That applies also to promotions, I understand?—Yes, I think so.

57,870. Do you suggest that the Keeper of the Register of Sasines ought to have a larger degree of control of appointments in his office?—Yes, I think so. The Keeper is the person who really knows what is required, and I think he should have a large say in the appointment of the senior officers at any rate.

57,871. I suppose, at present, the Secretary for Scotland would undoubtedly consult the Keeper?—I am not in a position to say, but I presume that he does.

57,872. Turning again to the question of control, I find that Lord Low's Committee made certain recommendations in which, as a member of the Committee, you concurred?—Yes.

57,873. Perhaps it will be convenient if I read those in order that they may be before the Commissioners. "We beg to recommend:—

"(1) In any Bill which may be introduced to effect improvements in the system of registration there should be embraced only the larger and fundamental provisions for which specific legislation is indispensable, leaving the details to be regulated from time to time by Act of Sederunt.

"(2) The general powers of control of the Court of Session and the Deputy Clerk Register should be expressly recognised, and power should be given to the Deputy Clerk Register at his own instance to apply to the Court for direction in any circumstances of doubt or difficulty as to the working of the Lands Rights Registration system.

"(3) The power to fix the number of the staff and their remuneration should remain with the Treasury.

"(4) The Court of Session should have similar powers to those conferred by Section 2 of the Courts of Law Fees (Scotland) Act, 1895, to alter or otherwise regulate by Act of Sederunt, with the approval of the Treasury, the amount of any fees for the time being payable in the Sasine Office, including the Horning Office, and also in the Record Office.

"(5) The disciplinary control of the staff of the Sasine Office should remain in the Secretary for Scotland."

Do you still adhere to those recommendations?—I do.

57,874. The position then, if those recommendations were fully carried out, would be that the Court of Session would have general control as regards the system of registration, the form of the Register, and other matters of that kind?—That is so. I think that is absolutely essential. The registration system has all along been under the control of the Court of Session.

57,875. Some doubts have been raised as to whether the Act of 1868 took away to some extent that power of control?—Yes, that arose in 1875. The chronological arrangement of entries according to the properties concerned, known as the Search Sheet, had been introduced, and the Deputy Clerk Register had doubts as to whether the Search Sheet could be carried on in the Sasine Department. After taking advice he consulted the Court, and laid them atter before the late Lord President Inglis.

The Lord President consulted the judges, and they came to the conclusion that certain sections in the Act of 1868 had interfered with their powers, and the Court did not see their way to deal with the matter in the manner the Lord Clerk Register had suggested. There was ultimately what might be called a compromise. The Court appointed a Committee of their own members to investigate the matter, but it was on the distinct understanding that they were not exercising their old functions. It did not eventuate in an Act of Sederunt, which is the method by which the Court of Session gives effect to its orders in matters of this kind. There was simply a report.

57,876. The Lord President informed the Lord Clerk Register that the Court would recommend him to adopt certain measures, and if he issued orders or regulations carrying out those measures, then these would have the approbation of the Court?—I think that was the recommendation. I do not remember the exact result, but what did happen was this, that two judges reported, and one took one view and the other took another view. The Search Sheet was introduced experimentally on their recommendation, and nothing further has ever been done. The Lord Clerk Register never went back to the Court after the experiment, so it simply stands in 1915 as it did in 1875.

57,877. Your recommendation is that legislation should be passed making clear the control of the Court of Session in these matters?—Yes, making it clear that the powers of the Court of Session are not taken away. I would go further, and in any Act of Parliament I would emphasise the powers of the Court of Session and put it beyond dispute what their powers are.

57,878. The next authority concerned is the Deputy Clerk Register?—Yes.

57,879. What, in your view, should be the exact functions of the Deputy Clerk Register in connection with the Register of Sasines?—The duties are defined in the Acts of 1868 and 1879 to a large extent. The Deputy Clerk Register is the head of the Registration Department, and in details of the working of the system, such as the preparation of indexes and so on, the Deputy Clerk Register is the person who must finally decide upon those matters.

57,880. Then I presume in all such matters he would be intermediate between the Keeper of the Sasines and the Court of Session?—That is so.

57,881. He would decide matters so far as they are within his own competence, and if he thought they were beyond his competence he would approach the Court of Session?—Yes. There is a very good illustration in 1811. Mr. Thomas Thomson, who was then the Deputy Clerk Register of Scotland, made very valuable reports on the records and these were sent annually to the Court of Session, amongst other bodies, and the judges generally appointed a committee to consider Mr. Thomson's reports. Mr. Thomson in 1811 made certain recommendations to the Court as to the carrying on of the registration work of the Register of Sasines and in the Register of Deeds and some other branches, and recommended certain things to be done. It was brought before the Court, and the Court then made four Acts of Sederunt in 1811 which have regulated the whole administration of these departments down to now.

57,882. In your opinion that is the proper procedure to be followed?—Yes. There are certain troubles of which we complain at the present moment which would have been entirely avoided if that procedure had been carried out.

57,883. The third authority concerned is the Secretary for Scotland. What in your view should be his measure of control?—Nothing further than the matter of discipline. He ought not to interfere in any way in the carrying on of the work of any of the departments—I think that is entirely outside his jurisdiction. The Lord Clerk Register of Scotland should supervise the whole work of the Register House.

57,884. You would confine his authority to questions of discipline and questions of appointment except so far as you would in matters of appointment increase the powers of the Deputy Clerk Register?—Yes.

9 June 1915.]

DR. DAVID MURRAY, LL.D.

[Continued.]

57,885. The fourth authority concerned is the Treasury?—Yes.

57,886. At present the Treasury has power to fix the salaries and the numbers of the staff?—Yes.

57,887. Are the fees at present fixed by the Treasury?—The fees are fixed by the Treasury, but subject to the approval of the Court and some other bodies—they are defined in the Act of Parliament—but in point of fact the fees are fixed by the Treasury.

57,888. Your recommendation is that the fees should be fixed by the Court with the approval of the Treasury?—Yes, the Court ought to regulate them, for this reason, that the Court won't fix fees—they do not do it in practice—without consulting those who are interested and who pay fees, namely, the legal profession. In other cases the Court ask the opinion of the profession as to fixing or altering fees. All persons would be heard, and thereafter it would lie with the Treasury to approve. The Court might fix fees that were open to question from an administrative point of view, and therefore the Treasury ought to have a say in the matter.

57,889. There is one point as regards the system of control on which I should like to know your opinion. Do you consider that the Deputy Clerk Register ought to have any say in the matters which are controlled or would be controlled on your recommendation by the Secretary for Scotland and the Treasury? In reporting to the Secretary for Scotland on matters of discipline and matters of staff and salary, should the Keeper of Sasines send his report to the Deputy Clerk Register or direct? In other words, should the Deputy Clerk Register's control of the subordinate departments of the Register House extend to all matters, or only to certain matters?—That is a difficult question to answer. It certainly ought to go through the Deputy Clerk Register, but I do not know that he should have anything to do with mere conduct of an official. If the Secretary for Scotland appoints him, perhaps it lies with the Secretary for Scotland to deal with the matter; but the Deputy Clerk Register is a great assistance in the administration of the Register House. I would not like to say how far his control should extend as regards the minutiae of the matter. He should have a general control.

57,890. At present the degree and the nature of his control are somewhat indefinite, and the mere fact that they are indefinite has led, we understand, to some differences of opinion and some friction in practice, and therefore it appears desirable that the exact nature of the control should be defined. We should be glad to have your views as to what that definition should be?—There was a question before the Court quite recently; it came up as a judicial question, and I think that probably it was a mistake that it should come before the Court in that way. The question was as to the right of the Keeper of Sasines to reject a writ. The view of the profession is that the Keeper of the Register of Sasines is obliged to put on record everything that is presented to him. There are certain statutory formalities, of course, that must be observed. The deed must have a warrant of registration. If it had not, or if the deed was insufficiently stamped, the Keeper of the Register of Sasines is probably entitled to reject that writ, but he is not entitled to inquire into the substance of the writ, and that is what arose in this particular case. In that case my view is that what ought to have been done was that a statement should have been made to the Deputy Clerk Register. The person who gave in the writ, and with whom the question arose, did not go to the Deputy Clerk Register: he went straight to the Court and raised a common law action to have the Keeper compelled to register the writ. I think that was wrong. He ought to have gone to the Deputy Clerk Register and made his complaint, and if the Deputy Clerk Register had then doubts he should have consulted the Court, and the Court would have dealt with the matter after hearing parties, not judicially, but in their position as the controlling body. I do not know how we are to make that much plainer. I think the law is quite plain as it stands, and that the Keeper was wrong in his rejection of the deed. It was a pretty mixed case.

57,891. (Sir George Paul.) I think the Court found that the Keeper was justified?—Yes, but the Court put it in rather a curious way. The Court seemed to hold that this was an ambulatory deed, as they called it, and on that ground it was incompetent to take sasine upon it. They decided in favour of the Keeper.

57,892. (Lord Dundas.) The Court was right in result, was it not?—Yes, but you see the Court pronounced a judicial opinion on this matter which, I think, rather upset the position. If the matter had been dealt with by the Deputy Clerk Register and by his getting the opinion of the Court, that would have been different from giving a judicial finding. The question arose out of the Search Sheet; the deed would not have been rejected but for the existence of the Search Sheet. The Keeper of the Register of Sasines did not know under what particular property to enter this deed, because he thought it did not give sufficient information, but the deed was perfectly sufficient as a warrant for sasine. Undoubtedly, if the deed was of an ambulatory character, as the Court indicated, the title that the grantee got might have been defective, but that was because the warrant was defective. There was no reason why sasine should not be taken upon it for what it was worth. The Keeper of the Register of Sasines could not identify the property. In my view he had nothing to do with identifying the property. There was a Bill introduced in 1871 to compel the ingiver of a deed to give certain information for the purpose of identifying the property. That was objected to by the whole of the legal profession, and the Bill was withdrawn, and nothing else has again been done in that direction. The Deputy Clerk Register, in my view, was entitled to deal with the matter, and he could have done so perfectly well.

57,893. (Chairman.) That is the point with which this Commission is concerned. I gather your view is strongly that the direct controlling authority is the Deputy Clerk Register, and questions of the kind you have described should go to him before they go to the Court of Session?—That is my view.

57,894. (Sir Donald MacAlister.) Suppose the Keeper refuses another writ; suppose the Deputy Clerk Register says, "I should like to have a say in the matter"; suppose he goes to the Court of Session, as you suggest is the proper method, for an instruction: will the Court of Session not find itself up against its own judicial decision?—They may, but I do not think so. I do not think the decision goes so far as it seems to do. The Court might come against that, and that is one of the reasons why I think it is undesirable for the Court to deal judicially with the matter.

57,895. (Chairman.) Turning now to the question of appointment, the Deputy Clerk Register and the Keeper of the Register of Sasines are appointed by the Crown?—Yes.

57,896. Do you consider that in the case of the Keeper of Sasines professional qualifications are desirable?—I am very strongly of that opinion. It is only a thoroughly competent practising law agent that ought to be appointed to the office.

57,897. At present there is no statutory qualification of that kind?—No.

57,898. As a matter of fact, have the persons appointed always possessed the qualification that you think necessary?—Yes. One of the Keepers of the Register of Sasines was John Clerk Brodie, and he was one of the most eminent men in the profession of his day.

57,899. Have political considerations entered into the appointments in the Register House Departments in the past?—I am afraid they have. I think the appointment of the Keeper of the Register of Sasines has been pretty much a political one.

57,900. That is a point which has been raised before the Commission by the evidence of several witnesses, and we should like to have your views on it?—I do not think anyone can seriously dispute that an office of that sort is entirely outside politics. The view that because a man has been the political agent of some important person he should therefore be appointed to an office in the Register House is entirely out of date, and I do not think anyone would be found to uphold it.

9 June 1915.]

Dr. DAVID MURRAY, LL.D.

[Continued.]

57,901. We have been told that such appointments, although theoretically made on the recommendation of the Secretary for Scotland, are in practice made on the recommendation of the Lord Advocate?—I should think that is the case. That was the method of appointment prior to 1885—the Lord Advocate made all the appointments, but they were political appointments.

57,902. Do you think that the abolition of the political system of appointment would be facilitated by any change in the method of appointment?—I should like to say as regards political appointments that there has been no objection to any of the holders of the office; they have been all competent men, although the question of political services may have entered into their appointment. It is not to be suggested that because a man has been appointed from political considerations he is therefore not a fit occupant of the office. I think all the appointments have been good, but the general feeling of the profession is that this particular element should not enter into the question of selection.

57,903. The staff of the office, apart from the head, is at present selected by competitive examination, the candidates being required to possess certain qualifications?—So far as I know in the Register House the examination as regards professional knowledge is very slight—I do not think it amounts to much.

57,904. Can you judge whether the results are satisfactory?—The work of the office is carried on satisfactorily.

57,905. The staff is competent for the work?—The work of the office is satisfactorily done. Of that there is no question.

57,906. Are you prepared to express an opinion as to whether the method of selection by examination should continue?—I do not think that the examination is worth while—no amount of examination will ascertain whether a man is fit for the duties of the Sasine Office. What is required is a considerable knowledge of, and experience in, practical legal work. He must have a certain amount of legal training. The practical knowledge acquired by practice in business is much more valuable in the Sasine Office than any examination in the elements of law. The man must have a considerable amount of technical knowledge of conveyancing. A graduate in law has the theoretical but not the practical knowledge.

57,907. In the case of your own office, do you take clerks in young and practically educate them in the office?—Some are brought in as apprentices, but not the whole. These come already trained.

57,908. They acquire their professional knowledge in the office?—Yes. Of course they have all to attend University classes, and a very considerable number of them are graduates in law. To be a graduate in law they must first of all hold the degree of Master of Arts, and then they graduate as Bachelor in Law, but the graduate in law is often not better than his neighbours. All must have a certain amount of University education in law. Some graduate, others do not. It is often a question of time.

57,909. In the case of the Sasine Office, do you think that the professional knowledge required there can be acquired in the same way, or is it desirable that men admitted to the office should first have some outside knowledge?—I think they should have some outside training. The sort of people who should be appointed are conveyancing clerks, men who carry on that work under the supervision of the head of the department in an ordinary law office. These men have an intimate knowledge of all the details that are met with, and that is the sort of knowledge that is wanted in the Sasine Office. The deed has to be read when it comes in and a minute is required to be made of it. The minute is an abstract, and it requires a considerable amount of knowledge to put it correctly. The value of the Sasine Register depends on the accuracy of the minute. There are two records, the abridgement and the minute. The abridgement was introduced by Mr. Thomas Thomson. The minute book and the abridgement were originally distinct, but now the minute book and the abridgement are the same. The deed, when it comes in, is abstracted and a minute is made of it, and two copies are kept. The one is called the abridgement and the other the minute book. These pass into the Deputy Clerk Register's office and are the foundation of searching. All searching is done through the abridgement, and upon the accuracy of the minute or abridgement depends the accuracy of the search. It is most carefully gone over in the Sasine Office, checked and re-checked, but the initial stage is the drafting of the minute, and that requires a man of some capacity and experience.

57,910. (Sir George Paul.) It is very well done as things stand?—Yes. No matter where the man came from, whether he was trained in the Sasine Office or trained outside, the work is well done at the present moment.

57,911. (Chairman.) You mentioned that in the Register House there are also the departments of the Register of Deeds and the Record Office?—Yes.

57,912. At present those are entirely separate, except so far as they are all under the control and supervision of the Deputy Clerk Register?—Yes, entirely separate, and necessarily and by statute separate. The whole system of registration in Scotland depends on keeping the Record Office entirely apart from the other offices. The Keeper of the Register of Sasines does nothing but keep the register. He makes the minute book and the abridgement, which is now another name for the minute book, and as these are completed they are transferred to the department of the Deputy Clerk Register, that is to the Record Office. No alteration can be made upon a volume of Record after it reaches the Deputy Clerk Register's department except with his sanction. It is the cardinal rule of the registration system in Scotland that the making of the Record be kept entirely distinct from its custody. That has always been the case. It is the same with the Register of Deeds.

57,913. When there were local records of Sasines was the custody separate from the preparation of the Record?—Always. Prior to 1868 there were what were called Particular Registers of Sasines—there were 20 throughout Scotland. These would be called District Registers in England.

57,914. In whose custody were they?—They were transmitted regularly to Edinburgh and put under the custody of the Lord Clerk Register. That is the reason why in 1820 Mr. Thomson was able to introduce what were then called the abridgements. There was great difficulty in making a search prior to 1820, for this reason, that a deed could be recorded either in the Particular Register, i.e., in the district, or in the General Register of Sasines in the Register House, and when you went to make a search you required to search both the General and the Particular Registers. Now, Mr. Thomson having the control of the whole of the Registers in his own hand in the Register House proceeded to make an abridgement of both the Particular Registers and the General Registers, arranging them according to counties, and formed what he called an Abridgement of the Register of Sasines. He had to go back to the year 1780 because in Scotland a forty years' search was required. He abridged those and in that way brought into one focus the whole of the Register of Sasines for Scotland. They were all in his department. Every volume of Record as completed is handed into the Deputy Clerk Register's Department, it goes into the Record Office and cannot be taken out. If the Keeper of the Register of Sasines at the present moment wishes to consult one of his own volumes, say the volume for 1911, he must go to the Record Office and look at it there. He cannot get it into his own office.

57,915. In the Registry of Deeds also, is it the system that the Record when made is transferred to the Record Office for preservation?—Yes.

57,916. The suggestion has been made that convenience and economy of staff, especially as regards the engrossing staff, might result from a combination of the Register of Deeds and the Register of Sasines?—I do not think there is anything in that.

57,917. The two departments are concerned with very similar work, are they not?—Yes.

57,917A. They receive a deed, an official copy is made, and the only difference, we are told, is that in one case the original deed is returned to the person who presents it, while in the other case it is preserved in the office?—Yes, but a very large number of deeds go to the Register of Deeds which are entirely unconnected with land.

9 June 1915.]

Dr. DAVID MURRAY, LL.D.

[Continued.]

57,918. Though the character of the deeds in each case is different, is there any reason why those two similar operations should not be performed in two branches of the same office, and to some extent with the same staff?—The system has worked so remarkably well up to now that I can see no reason for making any alteration.

57,919. In the Sasine Office the work is very irregular. At certain periods of the year the work is very heavy, especially the work of copying the deeds, while at other periods of the year the work is very slack, and that creates a difficulty in arranging the work of the engrossing staff. In the Registry of Deeds the work is much more regular throughout the year, and besides it is not of such an urgent character as in the Register of Sasines. It was suggested, therefore, that a combination of the engrossing staffs of the two would enable the work to be carried on with greater evenness throughout the year, and, therefore, with greater convenience and greater economy?—I cannot see how that arises. As you say, the work in the Register of Deeds is practically steady throughout the year, it does not come in in exceptional quantities as in the Sasine Office, and we assume that they have a staff that will keep that office working and they do not require extra help.

57,920. No, it is the Sasine Office that requires extra help at certain seasons?—I cannot see that. There is as much urgency in the Register of Deeds as in the Sasine Office.

57,921. But if the work was pooled there would be less difficulty as regards staff at periods of pressure?—Theoretically there might be something in it, but, as a matter of fact, I do not think there is. You must keep in view that the pressure in the Sasine Office is not the engrossing. We are not so much concerned whether we get our deeds returned within a month or six months. The pressure in the Sasine Office is the minuting, and the engrossing clerks have nothing to do with that. Land transactions in Scotland are settled, as a rule, at the Whitsunday and Martinmas terms, and a very large number of deeds are sent in to the Sasine Office at these particular times in order to be recorded. The pressure is in the minuting of those deeds. After they are minuted they are set aside, and I do not think it makes much difference whether they are engrossed within a month or within six months. We have no complaint as to the deeds not being returned. It is of no particular value to have the deeds back into your hands. The real point is to have them put on the register. The staff are greatly pressed in order to minute the deeds, and that is where the delay occurs in the Sasine Office. It has always been a complaint, but you cannot get rid of it very well. They are better now than they were at one time. The mere engrossing of the deed does not make a great deal of difference. I have had deeds which were as long as six months before they were returned. It causes no inconvenience.

57,922. If it were found convenient as regards the staff, is there anything impracticable in it?—It is not impracticable, but I do not think it is desirable. While there is no urgency for the return of deeds from the Sasine Office, that is not the case in the Register of Deeds. The deed is retained, but the extract, or official copy as it would be termed in England, is wanted as soon as possible. The staff could not well be sent elsewhere.

57,923. In your précis, among other matters, you deal with the question of the Search Sheet; but whether that should be maintained or modified is a question which does not come within the reference to this Commission. The reference to this Commission requires us to deal with questions of appointment and of organisation; it does not entitle us to deal with the substance of the work with which the different departments are concerned. I do not, therefore, propose to enter into the system of the Search Sheet, which has been treated at great length by other committees, and in particular by Lord Low's Committee. Given that the system of the Search Sheet exists, do you consider that the present staff is in any way excessive or unsuitable for that purpose?—No. If the Search Sheet is to be carried on, probably they cannot have a smaller staff, but my point is that you could have a much smaller staff and save a great deal of money if there was no Search Sheet, and I think it is right to say that there is no statutory authority whatever for the Search Sheet.

57,924. That, as I say, is a point which is really beyond the competence of this Commission; but, as you have mentioned it, it may be convenient to recall the recommendation of Lord Low's Committee on that point, which was to the effect that the Search Sheet should be continued. (Reads.)?—Yes. We recommended that, and a bill was introduced shortly afterwards for the purpose of giving it legislative effect, but the bill dropped on the ground that it also provided for the use of photo-zincography for the engrossing of the Record as we recommended. A somewhat similar recommendation had been made on a previous occasion. The legal bodies in Scotland made a recommendation to the Lord Advocate of the day with reference to the Search Sheet, and a bill was introduced in 1893 providing that the Search Sheet be legalised. In that case printing of the Sasine record had been proposed. The popular view was against printing, and, as this was opposed, the bill was dropped. There have thus been two bills introduced for the purpose of legalising the Search Sheet. Nothing has been done since the last bill was dropped, and the Search Sheet still stands, and is carried on at great cost and with no adequate advantage.

57,925. You mention the question of a system of a mechanical record of the deeds. That question has a certain bearing on the Commission's inquiry, because the question of the engrossing staff is a difficult one which would be solved if a mechanical system was adopted. As bearing on the question of the engrossing staff, can you say if there is any probability of a system of mechanical record being adopted in the future?—I understand that typewriting has been suggested. Typewriting is a very convenient thing. At the present moment the Deputy Clerk Register has instituted the typewriting of Extracts, and it has also been suggested that typewriting might be introduced for engrossing the record, but, I think, there are a good many difficulties in the way. It would certainly require most careful consideration, and would require the approval of the Court. The real trouble is the extreme facility for alteration. There is also the question of the action of light. I am told by experts that the action of light may remove the colour of certain inks. I am not in a position to say anything about that, but I have a typewritten copy of a paper of 1893 by Mr. Hope Finlay, the former Keeper of the Register of Sasines. This seems good and enduring, but there is the important question of erasure. For instance, I dictate all my letters. They are taken down in shorthand, but the shorthand writer may mistake a word of similar sound occasionally, and, when that is detected, the word is erased and the other word substituted, and, I believe, it is almost impossible even on a careful and minute examination to find out that there has been an erasure.

57,926. (Sir George Paul.) That is the only objection?—Yes, and there is the question of subsequent alteration.

57,927. (Chairman.) That question of alterations would be of less importance in the registration of deeds where the original document is preserved?—Yes, that is so, but still it would be very awkward to have any difference between the original and the record. At present the collation of the deeds in the Sasine Office, and in the Register of Deeds is very carefully and minutely done, and there are regulations as regards not only paper, but as regards ink and other things; everything is arranged for permanency. It is possible that under proper control and supervision typewriting might be introduced, but certainly it ought not to be introduced without careful investigation. I still think that photo-zincography might be adopted. Maps and plans are very often attached to conveyances nowadays, and these maps and plans are not registered, but with photo-zincography copies of these plans would be kept.

9 June 1915.]

Dr. DAVID MURRAY, LL.D.

[Continued.]

57,928. Turning to the remaining department of the Register House, the Record Office, have you any recommendations to make?—No. The Record Office is well managed. The only point I wish to raise is as to the Curator of the Historical Department. I think the Curator of the Historical Department ought to be taken from outside. There may be a man inside who has a special knowledge of the subject, but exceptional qualities are required for that position, which are not likely to be got in the office itself.

57,929. What exactly are the special qualities required there?—The Curator must have special historical knowledge. He must be acquainted with the old style of writing. He must likewise have an acquaintance with the forms of deeds. He must know the particular forms in use at particular periods, and what formalities and clauses were required in a deed, in a judicial writ, and in a decree of the Court, and so on, at particular periods. He must also have a knowledge of procedure so as to enable him to understand the Records. Beyond that you must have a person of sound historical knowledge, and, by far the most important point, he must have ability to interrogate the Record. That is to say, he must have cognizance of all the lines of historical research of the day, and how the Records bear on these. There is a great deal to be got from the Records beyond mere dates, names, and so forth. The Records are very largely used for local history, family history, and so on, but beyond that the constitutional history of the country can be got from the Record, and that has been a side of the question that has been far too lightly regarded. The whole judicial system of Scotland is to be found in the Records.

57,930. These are the qualifications you think essential?—Yes. The Curator ought to be able to guide any inquirer to the sources and to help him to understand them.

57,931. (Sir George Paul.) Such as Dr. Joseph Robertson, for instance?—Dr. Joseph Robertson was one of the most eminent Record scholars we ever had in Scotland; he was next to Mr. Thomas Thomson. I knew him well; I worked under him in the Register House.

57,932. (Chairman.) A thorough knowledge of mediæval latin would be an advantage?—Yes.

57,933. (Sir John Kempe.) You express rather strong views as to the interference of the Treasury?—Yes, in my précis.

57,934. I want to know your views a little more definitely. The Treasury, of course, are given powers for regulating the staff, and so on. You hold that that is all they ought to do?—Yes. This, of course, is just the question of the Search Sheet in a different form. The Search Sheet would never have existed but for the Treasury. The Search Sheet was sanctioned and carried on by the Treasury as a money-making concern. It is no part of the Records.

57,935. Putting aside the question of the Search Sheet for the moment, you understand it is necessary, if the Treasury have the duty of regulating the staff, that they must inquire into the duties of the staff, and that that very often involves discussion which seems to be outside the mere salaries and numbers of the staff; they have to understand the work they do. You do not object to that?—No. Certainly that is entirely legitimate, but in 1853 the Treasury on their own account set up official searching. Now, official searching had never been heard of in the Register House, and there is no authority for it except the Treasury minute; I think it was outwith the authority of the Treasury under the Act of 1817 to set up official searching.

57,936. I do not want to discuss that. My point is that you do not object to the Treasury satisfying themselves in this direction?—Certainly not. I think the Treasury perform most valuable duties, and the public service is greatly indebted to the Treasury. I do not question that in the least. You took from my précis the word "interference." What I meant by interference was that they had gone beyond their province.

57,937. (Mr. Clymes.) Have you any knowledge of any effort being made to put an end to the political influence that you have referred to with reference to certain appointments?—No. You must keep in view, as I have said, that this question of political influence is more theoretical than practical; the appointments have, as a rule, been good, but the general feeling is that political considerations should not enter into the question of appointment.

57,938. (Mr. Boutwood.) You and other witnesses have suggested that before a change to typewriting or any other form of reproduction could be made in Scotland some statutory authority is necessary. First of all, is that so; and why should one invoke so high a court as Parliament for the change from handwriting to typewriting?—It is not Parliament I refer to; it is the Court of Session. At the present moment the form of page and the number of words to be engrossed on a page in the register is regulated by the Court of Session.

57,939. So that it is not Parliament you refer to?—No. The Court of Session by an Act of Sederunt fixed that each page must have so many lines ruled upon it, that there must be so many words on each page, and if in a consecutive number of pages the average was greater than certain penalties follow.

57,940. You said that one Act recommended photo-zincography, and another Act recommended printing?—These were Bills, not Acts, and I think you would require the sanction of Parliament to introduce printing or photo-zincography. There is, I think, an Act of Parliament dealing with the subject. But the whole system of registration has been most carefully guarded by the Scottish Parliament and by the Court of Session.

57,941. So that for practical purposes you think you are tied up?—I think, at the present moment, for practical purposes, we are tied up. I do not think that any alteration ought to be made without a thorough investigation. The proper people to investigate are the Deputy Clerk Register and the Court of Session. And in connection with that I would like to say, in reference to the control of the Court of Session, that it ought to be provided, as has been represented over and over again, that all legal bodies and other persons interested should have an opportunity of being heard upon any change that is suggested.

57,942. (Sir George Paul.) As regards the Keeper of the Register of Sasines, who is an important official with a very large staff under him, he, you say, should not go direct to the Court or direct to the Secretary for Scotland, but should get all these difficulties cleared up for him through the Deputy Clerk Register?—Yes, but the Keeper of the Register of Sasines should have a pretty free hand. When you have a man such as Mr. John Clerk Brodie, you must look upon him as a thoroughly responsible man, fit to look after his own office and his own duties. I think he ought not to be unnecessarily interfered with by the Deputy Clerk Register, and I am just afraid in certain circumstances there is a little tendency towards interference.

57,943. It depends very much on the good sense of both parties?—Yes.

57,944. You say that you do not approve of competitive examination for filling up the vacancies?—No.

57,945. Then how would you fill up the junior vacancies?—By selection, just as I do in my own office.

57,946. That would be done by the Keeper of the Register just as he appoints at present the engrossing staff?—Yes. I, for instance, have a large staff, and find no difficulty.

57,947. You see no difficulty in getting suitable men?—None whatever. The Sheriff Clerk's staff is now selected from law clerks. The Sheriff Clerk might take a clerk from my office.

57,948. You would approve of promotion in the office?—Certainly.

57,949. A conveyancing clerk in a big office, with a good experience, could scarcely be expected to go into a junior position in the Register House?—A conveyancing clerk might quite well be assistant keeper. As long as you can get a suitable man in the office there is no reason to go outside.

9 June 1915.]

Dr. DAVID MURRAY, LL.D.

[Continued.]

57,950. (Mr. Graham Wallas.) I understand that, by custom, political considerations do largely influence all the better paid appointments in the Register House?—I am afraid they do.

57,951. Would you agree with Mr. Watt's description of it—"The wretched system of making political appointments to non-political posts"?—I think that language is too strong. In the case of appointments for political considerations you get practically as good men as you could get otherwise, but it is a hardship on the outsider that the man who has done some political service should get the appointment.

57,952. I do not know whether you have often stayed in America, but do you know that if one objects to such appointments in New York the answer is, "But we appoint good men"?—I have been very often in America, and I know about what is done there pretty well.

57,953. The point I want to make is, would not you agree that the objections to the system are not disposed of by saying that, after all, in fact you get a good man?—Oh, no, the objection is not disposed of by saying that. The alteration is not suggested on the ground that bad men are appointed. The objection is that political considerations enter into the matter at all.

57,954. You say you do not think anyone could defend the system. Would you agree that the general opinion in the profession is against it?—Yes, I think the legal profession in Scotland is against it.

57,955. What steps do you recommend us to take to break this established habit which nobody defends?—That is a difficult question. It much depends on the holder of the particular office at the time. Some are less influenced by politics than others.

57,956. It has been suggested that this habit might be broken if the Lord Advocate were provided with the advice of a responsible committee. Do you think that would be adequate?—No; I think you are better with one man than a committee.

57,957. You do not contend that the responsibility of one man in the past has been sufficient?—It depended very much on the particular holder of the office. Some holders of office have taken very broad views and excluded, to a large extent, political considerations. Others have not.

57,958. The normal practice has been to include political considerations?—I think, as a rule, that is the general result. One can only go upon what one hears. It lies with the particular Minister concerned.

57,959. But I understand you to say, in the first place, that the system exists; in the next place, that nobody approves of it; and, finally, that you have no suggestion to make in regard to the changing of the system?—I did not know that it lay with me to make a suggestion. I have not considered how the change should be made.

57,960. You proposed to us that, with regard to the clerical appointments, which have hitherto been made without any regard to political considerations but by competitive examination, they should be put into the hands of a person who was appointed by political influence?—No; I would put them into the hands of the Keeper of the Register of Sasines.

57,961. But is he not himself normally appointed for political considerations?—I believe he is; but he does not hold a political office.

57,962. Is there so marked a difference between him and the Lord Advocate?—I think that the two positions are entirely different.

57,963. A great deal of the work in the General Registry is essentially accurate copying?—A large amount of it.

57,964. Have you ever considered whether that accurate copying might be done to a large extent by women?—There are no persons better fitted for the work. We all have typists, and in that particular department I think that a woman is better than a man. If you introduced typewriting into the Register House I would expect it to be done by women. It is done more accurately by them, it is better done, they are much more attentive and accurate. They turn out remarkably good work.

57,965. Women can also use the pen, if required?—Quite so. In my office, when typists have been asked to write something out in their own handwriting, I have found that they write just as well as male clerks.

57,966. And the appointment of women for copying in the Register House might perhaps be made without reference to the mechanical instrument they have to use?—Certainly. I go further, and say that any office in the Register House could be filled by women. I think there is no reason why women should not be trained for that work.

57,967. And you think this work of accuracy and tidiness might become almost to a predominant extent a female office?—Quite so. Women are quite as competent as men. I would have women as conveyancing clerks if they were available.

57,968. (Miss Haldane.) You mean they are not available in respect of not being trained?—They have not the qualifications, they cannot be admitted law agents. The Court will not allow a woman to become a law agent, but we have some women graduates in law; and if women were allowed to become law agents there is no reason why they should not do law work quite as well as men.

57,969. You agree with some of our other witnesses that women should be entitled to become solicitors?—Yes, I think that as regards conveyancing, for instance, there is no vocation more suitable for women.

57,970. You propose that they should be allowed to be brought into the Service and to rise in the Service, supposing they have the qualifications?—I think if a woman was to enter the Sasine Office she should have the qualifications.

57,971. Is it not the case that a large number of women are now studying palæography, for instance, and that they would be particularly suitable for working in the office?—There is no palæography required in the Register House, except on the historical side, but palæography is exceedingly suitable for women.

57,972. (Sir Donald MacAlister.) I should like to be a little clearer as to the method of recruiting you have in mind when you refer to the clerks. What is your idea of the other method that should be followed, other than competitive examination, I mean?—I would work it the same as my own office. In an office with 30 or 40 clerks you may have to go outside; you inquire all round, and, as a rule, you get a satisfactory man. I think that the Registrar of Sasines might carry on his office very well in that way. I think he would get more satisfactory men if he was allowed to choose from outside. In one's own office we put up our clerks from stage to stage, as well as take them from outside.

57,973. I am speaking of recruiting for the junior offices. How are they to enter the Register Office in the first instance? You say that the Keeper of the Register of Sasines ought to go out and find men just as he chooses?—Well, he would always have plenty of applications.

57,974. That is just the point. There are a large number of applications for these junior offices?—Yes; but in practice—of course, the war has made a great difference—in every large office you have a waiting list of 20 or 30 people wanting to get into the office.

57,975. There is always a waiting list for openings in the Civil Service, and some people are chosen; perhaps one is chosen out of 20 or 30, and the 19 or 29 say it is unfair?—I agree.

57,976. Then why should the present system be departed from in the case of the Register House?—Well, the Sasine Office is the only one in the Register House in which there is a large staff, but, apart from the engrossing staff, it is not very big, and can be controlled perfectly well by one man. The Keeper knows precisely what he wants, and I think it would work very well if he could select his own men. I think that when the Civil Service competitive system was introduced there were a great many nominations by persons not at the head of the office, but by outsiders. The head of the office is the responsible man.

57,977. Responsible to whom?—He is responsible to the Secretary for Scotland, and through him to Parliament.

9 June 1915.]

Dr. DAVID MURRAY, LL.D.

[Continued.]

57,978. How is the Register Office in that respect different from all the other Civil Service departments?—I don't know anything about the other Civil Service departments. I can judge of the Sasine Office, because I am very well acquainted with it, and if I was Keeper of the Register of Sasines I would like to control and select the staff, and I think I could do it satisfactorily.

57,979. I suppose you would agree that on the waiting list probably three-quarters are all equally well qualified?—No. When you come to examine their qualifications you will find in the long run there is only one that answers everything that is required. It is not quite an easy thing to get a suitable man for a particular vacancy, and if you simply take them in by examination you don't necessarily get the right man.

57,980. In an organised service it is necessary to lay down some rules as to the age of the entrants, previous qualifications, and so on?—Yes, it is essential in a large concern. Of that there is no doubt; but the result is, I think, that the Civil Service, as a whole, is not equal to the service in a private office. You don't get nearly so much work is one point.

57,981. Supposing the Keeper of the Register of Sasines wanted such a clerk, do you say that he ought to advertise the vacancy?—I see no reason why he should not.

57,982. And supposing he got a large number of applications, what is to be the method of selection?—Send for them and see them.

57,983. A personal interview?—Yes, certainly, and I should ascertain what their particular qualifications were. You ascertain that one candidate has been employed in such and such an office, and another in another office, and you make inquiries as to what sort of work he had been doing there, and so on.

57,984. Supposing you found that a large number of cousins and relatives got into the office in that way, you would assume that they were all the best men?—Of course, if you get half a dozen all equal it is a difficult thing to choose, but in practice—and I have had a great deal of experience—I have never found that situation arise.

57,985. We have found in another part of the kingdom a curiously large number of family relations in one office?—That may be, but I think the public are more concerned with the efficient working of the office, and, in my view, you get more efficient results by the head of the office selecting his staff than by competitive examination.

57,986. In the advertisement would you state that the applicants must have so many years' experience in an office?—It depends entirely on what the vacancy is. If it is an assistant keeper, and the Keeper had not any person in his office, he would require to go outside.

57,987. But I am speaking only of the junior posts, because it is there that the competition now exists?—Well, it depends on the actual work that clerk is going to do.

57,988. They all do very much the same?—No. In one's own office you cannot say that there are two clerks exactly upon the same level; there is always some difference. They are doing slightly different duties. There are a large number of departments in my office, and you don't necessarily take a clerk from department A and put him into department C unless he has particular qualifications.

57,989. From the public point of view, when there is a vacancy for a post at 100*l.* a year, and somebody has got to get it, the public has to be assured that everybody who is qualified has a chance of getting it. That is the point of view of the Civil Service organisation?—I agree. You cannot get away from that. If the public are to criticise every little vacancy, of course you require to meet it in some way, but I should like to take a broader view and consider the efficiency of the Service.

57,990. (Mr. Shipley.) Could you tell me for how many hours the Register House is open to the public during the day?—From 10 to 4.

57,991. Is a good deal of work done after hours?—I think so. They must work longer hours in the Engraving Department.

57,992. And when the public get in and want to get a document, is that document found very readily?—Yes, the arrangements are perfect. This matter of searching could not be carried on unless the office was perfectly organised. The administration of all its departments is admirable.

57,993. (Mr. Matheson.) Are the clerks whom we have been speaking of pensionable?—I am not sure whether they have pensions or not. In the Sheriff Clerks' Office which I have in my mind there are no pensions.

57,994. And that is coupled with the fact, is it not, that there is no fixed age for retirement?—No.

57,995. Do you think that it is rather desirable that there should be a retiring age?—Personally, I don't think so. I would have been retired long ago if there had been any age limit that applied to me. I think it is for the head of the office to say whether a man should continue or not. We all have in our offices one or more semi-pensioners—people to whom we pay salaries simply because they have been a long time with us.

57,996. Have you had any experience, either directly or indirectly, of a public office not getting on very well when you had an accumulation of old people in it?—Not personal experience; but from that point of view, and for the working of the office, an age limit is necessary if there is to be promotion.

57,997. Quite so; and if you have an age limit you must have some system of pensions?—Quite so.

57,998. From that point of view, if you are appointing these clerks to posts which are going to carry pensions, don't you think it is natural that public opinion should demand an appointment which would be quite above suspicion?—I agree that compulsory retirement and a pension make it different from the administration of an ordinary office, and the appointment requires in such a case more consideration.

57,999. That is to say, more safeguards are required in the case of a public office where you have to appoint on definite conditions, with definite privileges, than in the case of a private office where a man is your servant, to be sent away at any moment you like to send him?—Yes, but I don't like to put it that he is a servant whom you can send away when you choose. A public servant can be dismissed.

58,000. I don't mean to say that you would do so?—No; but where the service is terminable at a fixed age and a pension runs on, I agree that more consideration in appointment may require to be made than when those elements don't come in.

58,001. (Sir John Kempe.) With reference to the comparison you made between the work of Civil servants and servants employed in legal departments, have you had experience of the work of the Civil Service departments?—I have no personal knowledge of it. You mean as regards efficiency?

58,002. Efficiency and the amount of work done?—You hear a man say that his salary is not very big and he has done enough for it. That is the feeling you get regarding the Civil Service. In point of fact, as far as I can judge, the Civil servant does not work so hard as a man in private life.

58,003. Have you actually seen that?—No, I have not had experience of the two offices.

58,004. I think in modern offices you will find work quite as important and quite as hard in the Civil Service as in private departments?—One can see that a large amount of hard work is done. In special cases there is no doubt about it, but the question is as to the work all over. Taking a large office and comparing it with the Civil Service, I would say that in a private office more work is done than under Civil Service arrangements.

58,005. You are speaking of private offices generally?—Yes. Take a railway office, for instance. I think the clerks in a railway office probably work harder than under the Civil Service arrangements.

58,006. Is that accounted for more or less by mechanical work?—There is a good deal of mechanical work in the railway office, I agree. I am a railway solicitor and I have a separate railway staff dealing with the work of the Glasgow and South-Western Railway, and

9 June 1915.]

Dr. DAVID MURRAY, LL.D.

[Continued.]

I know what they do. A great deal of excellent work is done, and done very ungrudgingly, just as it would be in a private office, and I think that probably there is more work done than if they were there under Civil Service arrangements.

58,007. (Chairman.) How many hours a day do the clerks in your office normally work?—I think the hours are from 9 to 5.

Mr. JAMES ANDREW, called and examined.

58,010. (Chairman.) You are a law agent in Glasgow, and a partner of the firm of Mitchells, Johnston, & Co., law agents and conveyancers?—Yes.

58,011. Were you formerly a member of the Council of the Faculty of Procurators in Glasgow?—Yes.

58,012. And you give evidence before this Commission on behalf of the Faculty?—Yes.

58,013. The evidence you are prepared to give relates especially to the Sheriff Courts and their staff?—That is so.

58,014. What has been your experience of the Sheriff Courts?—I have been a practitioner in the Sheriff Courts for over 30 years, my practice being chiefly in the Glasgow and other Lanarkshire courts, but I have also practised in courts outside Lanarkshire—Dumbarton, Paisley, Ayr, and Stirling.

58,015. The Commission have already had evidence as to the nature and jurisdiction of the Sheriff Courts. Will you give us generally your opinion of the qualifications which the work of the Sheriff Clerk and his staff requires?—I consider, from the work which devolves on Sheriff Clerks and their deputies, that they must have special qualifications, including a general knowledge of law, a special knowledge of many statutes, and familiarity with forms of procedure, and extracts of judgments.

58,016. Taking the post of Sheriff Clerk in particular, do you consider that previous legal experience in the profession is desirable?—Very desirable.

58,017. You think that is of more importance than official experience in offices of the Court?—Very much more so, because you have always a large staff familiar with forms of procedure and the like, and you wish the head to have a special knowledge of law, which would be useful in regulating the work, and determining how it should be done.

58,018. Do you apply that observation to the deputies as well as to the Sheriff Clerks?—Yes.

58,019. A Sheriff Clerk is appointed by the Crown on the recommendation of the Secretary for Scotland?—That is so.

58,020. That in practice means on the recommendation of the Lord Advocate?—Yes, we all know that.

58,021. Do you consider that that system should remain as it is?—Yes, I think so.

58,022. Other witnesses have spoken of the extent to which political considerations enter into these appointments. Do they enter largely into the appointment of Sheriff Clerks?—I think they do in a great many cases.

58,023. What is your opinion of that system?—I have great difficulty in seeing a better system. Both parties get the opportunity of selecting the best men on each side, and, so far as Glasgow is concerned, the selections which have been made have been very satisfactory.

58,024. Is not the result of that system that a man who has not taken an active part as a political agent, or some other active part as a politician, is excluded from such appointments?—It operates decidedly in that way to a certain extent, but if the political agents had not the necessary qualifications, I am quite sure that the Lord Advocate would not recommend the appointments being made.

58,025. You justify the system on the ground that the appointments are good ones?—I think so.

58,026. Is that a complete and sufficient justification of the practice?—The difficulty is, if you don't have the appointments made in that way you introduce the system of inviting applications, which amounts to canvassing, and it then becomes a question of who has the most influence with the Lord Advocate.

58,008. Do they often stay after office hours when special work is required to be done?—At the particular time when the Sasine Office is hard worked the private office is much the same, and work has to be done after office hours.

58,009. (Sir George Paul.) I suppose there is an interval for lunch?—There is no recognised interval, but they all take it.

58,027. Is it not possible to conceive a system whereby the best men would be appointed apart from political or other influences?—I don't think it is possible to create such a system as that, because, after all, the person who has the power of appointment must make inquiry, and he necessarily makes inquiry through people whom he knows, and in that way their influence comes into operation.

58,028. Is it not possible to make the inquiry in such a form that it would bear solely on the merits of the candidates, and not on the influence they could command?—That, of course, comes into operation, but suppose you get three men who are equally qualified and equally recommended, one may be known to the Lord Advocate and the other two may not. Why should not he select the gentleman who he knows is well qualified.

58,029. You assume that the appointment remains with the Lord Advocate?—To all intents and purposes, it does remain in his hands. My understanding is that, while the appointment is made by the Secretary for Scotland, the Secretary for Scotland consults the Lord Advocate and takes his recommendation.

58,030. I was speaking rather of the future. You suggest that the appointing authority should not be modified in any way?—I don't think so.

58,031. The suggestion has been made, with regard to English legal appointments, that the appointing authority should be assisted by the advice of a committee consisting of impartial persons, including the head of the department concerned, and others, with a view to obtaining impartial advice. Do you consider that a system of that kind is required in Scotland?—I don't think it would serve any purpose in Scotland.

58,032. Would it not be possible to create a committee specially for that purpose?—I don't think so. I don't think it would work, because, after all, each member of the committee would have influence brought to bear on him, and his knowledge of the candidate would also come into operation, just in the same way as the knowledge of the Lord Advocate comes into operation just now.

58,033. Your estimate of human nature is that it is impossible to conceive a committee which would not be influenced by personal or political considerations?—I do not know of a committee which is not influenced in that way.

58,034. Apart from the question of Sheriff Clerks and their deputies, there is also in each district a certain staff carrying on the work of the office?—That is so.

58,035. That staff gives partly whole-time and partly part-time services?—Yes, in the most of the Sheriff Clerks' offices the junior clerks give their whole time. There are one or two very small places where the work is so little that they do not require to give their whole time to it, but these cases are not very numerous.

58,036. That staff is at present appointed by the Sheriff Clerk?—Yes.

58,037. Is there any definite system of promotion?—There is no definite system, no recognised system.

58,038. Do transfers often take place from one district to another?—Very seldom just now.

58,039. Do promotions often take place from the staff to higher posts?—Yes. In the case of Glasgow all the promotions have been from the staff; all the Sheriff Clerks Depute have been appointed from the staff during my period of observation.

58,040. Do you think that is the right system?—I think so.

9 June 1915.]

Mr. JAMES ANDREW.

[Continued.]

58,041. Is there at present any difficulty in obtaining satisfactory recruits for the junior staff of the Sheriff Courts?—There is no difficulty.

58,042. But if there was a regular system of promotion, if promotion were more recognised than it is at present, it would add to the attraction of the Service?—I do not know that it would make very much difference. I think it is just very much the case of young people, when they are leaving school, simply seeking to get employment, and in a great many cases they do not discriminate, more especially if they merely want to get into an office and get an office training.

58,043. Do they not look at the prospects of future advancement?—That does apply, I think, in the case of most of them, but not to any great extent to begin with.

58,044. Do you consider it would be advantageous to have a more regular system of promotion?—I do not think it would be any advantage to the public. I think that at present the Sheriff Clerks get very good assistance without competition.

58,045. Do you consider that there should be a system of promotion among the Sheriff Clerks themselves and their deputies?—Yes, I think that that might with advantage be brought into operation.

58,046. How, in your view, would such a system work?—I think it would work very satisfactorily. If you take, for instance, the case of Lanarkshire, where we have nine Sheriff Clerks Depute, any one of these Sheriff Clerks Depute would be qualified to become a Sheriff Clerk in sheriffdoms where the work was not exceedingly heavy, and where his experience would be of great value.

58,047. The Committee on Minor Legal Appointments recommended a reduction in the number of Sheriff Clerks. They recommended that there should be one Sheriff Clerk in each sheriffdom?—I entirely agree with that view.

58,048. Will you explain the advantages?—The advantage would be this, if you had a Sheriff Clerk for each sheriffdom there would be sufficient work to take up his whole time, and in that way he should be restricted from private practice; and when a Sheriff Clerk, the head of a department, is devoting his whole time and attention to his work, without having the distraction of private practice, I think he would become much more efficient.

58,049. At present the Sheriff Clerks are not restricted from private practice?—In a great many cases they are not. In a great many cases the work is not sufficient and the remuneration is not sufficient.

58,050. If the number was reduced to 15, as proposed, it would be possible to make these whole-time appointments and to restrict the holders from private practice?—I think so.

58,051. How far would you carry that restriction? Would you allow them to act, as they do at present, as Auditors of the Court?—The Sheriff Clerks, in point of fact, I do not think have ever acted as Auditors of the Court. That has always been an appointment given to one of the deputies, and I think he should still be open to take such an appointment as that. You, of course, have a depute in each particular town where you have a Sheriff, and the desire is that the Auditor should be in each of those towns, so that I think it would hardly do to make the Sheriff Clerk the Auditor, because he might be resident in one town of the sheriffdom and not come in contact with the other towns.

58,052. Would you apply the restriction as to private practice to the deputies?—Yes, certainly.

58,053. And that would be practicable?—Yes.

58,054. You would approve of a system whereby deputies might be promoted from a less important district to a more important district, and ultimately be appointed Sheriff Clerks?—That is my view.

58,055. Would the deputies under that system ordinarily be promoted from the clerical staffs of the offices or from outside?—I do not see any reason why they should not be appointed from the staff.

58,056. The staff would have the necessary qualifications?—I think so.

s (5)30320

58,057. If the Sheriff Clerks are to be appointed by promotion, it would be difficult to carry out your suggestion that outside professional experience should be required of the Sheriff Clerks?—Yes. Of course you would get against that the experience he has of the work. It might obviate the necessity of bringing in outside law agents as Sheriff Clerks.

58,058. The effect of your suggestion would be to create something like a regular service, with promotion upwards inside the service?—That is so.

58,059. In order to complete that system, would it not also be desirable to create some system of transfer and promotion among the staff in different places below the rank of depute?—I think that would be quite desirable, because in that way the clerks who are in the smaller offices would get into the larger offices, and thereby acquire special experience.

58,060. Do you anticipate that the staff would readily accept transfer to a different town for the purpose of obtaining advancement?—I think they would.

58,061. It has been suggested to us by a previous witness that if the number of Sheriff Clerks were reduced, the question of promotion or transfer of the junior staff between the different offices should be controlled by a small committee of the Sheriff Clerks?—I do not see any serious difficulty in having an arrangement of that kind.

58,062. In order to make a system of that kind, it would be necessary to have some authority which would be able to review the whole of the offices?—I quite agree.

58,063. Would you prefer a small committee or a single person?—I think it should be a small committee in that case, because the small committee would be able to bring more knowledge to bear on the appointments as regards the candidates.

58,064. They would have a knowledge of their own staffs and their own districts, and could obtain a knowledge of the staffs in the other districts?—Quite.

58,065. At present none of the officers with whom we have been dealing have a pension?—They have not.

58,066. Do you think there ought to be a pension system?—I undoubtedly think so. I think after a person becomes a Sheriff Clerk Depute he has practically got to an age when it becomes his life work, and I certainly think there ought to be a pension.

58,067. Would you apply that to the whole of the staff?—Not to the junior staff. I do not see any reason why the junior clerks should get into the Sheriff Clerks' offices on the footing that they were to get pensions whether or not they became Sheriff Clerks Depute.

58,068. At what age would they generally become deputies?—I should think probably between 35 and 45.

58,069. Is there not a certain difficulty in instituting a pension system for a service where men enter as late as that?—I do not think so. Take the system of pensions applicable to Sheriffs and Sheriff Substitutes, a Sheriff Substitute who has held office for 10 years is then entitled to retire with a third of his salary; after 15 years he is entitled to retire with two-thirds of his salary; and after 20 years he is entitled to retire with three-fourths of his salary. I think at that age a system like that would work quite well.

58,070. That is more liberal than the ordinary Civil Service scale?—Yes.

58,071. Is that under the Sheriff Courts (Scotland) Act, 1907?—That is so.

58,072. That system does not apply to anything except judicial offices?—That is so.

58,073. Would there not be some difficulty in placing officers whose work is clerical on a much more favourable position than any of the other clerical offices in the kingdom?—I see no reason why they should not, because it has to be kept in view that the salary they get, just because it is clerical work, is much smaller.

58,074. Would it not be likely to create discontent in other offices?—They would, of course, just deal with the discontent, and endeavour to get their position improved.

58,075. If they were levelled up all round it would lead to very large increases of expense?—If we were getting an efficient service, I do not know that that element should enter too much into consideration.

M M

9 June 1915.]

Mr. JAMES ANDREW.

[Continued.]

58,076. Speaking generally, is the organisation of the offices satisfactory, and do you find that the manner in which the work is performed meets the convenience of the public and the profession?—Undoubtedly it does. We have an excellent staff in the Sheriff Clerks' offices in Lanarkshire and in the other places where I have been.

58,077. (Mr. Matheson.) Do I understand from your précis that at present a man working under the Sheriff Clerk is debarred from qualifying as a law agent?—That is so.

58,078. Is that by statute?—Yes, under the Procurators (Scotland) Act, 1865, it was provided that services with the Sheriff Clerk would be equivalent to services with a law agent, and in that way an apprentice entering a Sheriff Clerk's office could make himself an apprentice, and by passing the necessary examinations become a law agent. Unfortunately, that was abolished by the Law Agents Act, 1873. I do not know why, but I think that that was surely a great mistake.

58,079. You would like a change made?—Yes.

58,080. (Mr. Graham Wallas.) You told us that if an attempt were made to appoint the best man as Sheriff Clerk without reference to his political work, that that would lead to canvassing, and that the man who had the most influence with the Lord Advocate would be appointed?—That is so, but we know that the appointments now are made very quickly, and the Lord Advocate, I take it, has a very good knowledge regarding the capacity of the political agents.

58,081. The point is at the present moment the normal thing is to appoint the paid political agent in the district concerned?—That, I think, is usually done.

58,082. And you think that that simplifies the problem and prevents canvassing?—That is, perhaps, rather a crude way of putting it, if I may say so.

58,083. You say the Sheriff Clerk and his deposes have duties to perform each year in connection with the registration of voters for the Parliamentary elections, and duties in connection with the actual work of these elections when they take place. Speaking generally, what are their duties in connection with the registration of voters?—Of course the valuation roll is made up, and there are appeals taken to the Sheriff Court. In the case of lodgers in Glasgow, for instance, you may have something like 10,000 or 20,000 applications by lodgers to be put on the register of voters. We have a system whereby the Sheriff Clerk and his deposes scrutinise these applications and practically arrange who should be put on the register of voters, the result being that only very few cases require to be dealt with by the Sheriff.

58,084. The main part of the work is done by the Sheriff Clerk?—The list of voters is made up outside.

58,085. Of course the Sheriff Clerk must find his political experience very useful in that way?—He must.

58,086. (Sir George Paul.) I suppose really what the deposes want is fixity of tenure?—That is so.

58,087. At present their positions are precarious; they are appointed by the Sheriff Clerk and can be dismissed by him?—That is so, and I think there should be a qualification on that—I do not think that a Sheriff Clerk Depute should be dismissed without his having a right to appeal to the Secretary for Scotland.

58,088. Then how do you propose, if there was fixity of tenure, that they should be elected in future?—The suggestion was made by the Chairman that a small committee of Sheriff Clerks might have the right of appointment.

58,089. How would it do if the appointment was made by the Sheriff after a consultation with the Sheriff Clerk?—I would certainly approve of such a system as that.

58,090. Would you prefer that to a committee?—I would prefer that.

58,091. You have deposes in Glasgow and deposes in Airdrie and deposes in Hamilton?—Yes.

58,092. Do you consider them a consolidated set of deposes for promotion within the county?—Yes.

58,093. Each depute is not attached to his own Court, but they are all under the Sheriff Clerk?—Yes.

We have already a case where a depute in Airdrie was brought into Glasgow as Sheriff Clerk Depute.

58,094. As regards pensions, you would not have pensions in the case of the clerks?—I think not.

58,095. Supposing the junior clerk should rise in time to a depute, would he become eligible for a pension?—Yes.

58,096. Would you take into account the whole of his time since he entered the office?—No, certainly not.

58,097. Then it would not be retrospective as regards the whole term since he first entered the office?—I think not.

58,098. You spoke of the proportions of their salaries that the Sheriff Substitutes get as pensions on retiring. It has been suggested that that is too high a proportion, but I suppose the proportion is merely a matter of arrangement?—It is a mere detail.

58,099. Your view is that the Lord Advocate should have the appointment?—Yes.

58,100. And your view also is that the Sheriff Clerk should be a qualified law agent?—Yes.

58,101. Then would you fetter the Lord Advocate with the condition that the district appointments should be made from qualified law agents?—No, certainly not.

58,102. You would fetter him to this extent, that his selection should be either from a qualified law agent or from a qualified Sheriff Clerk Depute of five years' standing?—Yes.

58,103. (Mr. Boutwood.) You referred to a liberal scale of pensions granted to Sheriffs and Sheriffs Substitute, and they were spoken of as judicial appointments?—Yes.

58,104. Then when the suggestion was made that the same scale of pensions should be applied to those men we are talking about now, the Sheriff Clerks and their deposes, the point was taken that the Sheriff Clerks and their deposes are clerical; but the general impression that has been left on my mind is that the Sheriff Clerks and their deposes are really part of the judicial system?—They are part of the system, but then they do not give any decision in regard to matters.

58,105. That is the distinction you make?—Yes.

58,106. There is another matter that arose out of an answer you gave a moment ago about the need of some central authority for arranging the transfers and promotions of men if you had the general system for the Sheriff Clerks that we have been talking about, and I did not quite feel the force of your answer, because I did not quite understand it. You seemed to accept the suggestion that the Sheriff should look after that?—The Sheriff Clerk and the Sheriff.

58,107. Under the new system there will be a Sheriff and one Sheriff Clerk under him, but how would he be central for the whole body?—Take, for instance, his own counties—the Sheriff has probably jurisdiction over three counties, and in each of these counties you might have two Sheriff Clerks Depute—in the question of promotion, the opinion of the Sheriff in the appointment would have great value because he is brought into contact with the Sheriff Clerk's assistants or deposes.

58,108. I thought you meant he was to be the man who was to make the appointment?—No.

58,109. He is simply to be consulted?—Yes.

58,110. (Sir John Kempe.) You rather object to open competition?—Yes; I agree with the views which Dr. Murray expressed.

58,111. You say that, "It has to be kept in view that the appointments to positions in the offices of Sheriff Clerks do not appeal to a large number of people. I think, however, that if the service with the Sheriff Clerk could be treated as equivalent to serving as law apprentices, there would be no difficulty in suitable recruits being obtained." What would be the effect of that? Do you mean that they would get outside appointments?—Yes.

58,112. Do you think that service in the Sheriff Clerk's office is as good as training in outside offices?—It is quite as good in a great many cases, and it is probably better in regard to certain matters. On the question of conveyancing, of course, it is not so satisfactory; but there is no doubt about this, that if a young man in a Sheriff Clerk's office was taking his classes and doing what was necessary to enable him to qualify as a law agent, he would get into an independent office much more readily than he possibly can expect to get at present, where he never gets beyond the stage of being a clerk.

9 June 1915.]

Mr. JAMES ANDREW.

[Continued.]

58,113. Would not that apply to men recruited by competition, an intelligent, good class of men?—I think not; because, I think, if you introduce the question of competition, you then do away with the question of enabling them to become law apprentices and qualifying as law agents.

58,114. Still you admit that the man appointed by open competition could train in the office all the same?—Yes; but if you introduce the Civil Service system, you do not then get a selection of young men who have a predilection for law and a desire to become law agents.

58,115. (Miss Haldane.) I wanted to know about your view of pension rates. A pension would only be given to those who were whole-time men, I suppose?—Undoubtedly.

58,116. Do you anticipate it would be given to the Sheriff Clerks and the depute also?—Yes, to both.

58,117. Do you anticipate that they would not be allowed to do any other work?—Yes; except becoming Auditor of the Court in the matter of taxation of accounts.

58,118. Would you approve of there being transference from one Sheriff Clerk's office to another?—Yes, certainly.

Mr. JAMES HOTCHKIS JAMESON, W.S., called and examined.

58,126. (Chairman.) You are a Writer to the Signet?—I am.

58,127. Wherein does your practice lie?—My office is in Leith, and I have been a member of the society since 1880. I have been largely engaged in court practice for the last 25 years, although my experience of the court has extended to at least 35 years.

58,128. You are prepared to give evidence on behalf of the society?—I have been so appointed.

58,129. Dealing first with the question of appointment and promotion in the offices of the Court of Session, to what extent do you think that professional qualifications are required in these offices?—It is difficult to answer that without giving an explanatory statement. The views of the society are that it would be a great advantage, both for the staff itself and the public, if the principle of promotion were followed more largely than it is at present. Were the staff organised on the lines that we would suggest, then we certainly are of opinion that the qualification, even in the case of engrossing clerks, if they are to be eligible for promotion to the higher offices, should be that of a certificated law agent.

58,130. You would apply that qualification to all persons employed in the offices of the court?—Yes.

58,131. Would you apply it universally, or would you make it a condition of promotion from the lower positions?—Of course one would not suggest for a moment that the existing staff should be affected in any way by any regulation of that kind, but in future appointments we think it would be desirable to insist on this qualification.

58,132. Would you apply it in all cases? You mentioned that even in the case of engrossing clerks you would make the possession of that qualification a condition for further promotion?—Yes.

58,133. Would you, therefore, admit to the post of engrossing clerk and to other minor positions persons without that qualification, making it a condition that further promotion can only be obtained after having obtained that qualification?—I think it is practicable. Of course, there is this difficulty which must be borne in mind—the question of age. I have heard it suggested that perhaps a second division Civil Service clerk might be appointed. That would be a clerk between the ages of 17 and 20. That is distinctly too young an age for any person on the Court staff, even an engrossing clerk, and the difficulty is that at that

58,119. That being so, it seems to me that there might be a head. You say that if there was one head of this service, he could not be familiar with the Sheriff Clerks Depute, and so on?—The difficulty would be to locate him. I do not know what the duties of one head would be, whether he would reside in Edinburgh, with a sort of general control, or not. If that were so, I do not see how he could be familiar with the various Sheriff Clerks and their deputies, and so on.

58,120. Could he not find a way of becoming acquainted with these candidates?—Not in the same way as a Sheriff Clerk could. For instance, the Sheriff Clerk has the men immediately under him, and sees what they are doing every day, and can ascertain their capacity. A head living in Edinburgh could not necessarily know their qualifications.

58,121. Would there not be some difficulty about the transference?—It was suggested by the Chairman that there might be a committee of Sheriff Clerks who would have the right to regulate these matters, and such a committee, I think, might work very well.

58,122. And you might have a consolidated service in that sense?—Yes.

58,123. With pension rights?—Yes.

58,124. Then you are coming near the Civil Service idea?—Far from it, because the number of Sheriff Clerks and Sheriff Clerks Depute is very small.

58,125. You would not extend it further?—No; I do not see why the staff of the Sheriff Clerk's office should be treated differently from ordinary law clerks with the right of competition in the legal profession.

age he would not have completed his apprenticeship, far less qualified in law.

58,134. Would it be possible for a man without the qualification of law agent to take up the position and qualify afterwards?—That suggestion has been made. I do not see how he could acquire his professional qualification and at the same time attend to his duties at the court. It might be done if he had previously served his apprenticeship.

58,135. Is a person employed in an office of the Court able to acquire the necessary qualification at present?—I think not. Of course, to qualify as a law agent in Scotland, if the person holds a university degree, he must serve an apprenticeship of three years; and if he does not hold a university degree then he must serve an apprenticeship of five years, and in that case he has to pass a general knowledge examination. When that has been done he has to pass his qualifications in law.

58,136. Does service in an office of the Court count as apprenticeship?—No.

58,137. So that a person entering an office of the Court could not become a law agent unless he served his apprenticeship in an outside office?—It is quite impossible, and for this reason: for an apprentice to acquire a thorough practical knowledge of conveyancing it is necessary that he should serve his apprenticeship in an outside office. He could, no doubt, acquire the theory of conveyancing from law books, but he would be absolutely at sea if he was asked to prepare a deed.

58,138. At what age can an apprenticeship begin?—I do not think there is any fixed age, but in point of fact I do not think you will get apprentices earlier than 17. Generally they are very much later. Of course, if a young man takes a university course in arts first he will not commence his apprenticeship until he is 21, and then he will have his three years' apprenticeship, and he will also have to stand his trials in law.

58,139. Is your suggestion as to the normal method of admission that a young man should serve his apprenticeship and obtain his qualifications as a law agent before entering one of the offices of the Court?—Yes, that is so.

58,140-1. If he did that, in your view, he should be eligible for the higher posts?—Yes, with the exception of the Principal Clerk of Session, who we consider is in a different category altogether.

9 June 1915.]

Mr. JAMES HOTCHKIS JAMESON, W.S.

[Continued.]

58,142. Under the present system persons are often appointed to the higher posts from outside?—Yes.

58,143. We have been told by several witnesses that political considerations enter largely into these appointments?—I assume so.

58,144. What is your view as to that system?—I think the public do not get the best service, although I do not suggest for one moment that the present staff is not a very competent one and very pleasant to get on with; but I do not think even the Court or the public get the same stamp of men as they would get otherwise if the suggested alterations were made.

58,145. You think that a better stamp of man would be obtained if the alterations were made?—Yes. For instance, under the present system many of the members of the staff are recruited from advocates' clerks. Although they have excellent qualifications in many ways, they have not, usually speaking, the qualifications which we think are desirable for a position of the kind, and if some system of the kind suggested was introduced I think it would be a great matter even for the advocates' clerks, although they are not under this inquiry, if they had these qualifications too. They would then be eligible, just like other people.

58,146. Then your suggestion is that the original appointments should be made, as a rule, to the junior posts and that the higher posts, with the exception of the Principal Clerk of Session, should be filled from below; and that the appointments should be made without reference to political considerations?—Most distinctly.

58,147. Do you suggest any modification of the appointing authority in order to carry out that change?—We suggest that the appointing authority should be the Lord President, as head of the Court. After all, it is a comparatively small establishment, and the head of the Court would be entirely free from political considerations which might influence another authority. We think if the appointment were vested in him that he would exercise it in the way most beneficial to the Court itself and to the public. I may, perhaps, be permitted to point out that even as it is under the 1889 Act, with regard to the regulation of the clerks of Session, the Lord President is vested with a certain amount of control and supervision of the existing staff.

58,148. But not of their appointment?—Not of their appointment. I think most of the staff hold Crown appointments.

58,149. If that change were made, do you think that the Lord President ought to be assisted in his selections by the advice of any person or committee?—We hardly think that would be necessary, because it may be assumed that the Lord President would take the best advice he could get; but as the suggestion is made in your notes, I think if the present system of appointment were continued, which the society think is undesirable, then it would be desirable that there should be some sort of control or check. On the other hand, if the Lord President were vested with these appointments, we do not think it would be necessary to saddle him with a committee, because we assume that he would take the best advice he could get; and I should think probably the persons he would naturally consult would be the Principal Clerk and some of the other judges, the Dean of the Faculty of Advocates, and the heads of the two societies that practise before the Court.

58,150. If the power of appointment remains in the same hands as at present, you think it desirable that a committee composed of some such persons as those you have named should make recommendations with regard to candidates?—Yes.

58,151. Have you considered the question of competitive examination as a means of recruitment?—We have, and the society is not very much attracted by the idea, not on the ground that competitive examination would not secure probably a good man, but it would hardly form an efficient test for the kind of men we want for these positions. What I mean is this: of course when a man goes into a special department like this, he is bound to fall more or less into a routine habit, and the nature of his work is very much calculated to strengthen that, and my own experience is that where certain of the gentlemen who are on the staff sometimes fall short of satisfaction, from a solicitor's point of view, is just owing to this routine habit of mind which we think would, to a certain extent at any rate, be neutralised by the agent's qualifications and the experience he has gained.

58,152. It would be possible to have competition among people who had a certain length of service in a law agent's office?—I think that is a detail that I have probably no right to speak to, but I do not see myself why it should not be so.

58,153. That system is at present in operation in the Sasine Office?—Yes.

58,154. Would not you in that way combine the advantages which follow from outside experience with the advantages which arise from a perfectly impartial selection?—That is quite true, and of course it might work well, as competitive examinations have in many different departments of life. On the other hand, you never can tell by competitive examination whether you get the right man. He may prove with all his mental qualifications to be the wrong man.

58,155. Is not that also true as regards personal selection?—It is quite true, but perhaps not to the same extent.

58,156. You mentioned that you thought the Principal Clerk of Session should be appointed directly from outside and not by promotion?—Yes.

58,157. By whom, in your view, should that appointment be made?—That also I think should be vested in the Lord President. He is really the person who is most interested in the character and capacity of the official who occupies that position; he is the chief clerk of his own Court. Of course the principle that has so far been adopted is the idea that the whole staff should be controlled and supervised by the Principal Clerk of Session, and that we think makes it all the more desirable that the appointment and selection of the principal clerk should be in his hands.

58,158. It is your view that the Principal Clerk of Session should be in control of the whole of the offices?—Certainly. I should add, of course, that it is possible to take an exaggerated view of the extent of the control which he exercises since the change was made. So far as I know the previous system has just gone on as before, but, subject to some observations I have to make afterwards as to the organising of the whole business and the removal of the offices of the court from the Register House to the seat of the court, I am quite in favour of that. There must be somebody in control of the staff.

58,159. The system you suggest of original appointment to the lower posts and promotion to the higher posts would, I presume, require, for carrying it out fully, some interchange and the possibility of transfers between the different branches of the offices?—That is quite true. With regard to the Clerks of Session and their respective offices, there is no practical difficulty, nor is there any practical difficulty as far as I can see in, say, promoting the junior clerks of the Bill Chamber and the Extractor's Office to the assistant clerkships or the ordinary clerkships of the Court. That would be quite feasible and quite proper, but I think there might be some difficulty, and it would not be attended by fortunate results if an Assistant Clerk of Session who had no experience further than that of his office were all at once transferred to the position of Chief Clerk of the Bill Chamber; and, of course, still more so if he were made Clerk of Teinds. A suggestion has been made about the consolidation into one general department of the whole staff. I do not see any objection to that, but then one must ask what is the meaning of consolidation? Are you to abolish the Bill Chamber, the Teind Office, and the Extractor's Office? Because, if these were abolished, the duties would have to be transferred to somebody else—exactly the same sort of work would have to be done—and all, evidently, that you would have would be a change of name.

58,160. Then you qualify your recommendation by the statement that there are special posts requiring special qualifications, and you say that general experience in other parts of the office would not necessarily qualify a man for these posts?—That is so.

9 June 1915.]

Mr. JAMES HOTCHKIS JAMESON, W.S.

[Continued.]

58,161. But it might very likely be the case that an Assistant or Ordinary Clerk of Session would have previous experience as a junior clerk in the Bill Chamber?—It is quite possible.

58,162. And in that case he might have the necessary qualifications for appointment as Principal Clerk?—Yes; and, of course, if he had a law agent's qualification he would pick up the duties of any particular office he was appointed to much more rapidly than if he had not.

58,163. The same would apply to the office of Extractor?—Yes. Might I just add a few words about the Extractor's Office? I understand that there has been a suggestion made that the duties of the Extractor might be transferred to the Depute Clerks of Session under the supervision of the Principal Clerk of Session. My society is very strongly of the opinion that that would be a most unfortunate arrangement. I do not know whether you are aware that prior to 1810 that system prevailed, namely, that the Principal Clerks of Court—they were then six in number—and their assistants prepared the extracts and issued them. There was a change made in that year, when there were six assistant clerks appointed extractors, and that change only endured some 11 years, until the Act of 1821. There was a further change made again in 1838, when the present system was inaugurated. One may very well, therefore, presume that the system of each Clerk of Court issuing his own extracts proved, in practice, a mistake. Anyone intimate with the Court knows perfectly well that there would be most extraordinary confusion if it were attempted at present.

58,164. You consider that the work of extraction should be done by a separate branch?—Yes, and by a person who can take a view of the whole thing. It must always be remembered that a decree of the Court is a decree of the whole Court whether it is pronounced by the Lord Ordinary or otherwise.

58,165. Turning to the question of organisation, have you any observations to make?—Well, that seems to raise questions I have already reverted to. It does so, I think, in two ways. In the first place, I think it goes without saying that if the Principal Clerk of Session is to have the control and supervision of the whole staff it is quite an anomalous arrangement for that staff to be divided in two different places, and the Principal Clerk to be in one when he cannot possibly be in the other. I assume you are aware of the arrangement of the division of the staff, and it is not necessary for me to deal with that; but it has been found in my experience, and I think in the experience of other members of the society, a highly inconvenient arrangement that the offices of the Court are at a distance from the Court. There is not only the division of the staff, but the Depute Clerks of Session who are supposed to exercise control of their own offices are prevented from doing so by their duties in Court; and the Assistant Clerk has to do all the work of the office. As I have said, the Principal Clerk has to be in attendance at the Court till 4 o'clock when it is in Session, and he cannot, therefore, be down at the Register House exercising his supervision and control. The same remarks applies to the Depute Clerks. In addition to that, quite often a process has to be got in a hurry, and it cannot be got. Often the Court cannot get a process if it is wanted and happens to be at the Register House without sending a special messenger for it, and an assistant clerk or an ordinary clerk has to go down and unlock his office and get out the documents. Then there is a great deal of abuse of the documents with the constant handling, and our view is that the Court offices should be removed up to the Court. Of course, it would be an ideal improvement if the whole offices of the Court could be located there, not only the offices of the Clerks of Session, but the Extractor's Office, the Bill Chamber Office, and the department of the Accountant of Court and Auditor's office; but, if there were no room for them, I think it would be a great improvement, and lead greatly to the efficiency of the staff, if the offices of the Clerks of Court themselves were removed to the Court buildings. The Extractor's and the other offices are not absolutely so material, although they ought to be under the scheme. There is no doubt about the absolute necessity for the removal of the offices of the Clerks of Court. Such an arrangement as the existing one I do not believe, prevails in any supreme court in the world—all its offices being half a mile from the court. The Court would then always be in control of its own documents. It is by no means an uncommon incident for an important document to get lost, and no one ever knows where it goes.

58,166. If that were done, would it be practicable to simplify the system of dealing with current processes? Would it be possible to deal with them in one office instead of in the separate offices of the different courts?—That is a matter of opinion. Personally I see no difficulty about it.

58,167. If that were done, would it result in an economy of staff?—Well, there might be a couple of assistant clerks dispensed with, but I do not think the game is worth the candle, because whoever was dispensed with, the depute who had to do the whole work would complain that he had not assistants. Another advantage, of course, would be that the Depute Clerks would then be able to attend their own offices and they would be available for consultations with agents, counsel, or anybody interested between four and five when the Court rises. You cannot get hold of a Depute Clerk at present unless you make a special arrangement after 4 o'clock.

58,168. Do you suggest that the hours should be extended up to 5?—Yes. Of course the offices are open at present from 2 to 5 while the Courts sit, but if the offices were consolidated they could be open all day in vacation as well, and very often it is a matter of great convenience to get a document during the vacation.

58,169. The change in the location of the offices would probably also facilitate the consolidation which you have spoken of?—I think materially so.

58,170. To what extent would you carry the consolidation?—As I said before, I think it very much depends on what you mean by consolidation. I do not think that any consolidation would make very much difference, except perhaps in facilitating a transfer of clerks, because if you were to abolish these separate offices you would have just the same work to do in a different form with a change of name.

58,171. It would be a change in the status of the particular officers to a certain extent?—It might be. If you abolished the Teind Office you would have to have a Teind Office still, and you would have to have a person there who knew about teinds, and who specialised in that particular department, therefore you would have the same thing.

58,172. Which offices would you include in the consolidation?—If there is to be no alteration about these other offices, I would include the Clerks of Court, Bill Chamber and Extraction Office. I would certainly not include the Crown Office or the Justiciary Office, but I would include these other offices and the Teind Office to this extent, that the clerks might to a certain extent be interchangeable.

58,173. Do you consider that the clerks should be prohibited from private practice, and required to retire at a fixed age?—Yes. Under the Civil Service rule, I understand that 65 is the limit for retirement.

58,174. The Civil Service rule is that a man may retire on a pension at 60, but he must retire at 65, with special power to extend it to 70?—Many of the present staff still hold their appointments until they are 70, and I think that would be a very good age. No doubt a man with a large experience is an asset to the Court and to the public.

58,175. Do you see any reason why for future appointments the ordinary Civil Service rule should not apply?—I do not think so, because in a special case you might extend his period of office.

58,176. (Lord Dundas.) You are in favour, as I understand, of some greater consolidation as regards promotion in the court departments?—Yes.

58,177. But, as you very justly point out, there are exceptions to that. You have very rightly excepted such offices as the Justiciary Office and the Crown Office?—Yes.

9 June 1915.]

Mr. JAMES HOTCHKIS JAMESON, W.S.

[Continued.]

58,178. And that leaves one with a very small residuum?—Yes.

58,179. That then is a very small field to embark upon a general scheme of consolidation, is not it?—It is.

58,180. There is no legal obstacle at present, is there, for such transfer and promotion as you indicate?—Not that I am aware of.

58,181. Then truly that part of your evidence comes to this, as I understand, that your society have the idea that a freer intercourse in that very limited sphere is desirable?—Yes.

58,182. As regards bringing in chiefs from outside, do you not think that the Principal Clerk of the Bill Chamber should be an appointment from outside?—I think there is a great deal to be said for that.

58,183. I will tell you why. We had Mr. Paterson here the other day—the present admirable Principal Clerk of Bills—and he told us that he had been a solicitor, and he had found it of the greatest practical benefit in his position as Principal Clerk that he should have had that experience. Do you differ from that?—Certainly not, but that goes back to the question with which I started, namely, if you have an agent's qualifications or experience you just meet that point to a certain extent.

58,184. One other question on that point. When you spoke of the Principal Clerk of Session having a general control over the Court offices, I don't suppose you intended to include such offices as the Judiciary Office or the Crown Office?—No, certainly not.

58,185. You merely intended to include the limited field of which you have been speaking?—Yes.

58,186. One other matter. You put it in your précis that the system of appointment has not been satisfactory?—Yes.

58,187. What class of appointment do you point at in that statement?—The appointments mainly of the Depute Clerks of Session.

58,188. Almost entirely?—Yes, that is so.

58,189. Is there anything else?—No, I cannot suggest any other. Of course, the Principal Clerk of Session is appointed in the same way.

58,190. That is a body of how many men in all?—Eight altogether.

58,191. And the system that you deprecate is the political element which you told us you think exists too much?—Yes.

58,192. Do you say that the public has been badly served owing to that?—I said before that the public has not been badly served.

58,193. You do not say that the public has been badly served?—No.

58,194. Then is your objection rather taken on principle or sentiment?—Might I just qualify that by saying, of course there have been instances of bad appointments.

58,195. But you find bad appointments under any system?—Undoubtedly.

58,196. I put it to you, is your objection rather one of theory and sentiment than of practical evil?—No, I will not say it is exactly theory or sentiment. There is no doubt, we think, that the principle should be changed.

58,197. Instead of theory or sentiment, shall we say it is a question of principle rather than of material importance?—It is a question of principle, but subject to this observation, as I have already said, we think you would get under the system advocated eventually a better class of men than you have got in the past.

58,198. How?—That is, without making any depreciatory suggestions about any men in the past.

58,199. You think in the past you have got good men, but if this depreciatory element was removed you might get better?—Yes.

58,200. The Lord Advocate has very wide opportunities, has not he, of acquiring a knowledge of the fitness of the men he appoints to those very limited posts you are speaking of?—I dare say he should have. I cannot answer the question "yes" or "no."

58,201. Surely you know that he has at his elbow the Solicitor-General, if he likes to consult him, and the Crown Agent, and he is in close touch from his position at the Bar with the whole Bar, including the Advocates

Depute and your own branch of the profession in numbers, has he not?—Yes, that is quite true.

58,202. What better sources of advice could a man have?—I do not think he could have any better sources.

58,203. Very well; and you do not advocate the appointment of a committee to advise him if the appointment remains with him?—I said the contrary. We think, if the present system continues, it would be an advantage if there was some check of the appointments.

58,204. If these limited appointments are to remain with the Lord Advocate, you would be in favour of some advisory committee?—Yes.

58,205. Tell me how it would be composed?—I suggested the Lord President and the Dean of Faculty of Advocates, the head of the two societies that practise in the Court of Session. If it was to be on a Civil Service basis, there should be a representative of the Civil Service.

58,206. Do you seriously say you would recommend such a committee as you suggest to control or advise the Lord Advocate?—I think the whole thing is too small for a committee in any case.

58,207. You are giving evidence, not I?—I am only to give evidence according to the conditions that are there, and I think that, as a matter of principle, there should be some check.

58,208. I am putting the question to you, do you seriously say that it would be an improvement applicable to the circumstances to appoint such a committee as you have suggested?—I do not think there should be a committee myself, and I do not think the society think there should be such a committee; but, as I said before, we think that the appointment should be vested in the head of the Court.

58,209. (Chairman.) I understand you to say that if the appointment remains with the Lord Advocate he should have some assistance?—I think there should be some check. Whether it should be in the form of a committee or not, I can express no opinion, because I do not know what the committee would do or who would compose it.

58,210. (Lord Dundas.) I think we have come to this, that, in your view, a committee would not be an advisable measure?—Yes, having regard to the small number of offices.

58,211. The idea of the Lord President is quite a new one. May I ask, is it the view of your society or yourself or both?—Of the Bill Committee of the society.

58,212. Is it the idea of one ingenious mind, or is it the product of the society's collective deliberations?—I do not know that I am entitled to go into the private deliberations of the society, but the matter was discussed at a meeting, and that was the opinion that was formed.

58,213. The Lord President, in point of fact is, not invariably, but very frequently, appointed from the Lord Advocate?—Yes.

58,214. So that instead of the existing Lord Advocate being in charge of these appointments, you would have an ex-Lord Advocate very often?—That would occur, but he has undergone, as it were, a transmigration of soul.

58,215. Would the transmigration of soul operate directly?—That is a question I think that no one can answer. We consider the smaller the staff, and the smaller the number of appointments you have to make, the more need for it being the head of the Court.

58,216. I understand the limit of this transference is six or eight men?—Yes.

58,217. Do you think that the Lord President has at all the same means of knowledge of probable and desirable candidates as the Lord Advocate has?—I should say he had the same means of knowledge, and his position being always here would, I think, increase that knowledge.

58,218. I think we agreed that the Lord Advocate is in active touch with both branches of the profession?—The Crown Agent, of course, is an important official,

9 June 1915.]

Mr. JAMES HOTCHKIS JAMESON, W.S.

[Continued.]

but unless he has great familiarity with the Civil department of the court, his position of Crown Agent is not particularly favourable.

58,219. I thought we were agreed that the Lord Advocate from his position was necessarily in close touch with both branches of the profession?—Yes, but the Lord Advocate, as you know, is always sitting in Parliament when it is in Session.

58,220. You know quite well that the Lord Advocate is here a great deal?—He is here sometimes, certainly.

58,221. The Lord President, of course, is a judge, and the head of the judges?—Yes.

58,222. From his position, would it be possible for him to be in touch with the Bar and the solicitors in anything like the way the Lord Advocate must be?—I should have thought that if the Lord President was vested with the appointment of these officials he would have the same means of acquiring a knowledge of these officials as the Lord Advocate.

58,223. And that was the footing on which the society recommended the scheme?—Yes.

58,224. One last question. The Lord Advocate is directly responsible, is he not, in Parliament?—I presume so.

58,225. And the Lord Advocate, I think you know, is also subject to the direct criticism of Parliament House?—Yes.

58,226. The Lord President is responsible to whom?—I think you have mentioned the one objection to the thing. There have been statements before Departmental Commissions that the person who is vested with this appointment ought to be directly responsible to Parliament, but, as I understand, any official in Scotland is subject more or less to the Secretary for Scotland.

58,227. Do you suggest that the Lord President is subject to the Secretary for Scotland?—No, I do not suggest anything of the kind.

58,228. I put it to you, do you not think it is a very serious criticism of your proposal that the Lord President is not, as a matter of fact, responsible to anyone?—I think it is a very small matter. It just goes back to what I started with, that the Lord President, as head of the Court, if he had the power to select nominees, would do it to the sole good of the public service.

58,229. It is a very small matter?—Yes, and the smaller it is the more I think he should have the appointment.

58,230. (Miss Haldane.) I suppose the Lord President would correspond very much with the Lord Chancellor?—I don't know very much about the position of the Lord Chancellor. Of course, in the case of the Lord Chancellor, he has a vast number of appointments.

58,231. (Mr. Clynes.) The suggestion has been made that the service of the staff under the Sheriff Clerk might be treated as an equivalent to a law apprenticeship. Would not that meet your point of having an opportunity of acquiring general knowledge and experience?—Your question refers to Sheriff Clerks?

58,232. Yes?—I am not giving any evidence with regard to Sheriff Clerks, and my society did not instruct me to do so.

58,233. (Mr. Boutwood.) I understand that this system of appointment referred to by you as not being satisfactory relates to half a dozen Clerks of Session?—It is rather more than that, because it takes in the Crown Office and the Justiciary Office too, as well as the Bill Chamber and Extractor's Office.

58,234. I may have mixed up things, as I am not familiar with the Scottish organisation. But does not that sentence about unsatisfactory appointments refer chiefly to the appointments made of the Lord Advocate's clerks. We have had evidence that when a man is made Lord Advocate, he puts his clerk into one of these appointments. Is that the particular thing you have in your mind in that sentence?—The particular thing we had in our minds was the answer to the question put in this paper, but that is, no doubt, what we had in view.

58,235. (Sir George Paul.) I suppose we may take it that, in certain respects, the Lord President may be considered in a sense equivalent to the Lord Chancellor in England?—Yes.

58,236. As regards responsibility to Parliament, I suppose it would be only in the event of a very bad job that Parliament would take it up?—I should think so.

58,237. Have you ever heard, in the course of your experience, of Parliament challenging any appointment?—No, never.

58,238. So far as I can see, there is not much substance in that?—I do not think so at all.

58,239. You spoke of the deutes. Do not these appointments include also the cases of the assistant clerks and the ordinary clerks?—Yes.

58,240. But you confined yourself to the deutes?—That was with regard to promotion. Of course, the whole staff altogether amounts to about 51.

58,241. Yes, but promotion and appointments go together?—Yes.

58,242. And the idea of this society was that if it was considered desirable to eliminate the political element the Lord President, as head of the Court, and especially interested in the efficiency of its officials, would be the right man to make the appointment. It was not contemplated that he should personally concern himself with such preliminary details as publication of vacancies, receiving applications, and the like, but it was assumed that he would avail himself of such assistance as he might choose to call in to arrange these and the applications for his consideration?—Yes; I do not see any practical difficulty in the Lord President taking such a place.

58,243. It was simply to eliminate the political element?—Yes.

58,244. (Mr. Graham Wallas.) I have here a list of the five depute clerks in the Outer House, and four of these five gentlemen I understand were Lord Advocates' clerks, one at the time of appointment being 67 years of age. It is true, you have told us, that the Lord Advocate has access to the best possible advice, but it would appear that in four cases out of five either they advised him to appoint his own clerk, or that he has not taken their advice. A man does not choose a clerk at the age of 15 to carry his bag for political reasons, and the feeling of the Lord Advocate in such a case must have been rather more personal than political?—That is a just opinion.

58,245. You also suggest that these men should be prohibited from engaging in private practice or being partners of such firms. Your society would not have asked for that unless they thought it was necessary?—Yes.

58,246. And unless they had evidence that some of the 51 persons in this list were in that position?—They treat that as a matter of principle.

58,247. Have you in your mind any case in which that rule is now necessary?—I understand that one member of the staff carries on a private practice, but I do not know directly of my own knowledge.

58,248. (Chairman.) The observations you have made with regard to the Lord Advocate and the change in the system of appointments would apply directly to the appointments in the Court of Session?—Yes.

58,249. A similar question arises with regard to other appointments on a much larger scale?—I have no doubt.

58,250. Would your observations apply in principle to those appointments also?—In principle, I think so, necessarily, but of course I have no right to give evidence on that point.

58,251. But the particular recommendation as regards the Lord President would apply to the offices of the Court of Session?—Yes, entirely.

58,252. You have been good enough to give us a memorandum with reference to the office of the Keeper of the Signet and a statement of the receipts and expenditure of that office. Is it the case that the receipts from fees are sufficient to meet the expenses of the office

9 June 1915.]

Mr. JAMES HOTCHKIS JAMESON, W.S.

[Continued]

and to leave a considerable margin, which is paid into the Exchequer?—That is so; the expenses of the office are well covered and there is a handsome surplus.

58,253. (Sir George Paul.) The receipts are from two sources. There are the signetting fees and there is the contribution of 50*l.* from each member as he joins the society?—Yes.

58,254. And these contributions from members of the society not only pay all the expenses of the office, but contribute a surplus which, with the gross amount of fees of signetting, goes to the Exchequer?—Yes.

58,255. So that truly the officials of the Signet Office are paid out of contributions from the members of the society?—That is so.

ONE HUNDRED AND THIRTY-NINTH DAY.

Thursday, 10th June 1915.

PRESENT:

SIR HENRY BABINGTON SMITH, K.C.B., C.S.I. (Chairman).

The Hon. LORD DUNDAS.
Sir DONALD MACALISTER, K.C.B.
Sir JOHN ARROW KEMPE, K.C.B.
Sir GEORGE MORISON PAUL.
Mr. ARTHUR BOUTWOOD.

Mr. JOHN ROBERT CLYNES, M.P.
Mr. PERCY EWING MATHESON.
Mr. ARTHUR EVERETT SHIPLEY, F.R.S.
Mr. GRAHAM WALLAS.
Miss HALDANE.

Mr. E. W. H. MILLAR (Secretary).

Mr. CHARLES CORNELIUS MACONCHIE, K.C., Sheriff of the Lothians and Peebles, called and examined.

58,256. (Chairman.) You are Sheriff Principal of the Lothians and Peebles?—I am.

58,257. Have you previously been Sheriff Substitute in Edinburgh?—Yes.

58,258. You have, therefore, considerable experience of the system of Sheriff Courts in this part of Scotland?—Yes.

58,259. You were also a member of the Departmental Committee on Minor Legal Appointments, and I think you signed the Majority Report?—Yes.

58,260. Will you tell us first what you think are the qualifications necessary for the staff of the Sheriff Courts?—Well, I think that what is chiefly required of the Sheriff Clerk and his staff is official experience. I do not think that any great knowledge of law, more than what can be picked up in a long experience, is necessary, and, therefore, I do not think it is necessary that the Sheriff Clerk should have the qualification of a law agent. His duties now are really those of a clerk, whatever they were in the past, and what he requires to know is the procedure of the ordinary Sheriff Court—the procedure under the numberless Acts of Parliament which come before a Sheriff Court—to be able to write the merely formal interlocutors of the Court, and how to grant warrants and so on—all the purely clerking work.

58,261. In your view it is knowledge of procedure rather than of substantial law that is necessary?—Yes. It is the business of the Sheriff and the Sheriff Substitutes to know the law, and it is the business of the Sheriff Clerk to be able to advise them in procedure and keep the cases and administrative work on the proper lines.

58,262. There is also some book-keeping, I understand?—There is very considerable book-keeping.

58,263. Considerable in amount, but, I suppose, simple in character?—Well, they have to keep a number of books. For example, they have to keep books of the fees in various courts. The Small Debt Court, for instance, is a court by itself; they are kept separate from the fees of the Sheriff Court proper; and, of course, there are books of the fees of the Sheriff Court itself. Then, under the Workmen's Compensation Act, there are large sums which are paid in to the Sheriff Clerk, and he has to deposit them in the Post Office, and the Postmaster-General will not allow anything to be uplifted from the money deposits that there are under the Act unless they are signed by the Sheriff Clerk himself. That is one of the only two things that the Sheriff Clerk must do himself. In all other cases the Sheriff Clerk's Depute can act for him, but in that case the Postmaster-General will not accept any receipt unless it is signed by the Sheriff Clerk himself.

58,264. Your conclusion is that, for the higher positions of that service, experience in the office of the Court is more important than legal knowledge?—Yes.

58,265. Is there any difficulty in finding men to fill these posts at present?—I believe in the country districts there is very great difficulty. In Edinburgh I have never heard that there was difficulty, and certainly we have got an excellent staff there just now; but in the country districts, where the pay is very small indeed and where there are no prospects practically of promotion, it is, I believe, very difficult indeed to find suitable men; and I may also say that when you do get a young man of promise, the better he is the more certain he is to go away after he has gained a certain amount of experience.

58,266. What do they go to?—To anything; into mercantile offices—anything rather than stay where they are, because really they have got no prospects of promotion and no increment on their salary as the years go on.

58,267. You think it important from that point of view to improve the conditions of service in the offices of the Sheriff Courts?—I think that the financial difficulty is perhaps at the bottom of the whole difficulty.

58,268. The Procurators Fiscal are to some extent subordinate to the Sheriff, are they not?—The Procurator Fiscal and his office are no part of the Sheriff Court at all. He is the servant of the Lord Advocate, and for the main part of his duties—almost his entire duties—he takes his orders from the Lord Advocate through Crown counsel, and he does all remits to inquire into complaints and so on. There is one thing in regard to which he is still in the Sheriff Court, and that is what his name means, the "Procurator Fiscal"; he acts as clerk to the Fiscal Authorities. The Sheriff is responsible for collecting the fines and penalties, and the Procurator Fiscal is his servant to that extent, that he has to collect and account for them to the Crown. But that, I think, is the only way in which the Procurator Fiscal comes into the Sheriff Court at all, and that is not properly in the Sheriff Court.

58,269. Has that double relation created any inconvenience in practice?—Not that part—I think not. It works absolutely automatically.

58,270. What are the qualifications that you consider to be required for a Procurator Fiscal?—There, I think, a knowledge of law is the principal consideration. He has to investigate suspicious cases and cases

10 June 1915.]

Mr. CHARLES CORNELIUS MACONOCHIE, K.C.

[Continued.]

that are clearly criminal, and he has to conduct the trials in court; he also has to judge of the relevancy of evidence and to know the laws of evidence so as to be able to conduct the cases and to advise the Lord Advocate—I mean, he has to send in such reports as will enable the Lord Advocate to know whether or not there is a legal case against the person, and these criminal proceedings lead into every department of Scotch law, I may say. For instance, shipping law he requires to know, because of cases which may result in charges of culpable homicide. Collisions, and so on—he requires to know the law there, and, in fact, everything that is laid down in the Merchant Shipping Act. Then, for instance, bigamy, that leads you into marriage law; and there are various cases that lead you into the law of incest. There are very, very few branches of the law that he does not require to know about. Bankruptcy he must know, and then he must know mercantile law, too, because cases of embezzlement very often lead into difficult questions on that point.

58,271. Can the necessary knowledge of those things be acquired by the clerks in the Procurator Fiscal's Office, or can they be better acquired in the outside profession?—Well, personally, I do not think a man can be a properly equipped Procurator Fiscal unless he has gone through a real legal training; such a training as is involved in getting the degree of law agent; although, I am bound to say that there have been men who have been admirable Fiscals, who, I believe, were not law agents and never have been.

58,272. Do you consider it desirable or not to make the law agent's qualification an absolute requirement for the Procurator Fiscal?—Well, personally, I should require the law agent's qualification myself, but this really is a question for the Lord Advocate. I am only saying that from what I know of the necessities of the case, the Procurator Fiscal ought to be a qualified lawyer.

58,273. The question has an important bearing on the organisation of the service. If any idea of promotion is to be carried out it might be difficult to make the law agent's qualification indispensable, because it would be difficult for persons who entered the Procurator Fiscal's office at an early age to acquire the law agent's qualification?—I think it is only when you come to the top that you must have a thorough knowledge of law on many points, and, however it is done, I think that the qualifications should be there.

58,274. The law agent's qualification in itself hardly ensures a thorough knowledge of all branches of law, does it?—No, I do not think it does; certainly not.

58,275. As a general rule the law agent's qualification is merely the door of entrance, and the legal knowledge is largely acquired afterwards?—Well, it ensures a knowledge of the bones of law, and experience will put the flesh on afterwards. But then, I think, it is very often necessary, in country places especially, to introduce outsiders, as they have been called, to be Procurators Fiscal, because it is an immensely important position, not only to the criminals, but to the public and to the Lord Advocate, and it is one where you must have a man of high standing, because the investigations that he has to make are highly confidential in many cases, and he must be beyond the possibility of giving away information, and the higher you can put his qualifications, I think, the better for the office.

58,276. Do you consider the present system of appointment of the Sheriff Clerks and Procurators Fiscal satisfactory?—I think on the whole it is, but there are certain changes which I should personally wish to make, and they are really very much embodied in the recommendations of the Departmental Committee. I think that certainly if there are two classes of deposes as we point to there, that those appointments should be made by the Secretary for Scotland. I am talking just now of Sheriff Clerks and Sheriff Clerks Depute.

58,277-8. Dealing first with Sheriff Clerks and Procurators Fiscal themselves, and, leaving aside for the moment the question of their staff, we are told that at present the appointment of Sheriff Clerks is made by the Secretary for Scotland on the advice of the Lord Advocate?—In the case of Sheriff Clerks that is so:

in the case of Procurators Fiscal it is made by the Lord Advocate.

58,279. We have also been told that the appointments, as a rule, have been political?—Well, it is rather difficult to say that. I know many cases where they have not been political. For instance, my Sheriff Clerk in Edinburgh had no politics. He had been over 20 years a depute, and he was appointed chiefly on that consideration. That was the proper man to be appointed, and he was appointed. To take another of my Sheriff Clerks—the case of West Lothian—when a vacancy occurred there, there was no man in the office that the Lord Advocate thought was fit to be appointed Sheriff Clerk, and, personally, I was of the same opinion, although my opinion was really not asked. However, I also thought that that was the case, and there was a man appointed to the position who had been the political agent for the preceding Lord Advocate—the present head of the Court. He was appointed for political reasons possibly, but he was the man practising in the Sheriff Court who, in my opinion, ought to have been appointed, so it is very difficult to say that that was a political appointment. Personally, I know no case, and have not heard of one, of the appointment of a political friend by the Lord Advocate where an inferior man has been given the appointment simply because he is a political man, and I know no case where the appointment has not proven a success. I do not think that it is necessarily a bad appointment because the man is a political friend.

58,280. Can you tell us what number out of the whole of the Sheriff Clerks and Procurators Fiscal have been appointed on purely non-political grounds?—I am afraid I cannot answer that question.

58,281. You cannot give us any idea?—I cannot give any idea, I am afraid, because I do not know the circumstances.

58,282. There have been several cases of promotion among Procurators Fiscal lately?—Yes, there have.

58,283. Is that regarded as something of an innovation?—I never heard it called so. Everybody has always wished that it should be so when there was a good man, and very frequently it has occurred.

58,284. But has it occurred frequently in past years?—We had evidence of several cases in regard to the Procurator Fiscal in the Departmental Committee. I think Banff was one, but I could not say for certain. But, as I say, the Procurator Fiscal is such an important position that it is for the Lord Advocate to find a man that he can trust, and that the Sheriff really has nothing to do with it now. Before the year 1907 the Sheriff made the appointment, but he had to do so with the consent of the Lord Advocate, and if the Lord Advocate did not approve, he simply said, "Well, your man will be appointed, but I will not pay the salary."

58,285. You adhere to the views which lay behind the recommendations of the Committee on Minor Legal Appointments that, in the case of the Sheriff Clerks, it is undesirable that the principle of appointment should be political?—Yes, if "political" means that you are going to take an inferior man because he is a political friend. But supposing that in the Sheriff Clerk's office there is not a man who is fit to be put up, and there are men who are clearly the best among outsiders, then I cannot say that I disapprove altogether of the Lord Advocate choosing the man of whom he presumably knows the most, or can find out the most from his own friends.

58,286. But the recommendation of the Committee was to the effect, I think, that the higher posts in the Sheriff Clerks service should be filled by promotion in the staff if there are competent persons, and not by the appointment of persons from outside. The Sheriff Clerks themselves were not included in the reference. The principle laid down there as regards the deposes, in your view, should be applied with regard to the Sheriff Clerks also?—I think certainly it is always much better to have promotion if possible, but the real difficulty is that in many parts of Scotland you have not a suitable man to promote, and then, of course, you must go to outsiders.

10 June 1915.]

Mr. CHARLES CORNELIUS MACONCHIE, K.C.

[Continued.]

58,287. If there is no suitable person you must go elsewhere?—Yes.

58,288. But even if you go elsewhere the motive which should guide the selection would be that of choosing the most suitable person and not the person who happened to have rendered political services?—Yes, I think so; but I might personally add that it must be remembered that when you promote a man to be Sheriff Clerk, I suppose in all cases that would be held to be promotion; and when you promote a Sheriff Clerk Depute to be Sheriff Clerk Principal that is also promotion. Now, I do not think it would be good for the public that you should promote a Sheriff Clerk Depute, say from Glasgow or Edinburgh, to be Sheriff Clerk in some small place, say, in the north, because there you are losing the services of a very good man and all his experience in putting him into a place where that experience is not being utilised to the fullest extent, if at all.

58,289. Of course, the system of transfer and promotion would require to be worked with discretion?—Yes, very much so.

58,290. But there would be opportunities of promoting a depute from a small place to a middle-sized place, and from a middle-sized place to a larger place?—Yes, I think so. It would be very difficult to work, I think, but at the same time I think that that makes a very good idea.

58,291. Dealing still with the question of the principle of appointment, and starting from the point that it is desirable to do away with the political method of selection, what steps do you think could be taken to secure that that should be done?—I do not think there are any steps that could be effective. I think you must leave it to the Lord Advocate and the Secretary for Scotland to appoint the best men, and I think we are entitled to assume that they will do so. As I say, I do not think they have misused their authority up to this point.

58,292. No, but they have used their authority on a certain recognised principle, that principle being, as we understand from previous witnesses, that so long as a competent man is appointed it is perfectly legitimate to take into account the political services he has rendered?—Yes.

58,293. We have been told by several witnesses of weight that it is desirable to alter that system of appointment. I understand you agree with that view?—No, I do not think it is desirable to alter the principle. If the principle is promotion only, occasionally—in fact, fairly frequently—occasions arise where you cannot get a man to promote, and then, of course, you must fall back on someone else.

58,294. What I understood you to say was that even where appointments have to be made from outside, the ground of selection ought to be the greatest degree of fitness for the post, and not the fact of political services previously rendered?—Yes, I think that, certainly.

58,295. Well, the principle hitherto has been, as we understand, not necessarily the greatest fitness for the post, but fitness for the post coupled with political services?—It is hardly for me to say that I think that the Lord Advocates have been entirely wrong. I do not agree that they have done wrong. So far as I know, there is no case where a notoriously inferior man has been appointed.

58,296. No, that is not suggested?—Well, where there are two equal men, I do not see why the man whom the Lord Advocate presumably knows most about from his own experience or from the experience of his friends, should not be chosen.

58,297. It would be a curious coincidence, would it not, if when a particular Government is in office, the most competent persons for certain posts should always happen to be persons who have taken an active part in politics on the same side as the Government, and not persons who have taken a part on the other side, or persons who have not taken a part at all?—I suppose it would be, putting it that way, but it is very difficult to say, in a small community where there are possibly two or three outstanding procurators practising before the Court—it is very difficult to say which of these men is most fit for a position of this kind, and especially is it difficult for the Lord Advocate, who just has to take other people's opinion, and he naturally goes to his own friends and they say, "Well, these are all very good men."

58,298. It has been suggested in connection with similar problems in England that the appointing authority should be assisted by a committee of persons occupying an impartial position, some of them connected with the department in which the appointment was to be made; that this committee should report on the qualifications of candidates, and that the appointing authority should make the selection after taking into account the report of the committee. Do you think a system of that kind would be well in Scotland? Would it be well in your opinion for the Lord Advocate to have the advice of an impartial committee of that kind?—At present he always has the advice of the Sheriff, who really does know the people who practise before him, and if he does not know already he can very easily find out the qualifications of the men in his office. But I certainly do not approve of any system by which the responsibility of the Lord Advocate or the Secretary for Scotland is to be put into the hands of a committee, because the Lord Advocate or the Secretary for Scotland are responsible to Parliament in the first place for their appointments, and if there is a notoriously bad appointment they can be had up in the House of Commons for it. The idea of a committee, I think, is exceedingly bad, because I think it would only lead to an increase of the political wire-pulling, or wire-pulling not necessarily political, and the Lord Advocate would only be the one to give the final voice to a committee who had all been approached. Personally, I think the division of responsibility would be very bad indeed, and I may say that in Scotland where we have one system of committee appointments, I do not think anybody would say that it has proved satisfactory, and that is the committee for appointing Justices of the Peace. It is well known in certain places to be very difficult to get a good committee to begin with, and very difficult to get Justices of the Peace of the same class as used to come forward. In fact, in one of my sheriffdoms it is so difficult to get a committee who would undertake that sort of work that no committee has ever been appointed, with the result that there are almost no Justices of the Peace in the county at all, because the Lord Lieutenant says he has no power to do it except through the committee.

58,299. (Miss Haldane.) Is that an advisory committee or an executive committee?—It is an advisory committee.

58,300. (Chairman.) The suggestion I referred to in the case of English appointments was that there should be a purely advisory committee, and that the responsibility for the appointments should rest with the Minister. Is the committee for appointing Justices of the Peace a recent creation?—Yes, it was created about five or six years ago. You see, Justices of the Peace still go through the Lord Chancellor. It used to be done by the Lord Lieutenant, and he appointed the men who he thought ought to be Justices of the Peace, and then he was told that they were not to be appointed by him alone; that there was to be an advisory committee, and that they were to advise the Lord Chancellor, and the result, as I say, is not proving satisfactory.

58,301. (Sir Donald MacAlister.) Is it not the case that the office of Justice of the Peace in Scotland is largely an honorary position?—I think not. Of course, your experience may be different from mine. They have Small Debt Courts, and every time they sign warrants, and so on, they take on personal responsibility.

58,302. But the office of Justice of the Peace in Scotland is not one corresponding to that of Justice of the Peace in England, so far as the extent of the duties is concerned?—I am afraid I do not know the duties of a Justice of the Peace in England, but they have all the duties that any statute puts upon them.

58,303. (Chairman.) You think, judging from the experience in that case, that it would be difficult to obtain an independent and impartial committee whose

10 June 1915.]

Mr. CHARLES CORNELIUS MACONCHIE, K.C.

[Continued.]

advice would be of value to the Lord Advocate and to the Secretary for Scotland in making appointments of this kind?—It is only partly proceeding on that case. My objection goes much deeper than that. I dislike dividing the responsibility in that way, but if you are going to have a committee, it must be a committee on which there are representatives who know the local conditions of every one of the sheriffdoms. That would make it a very large committee, otherwise I think it would be useless.

58,304. The kind of committee that was contemplated was a very small committee of three or four persons, who naturally would not know the local conditions of every place, but would have means of information at their disposal?—Their means of information would be exactly the same as the means of information which the Lord Advocate or the Secretary for Scotland has now: that is to say, they would have to go to the Sheriff. I presume, of course, there would be a vacancy in the Sheriff Clerkship. Therefore, it would boil down his responsibility, and would not get any more really valuable information than the Lord Advocate can get at present. Personally, I do not see how you can get a committee that would have the necessary knowledge, or could get it except in the same way as that in which it can be got just now.

58,305. Returning now to the question of promotion, you told us that you think it advisable, in order to improve the position of the service in the Sheriff Clerks' offices, that members of the staff should as far as practicable be eligible for promotion from one office to another as well as in their own office?—As a matter of fact, they are at present.

58,306. They are at present eligible, but does promotion by means of transfer often happen at present?—I do not think it often happens. It is very difficult to bring the two people who make the appointment together really.

58,307. The Committee on Minor Legal Appointments recommended a reduction in the number of Sheriff Clerks, so that there would be 15 instead of 33, as at present. That reduction would, to some extent, simplify the question of promotion and transfer, would it not? It would in the first place increase the size of the service under each Sheriff Clerk, and, therefore, make it possible for him to promote by transfer from one place to another within his own district. Would it also simplify the problem of promotion from one Sheriff Clerk's district to another?—I do not know that it would, really.

58,308. Would it not simplify it to this extent, that the smaller the number of persons who have to deal with the question, the easier it becomes?—Yes.

58,309. The suggestion has been made that a small committee of three or four of the principal Sheriff Clerks could with advantage be created for the purpose of dealing with questions of promotion and transfer?—I was not aware of that.

58,310. Does that strike you as a good suggestion?—Personally I think that is not a bad idea at all.

58,311. I understand the sheriffdoms vary very much in size?—Yes.

58,312. So that three or four of the principal Sheriff Clerks would in their own districts probably cover more than half the whole service?—That is so.

58,313. They would also have means of obtaining information from their colleagues as to the other districts?—Yes, but then there is always the difficulty that I do not think a man who has got his training in the smaller places could ever, from his training, be fit to become a depute, say, in a busy court like Glasgow or Edinburgh or Dundee. I mean that I think the promotion would have to go on on two or three different lines—among the men trained in a big court, in a middle court, and a small court.

58,314. Is not the position this, that there is not a clear line to be drawn anywhere between the big and the small courts? There is a steady increase in size, with a corresponding change in the character of the business, from the smallest place to the largest?—Yes, that is so.

58,315. Therefore there would always be the possibility of promotion to a place not necessarily precisely of the same character, but of somewhat similar character?—I heard of one case the other day. One Sheriff Clerk went in to the next Sheriff Clerk and said, "Have you a man you can give me?" and he said, "Yes, a very good man"; and he went into the adjoining Sheriff's office.

58,316. The system suggested would amount to a generalisation of that kind of procedure?—Yes.

58,317. The procedure would be something of this kind: if a Sheriff Clerk in one sheriffdom had a vacancy for a senior clerk, if anyone in his own office were suitable for the post he would promote him; if not, he would go to the committee and ask if they would give him a man from some other Sheriff Clerk's office?—I had not thought of that, but it seems to me that there is a good deal in it.

58,318. Would a similar arrangement be applicable in the case of the staff of the Procurators Fiscal?—Really I do not like to say that, because, properly, the Procurators Fiscal and their clerks are not my servants at all. Personally, however, I rather doubt it.

58,319. (Miss Haldane.) May I ask the reason why there would be a difficulty?—Because the investigations that the Procurators Fiscal and their staff have to make in one district are entirely different from those they have to make in other districts. The class of crime in a place like Sutherlandshire, for instance, is entirely different from the class of crime in Glasgow or Dundee, and I doubt very much whether the man trained up in Sutherlandshire would be at all fit to carry out an investigation into a commercial crime, for instance. However, as I say, it is not a subject on which I can give my opinion very strongly, because it is not a branch of the Sheriff Court work proper.

58,320. (Chairman.) Turning now to the question of the organisation of the Sheriff Clerks and their staff, you told us that you adhere to the recommendation of the Departmental Committee as to the reduction of the number of Sheriff Clerks?—Yes.

58,321. The Sheriff Clerks, when so reduced in number, would, I suppose, be all whole-time officers?—Yes.

58,322. Would you restrict them from taking private business of all kinds?—I think if they were so far reduced in number they would have sufficient work to occupy their full time, because they would have to make investigations into the courts of the deutes that are under them, and they would have to see that their books were right and exercise a general supervision, which would take them away a good deal from their offices. There is only one article of consideration which I do not quite adhere to in our recommendations: of course, it is merely a matter of detail. The article which I refer to is No. 6, "That the Sheriff Clerks should no longer be called upon to act as clerks to the process in the civil courts, or to attend as clerks in the criminal courts in the sheriffdom, but that in other respects their duties should remain as heretofore, and they should be made responsible under the Sheriff for the supervision, direction, and discipline of all the Sheriff Courts in the sheriffdom." I should like to leave that out, because if they had any spare time it would be a good thing both for themselves to occupy their time and for the Sheriff to have the Sheriff Clerk there; and if they had time I think they should act just in the same way as before. Of course, it is a mere matter of detail, but I should like to leave that article out.

58,323. In other respects you adhere to the recommendations of the Committee?—Yes.

58,324. I suppose the deutes would not all be whole-time officers?—I doubt that.

58,325. The Committee suggested that there should be a special class of deutes who should be whole-time officers?—Yes.

58,326. Would that be a large proportion of the class? I do not think the Report gives any indication of the proportion?—Well, that is a thing that I cannot speak of, as to the exact numbers, but it is practically all the ones where there is a court at present with a Sheriff Clerk, which court would be done away with and the deutes in places like Edinburgh, Glasgow, Dundee and Aberdeen, where the deutes now have sufficient work to occupy their whole

10 June 1915.]

MR. CHARLES CORNELIUS MACONCHIE, K.C.

[Continued.]

time. That would be the special class, and if the growth of business in any particular place was such as to justify a depute in the special class being put there, then, of course, that would have to be done.

58,327. In other places you would just leave the deputies as part-time officers?—Yes, as part-time officers and as appointed by the Sheriff Clerk.

58,328. The special class, you suggest, would be appointed by the Secretary for Scotland instead of by the Sheriff Clerks?—Yes, I think so—always supposing that their financial position is made better.

58,329. You suggest changes in the system of payment?—Yes.

58,330. Do you suggest that the staff should be paid salaries on a fixed scale instead of salaries fixed by the Sheriff Clerk out of a lump sum?—Yes, for the special class of deputies.

58,331. What would be your recommendation as regards the payment of the Sheriff Clerk's staff—the subordinates?—I think they should be paid by the Sheriff Clerk or through his hands, but that the King's Remembrancer should keep a much stricter eye upon the division of the allowance that is given to the Sheriff Clerk and say, "Now, you must pay this man so much" and this other man so much."

58,332. To what extent would the subordinate staff be whole-time officers? Would it follow the same rule as their principal: that where the Sheriff Clerk or the Sheriff Clerk Depute was whole-time the subordinate would also be whole-time?—The Sheriff Clerk now, if he appoints a clerk to help him, appoints some man who has a certain amount of leisure, unless he requires his whole time. Of course, if he requires his whole time he has a man of his own: if not, however, as I say, he appoints some man who has a certain amount of leisure. In Peebles, for instance, he brings in a man for so much time, not necessarily day by day, and he just pays him for the work he does.

58,333. If the salaries of the subordinate staff are to be fixed with the cognisance of the Treasury or of the King's Remembrancer it would be necessary for him to know how much time each individual member of the staff is devoting to the work?—Yes, but I do not think that he need require to go down to the very bottom, because it is almost impossible to know what is paid to everyone. If a man has two boys, for instance, he would have to account to the Remembrancer for the whole of what he was allowed for clerks.

58,334. The Committee recommended that the special class of deputies should be pensionable. Although Sheriff Clerks were not within the Committee's Reference, it may be inferred, I think, that they thought Sheriff Clerks should be pensioned also. Is that your opinion?—Yes.

58,335. What should be the position of the subordinate staff with regard to pension?—I do not think until they get into the special class or become Sheriff Clerks that they should be pensionable. We make a recommendation that all promotions into the special class should be from the class below, and that holds out the prospect of promotion and higher pay, and would, I think, induce better young men to come into the office and to stick to it once they were there.

58,336. With such a system do you consider that it would be within the reach of all competent members of the staff to become deputies of the special class before retiring?—Of course, that depends on the amount of vacancies there are above them. At any rate it would hold out a reasonable hope, I think.

58,337. My point is this, that if there is any large proportion of the subordinate staff who could not expect to reach these special posts, the problem of what is to happen to them when they are past their work still remains?—Yes, but they are not public servants in the sense that the two higher classes are. What I feel is that it is not proper that the country should allow very important officers as these are to be, through illness or age or any other cause, to go out into the world without anything, and having had no power of saving on the small salaries they have got. But that seems to me distinctly a right line to draw between those higher officials who are public servants and those who are not public servants but are simply employed as clerks by the Sheriff Clerk himself, just as in an ordinary office.

58,338. You consider that that position can fairly be maintained, and that the improved prospects suggested would render the service sufficiently attractive to get the right kind of men into it?—I think so, coupled, of course, with an increased rate of pay.

58,339. You think that the pay at present in the lower grades is inadequate?—I think so.

58,340. Is it low compared with the scale of pay in use in private law agents' offices?—I cannot say. It is very, very small, however. Might I cite just one case. The Sheriff Clerk of Peebles, who has been 19 years there, gets a salary and allowance combined of 225*l.* a year. He has to pay a depute out of that, because there must be somebody there to take his place if he is ill or if he is on holiday. As a matter of fact, he has not had a holiday away from the telephone for many years. Now, what he does do is that he pays 85*l.* to a depute, who comes in when necessary, and his depute, as a matter of fact, is now away at the war, and all the assistance he has got is a young boy, utterly unqualified, who comes in at a very small sum.

58,341. But I suppose that his work does not occupy his whole time?—Well, he is not allowed to take private practice. His predecessor was.

58,342. Does he hold any other office?—He holds the office of Clerk of the Peace, and he is appointed Auditor of the Sheriff Court by the Sheriff, but he gave up private practice when he first came 19 years ago, because he was led to understand that his salary and allowances would be reconsidered, and, as a matter of fact, Lord Dunedin—Mr. Murray as he then was—in 1898 recommended an addition of 150*l.* a year. Nothing, however, has been done since that at all, so that he really has not a wage for himself, far less for his assistant.

58,343. The clerkship which he has—is that a small matter, too?—I do not know, but I think the remuneration is only some 30*l.* or 40*l.* per annum.

58,344. (Miss Haldane.) Would he be allowed to take work under the School Board, for instance?—I think not. He is debarred from everything in the way of private practice.

58,345. (Chairman.) Do you consider that if the system were changed in the manner you suggest it would interfere with the control that the Sheriff Clerks have at present of their staff?—I do not think so myself at all. In fact these subordinate clerks would be under him in exactly the same way as the officials are now.

58,346. At present the Sheriff Clerk is responsible for the intrusions of his subordinates?—Yes.

58,347. Would you maintain that responsibility?—Yes, I think the special class would have to find caution.

58,348. Do you attach any importance to the responsibility of the Sheriff Clerk for his subordinates?—Yes, very much so.

58,349. Are there many cases in which it is enforced?—Well, I have had one or two myself. I may say that there is one Sheriff Clerk Depute in my sherrifdom who gets 85*l.* a year, and he cannot do any other business. The result of that has been that three successive ones, not having enough to live decently upon and not being allowed to take other work, have gone hopelessly to the bad. The last of them, I may say, committed suicide not three months ago from the evil habits that he contracted because of that.

58,350. In those cases was the Sheriff Clerk made pecuniarily liable for their intrusions?—Oh, I do not think there was any defalcation at all.

58,351. In what respect was he liable?—Only in respect that he brought it to the notice of the Sheriff.

58,352. My question had reference to the pecuniary responsibility of the Sheriff Clerk for the intrusions of his subordinates?—Well, I have not had any case in my own personal experience. There was some evidence given by at least one—I think it was in Aberdeen, where the Sheriff Clerk had to pay up for the defalcations of his subordinates; but, as I say, I have no personal experience of that myself.

58,353. Do you think the pecuniary responsibility makes any practical difference to the control of the

10 June 1915.]

Mr. CHARLES CORNELIUS MACNOCHIE, K.C.

[Continued.]

Sheriff Clerk over his staff?—There is no doubt that it makes him naturally more careful.

58,354. Is he any more careful, do you think, because of his pecuniary responsibility?—Well, personally, I should be.

58,355. Does he in practice usually require his staff to find caution or to insure against defalcations?—No, not here, but in Glasgow they do. By Glasgow I mean Lanarkshire.

58,356. You have told us that you are not prepared to give evidence with the same confidence about the Procurators Fiscal as you do with regard to the Sheriff Courts; but the question has been raised whether the number of Procurators Fiscal could with advantage be reduced. Are you prepared to express an opinion on that point?—Well, certainly I should say "No" in any part that I am personally acquainted with. The more extended the jurisdiction of a Procurator Fiscal is the more dangerous it is if there are crimes committed widely apart—fires, or sudden deaths, or any of the inquiries that Procurators Fiscal have to make—because, as I say, they are very confidential and they are very intricate, and therefore I think that although crime may not arise you cannot legislate for that, and you must have a first-class man in a district which he can work, and if you enlarge his district, either through population or through distance, you are very apt to make a very important position impossible.

58,357. Are all Procurators Fiscal at present debarred from private practice?—Yes, I think so. Well, I must qualify that; at Peebles he is not. When the man at Peebles, Mr. Buchan, was appointed, the Sheriff appointed him with the consent of the Lord Advocate. It was just after I became Sheriff Principal, and I found that I could not get a man at the figure who would take the post at all unless he was allowed to take private practice. His salary is 130*l.* a year, and he has no allowance for clerks at all. I simply had to write to the Lord Advocate to say that I could not appoint a man unless an exception was made. There are other cases—for instance, Kinross—and I think there are others besides that.

58,358. With a few exceptions, they are debarred from private practice?—Yes, that is so.

58,359. Do you think that that restriction should be maintained?—Not unless the position is so paid that a man can live upon it in the way that the Lord Advocate's executive servant ought to live. The Procurator Fiscal has not only an important position because of his duties, but, being the representative of the Lord Advocate, in country districts especially, he is looked upon as a high Government official, and for a man like that to be given only 150*l.*, or even 200*l.*, a year, seems to me not to be decent; and, unless his salary is increased very considerably, I think it would be very much better to go back to the old system, where private practice was allowed. The new rule was only introduced when Lord Kinross was Lord Advocate. I forget the date when it came into force, but I do not think in many of the small places it has been very good for the public service.

58,360. What was the reason for the introduction of that rule?—Of course, I did not know officially, but we always heard that it was because of an agitation amongst the other law agents in small places, who said that it was hard that a man should both get an official salary and should be allowed to take away some of the small practice in the place, and also that his being the Lord Advocate's executive officer there led him to have such a name that people went to him rather than to the ordinary practitioner.

58,361. Was it ever found that the public duties of the Procurator Fiscal and his private duties to his clients came into conflict?—I do not know about that.

58,362. Such cases might arise, I suppose?—I certainly never heard of it.

58,363. (Miss Haldane.) Why is he not allowed to do legal work for local bodies, such as school boards and so on? That would eke out his salary, would it not?—He is debarred from taking all private practice of any kind.

58,364. My question is this: Is he debarred always from taking legal work for public boards, such as school boards and so on?—That depends entirely on his commission.

58,365. It is different in different places?—Yes. Well, I find that in Haddingtonshire, which is the only one in my jurisdiction, he is allowed to take public appointments, and I think the school board is one of them.

58,366. That, I suppose, would make a slight difference in his financial position?—Yes. I have a letter here which says, "In the case of Haddington there is a rule against taking private practice, but we are both allowed to take appointments of a public nature."

58,367. (Sir Donald MacAlister.) Does it cause any inconvenience in these cases, that you know of—the taking of public appointments?—No; I have never heard that there was any inconvenience when they did take such appointments.

58,368. So far as your experience goes, if the rule were extended in that direction, you think no harm would come from it?—No.

58,369. (Chairman.) Do you anticipate that no inconvenience or conflict of duties would result if Procurators Fiscal were allowed to take general private practice?—As I say, I do not think there was any inconvenience found when they did take it, and personally I think the debarring from private practice does not act for the good of the country.

58,370-1. With regard to the supervision of the Sheriff Courts, certain recommendations were made in the Minority Reports attached to the Report of Lord Salvesen's Committee; in particular in the Minority Report signed by Mr. Watt. Have you any observations to make to the Commission with regard to those recommendations?—Well, I certainly disagree most entirely with Mr. Watt's idea that it is necessary that the appointment should be made of a member of the Service in Scotland who should supervise all the Sheriff Courts, and that that one should be the highest paid official among the Sheriff Clerks. It seems to me, in the first place, that that is not required, because the Sheriff is responsible for the way in which the business is done in his court, and the Sheriff Clerk is responsible for the way in which it is done under him; and I have never heard that that has acted badly or that the supervision of the work has not been efficient. Then, as regards sending a man—one of the Sheriff Clerks—in the first place I do not think that you could put the Sheriff Clerks of the remaining 32 counties, who are all heads of their own courts and all responsible, under the supervision of one of their own number, who differs from them in nothing except that he gets a higher salary. And, in the third place, it seems to me that it would put the Sheriff Court of the highest-paid official—which would probably be the class where the necessity of a first class man being perpetually there is most clamant—it would put it in a hopeless position, because this man would be running about all over Scotland supervising people of whose system of work he knows nothing, because the system is quite different in a small court, of course, from what it is in a large court, and the requirements are quite different in a small court from what they are in Glasgow, for instance. It seems to me that he could not do it, and, even if he could, it would, in my opinion, be most inadvisable.

58,372. So far as some unifying body is required, the small committee of Sheriff Clerks which has been suggested would supply all that is wanted?—I think so.

58,373. A recommendation on the same point was made in Sir William Haldane's Minority Report, was it not?—Yes; only what he wanted to do was to create a new paid billet of one man who was to go all over Scotland and to see that all the Sheriff Clerks were doing their work and that all the Sheriff Clerks' staffs were doing their work. Personally, I think that is absolutely unnecessary. At present, as I say, the Sheriffs are responsible, and there is never a complaint, well grounded or ill grounded, that does not come before him sooner or later, and in all the cases that I have come across the Sheriff has been able to put the matter right; and, of course, a man coming round like that could not have the knowledge of all the Sheriff

10 June 1915.]

Mr. CHARLES CORNELIUS MACONCHIE, K.C.

[Continued.]

Courts and their local necessities in the way that the individual Sheriff and the Sheriff Clerk of the district can. He would be absolutely useless in my opinion.

58,374. Mr. Watt also suggested that a Sheriff Clerk should no longer be allowed to act as auditor. Do you agree with that?—No, very far from it. I have been making inquiries from a number of my brethren, and they all think—and I certainly think myself—that it is a most admirable thing that the Sheriff Clerk should be auditor, except in a place like Edinburgh where the Sheriff Clerk has not time to do it. In country districts, however, it gives great confidence in the district if the auditor is the Sheriff Clerk, because he is known to be impartial, because he is an high official, and it gives great confidence to the Sheriff himself to know that he is remitting a bill of costs to a man in whom he has confidence.

58,375. (Sir George Paul.) It is generally the Sheriff Clerk or the Sheriff Clerk Depute who is auditor?—I do not know whether it is generally the one or the other. In some places it is the one and in other places it is the other. For instance, in all my three Courts, excluding Edinburgh, the Sheriff Clerk is auditor; that is, in Peebles, Haddington, and Linlithgow. It is the Sheriff Clerk himself who acts as auditor in these places.

58,376. It may be either the one or the other?—Yes. Then Mr. Watt also said that they should no longer be allowed to take remits from the Sheriff, or that if they did and were paid fees for the way they did their duty as Commissioners, that they should be bound to pay those fees to the Treasury. I entirely demur from that suggestion, too, because I know personally that it is a very great comfort to the Sheriff to have a man who is accustomed to taking evidence, or hearing evidence taken rather, and to remit to him to act as Commissioner to examine witnesses who cannot come to the Court for any reason; and just in the same way for the recovery of documents it is a very great thing that the clerk to the process, who knows the process, should be the man who is responsible for the right document being taken. Then as regards his paying the fees, these remits never interfere with his public duties: they are taken out of Court hours if he has not sufficient spare time, and personally I cannot see why he should not get paid for work of that kind, which is taken simply as a matter of convenience to the Sheriff.

58,377. (Mr. Graham Wallas.) I think the Procurator Fiscal at present in some cases acts for and advises local bodies. He is allowed in some cases, I think, to act as adviser to local bodies?—In that case he is acting as clerk, and not as adviser.

58,378. Would you approve of a plan which would make it usual for a Procurator Fiscal with a larger salary to do such work as part of his official duties, charging a fee for such work?—He does not advise them in these cases. I think what you mean is that he conducts prosecutions for them. That is a different thing, of course. I think if he was given a sufficient salary that it would be a very good thing that all prosecutions carried out by local bodies or by the Crown should be done by one man, and that his salary should cover that.

58,379. (Sir George Paul.) You have said that you do not think it essential that the Sheriff Clerk should be a highly qualified man?—That is so.

58,380. And in fact I think your own Sheriff Clerk was promoted from the position of depute. I think there was also a Mr. Sellar of Glasgow; he was not qualified?—That is so.

58,381. So you would promote your best depute if you thought him quite qualified for the position, irrespective altogether of his legal qualifications?—Yes.

58,382. But if you have to go outside you would naturally select the man with a legal training, would you not?—Yes. I may just point out that the Report of Lord Salvesen's Committee recommends that Sheriff Clerks Depute who have served at least five years as such, or have served at least 10 years in the Sheriff Clerk's office, during two years of which period they shall have served as depute, shall be eligible for promotion to the office of Sheriff Clerk.

58,383. The present deputies' positions are precarious, are they not? They are elected by the Sheriff Clerk?—Yes.

58,384. And are dismissible at present by him, probably after consultation with the Sheriff?—Yes.

58,385. There is no fixity of tenure at present?—No; that is one of their grievances.

58,386. And the other grievance is that they have only enough to keep them going during their professional existence and nothing to fall back upon?—Yes.

58,387. That is a matter that would require consideration?—That is so. Personally, I think they are not properly paid.

58,388. As regards their appointment, if they had fixity of tenure and a pension, would it not be sufficient for all practical purposes that the Sheriff, after consultation with the Sheriff Clerk, should make these appointments?—Personally, I think it might be but I do not think the Treasury would agree to that. We were told that if these people were to have pensions—the special class—the Treasury or the Government would have to have a say in the appointment.

58,389. But as a matter of common sense you think the Sheriff might make the appointment?—Personally, I think that probably the Sheriff would be the best man.

58,390. You were speaking about promotion, and you said that it would not do to promote a qualified depute to a small country place. Of course, you cannot compel him to go, can you? If he did not think it was to his interest to go, he would not go?—No, but if you are to have promotion from the bottom to the top, as Mr. Watt says, it must mean promotion in money, and it would be promotion to a man to go to a small place if he had a bigger salary.

58,391. But you would not prevent him going to a bigger salary, would you?—No, but that is the difficulty, I think, in making it into one service—that if you are going to promote a small man to a higher place, that means that you are taking a man without the official experience necessary for the higher place, and if you are going to promote a man from a deputation to a principalship in a similar place, you are losing all the experience which he has got and you are not making the best of him.

58,392. The only inducement to him would be more pay?—Yes, but I am looking at it from the public point of view.

58,393. (Mr. Boutwood.) I gather that you do not think legal qualifications requisite for the Sheriff Clerks. You think they can do their work as they do it just now. I do not wish to suggest any objection to that, but then you go on to say that that makes a difficulty in promotion: that a man who has learned the work in a remote country district would not be suitable for the work in Edinburgh or Glasgow. Well now, how far would that difficulty be overcome if you did, in fact, require general legal qualifications: I mean, supposing you had a man in a remote country district—of course, he will learn there a rather narrow circle of work—but suppose he had in addition to that experience a legal qualification, would that facilitate promotion to Edinburgh or Glasgow, or would you still think that it would be a difficult thing to do?—I do not think that legal knowledge is necessary. What he requires is official experience, and that he cannot get by passing the Law Agents examination. He requires to qualify as a clerk in a highly specialised office.

58,394. So the difficulty would remain in any case?—I think so.

58,395. (Mr. Clynes.) With regard to that point about private practice, I understood you to say that formerly it was permitted?—Yes.

58,396. Was it discontinued because of any serious interference with the man's work?—No, I think not. Of course, I was not in the official secrets of the thing, but I do not think that was suggested. I do not think it had anything to do with its being discontinued.

58,397. Then you express the opinion that the head clerks and officials should not be removed from office by the Sheriff Clerks except with the approval of some higher power. What power have you in mind?—That is the deputies and possibly some of the head clerks. The power that I consider the best would be the Sheriff,

10 June 1915.]

Mr. CHARLES CORNELIUS MACONOCHIE, K.C.

[Continued.]

but it might be that the person who appoints would be the right one, and if there is a special class of depute that would be the Lord Advocate.

58,398. The person who appoints is the Secretary for Scotland?—Yes, or the Lord Advocate in the case of Fiscals.

58,399. (Sir John Kempe.) If the proposal for enlarging the Sheriff Court districts were adopted, the service would be made more attractive to outside persons. You would attract better men?—I think so.

58,400. In that case would your objection to open competition be at all modified or set aside. I think you said that under existing circumstances you thought competition would narrow the field further?—What are they to compete in? In the first place they must go to be examined somewhere, and that is a great difficulty with the poor young man who comes into the office. Those young men, if they are kept in their own district, can live at home, and so a small salary goes further. Personally, I do not know what it is proposed that they should be examined in. If it is in law, it is of no use; and, of course, they cannot be examined in procedure, because a knowledge of procedure can only be gained by experience; and in the case of a competition for a small clerkship at a place such as Tain, say, there would be nobody to compete. Even at present they have to search everywhere to get a boy to come in at all, and if he had to pass an examination before getting in he would have no competitors, and he would not do it probably.

58,401. Of course, your difficulty as to the locality might be overcome by some machinery, as it is very much overcome just now by the existing Civil Service machinery. The proposal would much enlarge the districts?—Yes, but at a small place he would have to go into the office anyhow, because the court would be there. It would only be under a different head; that is all.

58,402. But even now boys do not always find employment in the place where their parents live?—I think in those country Sheriff Courts you will find that they are altogether recruited from the local supply. I only mean that really I think that this suggestion of the Departmental Committee would make it a more attractive thing from bottom to top, and that there could be more money spent upon it; and that being so, you will get a better class of men, not necessarily or at all by competition or examination. The Sheriff Clerk would still be responsible for the lower men, and it is for him to find the best man or boy he can get to come in, and if he can keep him, well and good. It is not so much in regard to the entry, but in regard to the keeping of them, that this system would improve the services I think.

58,403. (Mr. Boutwood.) What salaries do they get?—Very small salaries. I am afraid I cannot speak definitely as to that.

58,404. (Miss Haldane.) In regard to what you said about political appointments, I suppose there is a good deal of political canvassing? Is that your experience for these appointments?—I have never been in a position to be canvassed.

58,405. No, but from what you hear?—I have never heard of it.

58,406. I wanted to know whether you thought it existed to a large extent or not?—I really do not know.

58,407. (Chairman.) The Report of the Departmental Committee did not make any recommendation as regards pension rights and age limit for the Sheriff Clerks or the special class of deutes. Do you consider that pension rights should be given to those officials?—I think so. Certainly, if they are public officers, I think it is quite wrong that the country should allow them to go out into the world with nothing when they really have not been in a position to save from their small salary.

58,408. And if they are given pension rights, would you also fix an age for retirement?—Yes.

58,409. Would you apply the usual Civil Service rule?—I really do not know about the Civil Service. That goes with the annual increment, does it not?

58,410. The rule for retirement in the Civil Service is that a man may retire at the age of 60 years, and that he must retire at the age of 65; but there is power to make special extensions in exceptional cases up to the age of 70 years?—I certainly would not make it compulsory to retire before 70, because the experience between the ages of 60 and 70 is, I think, an important one. The longer the man is there, the more useful he is to the Sheriff and to the country.

The Right Hon. the LORD DUNEDIN, K.C.V.O., K.C., called and examined.

58,411. (Chairman.) My Lord, I think you have had experience of the legal departments from almost every possible point of view?—Might I just give you a brief account of my experience. I passed advocate in 1874, and my official life began in 1888. I was then made Senior Advocate Depute. That was a novelty—beginning life as Senior Advocate Depute. It was done by Lord Advocate Robertson, and the reason of it was this: In the old days the Solicitor-General, as a rule, was not in Parliament, and therefore he was down here to supervise the deutes, and really see that the Crown work went on while the Lord Advocate was in London; but, as you are probably aware, political affairs began to get strenuous about that time, and attendance was very much enforced by the Whips, and the result of it was that the Solicitor-General was always in London just as much as the Lord Advocate, and Lord Advocate Robertson thought that it was expedient to have as Senior Advocate Depute—the home depute—somebody with such a position in practice that he was a person of some authority and experience. So I began in 1888 as Senior Advocate Depute. I was that for two years, and then in 1890 I was made Sheriff of Perth, and I had the sheriffdom of Perth for one year, and then I was made Solicitor-General. The office of Solicitor-General at that time carried with it ex officio a seat on the Board of Supervision, which, of course, was the progenitor of the Local Government Board. Then, in 1892, there was a change of Government. In 1895 there was another change, and I again became Solicitor-General. Early in 1896 I became Lord Advocate, and I stayed as Lord Advocate until the autumn of 1903, and then I became Secretary for Scotland till the spring of 1905, when I became Lord President of the Court of Session, and there I stayed until two years ago, when I took my present position.

58,412. We should be glad, in the first instance, to know your views on the system of appointment and promotion at present in force in the central legal offices—in the offices attached to the Court of Session and the Register House?—I think you must take all those things separately. In one sense the Register House is attached to the Court of Session, and in another sense it is not. I will say more about that later on. Taking what I may call the Court of Session proper, I would define that as being the Clerkships of Court, including, of course, the Bill Chamber and including the Extractor's Office. There is also a sort of side establishment—I cannot call it anything else—of the Accountant of Court.

58,413. There is also the Keeper of the Minute Book?—Yes; I include that with the Clerks of Court. Of course, I must not leave out the Teind Office and the Justiciary Office. Now, as a matter of fact, before my time, taking the Court of Session proper and confining myself for the moment to the Clerks of Court alone, there was no system of promotion: that is to say, whenever a vacancy occurred in one of the principal clerkships almost invariably, without almost any exception, an outside man was put in in the first place. There was a tradition which had really almost the force of a statute, that the Lord Advocate's clerk had a right to the appointment if a depute clerkship fell vacant. Of course, I am not speaking of the two senior clerks—the senior clerk in the first division and the senior clerk in the second division. I did not think that was fair, and I altered it practically. Of course, I could not alter it by rule, because I had no power to lay down rules on such a matter, but I altered it in practice during my long tenure, for I was seven and a half years there. It was made easy for me to do it at the moment, for this reason: you see, the Lord Advocate, as a rule, has a clerk who bears the burden and heat of the day with him in his professional life, and he generally regards him as a person is in the habit of regarding his or her old nurse. My clerk had died just before I became Lord Advocate, so that I had only a man who had served me only a year or two. On that account, of course, he had not the same claims. I told him that I was sorry, but if the office fell vacant I would not give him it. What I did was this: I put him in at the bottom of the assistant clerkships, and I kept that up during the whole of my time. Nobody came in straightaway to the high office, but they just moved up.

10 June 1915.]

The Right Hon. the LORD DUNEDIN, K.C.V.O., K.C.

[Continued.]

58,414. That has not been kept up since then, I think?—I cannot say. Of course, I have not had to do with it lately. In the Bill Chamber, for instance, Lord Dundas will remember that the Bill Chamber Clerk of our youth was Mr. Shaw, and then Mr. Antonio was promoted. I think that was right; but when you come to do more than what I have indicated you get into this difficulty. There is no question that these various departments—some of them are what you may call very severely specialised; others are specialised, but not so severely. To explain what I mean I would say, take, for instance, the most severely specialised department, namely, the Teinds. It would really be absurd to suppose that you could by promotion make a man Teind Clerk from another office. I notice in this report of Mr. Watt what he there says about the Teind Office, that you might reorganise it, and he says: "The Teind Clerk as a separate statutory office should be done away with, and an expert clerk should attend on the Lord Ordinary to write the interlocutors. It would be remitted to him to 'prepare the localities,' &c., and do the other work at present done in the Teind Office. The actual bulk of the Teind work is not great, and on that account it might be advisable to give the Teind Clerk less salary than a Depute Clerk. He would, however, be in a position to look for promotion to a Depute Clerkship and even higher than that; if this became the rule there would usually be on the staff a number of men with experience of Teind work." When a man says that the only thing one can say is that he has not the remotest conception of what he is speaking about. The real truth is that a locality of Teinds is a complete anachronism: they ought to be done away with, but in quite another way—that of valuing the whole Teinds and getting them into the position of a burden. As long as that is not done it is a most intricate affair framing a locality of Teinds.

58,415. How will the next Teind Clerk be brought up?—The present Teind Clerk has had a man in the office a long time under him.

58,416. You suggest that it is necessary to train a man in the office?—Yes, for several years. Of course, in one sense anybody can learn anything, but if you put in an incompetent man in the sense of knowing nothing about it, the only result would be litigation. An incompetent man would make such a perfect mess of the locality that you would drive all the heritors to litigation, and there would be a great deal of money spent for nothing at all. That, of course, is an extreme instance—the Teinds Office. Now, with regard to the Bill Chamber, it is very technical work. A man who had served in the under offices in the Bill Chamber, could quite well be made a Depute Clerk of Session, but I am not at all prepared to say that you could take one of the assistant Clerks of Session and make him a competent Bill Chamber clerk. Personally, I do not think you could. The Bill Chamber, again, requires special training, and, as a matter of fact, so far as my experience goes—and it goes back something like 40 years—the Bill Chamber appointments always have been in the Bill Chamber. I mean the men appointed have always been specially trained men.

58,417. The present Clerk of the Bill Chamber was appointed from outside, I understand?—If you went to a solicitor's office and got a Parliament House clerk with a lot of experience, I imagine that that man might do it well, because he has had in his time so much Bill Chamber work. I only mean that the Bill Chamber is a separate job from the other. Of course, you would always find individual people who could do it, but what I say is that if you had a system of promotion from the bottom to the top it would not fit very well with the Bill Chamber. All I mean is this, that if you extended what I did, in the case of the clerks of Court, you would not have to do it by cast iron rules. You would have to have somebody who knew sufficient about the men not to take a wrong man for the place. Now, the next office that is rather like that is the Extractor's Office. That also is a matter that requires considerable training. I do not think it is at all like the Teinds: it is not technical in that sense, although one would not make much of an extract trying it for the first time; but I think any really competent man could learn the work of the Extractor's Office.

58,418. I suppose a man employed in one of the subordinate offices in one of the branches of the Court would have some knowledge of what the work is?—I think a good assistant clerk might quite well turn into a good extractor. Really, of course, what the extractor does is this: he remodels the interlocutors, and you have to do that with a good deal of sense. He takes the conclusions of the summonses, and then he takes the interlocutor and he has to produce something out of the two, and that something varies very much. It may be, for instance, that a judge's interlocutor really practically gives you all that you want in the extract. It may be that he just "decerns as craved," and then you have to construct the decree out of the conclusions of the summonses as authorised by this "decerns as craved."

58,419. You mean that the Extractor has to state the matter in a complete form and not by reference to other documents?—Yes. Of course, a blundered extract is a thing that gives a great deal of trouble. Then, the Justiciary I look upon as completely different. The work of a Justiciary Clerk is perfectly different, and the work of the Crown Office Clerk is different again. After all, you see, what the Clerks of Court have got to do is to see that the processes are in proper order, to have continual colloquies with the agents in the case, and to help them, and to keep everything in order and see that the judge does not make any slips. But when you come to the Crown Office work, for instance, the Crown Office work consists of a perfectly different class of work, that deals with cases got up by Procurators Fiscal. He has to see, for instance, if the case has been properly got up, and in going over the documents he may discover that such and such a thing has not been proved by certain witnesses. It is a perfectly different class of work. In one sense I am a great believer in any man who is competent being able to learn any work so far as experience is concerned, but experience in the Crown Office would be little good for the Court of Session, and, on the other hand, experience in the Court of Session would be little good for the Crown Office.

58,420. You would keep these two separate?—Yes. I am all in favour of promotion. Of course, it was easier for me during my time, because I had such a long reign, but I promoted in the case of Sheriff Substitutes without any reference to politics whatever.

58,421. Assuming that it is desirable to introduce a system of promotion without reference to politics, can you suggest any means by which that could be made the recognised system?—Of course, during all my time the ordinary appointments were all political, there is no question about that. Take, for instance, the Clerks of Court: I made a great many of these appointments and they were all political in the sense that they were chosen from the ranks of the party to which I belonged. But I can absolutely lay my hand on my heart and say that I never appointed a man who was unfit for the job. Theoretically, of course, one would not say that there was much in favour of a system that worked in that way, but practically I rather think you will find in the long run, so long as you do not appoint a man who is unfit for the job, that it will work just as well as anything else. Of course, a great deal depends on the point of view from which you approach this question. It is one thing to sit as a sort of Abbé Siéyes; but if you are simply asking yourself, "Have the appointments been practically good?" I do not think there is much fault to find with the appointments. Of course, you are not likely to have very many of these appointments, and you are pretty sure during the duration of office of one party to have quite enough good men on your own side to select from. I ought to say, of course, that Clerks of Court were people who were of the law agent class—I mean people who had some experience of law work as a rule, and one had easily ways and means of finding out about them. I want to say that when it came to the question of Sheriff Clerks—and I also appointed a great many of them during my time—I never appointed any Sheriff Clerk without the thorough approbation of the Sheriff; I mean I took the one or two names that had been recommended to me to the Sheriff and got his opinion on them. There, of course, I had not the personal knowledge before appointing a man as I had in Edinburgh. I always went to the Sheriff and said, "Is AB a competent man for the position?"

10 June 1915.]

The Right Hon. the LORD DUNEDIN, K.C.V.O., K.C.

[Continued.]

58,422. The system of political appointment carries with it almost necessarily the putting in of men from outside to the higher posts of the Service, and we have been told that that is very discouraging to the men in the lower grades of the Service?—Personally, as I say, I did away with that in the Court of Session proper during my time.

58,423. Turning, now, to the local services—the Sheriff Courts and the Procurators Fiscal—have you any suggestions to make with regard to them?—You see, they must be taken quite separately. The difficulty about the Sheriff Court business is this, and you cannot get over it: the old plan was that the Sheriff Clerk was a Crown appointment, but none of the others were. The Sheriff Clerk got so much money from the Treasury. There were differences sometimes; he used to get a lump sum and had to find his own assistants. In other cases he got his money divided up, and he was bound by the Treasury minute to spend so much money on such and such appointments, but in all the cases he was always responsible for his own people. Of course, long ago, there was a great agitation among the Sheriff Clerks Depute to get put upon another footing. They wanted to become public servants, naturally enough, and they wanted a pension, and there was also a good deal of feeling about the loss of prestige. They did not like the idea of being able to be dismissed by the man who was above them. In my day the practical stopper to that was the Treasury, because the Treasury saw that it meant a large increase of expense, and the Treasury put down its foot absolutely and would never hear of it. Well, as long as you leave the matter in that position—I mean to say, as long as you leave the payment to be done through the Sheriff Clerk out of his salary, so to speak—I do not see how you can possibly alter the system. If you alter the system then you must make them appointments for which he is not responsible, and you must, make them in some way or other; either as at present by the Lord Advocate or by some central authority. Personally, I think the person who ought to be consulted about these matters is the Sheriff, because it is really for his convenience and that of nobody else. The Sheriff is generally a public-spirited person and he wants the work of his Court well done, and he wants a competent man rather than an incompetent man, and when I had the making of appointments I always did it with the approval of the Sheriff. And I know from my experience that in some cases there has been friction for many years connected with subordinate officers whom the Sheriff did not like and whom the Sheriff Clerk did not want to get rid of, although I think on the whole the Sheriff Clerks really behave perfectly fairly in that way. Personally I do not think that theoretically the system is a very good one. On the other hand, I cannot say that in practice it has worked very badly.

58,424. With regard to Procurators Fiscal, have you anything to say?—When you come to the Procurators Fiscal there was a difference made. In the old days the Procurator Fiscal was appointed by the Sheriff. By one of the comparatively modern Acts—I forget the exact date of it at this moment—the appointment was made a Crown appointment, and at the same time, of course, the thing was influenced by the House of Commons view of whole-time service, and I had a good deal of trouble about that during my time, especially in the earlier days, with the House of Commons pulling one way and the Treasury pulling the other way—the Treasury not wanting to give away money and the House of Commons not wanting to allow private practice. Where you had a good man to whom you could afford a good salary, there was no difficulty there; but in other cases there was a difficulty. In the cases where we could give a good salary, we took to putting into the commissions that Procurators Fiscal should not be allowed to engage in private practice.

58,425. Does that apply to far the larger number of Procurators Fiscal just now?—I would not like to say that. Of course, I have not had this in the least before me lately. I am not at all sure, however, that if you took them all over you would not find a great number that it would not apply to. I think you would find many more that it would not apply to than you would expect. Of course, in a small place, the Treasury does not give the man a proper salary, and unless you allowed him private practice he could not live.

58,426. What was the reason for the pressure you mention in favour of the restriction and against allowing private practice?—Merely the feeling of the House of Commons. I do not think it was based on any real experience. It became a cry, and there was the usual agitation.

58,427. The last witness we had before us suggested that it was owing to the jealousy of rival practitioners, who did not want Procurators Fiscal to interfere with private practice?—I suppose that may have had something to do with it.

58,428. Do you yourself see any objection to allowing private practice?—I do not think myself that in practice it does any harm. At the same time, I would not go back on what has been done. Where as far as possible you have a district which warrants a salary on which a man can live, I agree that he should not be allowed to have private practice, but at the same time private practice is no bogey—I do not think that in itself it is a thing to be condemned.

58,429. You do not consider that there would be any conflict between the Procurator Fiscal's duty to his client and his duty to the public?—No, I do not think so in practice.

58,430. The political system of selection applied also to the appointment of Procurators Fiscal, I suppose: that is to say, a man was selected who was competent, but who had also rendered services to a political party?—Yes. The Act was only just passed before my time, and I do not quite remember the dates there.

58,431. You mentioned, I think, that you had applied the system of promotion and transfer, irrespective of political considerations?—Yes, in the case of Sheriff Substitutes.

58,432. Was that not applied in the case of Procurators Fiscal?—No, because you cannot do that so easily. The Sheriff Substitute is an advocate, and he does not belong to the place he is sent to. He comes from Edinburgh, and he is sent, say, to Wick. He is only too glad to come from a place like Wick and go to Ayr, for instance. With regard to the Procurator Fiscal, he is generally a local man; he has got his interests centred in the place, and he would not move very easily.

58,433. Not even to get promotion and a higher salary?—Of course, it is not a thing on which you can dogmatise, but I think you should really keep in view that question of moving about.

58,434. In the case of postmasters, for instance, men are transferred from one end of the country to the other?—Yes, in the case of large people, but in the case of small people it is different. Custom House officers, for instance, have a migratory time, and they do not like it. There is another remark I should like to make about local things which I think is often forgotten. When you talk about experience, which comes in with both Sheriff Clerks and Procurators Fiscal, so many people seem to think that experience merely consists in writing a certain number of interlocutors or taking a certain number of precognitions. As a matter of fact, far and away the most valuable part of experience is the experience of people. In every case you have the practitioners in that Court who have to be looked after. There are people whom you can trust with a paper, and there are people whom you cannot trust with a paper: and the man who knows the ropes in the Sheriff Court is very much more valuable than a person who knows nothing about it; because, remember, all these appointments I have been speaking about under the political system were all made from local people.

10 June 1915.]

The Right Hon. the LORD DUNEDIN, K.C.V.O., K.C.

[Continued.]

58,435. Does that apply to the Sheriff Clerks?—Yes, he was always an agent who practised in that Court. I never knew of any other being appointed.

58,436. Do you consider that the present system of appointment is the right one as regards the appointing authority, or do you suggest any change?—There again, theoretically, I do not know that it is; but, at the same time, I do not think you can get any better. As a rule, I think the Lord Advocates have not disgraced themselves by "real jobs"—I mean by putting in men who ought not to be there. Take the case of the Lord President of the Court of Session, who has been suggested. I have been Lord President of the Court of Session, and there is nothing I would have regretted so much as to have had to make appointments of this kind. A judge, I think, should keep out of politics and all matters outside his own office, and should not lay himself open to the charge of favouring one person more than another. Anybody who has been in that position knows the extraordinary amount of side influences that are sought to be brought to bear upon you. Of course, if you have had a good long time of it, it does not hurt you, but you receive crowds of letters and there are crowds of people who want to speak to you, and I think that is all very unfit work for the Lord President of the Court of Session. Secondly, the Lord President does not really know the people. The Lord President of the Court of Session, after he has been there a little time, gets quite naturally isolated from the people. I know that at the end of my President's time I did not know the men by head mark in the way I did when I was Lord Advocate. When I was Lord Advocate I knew all the principal agents in Scotland, and I had my own notions about them—I really knew everybody. But when I was President of the Court of Session younger men had come forward whom I knew nothing about, and there you are not at all in a position to get reports in the way that you are when you are Lord Advocate. Then, again, the Lord Advocate is subjected to a certain fire of possible criticism which may really break out in the House of Commons. On the other hand, I think it is out of the question to subject the President of the Court of Session to criticism of that sort. The Lord Advocate can speak back and make the best of it, but the President of the Court of Session cannot do that; and criticism which is not answered is by the ordinary gentleman in the street generally supposed to be true, which is rather a pity; but, still, there it is. That, I think, is a thoroughly bad suggestion. The next suggestion, I understand, is an advisory committee. An advisory committee, I think, would be useless. It would not help you; it would only rather get in your way. If you had had an advisory committee at the time I was Lord Advocate you could not have got people who knew the personnel of the people as well as I did myself, and I think the people on that committee would be just as much assailed as the Lord Advocate is himself. If you are connected in the most distant way, if you are supposed to be a friend of somebody who has got the appointment, don't you receive two or three letters on the subject? I think the result would be that the advisory committee would be just as much fired at as the Lord Advocate could be; and really, you know, if I may say so—of course, I am supposing that the advisory committee would be composed of men of character and everything else—but there is less sense of responsibility in the case of the members of a committee than in the case of a man who knows that the appointment is off his own bat, and knows that he is responsible for it all. Personally I look on an advisory committee as a mere ignis fatuus and nothing else. After all, somebody must appoint, and what you want is that the best you can do shall be done. Honestly, I think the Lord Advocate is as good a person to appoint as anyone else, because he is in a position, I think, to know the personnel of what, after all, is a small class in Scotland, better than anybody else.

58,437. Does not the technical responsibility belong to the Secretary for Scotland?—No; the rule on that is absolutely certain. Of course, I have known the traditions for a very long time. The Lord Advocate has the absolute power of nomination, and the Secretary for Scotland cannot refuse it, in connection with all the minor legal offices. It is only when you come to the judges of the Court of Session that the Lord Advocate has no power to nominate; and if such a thing had happened in my time as the Secretary for Scotland saying in the case of a minor legal office, "I will not take So-and-so," and he simply wanted a friend of his appointed, in such a case I would have appealed to the Prime Minister; if I had appealed, I should have succeeded. There are two appointments, the President and the Lord Justice Clerk, which are under the nomination not of the Secretary for Scotland but of the Prime Minister.

58,438. We have had cases pointed out in which, by statute, the appointment is made on the advice of the Secretary for Scotland, but where, in practice, it is on the nomination of the Lord Advocate?—Those must be very few and far between.

58,439. Take, for instance, the case of the posts under the Deputy Clerk Registrar: by statute the power of appointment used to be vested in the Treasury, but is now vested in the Secretary for Scotland; I mean the posts in the Register House?—Yes, but I am not calling the posts in the Register House in the proper sense legal appointments.

58,440. In making appointments to these posts, does not the Secretary for Scotland act on the advice of the Lord Advocate?—Oh, no. For instance, in the case of the appointment of the Keeper of the Sasines—there one would expect to be consulted. The point I was dealing with, however, was not appointments in connection with the Register House. The Register House is in a very peculiar position. In one sense it is part of the Court of Session, and in the other sense it is not. Ministerially speaking, for executive work, it is not under the Court of Session. It is under the Court of Session in this sense, that part of its duties are keeping books of Council and Session. In fact you will find a notice of that in rather a quaint way. The form an extract bears is, "Which day appeared George Munro, procurator for so and so, desiring that the present deed should be recorded, which desire the Lords found reasonable and ordered to be recorded," and so on. In the same way the Court of Session no doubt could give an order if it wanted to see any of the Sasines. I cannot imagine any reason why it would want to see a Sasine, but when it does want to see a deed, you have to get a Court of Session order to take it out of the Register House and bring it up to be looked at. The instrument of Sasine in the old days was not kept in the Register House; it was copied, and consequently there was nothing to be gained by seeing a copy, which of course is not as good as the real instrument itself. Except in those two ways I have mentioned, the Court of Session has really nothing to do with the Register House.

58,441. To clear up the question of the exact legal position, we were told, for instance, by Sir James Dodds that the Deputy Keeper of the Records, the Keeper of the Deeds, and the Curator of the Historical Department are appointed by the Secretary for Scotland?—I believe so.

58,442. In those cases the Lord Advocate is not consulted?—I hope he would be consulted, but he has no power of nomination. The real test is this: we are talking of Crown appointments.

58,443. We were told that the Sheriff Clerks were appointed by the Secretary for Scotland on the substantial patronage of the Lord Advocate?—That is

10 June 1915.]

The Right Hon. the LORD DUNEDIN, K.C.V.O., K.C.

[Continued.]

mildly put. It is more than a substantial patronage. The Lord Advocate has the right to nominate.

58,444. Is that a matter of practice or is it in accordance with a statute?—It is a matter of practice. But I am speaking of a practice which I know long before Mr. Dodds was born. Sheriff Substitutes, even when I was at the Bar, were appointed by the Sheriff.

58,445. If a Crown appointment made in that way was questioned in the House of Commons, would it fall to the Secretary for Scotland or to the Lord Advocate to defend it?—In the case of a Sheriff Substitute or a Sheriff Clerk it would fall to the Lord Advocate to defend it, because it would be he that was really responsible. Of course, if the Secretary for Scotland chose to get up and say, "I quite accept the responsibility that has been put upon me" that would be all right.

58,446. Does that apply to all direct Crown appointments?—Well, it applies to all the minor legal appointments. Nobody who is not a Cabinet Minister has a right of access to the Sovereign to send in a recommendation; therefore, nothing could go from the Lord Advocate in the old days, because the Lord Advocate had not the right to present his humble duty to His or Her Majesty and recommend so and so. It went into the Home Office, but all these minor things were always done upon the nomination of the Lord Advocate, and it was held by custom and not by statute that the Home Secretary could not refuse the Lord Advocate's nomination. Of course, those appointments I refer to are the strictly legal appointments. I do not count the people who have been referred to in the Register House as coming under that category.

58,447. Another suggestion that has been made is that with regard to some of the appointments in question open competition might be applied?—It is perfectly ridiculous.

58,448. That would apply to the junior appointments?—Yes. I personally am a thorough disbeliever in competitive examination. What are the qualities you want to succeed in a competitive examination? First of all you must be able to cram, and, secondly, you want to have a sufficient amount of sang-froid and the capacity to put things down quickly on paper, to cram into your examination within two hours the sum total of all the knowledge that you think you have got. Well, these are not qualities that you find of great value. No doubt it is a very great thing to be able to cram in our profession afterwards, but that is not the case with the clerks.

58,449. Is not it a great part of a lawyer's work?—Yes, but it is not at all the whole duty of man, and there are a great many other qualities that are wanted even among clerks that you do not get with these two things. I think you would get in probably some of the most unsuitable people.

58,450. Have you had any opportunity of judging of its results as applied to the Register House?—No. I obviously have had no personal experience of the actual clerkships in the Register House, but I should be very much surprised, if you took somebody who had been in the Register House a long time and asked his idea about the various clerks that had come there, to hear that those who had passed the best examination were always top. I do not think you can have any better illustration of that than in real life from the experience as to senior wranglers. To be a senior wrangler does not incapacitate a man from practical success, but it does not ensure it.

58,451. We have been told by witnesses from the Register House that the staff recruited by that method is satisfactory, and that the work is thoroughly well done?—I have always looked upon competitive examination as a counsel of despair. It would be perfectly impossible, of course, to have a system of personal selection for the whole Civil Service of this country. In so far as the competitive examination is a qualifying examination, I have no objection to it. It is probably a good thing. In so far as you get one man above another by competition, I have very much doubt as to whether it leads to much. You will remember the wonderful things that were going to be done in India with public servants, still they are not a bit better than they used to be in the days of John Company. I think the whole thing really depends on this—the services we are talking about here are very small and allow of personal knowledge.

58,452. The question has been raised whether, in the case of the legal offices, qualification as a law agent should be required as a condition of appointment?—Well, I am not averse to that at all, because qualification as a law agent means a certain amount of general culture, which is all to the good and means a certain amount of knowledge of a subject with which the work is, to say the least, akin. Of course it is quite true that the Clerk of Court has not to decide a case, but he would be none the worse of a little law. I am not talking of the junior clerks. The outsiders who have been brought in have nearly always had legal qualifications. They were usually members of the Law Agents Society, and very often S.S.Cs.

58,453. Would that apply to Lord Advocates' clerks?—That is the only person that it would probably be hard on if you applied it all at once, but I think the result in the future would be that the person who wanted to become a Lord Advocate's clerk would pass as a law agent.

58,454. It requires a certain period of apprenticeship?—Yes.

58,455. And that apprenticeship is usually begun at the age of 15?—Yes.

58,456. That is to say, his general education, before he enters a solicitor's office, has been cut short at an early point?—Yes.

58,457. Does not it mean that he has got a certain legal experience, but at the expense of general education?—I am afraid you touch really a much bigger question. Any poor fellow whom you have to tell at about 15 years of age that he must begin to earn his bread suffers as regards his general education.

58,458. (Sir Donald MacAlister.) But is a law agent's training not also a liberal educational training, as far as it goes?—Yes.

58,459. (Chairman.) Taking the system as a whole, you would be inclined to leave matters very much as they are?—Yes, except that I would try and make it really compulsory on the Lord Advocates in general to do what I did.

58,460. How are you going to make it compulsory?—Of course I have not actually thought that matter out.

58,461. I was once told by a competent authority that an expression of opinion by a Minister had no effect on his successor, except to irritate him. Can you suggest any way in which it would have a more binding effect?—I think you know, as far as the Court of Session proper is concerned, there would be no practical difficulty in saying that you should not appoint a depute clerk except from the ranks of the assistant clerks.

58,462. (Lord Dundas.) Do you confine your observation to the depute clerks?—I did it as far as I could in the whole of the office. I did it in this way too—you know there are what you call assistant clerks in the Inner House who are mere clerks. They have no real position at all. I brought them on if I could.

58,463. (Sir Donald MacAlister.) Could such a thing be secured by an Act of Sederunt?—No, I don't think an Act of Sederunt would touch it at present, because no Act of Sederunt would touch the Lord Advocate.

58,464. (Chairman.) Would it require legislation?—Yes.

58,465. Would the same observation apply as regards any extension of the system of promotion by transfer in the Sheriff Clerks' offices?—I think that again must be taken quite separately. There again perhaps I might at this juncture point out a thing which comes in naturally, viz., the question of supervision. You see, the position of the Sheriff Clerks and the Clerks of Court here is quite different, in this way: the Court is a fairly large establishment—I mean to say it has 13 judges and it has got 7 separate courts, 5 outer and 2 divisions, each of them having their clerks. Well, their supervision is quite a possible and a right thing—I mean the supervision which is now exercised by the Principal Clerk of Session, different in that matter by the recent Act from the old dual control. I was entirely in favour of what they have done. The Clerk of Session has got to go round and see that the men are really doing their work, that they are not behaving badly to agents, and so on; but when you go to the Sheriff Court you have a much smaller court—I am leaving out for the moment Edinburgh, Glasgow, and Dundee, and I take the smaller courts in the country—and while there is the Sheriff Clerk and his assistant, there is nobody else, and they are all in close touch with each other, and there is not the slightest difficulty in the Sheriff himself supervising, so to speak, his own staff. That is to say, it is his business to see that the Sheriff Clerk does his duty, and it is the Sheriff Clerk's business to see that his subordinates do their duty; it is in his interests, because if they do not do their duty there will be all the more for him to do. Therefore the scheme which I heard talked about—a sort of perambulating inspector of the Sheriff Court—is a perfect chimera. The man would not know what to do when he got there; he would begin to cross-examine, “When do you come here in the morning?” and, “When do you go away at night?” It is simply nonsense.

10 June 1915.]

The Right Hon. the LORD DUNEDIN, K.C.V.O., K.C.

[Continued.]

58,466. You think the supervision should remain with the Sheriff?—Yes; and it would be a great pity if the Sheriff could not be master in his own house. The Court of Session is perfectly different.

58,467. If the recommendation of Lord Salvesen's Committee in favour of reducing the number of Sheriff Clerks so that there should be one in each sheriffdom is carried out, then I presume that the Sheriff Clerk would become the Sheriff's natural organ for regulating the courts other than his own?—Certainly. You said, “in each sheriffdom.” You mean courts other than the Sheriff Clerk's own?

58,468. Yes?—Certainly.

58,469. Are you in favour of that recommendation of Lord Salvesen's Committee?—Yes. I have always been in favour of making the districts as wide as you can. It is all a question of the circumstances, and it must vary according to the conditions and population of the country. I mean to say, it is very much affected by the question of transit facilities, which vary from time to time. In the old days it was necessary to have far more when there were fewer railways and motor cars.

58,470. Returning to the Court of Session, we have had evidence that the present system under which the offices are placed at the Register House is very inconvenient, and that it would be a very great improvement, and would facilitate the organisation of the offices for the convenience of the Court and the public, if the offices were at Parliament House?—That, I think, would be true. I mean to say, you would not have a procession of blue bags on a lorry which you have twice a day just now. I think it would be much better if they were nearer, and it would save a good deal of time, and would actually give clerks more time to be in court. Just one other word about supervision. I think I have seen the idea that the supervision of the Chief Clerk of Court should be extended. I do not think he would do any good out of his own place. That is to say, it is quite right that he should supervise the clerks of the Court of Session and the Bill Chamber and the Extractor's Office; but it would not be the slightest use, and would be, I think, a pity to send Mr. Adam down to, say, the Register House, or even to the Accountant of Court, which, I think, is a separate office, which the Accountant of Court is perfectly able himself to regulate. The idea must be that each man must be master in his own house; and in the Register House, for instance, the Sasine Office and the Deeds Office are on a different footing, but still the Deputy Clerk Register is the head of that establishment, and therefore I think, for what you call ordinary administrative justice among the clerks, he must be responsible.

58,471. Different opinions have been expressed to us as regards the Register House, as to how far the separate heads of departments there should be independent of or dependent upon the Deputy Clerk Register. That question arises particularly with regard to the Register of Sasines?—Well, of course, personally, you must remember that in the office I held I had nothing directly to do with that; but, of course, I have known a good deal about it.

58,472. The point arises in a concrete form with regard to the relations with the Secretary for Scotland. The Keeper of the Register of Sasines holds that he ought to report direct to the Secretary for Scotland, and the Deputy Clerk Register and some other witnesses hold that he ought to report through the Deputy Clerk Register?—I do not see that my opinion is any better than any other person's, but I think that it should be the latter.

58,473. Then you would give the Deputy Clerk Register a real control of the Register House departments?—The administrative work. I mean if a clerk has done something he ought not to do, I think he ought to put the matter before him as the Court of Appeal.

58,474. What is your view as to the position of the Court of Session?—I do not think the Court of Session has any function administratively with regard to the Register House. It must, of course, have its present powers of being able to order the deeds up at once.

58,475. The question was raised as to whether the Court of Session ought to have complete control over the system of registration. It was contended that in the past it used to have such control, but doubts have been raised as to whether the Act of 1868 had removed that control?—I am not prepared to give a legal opinion, because I have not looked at the Act of 1868; but I have no hesitation in saying this: if you go far enough back, you must remember in these days there was but a very slight tie between here and the central Government in London. I have no doubt that the direct administrative control, however it may stand in strict law, has long ago slipped out of the hands of the Court of Session. All that they have had, and that must not be taken away from them, has been absolute power to order up the books if they wanted to see them, and that must be left, of course; but they have never troubled themselves with the details of the office, although I think, if you were introducing any great alteration in the way of keeping the records, it would be very foolish not to consult the judges about it, as people who had some sense and knew what they were talking about. But except in that sense, I do not think that the judges have really anything to do with it.

58,476. If it were a question of substituting typewriting, or mechanical reproduction, do you consider the Court of Session ought to have the final voice?—No, I do not.

58,477. Who should have the final voice?—I think, so to speak, the Government are responsible. You see there are certain things you can do without legislative sanction and others you cannot. Speaking roughly, I should think probably you might typewrite without legislative sanction, but certainly you could not photograph. You would have to look up the statutes under which the Register of Sasines was established. Well, that takes you back to 1617. Then you would have to discover whether the writing that was there mentioned included typewriting.

58,478. (Sir George Paul.) It was supposed that legislation was necessary and a Bill was brought in 1893, and it did not go any further?—Yes, I had to do with it. It was not my own rotten egg exactly; I brought it in on the recommendation of a Commission, but, however, I thought it was really your society and the other society that wrecked it.

58,479. (Chairman.) In anything that can be done without legislation, do you consider that the Secretary for Scotland should be the final authority for deciding?—I think he must be, but, as you understand, that does not mean that I think that the sasines are to be in his control.

58,480. Is it not the case that the details of the system of registration were regulated by Act of Sederunt?—I should think that is certainly the case.

58,481. So far as any change involved alteration in an Act of Sederunt the Court of Session would be the authority for modifying it?—The real truth, of course, is that the thing has slipped away from the Court of Session. In the old days there was no

10 June 1915.]

The Right Hon. the LORD DUNEDIN, K.C.V.O., K.C.

[Continued.]

Secretary for Scotland; it was the Home Secretary. I do not suppose that the Home Secretary knew what a sasine meant, and if the Court of Session had not stepped in and made Acts of Sederunt nobody would have done anything, and therefore they did it, but in these latter days things are changed.

58,482. The result is that there are four different authorities concerned, and it appears that the exact sphere of the four authorities is not clearly defined?—I believe so.

58,483. You would not be inclined to increase the direct control of the Court of Session?—No, I do not think it is wanted, and I do not see that they are in a position to do it nearly as effectively or nearly as well as the people who do it just now.

58,484. (Sir George Paul.) The Acts of Sederunt regulating the Sasine Office were introduced through the reports of Thomas Thomson in 1821, when the number of pages in the book, and the number of lines on the page, and how many words were to be put in each page were regulated by Act of Sederunt?—Yes.

58,485. (Chairman.) The special departments for transacting the Lord Advocate's own business are the Crown Office and the Legal Secretary?—Yes.

58,486. There are also the Advocates Depute who change with the change of Government?—They are his deputies, and when he falls therefore they fall.

58,487. The Crown Agent also changes?—Yes.

58,488. Is that a satisfactory system?—Quite satisfactory.

58,489. The Advocates Depute are engaged in matters of criminal prosecution?—Yes, practically. They sometimes are asked to make reports and certain other things, but not often.

58,490. Is there any reason why these should be political posts, and change with the Government?—I think so, because after all they are the Lord Advocate's own men, so to speak, and he is responsible for a great deal of what they do, and I think a close association between the Advocate and his deputies is very much to be desired. I think that has acted quite well; there has never been the slightest objection to these posts being political, and I think they should continue to be political.

58,491. What exactly are the functions of the Crown Agent?—Well, the Crown Agent is the head of the Crown Office, that is to say, of the staff of clerks there, and he is bound to look after them, and see that the work is properly done. He has just got the functions in a criminal case which an ordinary solicitor has in a civil case—that is to say, to prepare the work for the counsel who are going to plead it, the counsel who are going to plead it in this case being the Lord Advocate, the Solicitor-General, and his deputies, and he has got to do the agent's work. Practically, of course, as he is a man from outside, it means really that it is supervising work. It has been exceedingly well done, and I would not change it. Theoretically, I quite see that if the Crown Agent chose to be exceedingly lazy he could be. I don't know who would be there to keep him right, but so far from being lazy, all the Crown Agents I have known have devoted a great deal of time and attention to the office, and have done the work remarkably well. It is the one little sort of feather in the solicitor's profession, and it is looked upon as a great compliment to be made Crown Agent, and I think the sort of feeling of pride of place has made the man put his best leg forward. But I agree if he chose to scamp it I don't know who would stop him.

58,492. And the work of the office would go on all the same?—I do not think it would go on all the same; at least I hope not. It would go on.

58,493. One other question on quite a different matter. Evidence has been given on the subject of pensions for those legal offices which at present are not pensionable, in particular, the Sheriff Clerks, their deputies, and the Procurators Fiscal?—That gets back to what I said a good long time ago. I mean to say it just depends on what system you are going to work on. I quite understand the Treasury position, that as long as these men are not responsible to the people, they should not come under the Civil Service pension system, but, on the other hand, if you make them all public appointments, then there is no reason why they should not be pensioned, just as much as any other public office is pensioned.

58,494. The great difficulty in extending that to subordinate positions is that some of them are part-time officers?—Quite. You might do it with the Sheriff Clerks Depute, but then you would have to have a great deal of modification of the present system, because you would find if you went round the different sheriffdoms a tremendous difference in the number of deputies that the Sheriff Clerk has. I do not mean by that that in the Glasgow offices there would be a great deal more deputies than there would be in Wick, but that in some places there would be two or three where the work could be done by one, because it lies with the Sheriff Clerk to find the work, and he might find it by giving two men a small salary or one man a large salary, so that obviously you would have to put an end to that. You would have to look up the whole position, and say what number of Sheriff Clerks there should be. The moment you go below that to the merely subordinate writing staff, I think it would be impossible.

58,495. Would it be impossible to meet that by a pension system on contributory basis?—That is scarcely a question for me. I mean my experience does not run to that, and my opinion would be worth no more than anyone else's.

58,496. If a pension system were established, would it naturally follow that an age limit should be fixed for retirement?—I suppose it would. I am, personally, not a great disliker of an age limit. I would have an age limit of 70 for a judge, although some of them are good men after that.

58,497. Would you apply an age limit to the officers of the Court?—I think I would. I mean I do not see much wrong with the ordinary Civil Service rule. There are two things I have not been asked about. One is as to a Permanent Legal Secretary to the Lord Advocate. I do not think that would be a good plan. I think that each Lord Advocate ought to have his own secretary. It is a perfectly confidential post, because he is not only Legal Secretary, but he is Private Secretary as well, and he is absolutely mixed up with the Lord Advocate in all propositions as to Bills and Parliamentary procedure, and, therefore, I do not think it would do to have a permanent secretary there at all.

58,498. Does the Lord Advocate ever take his Legal Secretary out of the Scottish Office?—No, I think he has always taken a Scotch lawyer whom you would not find in the Scottish Office. The thing has gone the other way; the Lord Advocate's Legal Secretary has gone into the Scottish Office. Then the other matter is the question of a committee of Sheriff Clerks to decide all promotions and transfers.

58,499. May I explain what the suggestion was as regards that. It has been pointed out by other witnesses that there would be advantages if promotion in the staff of the Sheriff Courts were not confined to each district, but if there were an interchange. It was suggested that, especially if the number of Sheriff Clerks was reduced, and there were only fifteen of them, a small committee of, say, three principal Sheriff Clerks would be a convenient body to decide on these matters?—I think it would be a thoroughly wrong proposal. In the first place, it would sin, in my view, against what I have already said. It might impose upon the Sheriff persons he might not want. I think he ought to be master in his own house, but besides that I cannot imagine a body that would be more liable to unfortunate influences. In the first place, you cannot have in a committee of Sheriff Clerks the same status as you have in the Lord Advocate.

58,500. This committee was intended to deal with appointments which are not at present made by the Lord Advocate, the appointments which are made by the Sheriff Clerks themselves?—I was supposing, of course, for the moment that you were altering the system to a general public system, but if you leave it among the Sheriff Clerks themselves—I mean, if you leave it still with the Sheriff Clerk, so to speak—the worst objection to it would be you would have undoubtedly the question of the local claim. That is to say, supposing three Sheriff Clerks—say, the Sheriff Clerks in Edinburgh,

10 June 1915.]

The Right Hon. the LORD DUNEDIN, K.C.V.O., K.C.

[Continued.]

Glasgow, and Dundee—were to decide the promotions, the Edinburgh man would be assailed for one set of candidates, the Glasgow man for the second set, and the Dundee man for the third, and then it would be a question of trying to get hold of local influence; and I am afraid there would be a decided tendency to help those out of your own household.

58,501. What do you think would be the right way of dealing with that matter if there is no suitable man on the spot to fill a vacancy?—I think, of course, it would be far better done by the Lord Advocates consulting the Sheriffs.

58,502. Then would you bring the Lord Advocate into the appointment of the staff of the Sheriff Clerk's office?—It all depends on whether you decide to make it a public service or not. As long as you keep it that the Sheriff Clerk is appointed by the Crown, so to speak, and he is given a certain amount of money to find other people with, I think it is reasonable. On the other hand, if you are going to change that and make the Depute Sheriff Clerks Crown appointments, so to speak, then of course you have got to have some authority, and I do not think you could do better than have the Lord Advocate, with such assistance as he could get from the Sheriff.

58,503. That would apply only to those posts which were made regular Civil Service posts?—Quite. In the case of subordinates, I think you must leave that to the men they are subordinate to.

58,504. (Lord Dundas.) In any scheme of general consolidation of the offices about the Law Courts, there are some departments, you told us, that would necessarily have to be excluded—the Judiciary Office, the Crown Office, and the Teind Office?—Yes.

58,505. And, to some extent, the Bill Chamber and the Extractor's Office?—I do not say that you would have to exclude them, but I say that you would have to be very careful as to who you appointed there.

58,506. What residuum would be left? There would only be the Clerks of Court and the Bill Chamber and the Extractor's Office, so far as these latter offices were not excluded?—I do not think there is very much.

58,507. The residuum being so small, do you think there is any room for a general scheme of consolidation of the Court offices?—No. I think a general scheme of consolidation would be a bad scheme, because it would have to bring in these specialised offices.

58,508. If it became the practice that assistant clerks were appointed deputies when the occasion arose, instead of outside men being brought in, is there any other feature that you would suggest as an improvement on existing matters?—No, I do not think so.

58,509. The Lord Advocate's sphere of legal appointments is, of course, a limited one; but you say, in your opinion, it is and would be best exercised by one man, and that man the Lord Advocate?—Yes.

58,510. You have given us your reasons for disliking the idea of an advisory committee?—I think it would be useless and rather hurtful; I do not think it would contribute any knowledge that the Lord Advocate has not got, or could not get.

58,511. You indicated that you thought it would be a fair thing that assistant clerks should be promoted deputies rather than that outsiders should be brought in?—Yes.

58,512. If that particular matter is to be put on that basis, it would hardly be affected by an advisory committee, or anything of that sort?—It would depend on their views, of course.

58,513. I mean, would it not rather be a matter for discussion and agreement with the Lord Advocate?—I think it could be done that way.

58,514. Is it the case, in point of practice, that the Lord Advocates, as far as you know, do give a great deal of personal care and attention even to the minor appointments under their charge?—Of course, I can only speak for myself. I did, certainly.

58,515. (Sir John Kempe.) I think your lordship expressed satisfaction with the existing state of things, partly on the ground that the results are quite satisfactory. Of course, you are aware that the change that has been made in the appointments of public servants was due to great abuses that used to exist. That is to say, the present competition system was brought in because of very great abuses following on the nomination system that used to hold?—I think I have already said that that is the natural outcome of having a body to deal with that is so far too big for any one being to be in the position of having personal knowledge which would enable him to fill up the appointments, but in the set of offices that we are speaking of that is not the case. I mean it is a very small business, and I do not know that there have been any great abuses. I do not suppose my appointments were perfect, but they were at least perfect enough, in so far as I do not remember having any noise about them on that account.

58,516. But the Civil Service consisted in former days of a great many separate offices, and each of these separate offices had its own nominations, but now they are all thrown together. You cannot do that in the legal departments, you think. You could not have open competition for all the different offices of clerks, because they require different qualifications. That is one of your reasons, I suppose?—Yes. In other words, I do not think the two cases are similar. That is what it comes to.

58,517. I think you said you yourself had introduced some reforms which have not been carried out since?—I did not say that. Somebody else suggested that; I think the Chairman put it to me. I do not know, and still less want to criticise, what has been done since my day, and my day in that matter ended in 1903.

58,518. You do not consider that the legal conscience is different from the civil conscience. You do not think there is less liability to abuse by a lawyer than there would be by a civilian?—No, I think lawyers and civilians are both subject to Satan, but I think the real difference is that the one is a very small place where you really know what you are at, and the Civil Service, as a whole Service, is a very big place where you could not know where you were.

58,519. (Mr. Boutwood.) I gather that upon that question of making a consolidated service for the offices in and around the Court of Session, practically after you have made the exceptions that seem to you necessary there is nothing left to unify?—Not much.

58,520. Then, about the Lord Advocate, I do not quite know what position you leave us in. It seems to me that the Lord Advocate is purely political, but that he probably knows the actual field of selection better than any substitute?—Yes.

58,521. Supposing one wanted, for reasons that seemed sufficient, to alter this political tradition, what would you do?—Well, you must give the patronage to somebody. That is obvious. That somebody must either be a person or a congeries of persons called a committee. I do not myself believe in committees at all for that class of thing. I do not think they do nearly as well as a single man, because I say they did not have the same real sense of responsibility, and instead of one man being canvassed you have three, or whatever number there is on the committee. Then you have even temptations to have a party in the committee. I mean to say there may be a certain portion of the committee who want to favour people they themselves know, or people who come from their part of the country, and so on. I think you have all the temptations of bad patronage simply accentuated by the number of men you have on the committee. Of course whenever you have a committee of a small number you will have a preponderance of what you may call the strongest man, but does that advance matters? On the contrary, you hurt him very much by a committee, so that anyhow you are back again to the one man. As I tell you, I do not think there is any better man than the Lord Advocate. I have got great objections, as I said, to the taking of the judge, and if you take anybody outside altogether, I do not know that he will be less amenable to political influences, and so on, than the Lord Advocate.

58,522. But if you leave it with the Lord Advocate what would you do to him to make him non-political in his patronage? How could you bring that about? Would

10 June 1915.]

The Right Hon. the LORD DUNEDIN, K.C.V.O., K.C.

[Continued.]

you just have to trust to the gradual amendment of his conscience in the right direction?—I believe you would. Suppose the Government came to that conclusion and the Prime Minister told the Lord Advocate, “You are going to have your old patronage, but “remember it is not to be political at all,” I do not think there would be any difficulty in carrying that out, because the Lord Advocate might be very anxious and willing to appoint a political opponent where in the old days he would not have dared to do so, because he would have caught it too hot from his old party.

58,523. (Mr. Graham Wallas.) I have some difficulty in deciding what is the exact meaning of the expression “political appointment.” One gathers, I put it to you, that it refers rather to services than opinions—that you do not make an elaborate inquiry into the man’s abstract opinions, but it is understood that the real claim to office is actual political work?—I think, as a general rule, you may assume if a man does political work for a party his opinions coincide with that party, but certainly it is services.

58,524. You warned us that we should not necessarily draw an analogy from such a big thing as the English Civil Service?—Yes, quite.

58,525. A good analogy might be found in some of the Colonies. You know, as a matter of fact, that attempts have been made in Australia and New Zealand, and with less success in Canada, to prevent permanent appointments being made for political reasons?—No, I do not.

58,526. What I wanted to put to you was this, if attempts have been made in the colonies to bring political appointments to permanent administrative posts to an end, does that seem to you to be an entirely Utopian suggestion?—It is not entirely Utopian, but I think it is quite unnecessary for what you have got to deal with. I do not think, as a matter of fact, that so far as the Court of Session is concerned the present system has landed them in any impropriety.

58,527. You would agree that, outside the question of whether political appointment to permanent posts is good or bad, you have to consider its effects all round, its effects on politics as well as on the efficiency of the persons occupying the posts?—I do not think that in what we are dealing with there is any reflex action of that sort.

58,528. Would not you agree that the system of party government is only tolerable when men are ready to hang back if they are convinced their party programme is a mistake and to change their party?—That may be so for the House of Commons, but for the moment I do not see the point of it.

58,529. Take the man who finds that he is most useful as a politician when his party programme is least defensible, who feels that politics are to him a business and not a mere matter of opinion; such a man does in any locality constitute a real political danger?—Yes; but I think the answer to that is this: There are not a sufficient number of these appointments as would ever pay a man to chalk out for himself a party career with the view of ending his life in one of these departments. Take the people we have been talking about, the Clerks of the Court of Session; I do not know what the average appointments will be, but, certainly, if you had one in every three years it would be about the most.

58,530. But if you take the whole body of these appointments, the appointments in the Sheriff Courts, the appointments of the Procurators Fiscal, and various appointments in the courts, and remember that you you are not dealing with a very large profession in Scotland, is not it the case that the ambitious young Scotch lawyer does from the beginning think about his political future?—I honestly do not think so. I think you will find that the proportion of appointments from the profession is so infinitely small, that no man would really go into the profession with the view of, so to speak, securing an appointment. I do not think it is possible for a young Scotsman to start with the view of securing an appointment.

58,531. Take it he does not start his career at the age of 20 with that idea; but when he is approaching the time when such an appointment is possible, he has a very serious and strong motive to stick hard to his party, without any reference to his secret fears and doubts as to whether the party is right?—That may be.

Mr. JAMES SMITH CLARK, S.S.C., called and examined.

58,532. (Chairman.) You are Auditor of Accounts of the Court of Session?—Yes.

58,533. How long have you held that office?—For about 4½ years.

58,534. What was your professional experience before that?—I had practised as a solicitor before the Supreme Courts from 1873, the date of my admission, down to May 1907, when I was appointed Keeper of the General Register of Sasines. I held that office until December 1910, when I was appointed Auditor of the Accounts of the Court of Session.

58,535. Will you tell us briefly what the work of the Auditor of the Court of Session is?—In my capacity of Auditor of Accounts it is my duty to tax accounts of expenses, or bills of costs, of litigations in the Court of Session, under remits by the Court. In accordance with the practice of the office for many years, I also undertake audits of accounts at the request of parties, or otherwise than under remits by the Court, and other business of an auditorial character under remits or extra judicial references. I am debarred from practising in any way, directly or indirectly, as a law agent.

58,536. By whom are you appointed?—My commission is from the King. I think I am appointed by the Secretary for Scotland on the recommendation of the Lord Advocate.

58,537. Does your warrant of appointment contain a limitation of the age at which you may hold office?—No.

58,538. What staff have you assisting you in the duties of your office?—My official staff is one clerk, for whom the Treasury makes an allowance of 150*l.* per annum. My actual staff consists of 10 clerks, all paid by me, with the exception of that sum of 150*l.*, which is derived from the Exchequer.

58,539. What is your own remuneration?—My official remuneration is 700*l.* per annum, plus that 150*l.* of an allowance for a clerk.

58,540. Does your official salary cover all the work that you do under remits from the Court?—Yes, in substance it does. There are one or two trifling remits which I think I bring out in a separate answer, but which are scarcely worth labouring here.

58,541. You have other remuneration from fees in addition to that?—Yes, from the private references which I have alluded to.

58,542. Are those private references matters which attach to your office, or is it a matter of selection by the parties?—It is entirely a matter of selection, with probably one exception which it is probably right to mention. A testator, a good many years ago, made a provision in his will that his trustees’ intromissions were to be certified by the Auditor of the Court of Session. With that exception, it is a mere matter of selection as to who shall be auditor or who shall tax the accounts.

58,543. As a matter of fact, are all private taxations generally brought to the Auditor of the Court?—I should think the majority of taxations in the sense of pure taxation of accounts are. I mean in Edinburgh and district. Outside Edinburgh and the immediate district it is a mere matter of arrangement. The much more severe work of my department in this aspect is what we know as the audit of cash accounts. A very small amount of that comes to my office. There the parties frequently select accountants.

58,544. What kind of cash accounts do you refer to?—Cash accounts of trustees and public companies and the like. These may be sent to me or, indifferently, they may be sent to any chartered accountant or law agent in Edinburgh.

10 June 1915.]

Mr. JAMES SMITH CLARK, S.S.C.

[Continued.]

58,545. These are ordinary accounts, not necessarily of a legal nature?—Not necessarily legal at all.

58,546. Do you also receive fees for certain work for Government departments?—Yes, I have given you a note of these, I think, in answer to query 4. There are certain fees which I have described as ex officio, the average per annum being 40*l.*; and then there are fees which some public authority, such as the Board of Agriculture, who has been a party to an arbitration or anything of that kind, pay to me when the accounts are remitted to me, and I identify these in the books by marking that they are payable out of public funds. The average there amounts to 39*l.* per annum. We regularly make a return of the amount of these fees to the Exchequer.

58,547. Does the larger part of your work consist of judicial remits or private work?—Private work. The official work, I should think, would occupy me and a clerk at 150*l.* a year less than 2½ or 3 hours a day. For the other work it takes the whole ten clerks, one of whom is paid, I should think, four times the allowance which I get for him from the Exchequer, the rest of the time. That clerk is indeed about as highly paid as any Civil servant in Edinburgh, except the head of a department.

58,548. You have given us some figures as regards the number of accounts and remits that you deal with?—Yes, I have selected three years—1912, 1913, and 1914. I selected that period because the 20th of July 1914 was the latest date according to my books for which I had complete figures. The actual number of judicial accounts taxed during the period of 1912 amounted to 1,158, including decrees in absence, the total amount of which, as given in to me, is 112,510*l.* During 1912 there were 1,880 extra judicial remits, including 88 cash audits, that is, the audit of the cash intromissions of trustees and others with estates, and involving the taxation of accounts amounting, as given in, to 187,036*l.*, and the fixing of agents' and factors' commissions, amounting to 35,081*l.*

58,549. What exactly is the distinction between judicial accounts and extra-judicial remits?—It is a very decided distinction in Scotland. The judicial remits are all sent to me as the result of litigation in the Court of Session. That is, a remit is made by the Lord Ordinary in the Outer House, or by the President of either of the two divisions where the litigation has ended in the Inner House, and the whole fees for the taxation of these accounts are paid by stamps and go into the appropriate fee fund. In regard to the extra judicial remits, in Scotland no legal procedure is necessary with a view to such taxation. The parties sit down and write a docket, "We request So-and-so to tax this account." That would be a sufficient warrant for any lawyer in Edinburgh to tax the account, or for the occupant of my chair to tax it, and frequently such a document is signed remitting the account to a chartered accountant to tax. It is entirely at the disposal of the client and his agent as to who shall tax these outside accounts.

58,550. You receive fees for these accounts?—Yes. The fees are limited in this way, that my commission expressly stipulates that in no case shall I charge a higher fee for private taxation than is chargeable under the rates fixed by the Court for judicial work.

58,551. It is perhaps unnecessary to take the separate figures, but will you give us the average for the three years?—Taking the three years ending July 20 1914, the total number of judicial accounts was 3,149, and the amount of the accounts, as given in, was 324,597*l.*, giving a yearly average of 1,049 accounts, amounting to 108,199*l.* The total number of extra-judicial remits dealt with in the same period was 5,761, including 273 cash audits, and involving the taxation of accounts amounting, as given in, to 609,740*l.*, and the fixing of 97,916*l.* of commission, giving a yearly average of 1,890 remits, including 91 cash audits, 203,246*l.* of business accounts, and 32,638*l.* of commission. Then I think I have added these together.

58,552. The extra-judicial work is not far short of double the judicial work?—I should think about that, more than double, if you take into account the element of the cash audits, because there, for example, you may have a single account which may involve the work of two highly-paid clerks for probably two or three months, and the charges for these are carefully regulated according to time in carefully-kept volumes which have gone on for half a century, and have been continued by me on entirely the same lines as left to me by my predecessors.

58,553. Is there any inconvenience in the system?—The only possible inconvenience would be this, if judicial work was at any time delayed; but that has been obviated during the whole period that I have known the Auditor's office, which goes back for nearly half a century now. The remits from the Court, which may be called the non-paying work from the Auditor's point of view, invariably get the preference. If any work is delayed it is the private work. As a matter of fact, the work is so thoroughly kept up to date, that at this moment, I may inform the Commission, I have a week of compulsory holidays in the middle of session thrown upon me because there is no work to do, taking the whole work combined.

58,554. You receive fees for certain business from public departments who send their accounts to you to be audited?—Yes.

58,555. You might have a system under which the Auditor was paid a salary which included the work sent to him from public departments, the salary being increased to represent that work?—I think no occupant of my chair would object to that in the slightest degree. The whole question is such a slight one that it barely raises a question of principle at all, and I do not think any question of controversy would arise about it one way or another.

58,556. Has that question been raised?—I have never heard it raised.

58,557. You appoint your staff of clerks yourself entirely?—Yes; they were appointed by my predecessor and I kept them on.

58,558. And you do not suggest any change?—None whatever. The only change that has occurred lately is that the health of my chief assistant has broken down, and there it might be necessary, if that continues, that I should promote some member of my staff to his post, or it may be to divide his work between two of the head clerks and make some suitable arrangement for their salary.

58,559. Your staff are not pensionable?—They are not pensionable, neither am I.

58,560. Does any inconvenience arise owing to that?—I have never heard of any inconvenience, and I speak from considerable knowledge of the department from the year 1868.

58,561. You told us that the health of your chief clerk is unfortunately failing?—Yes, it has failed.

58,562. Is that not a case where a pension system would meet the difficulty?—For special reasons I do not think a pension would intervene there.

58,563. (Lord Dundas.) You have told us that you receive a considerable amount of work in the form of voluntary references to you by parties who wish a business account taxed?—Yes.

58,564. You are there just in the position of arbiter between two private parties?—Yes.

58,565. And, of course, the parties pay you a fee upon the restricted basis you have mentioned?—Yes.

58,566. When you have pronounced your decision on that account, the thing is done, I suppose?—Yes.

58,567. There was some doubt, I think, in the minds of some of the Commissioners at an earlier stage. In such a case would it be possible that the taxation of that account should ever come to be submitted to the Court of Session and have to be revised by you as Auditor of the Court of Session?—It never could be, except probably on the same grounds as is applicable to arbitrations both in England and Scotland, as I understand it—if there were averments sufficient to be remitted to proof of corruption.

58,568. But in the ordinary course of events it would be impossible for such a situation to arise?—Quite impossible. My judgment is final, with the qualification I have given. Then there is possibly just one other thing I might mention. I have here an excerpt which I would like to put in. I see that the question of the combination of work, and so on, seems to have been very seriously considered by a Law Courts Commission in 1868, and I thought you might want a reference to that Commission. It was presided over by Lord Colonsay, and my predecessor, Mr. Baxter, gave evidence. I thought I might read an excerpt here of some of the leading points in the Report: "The office of Auditor was instituted as a temporary measure by the Court in the year 1806, and a scale of fees for his remuneration was fixed by the Act of 1810, Section 48. The office was made permanent by the Act of 1821, Section 32. Instead of fees a salary of 700*l.* was provided for by the Act of 1838, and certain fees substituted for those fixed in 1810, and on a much lower scale, are now paid into the Fee Fund. As between party and party in almost all suits, and frequently as between solicitor and client, the Auditor of Court has to tax the bills of costs, under remits by the Court. That his office as regards bills so taxed under remit is of importance, may be seen from one fact mentioned by the present Auditor, viz., that the amount of accounts which he taxed under judicial remits during the three years from October 1866 to October 1869 was nearly 200,000*l.* The Auditor's salary of 700*l.* was the rate recommended in 1816 and was fixed at that sum by the Act of 1838. It has not since been increased. For audits of accounts at the request of parties, or otherwise than under remits by the Court, separate fees are paid by the parties. We quite approve of the Auditor continuing to make such audits—the system having been found not to interfere with the Auditor's judicial work, and to afford solicitors and their clients an expeditious and satisfactory mode of adjusting their accounts at a moderate cost. Notwithstanding of the fees thence arising, it appears to us that the salary should be increased to 1,000*l.* The Act of 1821 provides that 'no person holding the said office shall, under pain of deprivation of office, practise, either directly or indirectly, as an agent before the said Court of Session.' In a subsequent part of this report we propose an alteration of this regulation. But as to the present and the late Auditor, we have to report that each deemed it his duty wholly to relinquish business as an agent or solicitor, and to confine himself strictly to his official duties, and to business of

10 June 1915.]

Mr. JAMES SMITH CLARK, S.S.C.

[Continued.]

"an auditorial character under remits or extra-judicial references. From the great variety of details to be considered in taxing bills of costs, the right performance of the duty of Auditor requires much knowledge of business, much previous preparation for each audit, and much care and judgment in hearing parties, and dealing with each objection to specific items. The cost of discussing in court an objection to an audit makes the decision of the Auditor practically final in nearly all cases. It is obviously expedient that such an office should be so remunerated as always to secure the services of professional men of wide experience and high professional position. Provision is made for a Clerk to the Auditor, who, among other duties, fixes and notifies appointments for taxation, and checks all summations of accounts and deductions. His salary is 150*l.*"

58,569. (Sir George Paul.) The parties come to you not because they are bound to come to you, but because you are skilled in the taxation of accounts?—I presume that the occupant of my chair is gone to on the latter footing, and if he became unsatisfactory to the profession or their clients, then these remits would probably go to the President of one or other of the legal societies, who would then command the necessary confidence, although they very often could not devote the necessary time to work of that class. I rather think that they would find that it would interfere with more important business.

58,570. (Mr. Graham Wallas.) Might a case arise where one of your successors might find that his duties as a public auditor might lead to his making himself rather unpopular with the profession?—I do not think so.

58,571. You cannot imagine that that might be a difficulty arising when the larger part of his income is derived from private practice?—I cannot understand the question of popularity entering into the auditor's mind for a moment. If it did he would certainly be quite unfit to be there.

58,572. Supposing the situation was going to be created for the first time, might it not be somewhat of an anomaly that the gentleman whose business it was to be financially in charge of Government business on the one hand should have a large part of his income derived from a private practice on the other hand?—I think not. It has worked satisfactorily for a century.

Mr. JOHN HAMILTON, Mr. ANDREW HAMILTON, and Mr. JAMES CHALMERS CROSBIE, called and examined.

58,573. (Chairman.) (To Mr. John Hamilton.) You are a clerk in the Sheriff Clerk's office in Glasgow?—Yes.

58,574. How long have you been there?—I have been there 30 years. I started in 1835.

58,575. What age were you on your original appointment?—Fourteen years of age.

58,576. You went straight from school?—Yes.

58,577. (To Mr. Andrew Hamilton.) You are also in the Sheriff Clerk's office, Glasgow?—Yes.

58,578. What age were you on your original appointment?—Scarcely 14. I went direct from school.

58,579. And how long have you served?—Twenty years.

58,580. (To Mr. Crosbie.) Where are you serving?—In the Sheriff Clerk's office, Dumfries.

58,581. How long have you served there?—Seven years.

58,582. You went at what age?—Seventeen.

58,583. (To Mr. John Hamilton.) I understand you speak first on behalf of the clerks in the Sheriff Clerks' offices?—Yes.

58,584. What is your commission to speak for them? Do you represent any association?—I represent the clerks of the Glasgow staff, and I also represent Edinburgh, Dundee, Forfar, Ayr, Kilmarnock, and Dumbarton.

58,585. That is a commission given to you to represent them for this particular purpose, not as an official of an association?—Yes; I wrote to them and asked their permission to appear for them.

58,586. They are aware of what you are going to say?—Yes.

58,587. What is the total number, approximately, of clerks in the Sheriff Clerks' offices?—150.

58,588. That is apart from the deputies?—Yes.

58,589. The Commission have already had evidence as to the work done in the Sheriff Clerks' offices: therefore I need not trouble you on that point. Will you tell us briefly what points you wish to bring before the Commission?—The points are mainly under-payment and the want of promotion.

58,590. Dealing with the first question, as regards under-payment, what are the facts?—I may state that a clerk of the same experience as myself has about 198*l.* of a salary.

58,591. That is your present salary?—Yes. Of course there are no other departments we can contrast our position with, but I take the liberty to contrast them, say, with the second division clerks who are employed in many other Government offices, and their salary commences at 70*l.*, rising by 7*l.* 10*s.* annually up to 130*l.*; then by 10*l.* to 200*l.*; and thereafter by 10*l.* to 300*l.*; so that a clerk in the second division after eight years' service has 130*l.* and after 25 years' service 300*l.* In the Glasgow Sheriff Court, of course, a clerk after 30 years has not more than 200*l.*

58,592. At what age does the second division clerk enter the service?—At 18 years of age.

58,593. As compared with 14 in your case?—Yes.

58,594. And he has to pass a competitive examination?—He passes the ordinary Civil Service examination, with no specific subject.

10 June 1915.]

Mr. JOHN HAMILTON, Mr. ANDREW HAMILTON, and Mr. JAMES
CHALMERS CROSBIE.

[Continued.]

58,595. But with tolerably severe competition?—Yes.

58,596. What salary did you receive when you were first appointed?—10*l*.

58,597. And did that increase fairly rapidly?—No, it just increased as promotion arose in the office.

58,598. What age were you when you reached your 100*l*. a year?—I was 14 to 15 years in the office before I reached 100*l*.

58,599. So that when you were about 28 you were getting 100*l*. a year?—Yes.

58,600. Can you make a comparison between the salaries received in the Sheriff Clerks' offices and those received in private offices of law agents?—I believe in Glasgow it may be taken for granted that the salaries in the Sheriff Clerks' offices are probably a little better than the salaries in the ordinary legal offices in Glasgow. Of course the general result is that as there is a great amount of competition the salaries are low. In the Sheriff Clerks' offices you have no promotion; you have no chance of going from the Sheriff Clerk's office to any other department.

58,601. What prospects would a man in a law agent's office have of rising elsewhere?—The prospects are that after five years' apprenticeship and after passing the examination as a law agent many offices are open to him, such as Town Clerkships and other offices on County Councils. He may also start business on his own account. He may make a fair living wage there.

58,602. I suppose that the majority of young men who enter a law agent's office would remain in a law agent's office?—Not necessarily.

58,603. Supposing they remained there, what would be the highest salary they could expect?—I can only speak from advertisements I have seen in the papers. I have seen a Procurator for a law office advertised for at 60*l*. a year.

58,604. (Sir George Paul.) In the large offices the salaries are very much bigger than that?—I am only speaking from public advertisements.

58,605. (Chairman.) Can you say what the head clerk in a large office has?—Well, a book-keeper in a large office may have anything from 300*l*. to 400*l*.

58,606. What are the highest salaries paid in the Sheriff Clerks' offices, leaving out of account the deutes?—The highest salaries are paid in Glasgow, and, I think, the highest is 203*l*. That is a clerk with 30 years' experience.

58,607. And what is the position of the clerks as regards their prospect of promotion to deutes' posts?—I may state that in Glasgow—of course, I am only speaking of Glasgow—since I went there there have been only two changes in which the staff was reorganised from top to bottom, and that was on the death of two senior deutes who had served 50 or 60 years in the office and were over 70 when they died or retired.

58,608. How many deutes are there at Glasgow?—Six.

58,609. Had those deutes previously served as clerks in the office?—Five of them had. One was brought in by a Sheriff Clerk over the heads of the staff.

58,610. One of them is now receiving 500*l*. a year?—I cannot state the deutes' salaries.

58,611. Is it the usual practice for men to be appointed at the age at which you entered the office, immediately after leaving school—at the age of 14 or thereabouts?—They enter the office at that time, most of them.

58,612. It is not often the case that a man is appointed who has had previous experience in a law agent's office?—That is the only exceptional case that I have referred to.

58,613. Is that because the Sheriff Clerk prefers to take the boys direct from school, or because the salaries are not attractive?—I suppose in many offices they are glad to get boys at any price.

58,614. Is there a difficulty in getting boys?—Yes.

58,615. In Glasgow is there a difficulty?—Yes.

58,616. Has that recently arisen?—It has recently arisen, I would say.

58,617. Then your representation is that the present salaries are not adequate?—Yes.

58,618. But you base that rather on a comparison with the Civil Service salaries than upon the salaries paid in law agents' offices?—Yes.

58,619. You admit that your salaries are probably better than the salaries in law agents' offices?—Probably they are, taking Glasgow alone.

58,620. The second point is the want of facilities for promotion and advancement?—I might explain that promotion is usually confined to the county in which you start business, and therefore you have to wait on practically dead men's shoes.

58,621. Would it be practicable to have a system under which promotion by transfer to other places was open to clerks?—Yes.

58,622. Appointments are made by the Sheriff Clerks?—Yes.

58,623. How would you meet this difficulty? A Sheriff Clerk in Aberdeen, let us say, might not wish to appoint somebody from Glasgow; he might have somebody in Aberdeen he wanted to appoint. What system do you suggest?—We suggest that it should be under a committee of the Sheriff Clerks Association, who would deal with the whole staffs all over Scotland, or by a special supervisory committee.

58,624. Those are two alternatives, the first being a committee of the Sheriff Clerks Association?—Yes.

58,625. You think it would be practicable for such a committee to arrange a system of general promotion?—Yes, providing the salaries were sufficient to induce a clerk to travel a long distance to keep himself.

58,626. Would clerks, as a rule, be prepared to go to another town in order to get promotion?—Speaking for Glasgow, I think there would be no difficulty.

58,627. Possibly, some arrangement for assistance in travelling expenses might be necessary?—If the salary is sufficient, I do not think there is anything required for travelling expenses.

58,628. At present the Sheriff Clerk is personally and pecuniarily responsible for his subordinates?—Yes.

58,629. Would there be any difficulty in a general system from the fact that a Sheriff Clerk might not be prepared to accept a particular clerk from another office who was recommended by the committee?—There might be.

58,630. How do you propose to get over that?—Of course, speaking for the general body of clerks, if there was promotion, and the committee recommended them, I suppose if it was a committee of the Sheriff Clerks Association, the particular Sheriff Clerk would require to accept the clerk they appointed.

58,631. You would make their decision binding on all Sheriff Clerks?—Yes.

58,632. Might they not have some objection in that case to maintaining the system of personal responsibility for their subordinates?—They would still have the supervision of them.

58,633. Still they might say, "I am not responsible for the appointment of this man; I cannot be responsible for his conduct"?—They might dismiss the clerk if his conduct was unsuitable for the office.

58,634. If you had a system of that kind, with whom do you contemplate that the power of dismissal should lie?—They should have the recommendation for dismissal of the staff.

58,635. To whom?—To the committee, or whoever is to deal with the general appointments.

58,636. In fact, you would make the committee the responsible body for appointment and dismissal?—Yes.

58,637. Are there any other points that you wish to add on that subject?—There is nothing more, unless to state that the few objections that we take are with regard to the under-payment of the clerks and the want of promotion.

58,638. (To Mr. Andrew Hamilton.) Have you anything you wish to add?—Nothing on the general question, but I wish to explain that in Glasgow there is a special department which I represent. Each resident Sheriff Substitute has a clerk assigned to him to do his

10 June 1915.]

Mr. JOHN HAMILTON, Mr. ANDREW HAMILTON, and Mr. JAMES
CHALMERS CROSBIE.

[Continued.]

particular work, and, if I may be permitted, I have prepared a statement which I might be allowed to hand in on behalf of those clerks. We are clerks on the general staff, we are not separated from them, we are appointed by the Sheriff Clerk.

58,639. But you are appointed as personal clerks to the resident Sheriff Substitutes?—Yes.

58,640. Does your case differ in any respect from the case of the clerks in general?—No, except that our work is a little more responsible. We work generally without supervision.

58,641. Your point is that that is specially responsible work, and you therefore claim that it ought to be more highly paid?—Yes. As an instance of the underpayment of that class of clerks, I may say that my present salary is 109*l.* per annum. I have been 20 years in the service and I have had experience of all departments of the service. For the last five years I have acted as clerk to Sheriff Craigie, and my increases of salary during the past four years have been three times 3*l.* annually.

58,642. How are the clerks attached to the Sheriffs selected?—Usually from among the senior members of the staff, or from members who have had a long experience of the work.

58,643. And their salary is what it happens to be?—Yes.

58,644. No special salary attaches to that office?—No.

58,645. Some of them are in receipt of salaries considerably higher than yours?—I cannot speak for that.

58,646. Would you be surprised to hear that one of them is in receipt of 185*l.* a year?—I believe the Sheriff Principal's Clerk may have that. I can talk for at least two members of the staff whose salaries are under mine and one who has the same salary and all of whom act as clerks to Sheriffs.

58,647. Strictly speaking, the case of these particular clerks attached to the Sheriffs does not differ from the clerks in general?—I do not suggest that.

58,648. (To Mr. Crosbie.) Do you wish to add anything in respect to the smaller places specially?—I come from Dumfries. I have been seven years in the Sheriff Clerk's office there, and I am getting a salary of 30*l.* from the Exchequer.

58,649. When you say "from the Exchequer," do you mean that you receive no remuneration from any other source?—I have other private employment which I do after office hours.

58,650. Is that for the Sheriff Clerk or for somebody else?—For the Sheriff Clerk.

58,651. In the case of Dumfries, has the Sheriff Clerk a private practice?—No, but he holds separate appointments in conformity with his commission.

58,652. Are these appointments clerkships to public bodies?—Yes; he is clerk to the School Board, a position which he held previous to his appointment as Sheriff Clerk, and the other one is secretary to a shipping company.

58,653. And you receive some additional remuneration for work done out of office hours in respect of these offices?—Yes.

58,654. As Sheriff Clerk has he any other clerks besides yourself in the office?—There used to be five in the office, but now there are only three. We cannot get clerks to come into the office. Last November one of our staff left the office to join the Colours, and after repeated advertisements from then till February, we were without a clerk and we had only two.

58,655. You now have three?—Yes.

58,656. Can the work be done by three?—No.

58,657. What happens?—For the first three months of the year, to cope with the work we have to work till about three in the morning.

58,658. In ordinary times, apart from special difficulties created by the war, is it easy to find men for the posts in the office?—No. I have been seven years in the office and there have been nine clerks altogether. They only stay a very short time and then go away.

58,659. If a general system of promotion were established, as Mr. Hamilton suggested, would there be any difficulty, do you think, as regards transfer from one place to another? Would clerks from Dumfries be ready to go to other places in Scotland to get promotion?—Yes. In one of the other counties there are two clerks with 24 years' service getting a salary of 70*l.* That is another country office.

58,660. (Mr. Boutwood.) (To Mr. John Hamilton.) You mentioned the Sheriff Clerks Association. What is that association?—It is an association of the Sheriff Clerks themselves, the principal Sheriff Clerks throughout Scotland.

58,661. You think a committee of that association might look after the general matter of transference and appointments?—They might arrange for the transfers from one county to another.

58,662. I suppose with an association of that sort you would most likely have a small committee of three or four men who would probably be in the centres of population, and how would they manage to know anything about the Sheriff Clerks' clerks in all the outlying parts of Scotland?—They would have a note of all the clerks with their experience and their salaries before them. If a clerk with 50*l.* was in Dumbarton and there was a vacancy in Glasgow at 60*l.*, it would be an easy matter transferring the clerk with 50*l.* to Glasgow for 60*l.*

58,663. But would they know the man in Dumbarton?—I fancy they would have a list of all the clerks before them.

58,664. How long did you stay at that 10*l.* a year that you started with?—I stayed one year; I got 15*l.* the following year.

58,665. Are you supposed to give the whole of your time to the work?—Yes.

58,666. And what are your hours?—During the weekdays our hours are from 10 to 4, and on Saturday from 10 to 1.

58,667. (To Mr. Crosbie.) But you mentioned working till three in the morning?—We work from 10 to 5, but of course we cannot nearly get through the work during these hours. On an average, I think, we work nine months a year to 10 o'clock.

58,668. (Sir John Kempe.) (To Mr. John Hamilton.) You say many of you start about 14. I suppose you start with 10*l.* a year. What is the first rise?—It all depends on the promotion awaiting us. The regular thing is, of course, 10*l.*, 15*l.*, and 20*l.* You will then probably be stationary there until there is promotion above you—until there is a death or something happens to allow some money to be free to be allocated among the junior clerks, or if the Sheriff Clerk gets an increased allowance from the Exchequer.

58,669. You do not always wait for a vacancy?—Except where an application is made to the Exchequer by the Sheriff Clerk for an increase in his salary allowance.

58,670. That makes it necessary for you to live in your own town?—Yes.

58,671. You cannot live away unless you get a decided rise in your salary?—No.

58,672. (To Mr. Crosbie.) You said that your clerks stayed only a very few years. Have you any who have been there longer than seven years?—The Sheriff Clerk Depute.

58,673. But no clerks have stayed longer than that?—No.

58,674. That means that they have all gone between you and the depute from time to time?—Yes.

58,675. And you, I suppose, would go if you got a chance?—Yes.

58,676. That is the same with all of you?—Yes.

58,677. Of course you have no expenses for removal if you do go?—No.

58,678. You have to find your own travelling expenses. That is another difficulty, I suppose?—Yes.

58,679. (Mr. Clynes.) (To Mr. John Hamilton.) Has your association taken action at any time to try and get your conditions improved?—On two separate occasions prior to this an attempt was made. One move was made about 1890, but a grant was given from the Exchequer which stopped that movement. We

10 June 1915.]

Mr. JOHN HAMILTON, Mr. ANDREW HAMILTON, and Mr. JAMES CHALMERS CROSBIE.

[Continued.]

applied to be recognised under the Minor Legal Appointments, but the Commission had already been fixed and the secretary sent back word saying that, seeing the Commission was already fixed, we were not entitled to be heard, and we had no representation on the Minor Legal Appointments Commission.

58,680. When was that?—1910.

58,681. You told us that when you had been in the Service some 14 years you had reached 100*l.*?—Yes.

58,682. Could you describe to us generally the character of your work at that time?—Well, I started in the branch office at Hamilton and I had experience of the whole routine of the Sheriff Clerk's work there. After five years a vacancy occurred in Glasgow and I was transferred to the Miscellaneous Department, which is akin to the Bill Chamber in Edinburgh, and then a vacancy occurred in the Process Room and I was taken in there; and latterly I came into the Extractor's Department.

58,683. (Sir George Paul.) (To Mr. Crosbie.) Are you a Sheriff Clerk Depute?—No.

58,684. You have been seven years in the office?—Yes.

58,685. And your salary is 30*l.*?—Yes.

58,686. And that is your whole remuneration?—Yes.

58,687. You have no other appointments?—I get remuneration for private work, but that is my only salary from the Exchequer.

58,688. That is your share of the allowance given to the Sheriff Clerk for his clerk?—Yes.

58,689. (Mr. Graham Wallas.) (To Mr. John Hamilton.) You, I suppose, have corresponded with a number of the Sheriff Clerks' staff about the country?—Yes.

58,690. And you are familiar generally with their grievances?—Yes.

58,691. Do you ever hear it said that promotion which ought naturally to fall to them has gone to outsiders?—I have never seen it stated in any correspondence I have had.

58,692. Then is it ever the case that an outsider is brought in over their heads to get a large share of the Treasury Grant which might have gone to raising the salaries of men underneath?—I can only speak to one instance, a Glasgow case, where a depute was brought in, and at the same time as he was brought in—of course I cannot connect the two things—a clerk who had 60 years' service lost one-third of his salary.

58,693. Was the depute in that case a relation of the Sheriff Clerk's?—He was a private clerk to the Sheriff Clerk who had been appointed politically to the appointment.

58,694. But you have not heard of any other instances of that type?—I cannot state any.

58,695. Has your association paid much attention to the question of pensions?—Of course, if we got a good salary and were able to save we would not advocate pensions.

58,696. You have not proposed pensions?—The only case I can instance is the case of a clerk in Perth. Questions were asked in the House of Commons about five years ago about a clerk in Perth who became stone blind. He had to leave the department and no provision was made for a pension. He had 20 years' service in the department. His only means of livelihood after he left the Service was by public subscription from the clerks in various Sheriff Clerks' offices in Scotland. I say in a case of that kind a hardship exists, and I suggest that if the salaries are to remain the same some provision should be made for a pension.

58,697. You are comparing yourselves with the second division clerks who come in some three years' later. Have you ever compared your position with the assistant clerks who go in at about the same age as yourselves. They start, I believe, at 45*l.* and rise to 150*l.*, with the opportunity of promotion to certain posts above?—Yes.

58,698. This Commission has already recommended that instead of that there should be a set of clerks to be called the Junior Clerical Service, who should start at 50*l.* and go up to 200*l.* That scale of salary, either 45*l.* to 150*l.* with staff posts above, or 50*l.* to 200*l.*, would be higher than that which your body generally receives?—Yes.

58,699. Have you ever thought of claiming to be put on that scale?—No. Any good scale, of course, would satisfy us.

58,700. Your position would be greatly improved if you adopted the scale of salaries given either to the existing assistant clerical staff or the proposed clerical staff?—Yes.

58,701. (Mr. Shipley.) (To Mr. John Hamilton.) You cease work at 4 o'clock, as a rule?—Sometimes. Of course, there are times when we have to stay later.

58,702. And is there any kind of work you could get that would pay you that you could do afterwards outside the office?—It depends on what kind of work you are looking out for.

58,703. (Mr. Matheson.) I suppose when you begin you have to live with your own family?—Yes.

Mr. WILLIAM BROWN accompanied by Mr. WILLIAM WEST KERR, called and examined.

58,704. (Chairman.) (To Mr. Brown.) You alone, Mr. Brown, are going to give evidence?—That is so. Mr. Kerr, Senior Sheriff Clerk Depute of Midlothian, wishes to be present, if that is permissible, to listen on behalf of our Association.

58,705. You are Sheriff Clerk Depute in Renfrewshire?—Yes.

58,706. Where do you work?—In Paisley.

58,707. Are you speaking on behalf of any association?—I am speaking on behalf of the Sheriff Clerks Depute Association, as Secretary thereof.

58,708. Does that association include all the Sheriff Clerks Depute?—Yes, except certain Issuing Clerks and all the deputies in Glasgow. One of the Glasgow deputies, Mr. Wood, who was the senior for many years, was at one time a member of the association, but for reasons best known to himself he withdrew his patronage of the association, and now none of the deputies in Glasgow are members or associates of the Sheriff Clerks Depute Association. But those under the same Sheriff Clerk in Hamilton and Airdrie are members of the association, the President being in Hamilton.

58,709. You have heard the evidence given on behalf of the clerks in the Sheriff Clerks' offices; do you wish to add anything to that with special reference to the position of the Sheriff Clerks Depute?—Nothing further than this, that I appreciate to a large extent everything said by Mr. Hamilton and the other two, especially with reference to the outsiders being brought in. In my own knowledge, there was one instance when a late Sheriff Clerk brought in an outsider in the same way as Mr. Downie, his successor did, when he was appointed politically Sheriff Clerk, namely, the Mr. Donaldson spoken to by Mr. Hamilton. The Sheriff Clerk referred to in my evidence brought in his brother, who was a bankrupt draper, and made him chief assistant in the office, and appointed superior to all the deputies at that time.

58,710. Where was that?—In the Sheriff Clerk's office of Lanarkshire, Glasgow. That was long before Mr. Donaldson was appointed by Mr. Downie. Mr. Hamilton would know that, but it must have escaped his memory.

58,711. You are acquainted with the recommendation of the Committee on Minor Legal Appointments with reference to deputies; they recommend the creation of two separate classes, one of special deputies who would be permanent officers, and the other would be very much on the same footing as at present?—Yes.

58,712. Do you agree with that recommendation?—Heartily. We produce a copy of a report and memo of the Committee sent to the Secretary.

58,713. Yes, we have it?—We agree upon the lines of that Report.

58,714. Do you think that a system of promotion by transfer between the different offices is practicable? Yes, I am of opinion that it is.

10 June 1915.] Mr. WILLIAM BROWN accompanied by Mr. WILLIAM WEST KERR.

[Continued.]

58,715. There would be no difficulty about removal from place to place?—I don't see why there should be any more than in Excise or Post Office services. The relieving of the Sheriff Clerk of all responsibility for this clerk or another clerk could be got over by insurance.

58,716. Is that ever done?—For many years I had a policy for 1,000*l*. Strange to say, my chief was good enough to tell me this was not to be continued. He said he would drop it.

58,717. He had sufficient confidence in you?—I don't know the cause, but that is the fact.

58,718. Is the system general of requiring insurance?—Yes, and that is spoken to in Departmental Reports. It states that a depute in a responsible position should be insured to the extent of 1,000*l*., but the practice is not universal. That is done in some of the larger towns, and would take place if the Sheriff Clerk is to be held responsible for the illegal acts of his deputies. Of course, that would be exceeding by far 1,000*l*. The Sheriff Clerk does not commission the depute to do any illegal acts. It is legal acts that he is commissioned to perform.

58,719. Have you any other points with reference to the deputies?—Nothing, except a suggested memorial which we prepared, if you are good enough to receive it. I produce it, and also if you will allow me, I produce a draft Act of Parliament which was prepared by the executive of the Sheriff Clerks Depute Association, and which was sent to the late Lord Advocate, Lord Strathclyde. I hand you these copies.

58,720. This is a draft memorial, not an original memorial?—The memorial was handed in.

58,721. After the Report of the Committee dealing with the appointments in 1911?—Yes. There is a table annexed to it, which shows the money which would require to be raised for the implement of the salaries. If that table was so framed in accordance with what is suggested, there would be sufficient money, without embarrassing in any way any Government money, by imposing that extra fee.

58,722. You suggest that additional revenue may be obtained by an increase in the Commissary fees?—Yes, in proportion. Our reasons are given why in all fairness they ought to be raised. At least we have endeavoured to show that in the memorial.

58,723. Your memorial, in fact, is a working out in detail of the general recommendations made by the Committee of 1911, and contains suggestions as to the principle on which salaries should be fixed for the special class and for Sheriff Clerks Depute?—Yes, and how it could be done.

58,724. The Draft Bill was prepared for the purpose of carrying out these recommendations?—Yes, the Majority Report of the Committee. Allow me to point out the long delay which has taken place notwithstanding the statement made by the Committee that the Depute Clerks are underpaid. That is one of the important facts brought out in the Majority Report, and that in certain cases they are overworked, and that their salaries should be fixed and paid by the Exchequer, that the number of Sheriff Clerks may safely be reduced, and that the demands of the deputies, all of which have been recommended in the Report by the Departmental Committee, ought in fairness to be conceded.

58,725. No steps have been taken?—No. I had a letter from the Lord Advocate's Secretary stating that, had it not been for the unfortunate position of public affairs, a Bill would have been introduced this Session to put it through. So in fairness to our association, we think we ought to be heard to some extent in support, and we will be glad if you will consider our deferential statement in the memorial heartily concurring in what the Majority Report recommends should be given to us.

58,726. (Mr. Graham Wallas.) In regard to the bankrupt draper who was taken into a Sheriff Clerk's office, can you give us the details of the salary at which he was appointed?—I could not definitely fix it, but I heard it was 400*l*. a year.

58,727. Do you know what Treasury allowance was given for the clerks in that area?—I don't know, but it was over 2,500*l*. at that time. From time to time, however, on application made and cause shown by the Sheriff Clerk, the Treasury usually have given certain sums additional.

58,728. But the question whether a fourth part of that sum should be given to one man, or a half, is a matter purely for the Sheriff Clerk to settle?—Yes. The Sheriff Clerk could give the office boy half the salary if he signed the receipt to the Exchequer Department. The Exchequer has nothing to do with the money. They have only to do with the receipts, and make no inquiry as to who gets the money, if it is vouched for. Over and above this they will not allow anything to be receipted by the Sheriff Clerk principal, beyond his own salary, which is sent separately. At one time it was farmed out (if you will excuse the expression). The Sheriff Clerk got a certain sum, including his own salary, and what he was to give his assistants, and after paying them he pocketed the rest. That was rearranged, and the Exchequer insisted on receiving from each Sheriff Clerk, on the 15th of every third month, a detail of all the clerks in his office, together with the amount they were to receive for that quarter, and when the receipts were sent up, I take it for granted, the Exchequer Department would see that the individuals down for certain amounts signed for these amounts and received them.

58,729. If the Sheriff Clerk's son of fourteen signed for half the total, the Department would neither care or know?—I don't know. If the name was the same they might make inquiry, but if it was not the same, and the clerk was some relative, there would be no reason for inquiry. They might think he was a qualified clerk and working for what he was getting.

58,730. (Sir George Paul.) You understood from the Lord Advocate's Secretary that the requests you made were to be embodied in a Bill?—Yes.

58,731. And it was only the present unfortunate state of matters that prevented it being brought in?—That is so.

58,732. This was satisfactory to you?—Yes.

58,733. What you ask the Commission to do is to back you up?—Yes, that is the position.

58,734. (Mr. Boutwood.) What is the length of your service?—As what?

58,735. As anything in the Sheriff Clerk's office?—I have been 38 years in the Sheriff Clerk's office.

58,736. What is your present salary?—At present my salary is 242*l*. 10*s*.

58,737. (Chairman.) How long have you been depute?—Thirty-four years; I am senior depute of the county.

58,738. (Sir George Paul.) Is that in Renfrewshire?—Yes, but I have the supervision of the whole county. I go to Greenock perhaps once in a fortnight or three weeks and manage the work there.

58,739. (Sir John Kempe.) Have you been the whole of your 38 years at Paisley?—Yes.

58,740. Did you never move from anywhere else?—Prior to that I was Chief Clerk in the Commissary Department, and I was solicited by the Sheriff Clerk to come downstairs and assist in the office. I knew something of the duties, because prior to being a clerk in the office I assisted with some of the work for the Sheriff Clerk. I was two years in the office as senior clerk before I was appointed depute.

58,741. What was your commencing salary?—80*l*.

58,742. That is higher than many of them?—But I had 90*l*. in the office which I left upstairs.

58,743. In the same place?—Yes, in the Commissary Department. It is the same place now. At that time there was mention of the merging of the two offices, the Commissary Department being joined with the Sheriff Clerk's Department. There was nothing said as to the joining of the Sheriff Clerk's Department with the Commissary Department—the junction was to be to the Sheriff Clerk's. Commissary clerks were to be joined to the Sheriff Clerks, and I had the inducement, if I went downstairs, that I was going up in salary and position.

58,744. You did not begin as depute?—No, but I knew the work pretty well prior to entering the office, at least in some cases.

58,745. Had you to wait for any length of time at one rate of salary?—Not very long. It was four years before I had 100*l*.

Mr. W. HORN, Mr. G. GILES, Mr. J. R. YEATES (Procurators Fiscal Depute for Midlothian, Glasgow, and Dumbarton respectively), called and examined.

58,746. (Chairman.) (To Mr. Horn.) Who is going to give evidence?—I am going to speak, and Mr. Giles and Mr. Yeates might be held as concurring.

58,747. You are Procurator Fiscal Depute for Midlothian?—Yes, Junior Procurator Fiscal; there are two deputes.

58,748. (Chairman.) (To Mr. Giles.) You are Procurator Fiscal Depute of Glasgow?—Senior Procurator Fiscal Depute; there are three deputes.

58,749. (Chairman.) (To Mr. Yeates.) What are you?—I am Procurator Fiscal Depute of Dumbarton. There is only one depute there.

58,750. (To Mr. Horn.) We have been told there are deputes who are remunerated and deputes who are honorary?—We are all remunerated.

58,751. How long have you held office?—I have been employed in the office for the past 31 years. For the first 14 years I was clerk, and for the remainder of the period I have been junior depute.

58,752. Had you any professional experience before that?—Before that I had served an apprenticeship with a practising agent under an indenture for five years. Thereafter I passed the Law Agents' examination, so that I am a qualified law agent.

58,753. There are Procurators Fiscal Depute and Clerks of Procurators Fiscal?—There are two classes.

58,754. How do you divide the duties of these two classes?—(1) Deputes who must be qualified and ready at any time to undertake any duty or responsibility which the Procurator Fiscal may undertake, and (2) clerks who have just the ordinary clerical work of the office to do.

58,755. Do deputes all give their whole time to their duties?—No. Some give whole time, and some part of their time.

58,756. On whose behalf is your present statement made?—It is very largely on behalf of whole-time deputes.

58,757. Are you speaking on behalf of an association?—No, there is no association of deputes or clerks.

58,758. What is your commission; is it to speak on behalf of the whole body?—It is after consultation with my two friends here, and one or two deputes in other places, to whom I have written.

58,759. Then you are speaking on behalf of a limited number whom you have consulted?—That is so.

58,760. Have you any reason to think your view represents the view of the whole body?—I feel certain it does—of all whole-time deputes.

58,761. What is the present method of appointment and tenure of office?—As stated in the memorial, the method of appointment and tenure of office is as follows :

“ At the present time there is no recognised or authorised method under which Procurators Fiscal obtain such deputes and clerks as they may from time to time require. In the large districts clerks are frequently drawn from among those who have spent some years in the office of a law agent, where they have acquired a legal training, while some may have served regular apprenticeships under indenture, and qualified as law agents. When vacancies occur in the office of depute, it is usually filled by a clerk who has for some years served as such either in the same or in another district. Sometimes the depute is a qualified law agent, and sometimes not. There is no rule and no general practice. In any case, he must have an extensive knowledge of criminal law and procedure, and possess qualities of decision of character, which are peculiarly called for in view of the responsible and delicate nature of the work he is called on to perform. Both deputes and clerks are engaged by each Procurator Fiscal under an ordinary contract of service, which may be terminated on either side on notice, which in no case is probably more than three months. No doubt a depute, before he can act as such, must have his appointment approved of by the Lord Advocate, which approval must be renewed yearly; but there is no contract between the Lord Advocate, as acting on behalf of the Crown, and the depute. The appointment of clerks does not require “ any such approval.”

58,762. What are the points which you wish to put before us, with reference to deputes?—The points are that we ought to be placed upon an established Civil Service, that our rates of remuneration ought to be fixed by the Treasury or the Exchequer, that our appointments ought to be held under the established Civil Service, that we ought to be promoted according to seniority, and raised from lower posts to higher posts, and that we ought to have pensions.

58,763. That may be summarised, as first, security of tenure; second, pensions; and third, a regular system of promotion?—Yes.

58,764. Does that cover the whole ground?—It does.

58,765. First, as regards fixity of tenure, when there is a change in the office of the Procurators Fiscal, are the deputes ever changed, too?—Certainly, there have been cases where deputes have been promoted to the office of Procurator Fiscal.

58,766. That was not precisely my point; where a new Procurator Fiscal is appointed, does he always continue the same deputes, or does he ever make a change and bring in his own man?—In my experience he retains the depute whom he finds in the office.

58,767. The point is whether the fixity of tenure is a theoretical or a practical point; have you, in fact, suffered from want of fixity of tenure?—I cannot say we have. I am bound to say that when a new Procurator Fiscal comes into the office, in all cases of which I know, he has retained in his service the deputes whom he found in office. That is my experience.

58,768. You have not heard of any cases of arbitrary dismissal?—I have not.

58,769. The second point is as regards pensions; you wish to be made pensionable?—Yes.

58,770. That applies specially to the whole-time staff?—Yes.

58,771. The ordinary Civil Service pensions would not apply to half-time service?—I see considerable difficulties in applying it so.

58,772. At what age do deputes generally become appointed?—I am afraid there is no age.

58,773. The Civil Service system of pensions is not very applicable where appointments are made rather late in life, but is only suitable when the men are appointed young; would it be the case that the deputes are appointed sufficiently young for the Civil Service system to be suitable?—I think in most cases they are, and it would be so, if an established Civil Service were constituted. If they were brought under the established system at a comparatively early age, say 20, they would begin as clerks, and then work up and be appointed deputes as vacancies occurred.

58,774. Are deputes ever promoted to be Procurators Fiscal?—There is a number of cases where they have, more especially recently. There have been a few in recent years.

58,775. That would form part of the regular system of promotion for which you ask?—Yes.

58,776. You ask that the door of promotion to the Procurator Fiscalship should be open?—Yes.

58,777. Do you also include in the system of promotion, promotion by transfer to different places?—Yes, we would like to see that.

58,778. The deputes of different places are remunerated by varying salaries?—They are.

58,779. A depute with a small salary might get promotion to the place of a depute at a larger salary?—Yes.

58,780. In working a system of that kind, would men be willing to move about freely for the purpose of getting promotion?—I think they would.

58,781. The suggestion has been made that the expense of removal and the difficulty of finding house accommodation, especially for a man with a family, would form obstacles to a system of that kind?—I answer that in this way, that I think they might get the opportunity of transferring to another place.

10 June 1915.]

Mr. W. HORN, Mr. G. GILES, and Mr. J. R. YEATES.

[Continued.]

58,782. They could then weigh for themselves the advantages or disadvantages?—Yes.

58,783. Do you anticipate that, as a rule, men would be prepared to move?—Yes, I do. Speaking for myself I can say that at any time in the last 25 years I would have been ready to move from one place to another.

58,784. Would the experience gained in one place be equally valuable at another?—Undoubtedly. Of course, the larger the district in which the depute is serving, the more experience he would gain.

58,785. The promotion would usually be by transfer from a smaller or less important place to a larger and more important place?—Yes.

58,786. It is suggested that the experience gained in a small place would not qualify a man for the work in much larger and busier places?—That is a matter of degree. There are certainly places where experience as a depute would mean very little, and would not be of much use to a man coming to a large district.

58,787. But from a middle-sized to a larger district, the experience would be valuable?—Yes.

58,788. It has also been suggested that the experience that a Procurator Fiscal or Depute has acquired has its value largely from the knowledge of persons and individuals, local habits and so forth that he gains, and that that particular kind of experience would be lost or become valueless; what do you say to that?—I don't think so. That is not the case.

58,789. You mean that particular kind of experience is not of value?—I don't think it is.

58,790. Is knowledge of individuals in a district not valuable for the work?—I don't think so—not in carrying out the official duties of Procurator Fiscal.

58,791. You mention in the paper you submitted to us the question of joining contiguous districts under one Procurator Fiscal; if that were done, would there be deputies in charge of sections of the enlarged district?—That, I know, is the proposal under the amalgamation scheme, but if I am to be allowed to say so, we are not supporters of the amalgamation scheme.

58,792. As regards salaries, what is your representation?—At present, the work in the office of a Procurator Fiscal is "farmed" out to the Procurator Fiscal. He and he alone is responsible to the Crown for the proper discharge of the duties. He is paid a lump sum which the Treasury, that is the Exchequer, considers sufficient to cover his remuneration and that of the staff; but the Crown has no responsibility for the conditions under which he employs his staff, and exercises no control over the number whom he employs, or the salaries he pays to them. He is left to employ such staff as he may consider necessary, and to make his own arrangements with them regarding salaries. In a few districts, the personal remuneration of the Procurators Fiscal is fixed by the Exchequer, and in addition he is paid a separate allowance for deputies and clerks, but he is left to divide this allowance among his staff in any way he can arrange. While this is no doubt economical to the State, the system of remuneration in both cases is unsatisfactory from the point of view of the staff. Obviously, it leaves no room for a system of periodical increments to the salaries of deputies and clerks. We ask that the Treasury should adjust the salaries of whole-time deputies and clerks upon scales which fix amount and increment, and that, in all cases, payment of these should be made direct.

58,793. In that case, by whom do you suggest the payment should be made?—By the Crown, the Lord Advocate.

58,794. Do you apply that to the clerks as well as to the deputies?—Yes, I suggest the clerks might be chosen by the Procurators Fiscal, and after a period of probation they might submit themselves to some kind of examination. After having qualified in that way, they ought to receive their appointment from the Crown.

58,795-6. Do you suggest that the deputies should as a rule be appointed by selection from among the clerks?—Yes, wherever possible.

58,797. It would only be when there was not a suitable person among the clerks that the appointment should be made from outside?—That is so.

58,798. Do you apply that same principle to the appointment of Procurators Fiscal?—Yes.

58,799. That is, if a fully qualified depute is available he would be appointed in preference to an outsider?—Yes. What we recommend would be that the Crown Agent should keep a list of deputies and clerks belonging to the established service, that the work of these deputies and clerks should be reported on from time to time, either by the Procurator Fiscal, under whom they work, or by the Sheriff or Sheriff Substitute, with whom they are often brought into personal contact, and that, on vacancies occurring, the claims of those on the list should be first considered, those on the list thereby having the satisfaction of knowing that, before the appointments are made, their claims had received some consideration.

58,800. (Mr. Graham Wallas.) If a new man is introduced into the Procurator Fiscal's staff, is he generally introduced at the bottom?—Not always. Assuming a depute is wanted, and the clerks on the staff are not able to supply one from among themselves, in that case a depute would be taken from outside.

58,801. Have you heard of cases where a depute was taken from outside, a relation of the Procurator Fiscal, or someone like that, and given a large proportion of the sum allowed for salaries?—I do not know of any such case. (Mr. Giles.) In Glasgow there are five clerks, some of them quite fit for the additional duties of depute, yet an outside man has been taken on.

58,802. (To Mr. Giles.) Is there any obvious reason for that; any relationship to the Procurator Fiscal?—No relationship whatever.

58,803. Is there no other obvious fact that would explain his appointment?—Not within my knowledge.

58,804. (To Mr. Yeates.) Have you ever heard of any such appointment?—No.

58,805. (To Mr. Horn.) Is it the usual practice for the Procurator Fiscal to be given a lump sum first to pay his own salary, and then those of the clerks, or to get a salary for himself and a sum to divide among the clerks and deputies?—Of the fifty Procurators Fiscal in Scotland, only two of them get their salaries allotted to themselves personally. In these two cases the sum paid by the Exchequer is divided; that is to say, the amount payable to the Procurator Fiscal personally is separate, and then there is a lump sum divided among the deputies and clerks as their remuneration.

58,806. There are only two cases where the Procurator Fiscal does not pay the clerks and deputies off a sum, and keep the rest himself?—That is so. In forty-eight cases he does that. He gets a lump sum, pays his clerks and deputies out of it, and what remains is his remuneration.

58,807. Is it in his own discretion how much he pays these deputies?—Wholly.

58,808. (Sir John Kempe.) You say a vacancy for a depute is usually filled by a clerk with experience?—Yes.

58,809. Sometimes he is a qualified law agent and sometimes not?—That is so.

58,810. You would not tie it down to qualified law agents; if a man has served well as a clerk, although he is not a law agent, is that sufficient?—Yes, I think the experience obtained in five or ten years' service as clerk in a Procurator Fiscal's office is quite as good as passing the Law Agents examination. The special knowledge which he gets in the office is such as he gets nowhere else.

58,811. The clerks are appointed deputies wherever possible?—Yes.

58,812. Where a man is brought in, is it because there is no man properly qualified in the office?—The man who is inside, if he is found fit, gets the post.

58,813. Speaking generally?—Yes, generally.

58,814. It is already done; but you wish a rule laid down to make it more definite?—That is so.

58,815. (Mr. Boutwood.) I gather from what you said to the Chairman, you are not in favour of the amalgamation scheme?—No.

10 June 1915.]

Mr. W. HORN, Mr. G. GILES, and Mr. J. R. YEATES.

[Continued.]

58,816. Why not?—Under the present system each Procurator Fiscal is personally responsible to the Lord Advocate, through the Crown Office, for the way in which he performs his duties in his own county or district. When in any difficulty he can, and often does, obtain from the Crown Office the directions of Crown counsel, and, so far as I know, this system works well in practice. The proposal to conjoin a number of already large districts or counties under one Procurator Fiscal would, we believe, lead to unnecessary responsibility and waste of time. What is wanted in each district is a responsible official to act at once on the spot, and, if experienced men are appointed in each district, they ought to be quite competent to deal with any ordinary duty. Many things with which they have to deal are urgent, and it would be impracticable in many cases to obtain the advice of what I might call the senior Procurator Fiscal over the district. The depute might at a particular moment be faced with a question of applying for a warrant to apprehend, and it might lead to disastrous results if he could not apply, but had to wait to consult his senior, who might be 40 or 50 miles distant.

58,817. There is considerable weight of authority behind the proposal that the number of Sheriff Clerks should be brought down to 15; could you put in a sentence or two what seems to you to be the cardinal difference between the Sheriff Clerk's establishment and the Procurator Fiscal's establishment?—I think the Procurator Fiscal's duties are more urgent.

58,818. That is the point; you want him on the spot more than in the case of the Sheriff Clerk?—Yes.

58,819. (Lord Dundas.) How many Depute Procurators Fiscal are there in Scotland?—I should say there is one in each district, but in several of the districts there are more than one.

58,820. Would you say there are, roughly, 50?—Roughly, between 50 and 60.

58,821. That is good enough; how many clerks will there be in the Fiscals' offices in Scotland?—I cannot tell you. (Mr. Yeates.) In my own case, Dumbarton, the depute acts as clerk.

58,822. (To Mr. Yeates.) The number of clerks would not be very large?—Excepting Glasgow and Edinburgh, I should think there would be very few.

58,823. (To Mr. Horn.) Is it your view that all the Depute Procurators Fiscal should be put on a Civil Service basis?—Of course that raises a practical difficulty.

58,824. I know?—I quite see it. I am aware of it. It is in the smaller places that the difficulty lies. In many of these smaller places the depute is not paid at all, but merely holds an honorary appointment. He is the personal friend of the Procurator Fiscal, and agrees to act for him in cases where the Procurator Fiscal cannot act himself. That system prevails in many of the smaller districts in Scotland.

58,825. In your view should all the deputes and clerks get pensions?—All the whole-time deputes and clerks.

58,826. You say all the whole-time deputes?—Yes.

58,827. In speaking of putting whole-time deputes on a Civil Service basis, is pension what is really aimed at?—Yes, and that the scales of remuneration should approach more nearly to Civil Service scales.

58,828. That is what you mean when you talk of putting them on a Civil Service basis?—Rather better remuneration and pensions, also better chances of promotion.

58,829. You say also better chances of promotion. Is there anything now to prevent people moving from place to place if they wish it, and if the superior person in the other place wanted them to do so?—No; but at the present time, there is no system of letting the vacancies be known.

58,830. You want to advertise them?—Yes, and that is provided by the proposed list of deputes and clerks kept by the Crown Agent.

58,831. That would meet your point?—Yes.

58,832. Therefore, the idea of a Civil Service basis, which sometimes puzzles my imagination, really amounts to rather better remuneration and a pension of some sort?—Yes.

58,833. Have your bodies or associations thought out how that basis should be accomplished if the authorities were willing to do so?—Do you mean the pension scheme?

58,834. Yes, and the better remuneration?—I am afraid we have not attempted to work it out.

58,835. I am not blaming you, but you have not attempted it?—No, mainly because of the difficulty connected with those who are not whole-time officers.

58,836. There may be difficulties, but these are the directions in which your aspirations go?—Yes.

58,837. (Sir George Paul.) How many whole-time deputes do you think there are?—So far as I can make out at the present time there are only from 12 to 15.

58,838. (Chairman.) (To Mr. Yeates.) Have you anything to add?—No, our position is pretty well covered in the memorial. (Mr. Giles.) You put a question as to moving from a small district to a larger one being an advantage. I think it is an advantage. For many years I was in Dundee, and removed to Glasgow and found it an advantage.

58,839. Otherwise than as regards salary?—As regards salary it was also an advantage.

58,840. Was it an advantage apart from salary?—It was an advantage also from experience.

58,841. Did you find your experience in Dundee was sufficient?—It fitted me for Glasgow. But for that experience I could not have taken the Glasgow post. Permit me to voice the position of the clerks in Glasgow. They are in a somewhat different position from the clerks in the other districts.

58,842. How many are there?—There are five at present. The work in Glasgow is about a third of the whole of the work in Scotland in criminal cases. It is heavy and embraces all classes of crime, statutory and otherwise. It is impossible for the Procurator Fiscal himself to do everything. Certain work, and some very responsible work, is put on the clerks. They have to do that, and work it out, using their brain and making the best of what they have. Certainly it is submitted to the Procurator Fiscal, and after it has passed him, it goes to the Crown Office. Accordingly their claim is entitled to some consideration.

58,843. Is their claim the same as yours?—No, we deputes in Glasgow have no grievance so far as salaries are concerned. The clerks have a grievance that they are underpaid, and are not paid commensurate with the duties they perform. There is a memorial they have made out. I do not know whether you will receive it or not.

58,844. I will look at it?—They desire me to put it in, and as their representative and as depute in Glasgow, I do so.

Mr. JOHN TOLMIE and Mr. ANDREW L. BORTHWICK, called and examined.

58,845. (Chairman.) (To Mr. Tolmie.) You are an engrossing clerk in the Register of Deeds?—Yes.

58,846. How long have you been at that work?—I went into the Register of Deeds in 1884, but for seven years prior to that I was in the Sasine Office.

58,847. (To Mr. Borthwick.) You are also an engrosser in the Register of Deeds?—Yes.

58,848. (To Mr. Tolmie.) We have before us the statement you sent in. From it I see you are paid by piecework at the rate of 6d. per page of 200 words for recording, and 8d. per sheet of 250 for extracts?—That is so.

58,849. How long have these rates been in existence? They have been in use for some years. In the case of the Record they were framed 100 years ago, and in the case of Extracts, 40 years ago.

58,850. Are the same rates paid in the Register of Sasines?—Yes, practically the same. We are paid by the sheet, but in the Extracts they are paid by the page.

10 June 1915.]

Mr. JOHN TOLMIE and Mr. ANDREW L. BORTHWICK.

[Continued.]

58,851. Does it come to the same thing?—Not at all.

58,852. Which is the better?—Payment by the sheet.

58,853. You are better off by being paid by the sheet?—Yes.

58,854. What is the rate in the Sasine Office?—In the Sasine Office the clerks are paid 6½d. per page.

58,855. (Lord Dundas.) Why is it better to be paid by the sheet than by the page?—If a deed is six sheets and 20 words over, that is counted seven sheets.

58,856. In the other case it would be only one extra page?—Yes.

58,857. A sheet is two pages?—Yes.

58,858. (Chairman.) Was the additional ½d. to the engrossers in the Sasine Office added as a result of the Committee's decision?—Yes.

58,859. That was in respect of the certificates on deeds?—Yes.

58,860. Have you any complaint to make about the rates you are paid?—We would like to get something in the way of sick pay and holiday pay, because when we are laid up it is at our own expense, and when we are on holiday it is also at our own expense.

58,861. Have you any mutual arrangement for providing holidays or sick pay?—No.

58,862. Have you thought of instituting an arrangement of that kind?—No, the office is so small.

58,863. How many are in it?—20 altogether, four of whom are with the forces.

58,864. In another office of the same kind, of which we have information, an arrangement is in force under which, if a man is away sick, a certain amount of work is done for him by those still at work, and he thus receives a certain amount of sick pay?—That would not work in our place.

58,865. Why not?—There are so few of us.

58,866. There would be fewer away sick?—It has never been mooted in our place. We never heard of that before. (Mr. Borthwick.) There are so many clerks in our department making small salaries.

58,867. (Chairman.) What do you consider a fair average amount to earn?—We range from about 8l. or 9l. a month up to 17l. or 18l. by fast writers. Very few draw anything like the latter figures. Mr. Tolmie is about the only one who draws 17l. or 18l.

58,868. (To Mr. Tolmie.) Are you a fast writer?—Yes.

58,869. What do you earn?—220l. a year. (Mr. Borthwick.) None of the other clerks approaches anything like that, and it is only by working excessive hours that Mr. Tolmie is able to make it.

58,870. (To Mr. Tolmie.) How many hours do you work?—From about 9.30 till about 6 without any break.

58,871. Eight and a half hours?—Yes.

58,872. All the year round?—Yes, except when I am on holiday.

58,873. How long holidays do you take?—An average of three weeks. (Mr. Borthwick.) We are compelled to take three weeks.

58,874. (To Mr. Tolmie.) You have no system of pensions?—None whatever.

58,875. Is that one of the things you ask?—Yes, we are very keen about that. (Mr. Borthwick.) As the clerks get older their incomes decrease, and they are not able to provide anything for their old age. The continuous strain of the work comes very hard on the older men. (Mr. Tolmie.) Our Keeper characterises the work as "white slavery."

58,876. You have a Government gratuity on retirement?—Yes, that is the only thing. (Mr. Borthwick.)

That is after 15 years' service. It is about 2l. 5s. for every year you have been in the service.

58,877. (To Mr. Tolmie.) The point you specially put forward is that you would like a system of pensions and some arrangement for sick leave and holidays?—Yes.

58,878. (Sir George Paul.) The trouble in your department is that, when you are young, there is great enticement to go in, because you are vigorous and can write fast?—Yes.

58,879. But when you get old you write slow and make less money?—Yes.

58,880. It is a diminishing income?—It can never be an increasing income, because we have to write legibly, correctly, and well.

58,881. You have to copy into the register and then copy the extracts?—Yes. (Mr. Borthwick.) Some of the work is holograph wills, difficult to decipher, and sometimes a great deal of time is wasted, and some days we do not make much on that account.

58,882. Do you get anything for collation?—The last keeper was very good to us, and gave a little extra for the difficulty we had in ciphering the words.

58,883. (Chairman.) You misunderstand the question; do you receive any payment for collation?—No.

58,884. (Sir George Paul.) (To Mr. Tolmie.) Yours is not like the Sasine Office.—No.

58,885. A half page counts as a whole page, and you can make something that way?—Half a page sometimes counts as a sheet—250 words to each sheet.

58,886. The engrossers in the Sasine Office have a sick society?—Yes.

58,887. Have you never thought of joining that big body?—We tried, but they would not allow us.

58,888. Would they not?—No. (Mr. Borthwick.) The two offices believe in keeping to themselves. (Mr. Tolmie.) That is a distinctive part.

58,889. (Sir George Paul.) You are not antagonistic to each other?—No.

58,890. But they did not see their way to allow you to join?—No.

58,891. (Mr. Graham Wallas.) You know it would not be in accordance with precedents for the Government at once to admit men of middle age to rights to full pensions in respect of back services?—I understand that.

58,892. How old are you?—55 years of age.

58,893. You would hardly expect to get at the age of 65 a pension representing two-thirds of your present earnings?—I think I saw something in the first report of the Civil Service Commission to the effect that clerks who have been permanent for a great many years would be put on an establishment.

58,894. But, if you remember also, they would be put on an establishment with certain diminished pension rights, allowing certain amounts for their past service, but not the whole of it?—We would take what we could get.

58,895. Have you ever thought whether you would fall in with a scheme which would be contributory, the Government allowing a certain amount to meet what was given by you?—We would be very glad to see anything of that kind. (Mr. Borthwick.) In the case of extracts, more often than otherwise, we have "bad jobs." A "bad job" means that you write down to the foot of an even page, perhaps over to the next page, with the extracting docket and stamp docket, and backing-up. We do not get any payment for these items, and it means a loss of 8d. In a "good job" it must go about half-way down the odd page, and that covers the backing.

58,896. How do you mean you lose 8d.?—It is time spent in backing-up and stitching.

ONE HUNDRED AND FORTIETH DAY.

Friday, 11th June 1915.

PRESENT:

SIR HENRY BABINGTON SMITH, K.C.B., C.S.I. (Chairman).

The Hon. LORD DUNDAS.
 SIR DONALD MACALISTER, K.C.B.
 SIR JOHN ARROW KEMPE, K.C.B.
 SIR GEORGE MORISON PAUL.
 MR. ARTHUR BOUTWOOD.

MR. JOHN ROBERT CLYNES, M.P.
 MR. PERCY EWING MATHESON.
 MR. ARTHUR EVERETT SHIPLEY, F.R.S.
 MR. GRAHAM WALLAS.
 MISS HALDANE.

MR. E. W. H. MILLAR (Secretary).

The Hon. LORD SALVESEN, called and examined.

58,897. (Chairman.) Will you be good enough to tell us what legal offices you have held?—I became a member of the Scottish Bar in 1880, and took silk in 1899. In 1900 I was appointed Sheriff of the Border counties of Roxburgh, Berwick, and Selkirk. I was appointed Solicitor-General for Scotland in February 1905, and six months later I became a member of the Bench of the Court of Session. I served for about five years in the Outer House, then for a year in the First Division. Since then I have been sitting in the Second Division.

58,898. You were also Chairman of the Departmental Committee on Minor Legal Appointments in Scotland?—Yes. We heard a great deal of evidence on Minor Legal Appointments, and I signed the Majority Report. There were two Minority Reports, but the two gentlemen, Sir William Haldane and Mr. MacGregor Mitchell, who signed the First Minority Report also signed the Majority Report, merely differing from us on some more or less unimportant details. The only real dissent was that of Mr. Watt, a Member of Parliament for Glasgow, who took a very comprehensive view of the situation, and apparently was very much enamoured of uniformity, which we thought was impossible to apply to offices so varied as these with which we were dealing.

58,899. The Commission have before them the Report of your Committee, and also the evidence?—Yes.

58,900. The legal offices which are at present being examined by the Commission include all those which were examined by your Lordship's Committee, and also certain others, such as the Sheriff Clerks, the Procurators Fiscal, and their staffs, and the Register House Departments, which are not included in your report?—Yes.

58,901. Dealing first with the question of appointment, we have learned that except in the Register House Department, the appointment is, generally speaking, by nomination; in some cases the appointments are Crown appointments, in which event the nomination is in fact and in practice made by the Lord Advocate?—Yes, so I understand.

58,902. We have had evidence from various witnesses as to the extent to which political considerations enter into these appointments; we should be glad to have your views upon that aspect of the matter?—I think that whatever theoretical objections there are to political appointments, and, of course, they can be stated very forcibly, hitherto they have not worked badly in Scotland. I account for that by the fact that there is always a sufficient number of qualified persons on each side of politics from which to make a selection. I have not myself ever exercised any patronage, and can, therefore, speak in quite an unbiassed way. I think the profession are very keen critics of appointments, and that the safeguard that the person appointed will be duly qualified lies to a large extent in that fact, and in the desire of the Lord Advocate of the day to maintain his professional reputation. The Lord Advocate comes in contact very closely with his brethren at the Bar, and anything in the nature of an unsuitable appointment he would hear a great deal about, and be made rather unhappy over it. I think that prevents the appointments being otherwise than extremely well made, on the whole. I cannot myself recall any really bad appointment. Perhaps there have been one or two persons who turned out most disappointingly after they had been appointed. That happens, I should say, with every form of appointment, but, on the whole, I should say the system in Scotland has worked extremely well. Sometimes it may be that when a particular party has been very long in power, there may be persons on the opposite side of politics who do not get appointments, and who would be better qualified for them than any person who is in the other camp. That happens, I should say, more in the higher appointments than in the case of those with which you are dealing.

58,903. Which appointments do you mean by "higher appointments"?—I mean the judicial appointments, for instance, whether to the Supreme or Inferior Courts. You may gradually exhaust all the most suitable men of one party, if a particular party has been very long in power, but, on the principle of the parties being in power for approximately equal periods over a considerable stretch of time, I think you would always get good appointments.

58,904. Assuming that to be the case, and assuming that the appointments made on that system can always be good, is it not, nevertheless, undesirable for the profession in general that that should be the only road to official preferment?—I think so. I think that as much as possible, in the case of these minor appointments with which you are dealing, that there should be appointments made from within. But I do not think it is possible with the large number of appointments and the small number of people who are capable of being promoted, that you can get rid of outside appointments altogether.

58,905. Your answer on that point appears to me to assume that outside appointments and political appointments are absolutely synonymous; is that necessarily the case?—I think you may say it is nearly always the case.

58,906. You are aware that in the past postmaster-ships, and more recently still sub-postmaster-ships, were to a large extent political appointments, made, as a rule, on the recommendation of the member for the constituency in which the vacancy occurred?—Yes.

58,907. That system has now, I believe, entirely ceased. Postmaster-ships are appointments in the regular service which are filled from below?—Yes.

58,908. Sub-postmaster-ships are still given to persons from outside the service, but not on a political basis; do you conceive it possible that a similar change might take place in regard to legal appointments?—I do not know what alternative there can be, or in whom the power of appointment could be vested.

58,909. Is it impossible, if the appointment remains in the hands of a Minister, that he should act upon the principle of selecting the person best fitted, irrespective of his politics?—If he can disassociate himself entirely from politics, it would be much better. The difficulty is to assume that any person, who is in a position, which he has attained through politics, would not naturally have a bias in favour of the people with whom he had been most associated, and, as between two equally qualified persons, that he should not prefer

11 June 1915.]

The Hon. LORD SALVESEN.

[Continued.]

the one of his own way of thinking in political matters. For instance, if you vested the appointment, say, in the President of the Court of Session, while he has disassociated himself entirely from politics, I think it would be difficult to say he has entirely got rid of his political views, or that he has not got a political bias. At the same time, of course, there would not be in that case the same amount of wire-pulling as there would be, perhaps, in the case of a Minister of the Crown.

58,910. Have you considered the effect which the system of outside appointment has upon the Service itself and the junior officers in the Service?—Yes.

58,911. From the expression of opinion on that point contained in the Report of your Committee, I gather you think that is detrimental to the lower grades of the Service?—I think it is, and the only drastic proposal that we made involved the abolition of 19 of the Sheriff Clerks, who are appointed by the Lord Advocate or the Secretary for Scotland, and the substitution of depute clerks, who would be promoted from below and might pass from one Sheriff Court, where there was little to do, to others where there was more and where they would get higher pay. We went, therefore, carefully into that matter. That part of the report was drafted by Sheriff Maconochie, who has had much experience in Sheriff Court work. I considered it carefully at the time, and I thought it seemed to offer the best way of dealing with the Sheriff Clerks, who cannot be dealt with on any uniform system.

58,912. You also made recommendations, tending in the same direction, with regard to the offices in the Court of Session?—Yes, but there the staff is so small that you really cannot get a sufficient number to promote, because the people who have purely clerical work are not fit for the offices of, say, Clerk of Court or Assistant Clerk of Court.

58,913. You would not include among the posts requiring purely clerical knowledge the clerks in the Bill Chamber or the Extractor's Office?—Not the Assistant Extractor or the junior clerks in the Bill Chamber, but, in the Extractor's Office, there are a few clerks who require nothing but good penmanship.

58,914. Are they purely engrossers?—Yes, and they are not capable of a higher appointment.

58,915. They are naturally on a different basis?—Yes.

58,916. In your recommendation in regard to the Court of Session this sentence occurred: "In order to minimise the number of political appointments, which were considered inexpedient in the case of minor officials, amongst whom we do not include the heads of departments . . ." Is that to be understood as meaning that you did not consider political appointments undesirable in the case of heads of departments?—I should certainly always prefer, if you can get a good man promoted from below, that he should have the first opportunity of getting these appointments. The practical way which I thought it might work out was this: We have, for instance, in the Outer House, four clerks and four assistant clerks. In the Inner House we have two clerks and two assistants. I am not speaking now of the principal clerk, whose appointment I think should generally be from outside. If it were necessary to make an appointment from outside, I think it would be better to make it to the assistant clerkship, and let the assistant clerk, if he were qualified otherwise, be promoted to be Clerk of Court. I say so for two reasons, first because very often the assistant clerk, who has had the experience and has the qualifications, may have to train his master for a period, before that master is fit to do the work, although the master is getting a much higher salary than he is receiving; and again, because it does not encourage men in that position to do their best, if they are always passed over when the Clerk of Court dies and the Lord Advocate appoints his own clerk to that position.

58,917. You made a reservation in your recommendations in favour of the Lord Advocate's clerk?—Yes.

58,918. What was the ground of that reservation?—I think it is almost necessary that a Lord Advocate's clerk should have the chance of being put into some appointment, when he practically loses his living on the Lord Advocate going on the Bench, as, in ordinary course, he does. The Lord Advocate's clerk has the qualifications necessary for these appointments in virtue of the position and experience he has had.

58,919. Do you think he is always a suitable person from the experience that he has had?—I think I may say he has had the necessary training for becoming a Clerk of Court.

58,920. (Lord Dundas.) Do you mean you would put him in as assistant and allow him to become a Depute Clerk in his turn?—Yes, that is what should be done in the interests of the Service. I think he ought not to be appointed to the principal clerkship so long as there is an assistant clerk qualified for the office, but that he ought to be given an assistant clerkship to provide for him when he loses his livelihood.

58,921. (Chairman.) Fitness for the post would depend on his personal qualifications as well as his professional experience?—He has always been associated for a long time with the Parliament House. That can be taken for granted. Therefore he has come in contact with a great deal of procedure and has made himself more or less acquainted with the procedure.

58,922. (Sir George Paul.) The fact that he has been the Lord Advocate's clerk is sufficient in itself for the appointment?—If he had not been the Lord Advocate's clerk for years before, probably not, but, as a rule, the Lord Advocate's clerk is a person who has been his clerk for many years, and has been employed in matters which necessarily involve a certain knowledge of procedure. I should think also, for the most part, he has some legal qualifications, having been either trained in a solicitor's office or being actually a passed law agent.

58,923. (Chairman.) You recommended that certain qualifications should be required of future entrants, as regards examinations that they should pass. Was it the intention that they should pass the Law Agents examination, or some examination for legal attainments?—Yes.

58,924. Was it the intention that that condition should apply to the Lord Advocate's clerk?—No, I do not think it was. I think we really recommended that the Lord Advocate's clerk might also be regarded as eligible because of the inveterate custom to appoint him to some office when the Lord Advocate has a chance of providing for him. I do not think it has been found in the past that such appointments have been any worse than other appointments. You may take it that the man is generally sufficiently qualified for the position of Assistant Clerk of Court.

58,925. Does that also apply to judges' clerks?—I think judges' clerks very seldom get any promotion. I have never heard of them being promoted.

58,926. In your report you made a reservation in favour of judges' clerks as well as the clerk to the Lord Advocate?—It so happens that, as a rule, they possess the same qualifications as the Lord Advocate's clerk, sometimes higher qualifications.

58,927. Would they in many cases pass such examinations as you have specified?—Yes. For instance, my own clerk is a law agent, and a very qualified person. The fact is that the judges' clerks are drawn upon as a reserve in case of illness of the Clerks of Court. We have the minimum staff in the Court of Session at present, and things are likely to be thrown out of gear by the illness of one or two officials. It has been found in such cases that the judges' clerks, who have not a great deal to do, are quite able to take their place, and to form the necessary reserve. I might give you an illustration of how we have to interchange the officials in the different courts, because of our being run upon a minimum basis. In the Second Division we have two clerks. Both are in attendance between 10 and 1 o'clock. After 1 o'clock one of them requires to go down to the Register House to give out processes and allow agents to copy interlocutors and such like. If a judge of the Second Division is sitting taking evidence in a separate court, as not infrequently happens where we have allowed additional proof, then there is no clerk available for him to look after the process, which may sometimes be a process running into hundreds of numbers, and which must be made available at any moment to the witnesses. In a case like that we had to borrow one of the clerks of the First Division. It so happened Mr. Adam, who is the principal clerk, took his place, and we were able to get Mr. Paton; but if a judge of the First Division had been sitting taking a proof, or otherwise engaged in one of the courts, such as, say, the Valuation Court, or some of the courts that are occasionally held, it would have been impossible to get the necessary official. In such a case we should have probably have had recourse to my own clerk to do the work. I am not complaining in the least that we are under-staffed, because under normal conditions I think we have just enough to do the work properly, and no more. We have no reserve unless we draw on the judges' clerks in an occasional emergency.

11 June 1915.]

The Hon. LORD SALVESEN.

[Continued.]

58,928. You told us that the appointments, speaking generally, are in the hands of the Lord Advocate?—Yes.

58,929. Do you consider it the right system, that these appointments should be made by him?—Personally, I am not enamoured of political appointments (I have no experience of making them), but the difficulty is to suggest some better system. If you had the President of the Court, I think that that, theoretically, would be better. On the other hand, the President might hold office for many years, and, perhaps, his political bias might be such as not to enable him to do justice to the merits of those who had been formerly opposed to him.

58,930. Has he not abandoned his political bias as soon as he reaches the Bench?—Well, it is sometimes revived, as one knows, when a President is promoted to the House of Lords and takes an active part in the proceedings of that assembly. I do not think politics ever cease to be more or less part of a man's nature, when he has been active in them.

58,931. (Sir George Paul.) So you are up against a wall; if you do not have the Lord Advocate there is nobody?—I am just indicating that, while I think the President would be the better of the two, there are disadvantages attached to him, which do not attach to the nomination of the Lord Advocate, who might hold office only for a few years, when a member of the other party might come into power and have the appointments.

58,932. (Chairman.) The suggestion has been made that the appointing authority should be assisted by a permanent and impartial committee, who would examine the merits of candidates, and report to the appointing authority, the ultimate appointment being made by the latter?—I am not in favour of that. It would divide the responsibility. You would not be able to charge any individual with the responsibility of a bad appointment. There would be nobody to whom the committee would answer.

58,933. The responsibility would rest with the Minister who would be responsible to Parliament for the appointment, but he would naturally have to justify his action if he acted against the recommendation of the committee?—It seems to me it is like the judge and jury. It would be very hard to make a judge responsible for the verdict of a jury with which he entirely disagreed, so, in the same way, with a committee. If you have an appointment vested in half a dozen people, you do not have each of them applying their minds to the question, nor is there a sense of individual responsibility. Besides, our country is really so small, and our appointments so few, that the Lord Advocate, as the person who has more local knowledge than any member of committee could have, has better means of judging of the qualifications of a candidate. I say the same, of course, in regard to the Lord President, who would have an equally good knowledge. Members of the legal profession are more or less known to each other, at all events, by repute.

58,934. (Sir George Paul.) You say the Lord Advocate has every means of acquiring knowledge of the qualifications of candidates, but does it not come to this, that the usual practice has been that he always appoints his own clerk?—Yes, that is for the reason that it is the inveterate custom that he ought to make some provision for the man who has served him faithfully.

58,935. That is independent of the qualifications of the outside world?—Yes. I do not think a clerk is chosen because he is the best man. At the same time, he is generally a perfectly qualified man.

58,936. That is really an appointment which the Lord Advocate's clerk always gets?—If there is always a Lord Advocate's clerk to appoint.

58,937. (Chairman.) You have no suggestion to make as to alterations in the method of appointment?—No, I do not think the idea of the committee would be a good one. I think the appointments should be made by one person who should be responsible for them to the profession. I do think the prestige of the Lord Advocate is always very seriously affected, if he makes a bad appointment. He is really subject to the public opinion, of the profession, and that controls the appointment. He may not choose the best man, because he may be on the other side of politics, but he will choose a reasonably good man for the public service.

58,938. The public opinion of the profession is exercised as a means of preventing bad appointments, but not necessarily of securing the best appointments?—That is so.

58,939. (Sir George Paul.) So the selection may be a reasonably good one, without being the best?—Yes.

58,940. A very good Parliament House clerk might be found who would be better than a Lord Advocate's clerk?—Yes.

58,941. (Sir Donald MacAlister.) The new Advocate has to select another clerk?—Yes.

58,942. In a year or two he has to give that clerk an appointment after he has only served a short time?—He may, but that clerk has not the same claim on him.

58,943. But is he usually appointed?—I have no knowledge of that.

58,944. (Lord Dundas.) I do not think we have any such knowledge of that in this Commission?—I may say to a certain extent the Report for which I was partly responsible proceeded along the lines of least resistance with a view to securing what we thought necessary reform, without running up against too many sharp corners.

58,945. (Chairman.) Your Report recommended certain legal qualifications for these offices. You consider that qualifications of that nature are very desirable?—I think they are essential. With regard to all the appointments which I think you are dealing with here, I think legal qualifications are essential. It is no use a man being a good classic or a good mathematician or anything of that sort, but the important thing is that he should know about Scotch law and procedure. He may be a great ass in every other respect, but if he is thoroughly qualified as regards Scotch law and procedure he is the man to appoint.

58,946. You think that certain qualifications in these respects ought to be acquired before he enters the office. You think it is not convenient that his knowledge should be entirely acquired by practice in the office?—I do not think a man could get a good knowledge of law unless he attended classes at the University, or was in a solicitor's office and came in contact with it in that way.

58,947. Would it be correct to say that the general effect of your Report was that the offices most directly connected with the Court of Session, namely, the Clerks of Court, the Extractor's Office—to which the work of the keeper of the minute book was to be attached—and the Bill Chamber should be brought closer together in the sense that there should be a larger practice of interchange and promotion between those different branches than there is at present, and that they should be more directly under the control of the Principal Clerk of Session than they are at present?—Yes. I may say, however, that I think you will more easily get a qualified man, for instance, for an assistant clerkship of Court than for the post of assistant extractor or assistant clerk in the Bill Chamber. I think that at all events for the position of assistant clerk in the Bill Chamber you require higher qualifications than for any of these other appointments, because the number of Acts of Parliament and Acts of Sederunt which he must make himself thoroughly and practically acquainted with is very much larger in the case of the assistant clerk of the Bill Chamber; and, besides, the assistant clerk of Court, where he has any difficulty, is under the immediate supervision of the judge, to whom he can refer on any question of difficulty with regard to interlocutors. In the Bill Chamber, on the other hand, they are left very much to their own resources, because, especially in vacation, the departments are run by clerks entirely.

11 June 1915.]

The Hon. LORD SALVESEN.

[Continued.]

58,948. I suppose the special knowledge required for the work of the Bill Chamber must be largely acquired in the Bill Chamber itself?—I think so, but you ought to have a good knowledge of law before you start in it. I mean you ought to be a qualified law agent, I think, before you are an assistant clerk in the Bill Chamber.

58,949. In any case, you would keep the department of the Clerk of Justiciary and the Teinds Department entirely separate?—Oh, they must be. I do not think there is any doubt about that. I have never heard anybody saying that you could promote a clerk of the Bill Chamber, or a clerk of the Extractor's Office, or a clerk in the Court of Session to be Teind clerk. He is quite unfitted for the work. I do not believe there is a member of the profession except the existing Clerk of Teinds and his assistant who could prepare a proper locality. Indeed, I do not think there is any member on the Bench who could do it. I think it is not so difficult or technical a subject but what a very intelligent man, by applying himself to it for some months and going through previous localities and so on, could acquire the requisite knowledge, but he would in the first place need to be a man of special qualifications, and he would need to give special application to it before he could do the work.

58,950. (Sir George Paul.) It is a special gift. The man must have to some extent an antiquarian taste as well as be a man of figures—gifts which you do not find in the Bill Chamber or in Assistant Clerks of Session?—You certainly would not find it amongst the Clerks of Court or the Assistant Clerks of Court.

58,951. (Chairman.) A large number of the appointments we have been speaking of are direct Crown appointments, as, for instance, the Assistant Clerk of the Bill Chamber. Is there any reason for maintaining the system of direct Crown appointment for any except the highest offices?—Personally, I do not see any reason. I do not see why the appointments should not be made by the Secretary for Scotland.

58,952. The direct Crown appointment has the effect, has it not, of withdrawing the person who is appointed from the necessity of obtaining a Civil Service certificate, and, therefore, from all scrutiny as regards health and other matters by the Civil Service Commissioners?—Yes.

58,953. Do you agree that it would be desirable that the persons appointed should be required to satisfy the Civil Service Commissioners in those respects?—I think it would be desirable, but I do not think there has been much, if any, practical inconvenience caused, because all our offices are so small that the Crown nominee is under the direct personal supervision of his superior.

58,954. At any rate, as regards health it might be desirable to have an examination before admission to such offices?—I think so; certainly.

58,955. Turning now to the Sheriff Court Service, your Committee made certain recommendations concerning the organisation of that service and the method of appointment to it. The essential points of those recommendations were, I think, in the first place a reduction in the number of Sheriff Clerks, so that in future there would be one Sheriff Clerk only in each sheriffdom, and secondly, the division of the deputes into two classes—a special class to be employed where whole-time service was required; and another class, which would consist of part-time deputes, whose services would not be pensionable?—That is so.

58,956. The Sheriff Clerks and the special class of deputes were to be appointed by the Crown—that is to say, on the nomination of the Lord Advocate—and the remainder of the deputes and the rest of the staff of the Sheriff Clerk offices were to be appointed by the Sheriff Clerk, as at present?—Yes. The great difficulty is because of the small amount of work these people have to do in some of the Sheriff Courts. There is so little doing that it would be simply a waste of public money to pay a man for whole time when he is only giving perhaps an hour per day to the work, and you can get the work performed perfectly well on the present system, and you get it much more economically.

58,957. Did you frame any estimate of the number of posts of deputes who would be included in the special class?—I do not think we indicated the number. I should not think myself that it would be a very large number. It would be confined to the larger towns only.

58,958. It would include, I suppose, the deputes created in the place of the Sheriff Clerks whose posts would be reduced under the suggested scheme?—Well, I do not think necessarily even that. I think a great many of them would not be full-timers at all, nor even half-timers. The sheriffdom I had experience of was that of the border counties—Roxburgh, Berwick, and Selkirk. In none of these places, so far as I know, were the duties of the Sheriff Clerk sufficient to absorb his whole time, and, of course, if you substitute a depute clerk the duties would not be sufficient there either. In fact, in all the rural counties where you have no industries, and very little litigation, and very little crime, you will find that the Sheriff Clerk does not need to devote more than a comparatively small part of his time to the duties of his office, and in the case of the Depute Sheriff Clerk it is just the same. No doubt he has to give attendances at stated hours. I do not think that the special class would include anyone except those who are really whole-timers. Of course, in Edinburgh you have whole-timers; you have also whole-timers in Glasgow, Aberdeen, Dundee, and probably Perth, and in some of the larger centres—in industrial districts like Lanarkshire, and so on. But, if you dealing with the rural and Highland districts, the work is not sufficient to employ a man for his whole time.

58,959. (Sir Donald MacAlister.) The number need not exceed 10, I suppose?—I would not think it would exceed 10 or 15. But these people, I believe, have a most substantial grievance under the present system. I really think they are the only people connected with our courts who have a very serious grievance as regards want of chance of promotion and under-payment for the work they do.

58,960. (Lord Dundas.) Who are these people you refer to?—I mean the people second in command in one of the larger Sheriff Courts like Edinburgh, for instance; the man who is not the Sheriff Clerk, but just his depute.

58,961. (Sir Donald MacAlister.) You mean the whole-time depute?—Yes.

58,962. (Chairman.) You would remedy that grievance by improving their pay and by making them pensionable. The Report of your Committee did not contain any express recommendation on the latter point, but I gather that it is your view that the Sheriff Clerks who are retained under the system, and also the special class of deputes, should be made pensionable?—Yes. Wherever you compel a man to give up all his other work for his appointment there, I think, he should be made pensionable. On the other hand, where you allow him to conduct other work, he ought not to be pensionable. Under the present system Sheriff Clerks do conduct other work in a good many cases, and that, I think, is desirable in the public interest, as it must save the public purse a very large amount of money.

58,963. As regards prospects, you would lay down that the special class of deputes should always be considered for promotion if there is a vacancy amongst the Sheriff Clerks?—Yes.

58,964. We have had evidence from some of the subordinate staff in the Sheriff Court offices with reference both to their rate of pay and also to their prospects.

11 June 1915.]

The Hon. LORD SALVESSEN.

[Continued.]

Is it practicable to extend the principles you have suggested further, and to introduce some scheme of promotion for the subordinate staff of the Sheriff Clerks?—Yes, in the case of the larger Sheriff Courts, I think so. I think it would be desirable that these people, say in Glasgow Sheriff Court or in Edinburgh Sheriff Court, should be able to rise to the position of depute.

58,965. And you would lay down that their fitness should be considered before any outside appointment was made?—I think so.

58,966. It was suggested also that it would be to their advantage, and to the advantage of the service, that there should be opportunities of promotion by transfer among members of the subordinate staff in the different Sheriff Courts. Would it be practicable to introduce a system of that kind?—Yes; but I think there are difficulties connected with it, because you would scarcely get a man transferred, say, from Glasgow to the North of Scotland, or vice versa. In such a case, there can be very little knowledge of his qualifications for the place to which he is proposed to be transferred.

58,967. Does not one difficulty arise from the fact that the appointments in each district are in the hands of the Sheriff Clerk, and that the Sheriff Clerk would not know the merits of the persons employed in other districts?—Exactly; that is what I mean.

58,968. The suggestion has been made that if the number of Sheriff Clerks is reduced to 15, a small committee of three or four of the principal Sheriff Clerks could be appointed, who would consider applications for promotion by transfer, and who would have opportunities of ascertaining the merits of the various clerks in the country. Would a system of that kind be practicable, do you think?—I think it might be. Of course, it alters the responsibility to a certain extent.

58,969. If a committee of that kind existed, the question would arise whether it should be empowered to make appointments or whether it should make a recommendation to the Sheriff Clerk?—Yes. Personally, I think that might work quite well, because they would have greater knowledge in such a committee than could be possessed by the person who made the appointment.

58,970. If such a committee were formed, the three or four principal Sheriff Clerks composing it would probably include in their own offices more than half the whole service?—Yes. I must say, however, that I have not had an opportunity of considering that suggestion, so that I cannot say that I have very strong views on it.

58,971. You do not consider it practicable to introduce the pension system for the subordinate staff?—I think that is out of the question. I do not see how it could be done.

58,972. The main difficulty being, I suppose, that a large number of them are not whole-time employees?—Yes. So far from being whole-time employees, they devote a very small part of their time to the duties of their office.

58,973. We have had representations here from some of the Sheriff Court clerks as to their remuneration. Can you express any opinion on that point?—In the Report of the Departmental Committee we indicated what we thought the deposes who are whole-timers should start with—

58,974. But I am speaking now of the clerks of the subordinate staff?—I do not know whether it is necessary to have these matters fixed. They generally solve themselves through commercial considerations.

58,975. The suggestion was that the limits of the allowance for the payment of clerks fixed by the Treasury did not permit the Sheriff Clerks to pay good salaries?—Yes, I think that may be so as regards the larger courts; but it has very little application to the smaller courts.

58,976. Have you any knowledge as to whether difficulty is experienced in recruiting the subordinate staff?—No; I cannot speak as to that. I know nothing about that.

58,977. Turning now to the Procurators Fiscal, the question which arises there is to some extent of the same character as that which arises in the case of the Sheriff Clerks. The number of places where the work will occupy a man's whole time is limited; but at the same time there is a difficulty in reducing the number, because there may be urgent matters to attend to in each district?—I do not think there should be any reduction of the numbers of Procurators Fiscal. The success of our system depends very much on there being a public prosecutor within easy reach of the witnesses to any particular crime, and I have a very high opinion—perhaps I am biased—of our system of public prosecution. I do not think there is any country which is so well served in that respect as Scotland. Hitherto it has been done by having a Procurator Fiscal stationed in every centre. In many places he has not enough work to occupy his whole time, but the best local solicitor has been chosen for the work, and it is an honour to be a Procurator Fiscal, and you get the services of the best men at a very low figure. The objections that have been stated to a Procurator Fiscal being not a whole-timer are, I think, entirely out of the question. Our best Procurators Fiscal have been those who are not whole-timers.

58,978. The tendency of late has been to extend the number of posts where there is restriction of private practice, has it not?—Personally, I have always regarded that as regrettable from the point of view of public economy. If you are to get a good man you have to pay him an adequate salary, and in most of our small towns in Scotland he has not enough to do, and the result is that he just goes to seed. Of course, where you have enough work for a man to occupy his whole time, then you should debar him from private practice. But, again, taking the sheriffdom where I was, namely, Roxburgh, Berwick, and Selkirk, in that sheriffdom you do not have a case of serious crime more than once every second year from the whole three counties. I have looked at the statistics there, and I find that about once in every two years there is a High Court case from these three counties. There are, of course, a great many petty offences, which are chiefly cases of poaching—salmon poaching offences in these three counties—but they are not sufficient to occupy any man's whole time. I believe the Procurator Fiscal of Jedburgh, who is an admirable person, is a whole-timer. I think that the public purse might have been saved half his salary if he had been allowed to keep his practice, and I believe that in that case he would have done his work just as well.

58,979. (Lord Dundas.) Do you know what his salary is?—I cannot remember. He happened to be appointed on my recommendation. I think he was the only person I ever had to do with in the way of appointing.

58,980. (Sir George Paul.) You say that if a man has very little to do he generally deteriorates in a country town?—I think so, and if he does not do that he does something very much worse: he starts prosecutions that should not be started in order to justify his salary.

58,981. Until he becomes a nuisance?—Exactly.

58,982. (Chairman.) Jedburgh has now been joined with Duns, has it not?—Oh, has it?

58,983. Would those two posts not be sufficient to occupy a man's whole time?—I do not think so.

58,984. Then you would restrict private business only in those cases where the work occupies a man's whole time?—Yes.

58,985. In other cases would you make the Procurator Fiscal pensionable?—No, not where he is doing private work.

58,986. But you would make him pensionable where his business is restricted—where he is not doing private work?—Yes; I think every person who is excluded from doing other business, and who depends entirely on his Crown salary, should be pensionable. In cases where he is occupying his time otherwise by means of private practice, I think he should not be pensionable.

58,987. You would apply the same principle in the case of the Depute Procurators Fiscal?—Certainly. I do not suppose there are any deposes, except in a very few courts, who are full-timers.

11 June 1915.]

The Hon. LORD SALVESEN.

[Continued.]

58,988. We had witnesses yesterday representing the Procurators Fiscal Depute, and they told us, I think, that there were eight or nine?—Yes, I should think so. But we must remember that after all that only represents a fraction of the number, and I think these are all connected with the larger centres.

58,989. Where they are whole-timers you would make them pensionable also?—Yes, I think so.

58,990. Would you leave the power of appointing Procurators Fiscal where it is at present?—All I can say for the political appointments is that they have not been badly exercised in the past. As regards the Procurators Fiscal, I think they are appointed on the recommendation of the Sheriff. That is my recollection, but the Crown sometimes decline to appoint the nominee of the Sheriff.

58,991. Have there been some cases lately in which a Procurator Fiscal has been promoted from one post to another?—Yes. I think that has been the common practice so far as there has been a practice at all. I think the practice has been to bring a man who has proved himself a thoroughly good man—I am speaking just now of whole-timers—from a less important sheriffdom to another that is more important, and I think with the very best results.

58,992. You think it is desirable that that plan should be regularly followed?—Yes, I think so. I am thinking now of Mr. Renton, who was promoted from Cupar, where he had shown himself very active and efficient, and became Procurator Fiscal in Edinburgh; and I think his successor was also promoted from some of the more important sheriffdoms.

58,993. The question has been raised of desirability of fixing an age for retirement. A limit of age has been fixed in some cases at present. Are you of opinion that a limit should be fixed generally?—Well, as regards the clerks in the Court of Session, while the duties of their office occupy substantially their whole time, it must always be kept in view that it is not exacting service; that the work can be done just as well, perhaps better, by an old steady man than by a young active man. Their duties consist in sitting in the Court drafting such interlocutors as have to be drafted each day, and in attending to the process. They need to be reliable and careful, and these qualities, I think, you will find present in a higher degree in elderly men rather than in younger men, and I do not think it would be desirable that people, irrespective of their capacity and of their willingness to continue to serve, should be pensioned off, say at the age of 65 years. It would mean just an unnecessary expenditure of public money for no advantage.

58,994. Have you known cases of men who remained at their work after they had ceased to be fully fit for it?—I cannot recall any such case at present. I have known one Clerk of Court, in my remote youth, who was quite unfitted for his duties, but that was not because of age, but because of habits.

58,995. Then if a limit of age is fixed your view is that it should not be so low as 65 years?—No. If you fix an age I think you should fix 70, and even then, I think, there are many men who would like to go on, and might be permitted to do so on getting a certificate of fitness from some of their immediate superiors. I am speaking in the interests of economy, because I think it is such a pity that if you have men qualified for their work, and who want to go on with it, that they should be sent about their business with a pension.

58,996. There is one minor point on which we should like to have your opinion. It was suggested that the Commissary Clerk of Midlothian should be abolished, and that the work of his office should be transferred to the Sheriff Clerk of Edinburgh. Do you consider that desirable?—As far as I know I do not think there is any reason why it should not be done. Of course I am not acquainted with the details of the work done in either of these offices, but I cannot see any reason why it should not be quite well overtaken in the Edinburgh office, by perhaps an addition to the subordinate staff.

58,997. The Commissary Clerk deals with certain classes of cases which are not dealt with by the Sheriff Clerks in other districts of Scotland?—Yes. I fancy that it would need legislation to transfer it to the Sheriff Clerk of Edinburgh, but I cannot see any objection on principle to the extinction of that office, because I should not imagine that he can have enough to do with the cases of Scotsmen dying furth of Scotland. The number of estates that he has to deal with must be comparatively limited.

58,998. We are told that he has a staff of several clerks?—Has he?

58,999. (Sir George Paul.) In fact the Commissary Clerk of Edinburgh has much more important duties to perform as regards commissary work than the Sheriff Clerk in an ordinary county?—Well, you are much more familiar with the details of that class of work than I am.

59,000. (Chairman.) Another question that has been raised is, whether it is necessary to have a Procurator Fiscal for the county of the city of Edinburgh, or whether that work can be done by the Procurator Fiscal of Midlothian?—That is a question I can express no opinion of any value upon, because I do not know the details of the work that is done.

59,001. There is one point in connection with the Court of Session on which I omitted to ask a question. Your Committee expressed a strong view in favour of the transfer of the offices of the Court from the Register House to the Parliament House, and considered that certain improvements of organisation could be effected if that was done. Do you think that that would be a very advantageous change?—I think it would be greatly to the convenience of the profession, and that you would be able to save some salaries. I do not see in the least why, if there was that transfer, the whole work of the Outer House might not be performed by two assistant clerks instead of four, as at present.

59,002. The processes might be dealt with, I suppose, in one place instead of in a number of separate places, as at present?—Yes; and there would also be the convenience of the agents having access to the office the whole time instead of having, as at present, to go down at certain hours in the afternoon. Personally, I think it would conduce very much to economy as well as to convenience.

59,003. (Mr. Matheson.) I think you expressed an opinion against an advisory committee to advise the Lord Advocate. Have you had any experience of committees appointed to sift the claims of candidates and to make recommendations for appointment?—Well, only in a minor way—not with reference to appointments of this kind.

59,004. Are you aware that for many educational appointments such committees are appointed and work successfully without the least suspicion of personal or political influence?—I have no experience of them at all. I do not know that I know of anything we have in Scotland of that kind, except, perhaps, in the case of an appointment to a new church, where generally there is a committee appointed to draw up a list of candidates for the occupation of the pulpit. There, as the appointment rests with the congregation, it is, of course, necessary that there should be a committee to act for them.

59,005. Can you explain to me why you and others seem to have such a profound distrust of such a committee if you have no experience of their working?—Well, I suppose, perhaps, we rather distrust a diffused responsibility, and, speaking for myself, I think a committee would not be so likely to have the same means of knowledge as, say, either the Lord Advocate or the President of the Court of Session.

59,006. (Mr. Shipley.) On page 5 of your précis you say, "I am convinced that there is no country where inquiries or prosecutions are so efficiently dealt with as in Scotland." Is that a general impression, or is it founded on statistics?—Is that with reference to our criminal system?

59,007. Yes?—It is founded upon a study, to some extent, of other systems.

59,008. It is not just an impression?—No. I have really considered this matter over a long course of years, and I have honestly come to the belief that our system is a highly efficient system, and one which is really not capable of substantial improvement. It has grown up and improved gradually until, I think, it is now exceedingly efficient, and one of the best proofs of that is that private prosecution is permissible in Scotland, but you never hear of any person instituting a private prosecution. Personally, I have only known one case in my whole experience where the Lord Advocate refused to prosecute, and the Court compelled him to give his sanction to the prosecution. The people in Scotland are, I may say, absolutely content with the system of public prosecution we have here. We never hear a whisper against it.

11 June 1915.]

The Hon. LORD SALVESEN.

[Continued.]

59,009. (Sir Donald MacAlister.) I think you are very desirous to encourage the system of promoting men from one department to another—in any given department that is homogeneous?—Yes.

59,010. Is that quite consistent with your objection to early retirement?—I think so, because what the young man loses in the chance of early promotion he gains in being able to hold his office longer. I mean you are just deferring the fruits of office for, say, five years, but then you are giving him a longer tenure when he does get it.

59,011. (Mr. Graham Wallas.) At present the Sheriff Clerk is, I think, usually selected from among local solicitors?—Yes.

59,012. And his deputies are not men of the same prosperity, as a rule?—No.

59,013. Would that fact make, in your opinion, promotion undesirable from the deputies to the position of Sheriff Clerk?—Well, I think you would need to have a man who had shown himself highly qualified as a deputy before he could take the same position as the existing Sheriff Clerk.

59,014. You think it would be exceptional?—I am inclined to think it would be.

59,015. But you think that in exceptional cases it is desirable?—Yes.

59,016. Would you say the same thing with regard to the promotion of the Deputy Fiscal to the Procurator Fiscal?—I should certainly think it should not be the rule even there, because for a Procurator Fiscal, I think, you require above all things a man of high standing in his profession and a man of judgment and experience, and these qualities you can look for more safely in a person who has had all-round general experience than in a man who has merely been engaged in a particular office.

59,017. You want the kind of experience which can only be gained in the outside world?—I think so.

59,018. We have been told that the Procurator Fiscal is paid a lump salary, from which he pays both his own salary, so to speak, and the salaries of his clerks?—Yes.

59,019. The Sheriff Clerk is also paid a lump sum, but he is instructed that he must pay certain sums to his clerks and hand in their receipts for them. The reason for that difference, I understand, is purely historical, but do you think there is any sound reason for such a difference being continued?—Well, the latter system provides a certain protection for the clerks and ensures that they are not very much underpaid; but I really do not think that it would be necessary in the case of the Procurators Fiscal, speaking generally, that they should have to give an account of exactly how much they pay their clerks. In some of the districts the amount of work done by the clerks must be very small, and these clerks are employed by the Procurator Fiscal, who is generally a solicitor, in other work.

59,020. We had some cases in evidence yesterday where young men giving full-time service were paid salaries that were startlingly low?—I suppose they would be apprentices, really—practically apprentices. I am afraid I do not know enough about these matters to express an opinion on the point.

59,021. One of our witnesses yesterday called attention to a danger from the system of lump sums to be accounted for by receipts. He said, that in an office with which he was familiar, the clerks were hoping for a certain increase of salary from a vacancy which occurred and more money to divide, but that their employer appointed his brother, who we were told was a bankrupt draper, and gave him 400*l.* as salary. That, I suppose, would amount to a scandal?—I think so.

59,022. Is there any way you know for preventing that?—I should not like to hazard a suggestion.

59,023. Now, would one way of preventing it be that of requiring an age of entry as well as an age of retirement appropriate to each post?—I do not know if that would be practicable. I think, at all events, from the public point of view, that the commercial method that prevails is the cheapest.

59,024. If we are to propose that any of these people should be pensionable, obviously part of the economy is not only to keep them on as long as you can, but to appoint them at an early age?—Of course, that is obvious. With regard to the Procurator Fiscal, the whole responsibility rests with the man himself. His clerks really just do more or less the mechanical work—the copying. He must apply to every case his own judgment—he cannot leave anything to the clerks.

59,025. Speaking about the Service generally, would you not say that the statements we have of the age at which men are appointed to purely clerical labour shows that an entry age limit would be desirable?—It might be, but, of course, I have not really myself come in contact with the purely engrossing staff. My personal experience is limited to the minor officials as distinguished from the clerical staffs.

59,026. Take the appointment that was made to the Courts the other day—that of a gentleman at the age of 67. That was rather a high entry age for the public service, was it not?—I think so. I think it is quite unique. I do not remember of any other gentleman being appointed at that age.

59,027. Now, with regard to political appointments, I take it that political qualification means not mere abstract inquiry as to the man's political beliefs, but actual political service?—As I say, I have never had any patronage of any kind, so I do not know, but of course one knows in a general way that a man who has been very active in giving political service has a better chance for such posts.

59,028. Now, will you agree that in deciding whether a system of political appointment to administrative posts is good or bad, one must consider its whole effect on the community as well as the question whether in any particular case the man is suitable for the post?—Yes.

59,029. And one effect is its influence on party politics. Would you agree that party politics only work tolerably well when men only support their party whole-heartedly from real conviction, and when they become doubtful they hang back when they become convinced that their party is wrong they retire from their party?—I think so.

59,030. And that if any system, whether in America or in the Colonies or anywhere else, creates in each locality a certain number of men who look to politics for success in their own careers, that fact produces men who are active organisers, but whose utility to their party is actually entirely independent of their political convictions?—I agree with that from a theoretical point of view. I think the defence of our political appointments in Scotland is that they have hitherto very seldom given rise to any great dissatisfaction.

59,031. But if you think about the active political lawyers of any party to which you do not belong, could you think of cases of men whose activity would be likely to go on independent of their political convictions?—I think so. If you have America in your mind I would entirely agree with that. I know something of America and the mode in which appointments are got there.

59,032. You would say that it is a real danger to have a body of skilled, highly trained, determined office-seekers or “spoilsmen,” as they call them in America, who consider that their party calls for their services most urgently and is likely to reward them most amply when the party is apparently most in the wrong?—Yes, I sympathise entirely with that view.

59,033. And I suppose you agree that if both in America and in our Colonies there have been attempts

11 June 1915.]

The Hon. LORD SALVESEN.

[Continued.]

from time to time to make the profession of spoilsmen less profitable, you would sympathise with that?—I sympathise entirely with that. I do not like political appointments if you can substitute something better than the system we have at present.

59,034. You say that your own Committee followed in their Report the lines of least resistance?—Yes.

59,035. But you would agree that if you are dealing with an established habit of the spoil system it may be necessary sometimes to issue a report on the lines of very considerable resistance?—Possibly. We were very anxious that effect should be given as soon as possible to the recommendations we made, therefore, we made recommendations that we thought would not bring us up against any determined opposition.

59,036. Your Report, I think, was made in 1911; it is now 1915, and the result is that nothing has been done?—Oh yes, something has been done. For instance, the Clerks of Justiciary have had their merits recognised by some increase of salary. The Extractor's Department has been to a certain extent remodelled. One Principal Clerk of Court has, in accordance with the views of Sir William Haldane, been abolished, and we find that we can get along without him, and his salary has been utilised to improve the position of some of those whom we recommended for consideration. Something has been done, but not enough.

59,037. That represents rather the gleanings than the harvest of your Report?—Yes. I admit that nothing has been done with regard to the Sheriff Court Deputes, and these are the people, I think, who have the most claim to consideration.

59,038. You tell us in your précis, "No Lord Advocate of my acquaintance would care to risk his reputation in order to perpetrate what the profession would regard as a job appointment"?—Yes.

59,039. Now, in December last, a gentleman of 67 years was appointed to a rather well-paid post, which I understand he had to surrender at the age of 70. Now, I take it from you that that is not a "job"?—It is in one sense, but I believe he is thoroughly qualified for his duties.

59,040. Would you mind giving us a wholly imaginary case of what you consider would be a "job"?—Where you select a man who is manifestly unfit for the post—that is, in my opinion, a "job."

59,041. The age in this case was manifest enough?—Oh, yes. I think it was very exceptional. I may explain that I had not that case in my mind at all when I wrote that précis. I was thinking more of the higher appointments such as the judicial appointments in the Supreme Court and so on.

59,042. Now, during the last few weeks, Party Government has been modified or suspended to a great extent. Have there been to your knowledge any legal appointments made during that period?—Not in Scotland so far as I know.

59,043. Then you have no knowledge on what principles such legal appointments will be made in the future?—I am afraid not. Such appointments as have been made have simply been continuations of existing appointments.

59,044. But that question might come up, I suppose?—It might.

59,045. (Sir George Paul.) Mr. Wallas mentioned to you a case where one of the subordinate staff had a very small salary. There is one other striking case, that of one of the staff of the Sheriff Clerk at Dumfries, where the salary seemed to be very small, and I think we all agree that these salaries are inadequate?—I should not think that a living wage.

59,046. As regards appointments, your view is that the system of political appointments is not an ideal system?—No.

59,047. But you think that upon the whole it has worked reasonably well?—Yes.

59,048. Now, supposing for a moment that the Commission should think that political considerations should be eliminated in making public and non-political appointments, have you anything to suggest to the Commission in the way of assistance as to what alternative might be presented?—I do not know really anything better than to take the head of the Court, and if you like give him some assistance with regard to certain classes of appointments.

59,049. That was the suggestion also of the Society of Writers to the Signet, but Lord Dunedin used very strong language about it yesterday?—Of course he is much more qualified to speak on such a subject than I am.

59,050. (Mr. Clynes.) Can you say whether this element of political influence operates in the case of the quite lower appointments?—You mean the clerical appointments?

59,051. Yes?—I do not think so.

59,052. In your opinion men who have been appointed for certain political considerations do not carry any sort of political authority down in the lower scale of the appointments?—I do not think so. I think for the most part that is left to the head of that particular department.

59,053. (Sir John Kempe.) Your Committee contemplated the elimination as far as possible of all political appointments?—Yes.

59,054. And I think you say it is impossible to eliminate them altogether, because there is not a sufficient number of junior clerks for a suitable selection for the junior posts?—Yes.

59,055. You make two suggestions: that promotion should be from the existing staff or otherwise from the Lord Advocate's clerks or the judges' staffs. What are the means you contemplated of filling up the staffs?—Outside appointments generally; I mean the appointment of a qualified legal practitioner. That, of course, we had fully in view. There have been several appointments of solicitors to the Supreme Court to be clerks of process, and they are content to give up their practice, especially when they are getting over middle life, and get the comparative ease of the position of a clerk compared with the worry of their existing business.

59,056. You exclude transfers on the ground that the principle of water-tight departments must go on?—I think they must always go on. You will not get the same efficient work unless you make men specialists. In the Justiciary Office, for instance, they learn nothing with regard to civil procedure; their whole minds are turned to criminal procedure, which is a very special department in itself, and requires the very greatest care. In the Civil Courts, on the other hand, they know nothing of criminal procedure, and accordingly they would have to learn their business when you put them into a position in which they are to act in connection with criminal procedure, and that is very unfortunate.

59,057. But any kind of appointment from outside is open to the objection which, I think, you raised, that the inferior may have to teach the superior the work for some months?—Yes.

59,058. That, of course, I think, is common to all professions. For instance, a new minister has to be coached by his assistant, and so on?—Yes; but I think it is rather hard that the teacher should be paid at a lower scale than his pupil.

59,059. Yes; the inferior has experience, but the person brought in is superior in intelligence and ability generally?—Yes, perhaps.

59,060. Therefore, it is not a reason against appointment from outside?—I think it might be defended. In the case of the Principal Clerk of Court, for instance, that should always be an outside appointment, because you find that there are petty jealousies among those who are on an equal platform; and if you promote one of these men above the heads of his fellows, they will not recognise his pre-eminent merits, but, on the other hand, they will fall into line under an entire outsider, even although he may be no better man than one of the existing staff. Therefore, I think these are certainly appointments that should always be made from outside with a view to discipline. That is a typical one. Probably there are not many that need to be appointed from outside.

59,061. As to the age limit, you said that the community ought not to be burdened by a pension to a man who is not incapable of doing his work, and who is quite willing to do it. That, of course, applies to the

11 June 1915.]

The Hon. LORD SALVESSEN.

[Continued.]

whole service?—Perfectly true, but in so many branches of the Civil Service a man may become unfit by mere loss of activity, mental and physical, for his position; and it may be desirable that there should be a hard and fast age limit fixed. With regard to the appointments that we are considering here, most of them may be performed by men who have small physical activity, but whose mental powers remain unimpaired. That is perhaps not quite the case with the Procurator Fiscal, who has to do a good deal of travelling if he is to do his work efficiently, but it certainly applies to the Clerks of Court, whose duties do not require much activity.

59,062. It would also equally apply to the whole Civil Service outside that department, would it not? There are a large number of Civil servants who are pensioned, but who would be quite willing to go on with their work, and who are able to go on with their work?—Personally, I think it is a mistake.

59,063. (Mr. Boutwood.) I think there is one difference. So far as one can make out in these legal offices, not only here in Scotland, but in England, it seems to be the case that the men are valuable chiefly as they accumulate knowledge of a rather minute and specialised routine?—Yes.

59,064. And that is a sort of thing that may go on for an indefinite number of years. Well, that is not quite the measure of a man's utility in the ordinary Civil Service. Is there not that difference between the two?—Quite right. I would say that I think a man becomes more valuable because of the experience that he accumulates.

59,065. (Sir John Kempe.) You have machinery, I think, for safeguarding against a man continuing to work after he has become unfit for duty?—I should say that if you had an age limit of 70, he should require to be certified by some authority for further office. You would have that safeguard. I know that I suggested that in the case of a Procurator Fiscal. He was to be compulsorily retired at 65 years, and I asked the Crown to put in a qualification, unless the Sheriff should certify that he was fit and desirous of continuing in his office for another year, and so year by year you could control the continuance of his office.

59,066. The comparison is between the expense of giving a man a pension, and the expense of paying a man for doing nothing?—Yes.

59,067. (Miss Haldane.) On this Civil Service Commission we have been trying lately to find machinery for procuring the best man or woman, as the case may be, for a particular situation. You say that in Scotland we get a reasonably good, but not the best, man. You do not defend that position, do you?—I do not say that the Lord Advocate of the day is necessarily the best person to make selections.

59,068. At any rate, we ought to aim at a somewhat higher ideal?—Yes.

59,069. I suppose you agree that there is a certain inducement to men to act possibly against their own convictions where they consider that it will be to their personal interest?—A man may desert his party on the footing that his only hope of promotion lies with the other party.

59,070. Do you agree that there is a considerable amount of canvassing for appointments, and especially minor appointments?—I think so, speaking from the small experience I have had.

59,071. And, that, I suppose, you consider a bad thing in itself?—Yes.

59,072. I hardly think there is at present sufficient machinery for promotion in the minor legal offices?—I think we ought to get as much promotion as we can get in the minor legal offices.

59,073. When a man goes into those offices his training does not qualify him for doing other things satisfactorily, therefore, he must join early if he is to get promotion?—I think that is probably less true of appointments connected with the Court of Session, because there are really no boys admitted into it.

59,074. I was rather thinking of the Sheriff Clerks' staffs?—Yes, I think that is quite probable when you are dealing with the few central Sheriff Clerks' offices where they employ a large staff.

59,075. Unless the boy gets promotion it becomes really a blind alley occupation for the most part?—Yes.

59,076. And, therefore, that is rather a serious evil, I suppose?—Yes. I do not think that applies to the ordinary clerk in the rural Sheriff Clerk's office, because he is qualifying himself for everything else as well. It is only in those places where you need a large clerical staff to devote their whole time to the duties that that is specially true.

59,077. In your précis you speak about the Procurators Fiscal, and you say that they should not be too far removed from the locality where the crime is committed. I take it that in saying that you do not refer to their homes, so to speak?—What I mean is that you should have a restricted area in each of which there should be a Procurator Fiscal.

59,078. I wanted to make quite sure whether you approve of their promotion from one post to another?—Certainly.

59,079. You do not approve of their remaining at a place on the ground that they know the locality well?—I am not in favour of that at all. I am in favour of a competent man being taken from a less busy place to a more busy place and paid a higher salary where he is a whole-timer; but I think it is desirable that the area in which the Procurator Fiscal has his jurisdiction should not be too large, so that people may have ready access to him in order to lodge their complaints.

59,080. One witness spoke of the knowledge that a man got of the personality of the district, but you do not put much weight upon that?—It is useful in some cases.

59,081. But you would not restrict promotion on that ground; you would not keep a man in one district—say, for instance, in a strictly rural district—all his life because he was acquainted with the district?—No. My observation applies to those who are not whole-timers.

59,082. Do you think in such cases some other Government appointments might be given to a man? Would it not be a good plan to give Government prosecutions and so on to a man who is already an official, or have you any objection to that?—In that case you would have to give him two or three areas to give him sufficient work to occupy his whole time. If you combine two or three large rural areas, the people are a long way removed from the place where they can lodge their complaints and he is a long way removed from the witnesses he has to see, and I think it is far more important that you should have a good man within easy access of the people whom he serves. Our very best Procurators Fiscal have been local solicitors of good standing who will devote so much of their time as is necessary to the duties of that office, but who carry on a large practice otherwise and who have the confidence of the public at large in a way that a salaried official not acquainted with the locality would never possess.

59,083. Just one other question. Have you had any experience in your investigations of women employed in legal offices?—No. I think there has been one small change, namely, that a woman typist has been taken into the Extractor's Office. I think that is the only instance of a woman who is in any of the legal departments.

59,084. Have you any views to express on the merits or demerits of the question?—Well, I am told that the women typists are very much better than the men typists.

59,085. But you have no views to express on the desirability of allowing women to enter these offices?—Well, that is a very large question. Of course, you would first have to qualify them to enter the legal profession. If they are qualified to enter the legal profession there is no reason why they should not occupy the position of clerks.

59,086. Personally, have you any views on that subject?—No, I have never considered the point.

59,087. (Lord Dundas.) In considering any scheme for the consolidation of the various court offices, I think you mentioned to the Chairman that obviously some of the departments would have to be excluded. There must be, as somebody put it, "watertight departments."

11 June 1915.]

The Hon. LORD SALVESEN.

[Continued.]

That would exclude the Crown Office, the Justiciary Office and the Teind Office and also, to some extent, the Bill Chamber and the Extractor's Office?—Yes.

59,088. And is this the residuum left—the Clerks of Court and the Bill Chamber and Extractor's Office so far as not excluded?—Yes.

59,089. That is a small body of men, is it not?—I suppose it amounts to 15 or 20 altogether.

59,090. Is there, in your view, any practical room for the consolidation of these offices?—No, except that I think that more play should be given to promotion among that small body.

59,091. Then one other distinct matter. You told us that in your view the Sheriff Clerks Depute were a hardly dealt with class, especially the whole-time ones, and I think you said that they ought to be pensioned. How is that to be obtained? In order to make them pensionable would they have to be in that respect, and in what other respects, Civil servants?—I think, of course, the present system would have to be changed by which they are the nominees of the Sheriff Clerk. That would have to be changed, and they would need to be made Crown appointments or Civil Service appointments.

59,092. Have you personally thought out how it could be worked in practice?—No, I cannot say that I have. The only things we really considered are embodied in the report of the majority.

59,093. I was asking for information, because one feels that there is great force in the view of yourself and other witnesses that those men ought to have pensions, and I did not know whether you could assist me to see how that is to be worked out?—Of course, I am speaking only of the whole-timers.

59,094. A small body?—Yes.

59,095. And the same applies to the Depute Procurators Fiscal—the whole-timers among them?—Yes.

59,096. You were asked about the element of party politics so far as existing in the present system of Lord Advocate's appointments. I understand your view to be that, however theoretically objectionable that system may be, it has in the past worked as satisfactorily as any other you could figure?—Yes, I think it has worked quite satisfactorily, although I do not say that there might not be a better system devised.

59,097. I understood you to express your view as against what has been suggested in the way of an Advisory Committee to assist the Lord Advocate?—Yes. For my own part I would rather have the matter intrusted to the President of the Court of Session, or that he should be the person who made the recommendation upon which the Crown would act. Of course it might be in certain cases open to exception. He from his position has become divorced from politics, and he need not yield to the clamour of a section in the same way as perhaps the Lord Advocate is compelled to do.

59,098. You are against an Advisory Committee, as I understand?—Yes, because I do not think there is sufficient scope for its action.

59,099. You would rather have one man than several men at the job?—Yes.

59,100. And I gather that you would rather have one man who is directly responsible to Parliament and to the Parliament House than somebody who is not?—Certainly to the Parliament House.

59,101. And also, I think, you said that the Lord Advocate had means of information which you did not think a body of commissioners could so readily possess?—I think so.

59,102. Then you suggested that some of these appointments, at least, might be committed to the Lord President?—Yes.

59,103. I think Sir George Paul informed you that the position of this Commission as regards that matter was, that it was mooted two days ago by Mr. Jameson, W.S., and it was condemned yesterday by Lord Dunedin in pretty forcible language; and I want to know whether you really put it forward as a convinced view of your own or in what way you do suggest it?—I put it forward on this view, that I think the holder of that office is a person who commands the respect of the profession and of the people of Scotland at large.

59,104. Are you in any way influenced by the fact that Lord Dunedin disapproved of the suggestion in no measured terms?—Well, I should like to see what he said. The fact that he was unwilling to exercise the patronage himself might only indicate that he was against being compelled to do it.

59,105. Of course the Lord President of to-day is very often the Lord Advocate of yesterday, is he not?—Yes; I should say generally he is.

59,106. The Lord President during the earlier part of his career might, I gather from you, to some extent retain at all events his feelings of political friendship if not of political bias?—Yes.

59,107. Later, when the Lord President had been on the bench for a considerable time, would he not be out of touch with the conditions of appointment and the persons to be appointed in a way which would differentiate him entirely from the Lord Advocate of to-day?—He certainly would not come nearly so much in personal contact with the members of the profession. He might, perhaps, inform himself, however, sufficiently.

59,108. Well, you have stated your personal view on the point, and I accept it at that. Now, there is only one other matter. You alluded, I think, to a recent case of private prosecution. I suppose you had in your mind the case of Coat against Brown?—Yes.

59,109. In that case the Lord Advocate declined either to prosecute or grant concurrence?—Yes.

59,110. And the private complainer then came to a full bench of the Court, and the Court allowed him to proceed without the concurrence of the Lord Advocate?—Yes.

59,111. Your Lordship, I think, said that the Court had ordained the Lord Advocate to grant concurrence?—Perhaps I was wrong. I think the Lord Advocate's position was fairly well vindicated, for while the jury convicted no sentence was imposed, at the request, I may say, of the private prosecutor.

59,112. Verdict was obtained, and, I think, the prosecutor then intimated that he was satisfied with that and did not wish a penalty?—Yes.

59,113. (Chairman.) What was the offence?—It was nominally a case of fraud—a representation that certain coals were from a certain pit, when, in point of fact, they were from an adjoining pit where the coals were of exactly the same quality. I think that is what it really came to.

59,114. (Lord Dundas.) The Lord Advocate's statement to the Court was that he thought the complaint relevant, but declined to prosecute because he doubted the possibility of getting a conviction?—Yes.

59,115. (Chairman.) In suggesting that the Lord Advocate's power of nomination should be transferred to the Lord President, do you include the whole of the nominations at present made by the Lord Advocate? In particular, do you include the appointments of Sheriff Clerks and Procurators Fiscal?—Yes, but I think that probably if he were dealing with Sheriff Court appointments he would need assistance. I do not quite see how the Lord President could know sufficient about the qualifications of the local solicitors to make a selection.

59,116. But he could obtain information?—Yes, he would have to obtain the information in some way.

59,117. And as regards Procurators Fiscal?—As regards Procurators Fiscal, they are really, I think, appointed by the Sheriff.

59,118. (Miss Haldane.) We are told that the appointment is made by the Lord Advocate?—Well, it must be changed. The system must be changed since my time. Personally, I thought the old system was quite a good one.

Mr. ANDREW HARRISON, Sheriff Clerk of Midlothian, called and examined.

59,119. (Chairman.) I understand, Mr. Harrison, you are Sheriff Clerk of Midlothian?—Yes.

59,120. What office had you previously held?—Sheriff Clerk Depute and Assistant Sheriff Clerk.

59,121. How many years have you been engaged in the Sheriff Clerk's office?—About 33 years.

59,122. Are you a qualified law agent?—No, I am not.

59,123-4. Are you giving evidence on your own behalf or on behalf of your colleagues as well?—I am not giving evidence on behalf of anybody at all. I am just expressing my own views.

59,125. What does your staff consist of?—There are three deputes and five assistant clerks.

59,126. Had your deputes previously been clerks?—They had—all of them.

59,127. In your own office?—Yes.

59,128. They were promoted from lower grades in your office?—Yes.

59,129. What is the organisation of your office? Is it divided into different departments?—Yes; there are three departments. One of these is the general department, the second comprises small debt work, and the third is summary criminal work.

59,130. How many courts do you deal with?—Well, we have four Sheriffs sitting. As a rule, the four of them sit on three days of the week and three of them sit on every day of the week. There are often four Sheriffs sitting at the same time.

59,131. You and your three deputes attend those four courts?—Yes.

59,132. Besides the work in court each depute has a particular branch of the office work?—Yes.

59,133. At present, I think there is no statutory qualification for appointment as a Sheriff Clerk Depute?—No, there is not.

59,134. Is it your opinion that there should be any such qualification?—I do not think it would be any improvement to have any such qualification. I think service in a Sheriff Clerk's office or in that of a solicitor in general practice is much more important.

59,135. You do not attach particular importance to technical qualification as a law agent?—No, I do not.

59,136. That qualification implies a certain period of apprenticeship and passing certain examinations?—Yes.

59,137. But I gather that you consider that actual experience is more important than that particular qualification?—Yes, I think so.

59,138. What value do you attach to experience in the outside profession, and experience in the offices of the Court respectively?—I think experience in the offices of the Court would be more important and more beneficial.

59,139. And you think all the qualifications and knowledge necessary for the higher posts can be acquired by service in the lower grades in the offices of the Court?—I think so, provided a man is well educated before coming in.

59,140. At what age do young men generally enter the Sheriff Clerk's office?—About the age of 20, I think.

59,141. As old as that?—Yes.

59,142. Is that the age at which your clerks have entered?—Yes, in the case of most of them. One was younger; one of them had never been in a solicitor's office before, he came straight from school.

59,143. At present, Sheriff Clerks are appointed on the nomination of the Lord Advocate?—Yes.

59,144. And the deputes and other staff are appointed by the Sheriff Clerk?—Yes.

59,145. There is no recognised system of promotion in the service?—No, there is not.

59,146. Do you think that system satisfactory, or do you consider that there ought to be something more in the nature of a definite system of promotion?—I think there ought to be a definite system of promotion.

59,147. Will you explain your views on that point more fully?—Well, I think clerks ought to get the chance of being promoted, but that it should not be made obligatory upon them to accept it, and I think that would improve the service very much. If that were done, I think a better class of men would come in.

59,148. Have you difficulty at present in getting a suitable class of men to enter?—Yes.

59,149. Does that arise from lack of prospects of promotion, or from the level of salaries you are able to offer?—It arises from both of these causes.

59,150. I understand the salaries are limited by the total sum at your disposal?—Yes.

59,151. Do you consider that the salaries you are able to pay out of that sum are insufficient?—I think they are insufficient.

59,152. How do the salaries you pay compare with the salaries paid in the private offices of law agents?—They are certainly probably as good as those in private offices, except perhaps in the case of deputes, who might be managing clerks in law offices, and might get more; but considering their duties and responsibilities, I think the salaries are too small.

59,153. Your deputes receive salaries of 275*l.*, 260*l.*, and 165*l.*?—Yes.

59,154. Would managing clerks in private law offices receive higher salaries than that?—Yes; and it must be remembered that these deputes have the responsibility of signing very important documents, and consequences might ensue that would be very serious for them, whereas a clerk in a private office never has to do anything like that.

59,155. Returning to the question of promotion, you say that you think that clerks ought to have the opportunity of promotion to deputes' posts, and that deputes ought to have the opportunity of promotion to Sheriff Clerks' posts?—I think so.

59,156. But, as promotion would in many cases imply transfer to a different part of the country, you would make it optional whether they would accept?—That is so.

59,157. You are acquainted with the recommendation of Lord Salvesen's Committee in favour of a reduction in the number of Sheriff Clerks?—Yes.

59,158. Do you agree with that recommendation?—Yes, I do.

59,159. And also with the recommendation in favour of the creation of a special class of deputes who would be full-time officers and also pensionable?—Yes, I do.

59,160. How would you arrange the system of promotion which you desire to see established? At present each Sheriff Clerk appoints his own staff?—Yes.

59,161. How would you arrange a general system of promotion among all the different offices if the clerks in each office are appointed by its own Sheriff Clerk?—Well, I think that if a suitable man could not be found in the office when a vacancy occurred, application might be made to other counties—to other places with a similar class of work. Of course, in some of the larger towns the work is quite different from the work in the smaller places.

59,162. You mean that a Sheriff Clerk who had a vacancy in his office, if there was not a suitable man in his own office, could invite applications from clerks elsewhere?—I think so.

59,163. It is open to him to do that at present, is it not?—It is, but it is not much done.

59,164. How would you arrange that it should be more done?—It could simply be done automatically. If political appointments were not made to the principal clerkships, the thing would naturally flow up in that way.

59,165. By the principal clerks, do you mean the Sheriff Clerks?—Yes.

59,166. Supposing that the principle on which persons are selected for the office of Sheriff Clerk was altered, and political considerations no longer entered into it, how would that modify the system on which they appoint their own clerical staff?—Well, I mean that there would be a flow of promotion, and if it were known that it was confined to the one service, you would naturally have to go to another office to get assistants.

59,167. Assume that a depute in one district is appointed to be Sheriff Clerk in another district, how does that affect the manner in which the Sheriff Clerk fills up the vacancy?—He would naturally appoint as his new depute an assistant in his own office if he has

11 June 1915.]

Mr. ANDREW HARRISON.

[Continued.]

one suitable. If he has not one suitable, it should be understood that he should go to some other Sheriff Clerk's office and get one there.

59,168. What does he do at present?—He can appoint anybody he likes: he can go to a private office.

59,169. How would it be laid down that he should follow that system?—I do not think it would be difficult at all to provide for that.

59,170. But how would you do it—by legislation?—Yes, it could be done by legislation.

59,171. Would you legislate to the effect that he should appoint no one but a clerk in another office?—Perhaps not quite in that way. I think that if the Sheriff Clerk Depute had a status of his own, the thing would work naturally.

59,172. Supposing there was some local man who was not in his own office, but outside the service altogether, at present he might appoint him?—Yes.

59,173. And, in future, equally he might appoint him unless such appointments were definitely prohibited?—They might be prohibited.

59,174. What I want to arrive at is this: how do you propose to establish the system of promotion which you would like to see established?—I have not thought out the matter in detail.

59,175. So long as the appointment rests with the Sheriff Clerk, it is difficult to impose upon him a definite method of selection. The recommendation of Lord Salvesen's Committee was that the special class of deposes, who would be limited in number, should be appointed by the Secretary for Scotland, but that the remaining deposes should still, as at present, be appointed by the Sheriff Clerk. Do you contemplate going further than that in the way of removing the appointments from the Sheriff Clerk?—Yes.

59,176. What is your suggestion on that point?—Personally, I would make it the nomination of the Sheriff, and that only assistant Sheriff Clerks could be made deposes.

59,177. You would transfer the appointment of all deposes from the Sheriff Clerk to the Sheriff, and you would limit the Sheriff to the staff of the Sheriff Courts for his selection?—Yes.

59,178. Supposing there was no suitable person on the staff?—Of course, in a case like that, someone else would have to be got. Of course, he could be got from the staff of some other Sheriff Clerk's office, or an outsider might be got.

59,179. Then you would not absolutely exclude outsiders?—I would exclude them from the higher posts unless no suitable man could be got in the service.

59,180. One suggestion for meeting that difficulty is that, assuming the number of Sheriff Clerks to be reduced to, say, 15, then there should be a small committee of Sheriff Clerks for the purpose of selecting persons from the staff of the courts as a whole for promotion to vacancies in the higher posts?—I am not in favour of a committee of that sort. I think such a committee would simply be liable to be got at in the same way as Justices of the Peace are just now. I do not think it would be satisfactory. It would lead to canvassing and intrigue and all sorts of things.

59,181. You think that a committee of that kind would be more exposed to canvassing and intrigue than an individual?—Most decidedly. I think so.

59,182. Why?—Well, it is the experience one has of town councils and magistrates and licensing benches.

59,183. Of what kind of appointments are you speaking now?—Any sort of appointment they have in their gift.

59,184. Will you specify some?—For example, municipal servants and licences.

59,185. Take the case of municipal servants: are you speaking of such appointments as that of town clerk, for instance?—Yes.

59,186. In that case the appointment is made by the town council—a body of a considerable number?—Yes.

59,187. In that case there is canvassing and attempts are made to bring personal influence to bear?—Unquestionably.

59,188. Supposing that appointment were in the hands of a single person, would there not also be such attempts?—No, I do not think there would. Personally, I have heard suggestions made that the Sheriff in Scotland ought to have those things in his hands—that licences ought to be taken out of the hands of the magistrates altogether on that account.

59,189. When you are speaking of licences you are not speaking of appointments?—No, but the same conditions apply. I put them in the same category.

59,190. Returning to the Sheriff Clerks; at present the Sheriff Clerk of Lanarkshire, say, has the appointment of the staff in Lanarkshire?—Yes.

59,191. Supposing that he and two others of his colleagues have those same appointments, do you anticipate that those three persons would be more exposed to influence and pressure than one person?—I think so. It would go by voting, and I think attempts would be made to get over the majority. Personally, I think it is unnecessary. I would rather leave it to the higher officials we have at present—the Sheriff, the Lord Advocate and the Secretary for Scotland, I think they are far too high to be got at in that way.

59,192. Which of those three officials do you think ought to appoint the staff in the Sheriff Courts?—As I have said in my précis, I think the Sheriff ought to nominate the depute clerk.

59,193. And who would appoint the remainder?—Those coming in at the bottom of the service ought to be appointed by the Sheriff Clerk as at present.

59,194. Would the Sheriff Clerk, as at present, promote them until they reached the grade of depute?—Yes, I suppose so.

59,195. Then your system would be this—first, appointments and promotion up to the highest posts below the grade of depute would be made by the Sheriff Clerk himself?—Yes.

59,196. And when it comes to the appointment of the ordinary depute then the appointment would be made by the Sheriff?—Yes.

59,197. And when it comes to the appointment of the special class of deposes or of the Sheriff Clerk the appointment would be made by the Secretary for Scotland?—Yes.

59,198. The Sheriff then would only have the appointment of the deposes other than those of the special class?—Yes.

59,199. Would it be worth bringing him in for that?—I should think so. I do not know any better system.

59,200. You would still be left with the difficulty that the appointments to all posts except the Sheriff Clerk and the special class of deposes would be by persons who had in view only their particular district of Scotland and not the whole of Scotland?—Yes.

59,201. Would that not create an obstacle to the establishment of the general system of promotions and transfers which you favour?—I do not think it would.

59,202. You think you could generalise it sufficiently by authorising or instructing those persons to obtain applications from other districts if they had no suitable person in their own district?—Yes. I think it might be made a condition that the higher posts should be recruited from the staff in the service, and then I think it would work automatically.

59,203. At present none of the staff of whom we are speaking are pensionable?—No, none.

59,204. Do you consider that any of them ought to be?—I think they all ought to be—at least after a few years' service at the bottom.

59,205. The whole of the deposes and the whole of the clerks after a few years?—I think so.

59,206. Do you include persons who are not giving their whole time to the service?—I see no difficulty in including them as well to the extent to which they are paid. I do not see that that would be a difficult thing.

59,207. That would be very exceptional?—Well, I cannot see any difficulty in that really. If a man has a small salary as Sheriff Clerk and a salary as Clerk of the Peace and something else, I do not see why he should not be pensioned on his salary as Sheriff Clerk.

11 June 1915.]

Mr. ANDREW HARRISON.

[Continued.]

59,208. You mean that although he would not be giving his whole time still his pension would only represent that part of his time which is covered by his salary?—Yes.

59,209. Under the system you suggest, what protection would the State have, for instance, against the appointment of a person in bad health who would become eligible for a pension in a few years?—Of course that position would be open to emerge as in the Civil Service just now.

59,210. In the Civil Service the appointment is made by a central authority and the Commissioners examine the health of the candidate and satisfy themselves in other ways that he is a proper person to be appointed. What safeguard would you have in this respect if the appointments remained with the Sheriff Clerks?—They might be examined when they came into the Service, not after it.

59,211. You suggest that they should be scrutinised as to their health and character, and so forth, by the Civil Service Commissioners on entering the service?—Yes, or after a year's probation.

59,212. Before being made pensionable?—Yes.

59,213. Would you in that case suggest an age limit for retirement?—Yes, I would.

59,214. What age would you suggest?—70, I should say.

59,215. That is higher than the age in the Civil Service generally?—Yes, but experience counts for much in work of that sort. I think 65 is too early.

59,216. Would you place restrictions upon private practice by Sheriff Clerks and their staff?—Certainly, except the holding of such public appointments as do not conflict with their duty.

59,217. You would limit it to public appointments?—Yes, certainly.

59,218. Would you allow them to act as auditors?

—Yes, I should regard that as an impartial public appointment.

59,219. (Lord Dundas.) I see in your précis of evidence you say you do not think that the Civil Service system would be suitable for Sheriff Courts?—I do not think so.

59,220. You say this: "I think all that is necessary to have a perfectly contented and efficient service is to give security of tenure, reasonable salary, with periodical increments rising to a fixed sum, and pensions on retirement, with, of course, the opportunity of promotion on vacancies occurring"?—Yes.

59,221. With regard to the system of promotion by transfer, I suppose the existing vacancies are very few in the course of the year?—That is so.

59,222. And I dare say also, to a certain extent, the expense of removing from one place to another might be a serious matter for a poor man?—Yes, in the lower grades it might be.

59,223. I do not quite understand what it is that you want. Do you want to see something like a Bureau of Information established?—I do not think it would work in that way. I have known of two or three instances where Sheriff Clerks have written to our office in Edinburgh asking for a suitable man for a depute clerkship. I have known of three such cases.

59,224. I want to get from you for my own information what measure of reform you want to see instituted in the matter of promotion?—It is simply to prevent outsiders coming in on our top, either as Principal Clerks or as Sheriff Clerks Depute.

59,225. Well, there is nothing that would require an Act of Parliament?—No, probably not.

59,226. Would not a little more activity among the members of the staff, and, if necessary, an interchange of ideas, meet the situation?—Yes, certainly; but then each Lord Advocate or each Secretary for Scotland would take his own view as to whether he should make political appointments or not.

59,227. Apart from the introduction of outsiders, there is actually little to be done?—Yes, except the pay.

59,228. The real thing that you are anxious about, I think, is not so much the difficulties about promotion but the matter of a pension?—That is so.

59,229. Well, if you do not want a cast-iron Civil Service system, how are these pensions to be obtained?

—I do not know. Probably some modification would be necessary just now owing to the number of men who have come in by political appointments late in life.

59,230. Apart from political appointments at the moment, have you thought out at all on what basis the scheme of pensions could be established?—I think it might just be the Civil Service scheme in force just now.

59,231. Of course the Civil Service scheme is an existing thing?—Yes.

59,232. To what extent do you contemplate that any of your staff should become Civil servants with a view to pensions?—I suggest simply a short statute making that Act applicable to them and giving them security of tenure and fixing their salaries.

59,233. Has anyone drafted a Bill for that purpose?—Yes; I think there is a draft Bill.

59,234. Do you know where it is?—I think the Sheriff Clerk Deputes have drafted a Bill.

59,235. Do you think they have got the length of putting something on paper?—Yes.

59,236. (Miss Haldane.) Is the typist that you spoke of in your office a woman or a man?—A woman.

59,237. You said she was a temporary typist. Do you mean that she is not constantly employed?—No; she is only there in place of a man who is away as a non-commissioned officer in the Territorials.

59,238. Does this typist do the work that he did?—No, not at all; she could not do it. She does not sit in the public rooms of the office; she sits in a private room. I should not like to have a woman sitting in the public rooms of the office; I do not think it would do.

59,239. Who does your typing ordinarily?—All the clerks do it more or less.

59,240. And is she paid 60l.?—No, she is not. She gets 15s. a week. She is quite a young girl and not an experienced typist.

59,241. (Sir John Kempe.) There is one sentence in your memorandum I would like to refer to. You say, "The present system of organising is fairly satisfactory, the only difficulty felt so far as I am aware being the arbitrary power which the Principal Sheriff Clerk has in dealing with his deputes and clerks. In some instances this power is said to have been exercised in a harsh, oppressive, and unreasonable manner, without any right of appeal on the part of those aggrieved." Is that a general complaint?—No, it is not general. I have known of three or four cases.

59,242. What kind of ill-treatment?—In one case the solicitor who was the agent for the candidate was appointed Sheriff Clerk, and he immediately dismissed the depute who was there before him. He took some umbrage at him, he did not like him, but he had absolutely no reason for it. Of course the man is thrown out and absolutely ruined.

59,243. Of course it is a common instance in other professions?—The public service is not like the professions. A man cannot start as a Sheriff Clerk or a Sheriff Clerk Depute outside. He acquires a knowledge of that work and he cannot do anything else.

59,244. There is no reason to complain generally?—It is not general. I think I have known of five or six all over Scotland, but it is always a fear that is present with everyone just now.

59,245. (Mr. Graham Wallas.) You spoke of something that would happen if the system of appointing political agents was stopped?—Yes.

59,246. May I take it from you that it is well understood that when a vacancy occurs in the office of Sheriff Clerk the political agent for the district of the political party then in power is the person appointed?—That used to be the case; it is not always the case.

59,247. But that prevails to a very large extent at present?—Yes.

59,248. Then if the Sheriff Clerk is expected to die, for instance, there will be competition for the office of local political agent, which may have nothing to do with mere keenness of political feeling?—Undoubtedly that is so.

59,249. And such a political agent will fight for his party hard when he is looking for a comfortable position for himself?—Yes; as a rule he is not a sound lawyer or a sincere politician, but just an adventurer. I must say at one time there was good reason for appointing a lawyer to be Sheriff Clerk, because he had to act as legal assessor of the Court. The Sheriff was not a lawyer then. I am going far back. That is the explanation of appointing practising solicitors as Sheriff Clerks.

11 June 1915.]

Mr. ANDREW HARRISON.

[Continued.]

59,250. But there never was any good reason for appointing a man who was neither a good lawyer nor a sincere politician?—I should think not.

59,251. When he is once appointed, is it your experience that he goes on being an active politician?—No, I should think not.

59,252. He has done his work?—Yes.

59,253. In some cases does the Sheriff Clerk Depute, who desires to become Sheriff Clerk, become a very active politician?—He could not; he is disfranchised by statute.

59,254. Whenever you come across a case of a man being appointed Sheriff Clerk from the position of Sheriff Clerk Depute, he is appointed without political considerations?—Yes.

59,255. You give us here a case, I understand, of a clerk of yours aged 50, who is in receipt of a salary of 60*l.* a year. Is he a full-time clerk?—He is a temporary man. I did not explain that. I have not got the office fully organised yet, and that man is temporary. He does not intend to stay; he is here partly owing to the war.

59,256. You told us there were cases of harsh treatment by Sheriff Clerks of their clerks?—Yes.

59,257. Are there cases in your memory where a clerk has been unreasonably dismissed in order that a relative of the new Sheriff Clerk might be appointed to the post?—I cannot say I know of any cases of that sort.

59,258. It is either political or personal prejudice that has been to blame?—Yes.

59,259. (Sir Donald MacAlister.) A Sheriff Clerk who is appointed politically at once has a certain patronage to exercise?—Yes.

59,260. Is it the custom for him to exercise that patronage for political considerations?—I never knew of any case of that sort. The tendency is for a Sheriff Clerk appointed for political reasons to make the office a sinecure, to leave the work to his depute.

59,261. But in appointing deputies or assistants, and so on, it is not said to be the custom that he should make political appointments?—No, I cannot say that it is. I do not know of any instances.

Mr. JAMES FISHER, called and examined.

59,262. (Chairman.) You are a second class clerk in the office of the General Register of Sasines?—I am.

59,263. Does your evidence represent the views of the second class clerks generally?—So far as I am aware, it does.

59,264. Are you commissioned by the whole body to give evidence?—We called a meeting the other day and I was so commissioned.

59,265. The Commission have already had evidence as to the nature of the work performed in the Sasine Office, and to some extent as to the qualifications required of the staff, so that we need not ask you to go into these points, but I see in the statement you have given us you recall a sentence from the report of Lord Low's Committee?—I do.

59,266. That sentence is to the following effect: "We find it right to state that we are satisfied, for all the most important work in the Sasine Office, the clerks employed should possess adequate knowledge of conveyancing. A knowledge of conveyancing is just as necessary for abstracting a writ, for the Abridgements and for the Search Sheets, as for drafting it, and anyone who does not possess that knowledge cannot make a reliable search either from the Abridgement or from the Search Sheet." You base your representations on the facts which are represented by that extract from the report of Lord Low's Committee?—We do.

59,267. The method of entrance to your class is by competitive examination?—It is.

59,268. And for admission to that examination certain qualifications of previous service in a Law Agent's office are required?—They are.

59,269. What are they?—Nowadays one requires to have five years' service in the office of a Scotch Conveyancer, and the candidate must hold the Intermediate Leaving Certificate, or have passed the Second Law (General Knowledge) Examination. The alternative is that the candidate must be a graduate of a British university.

59,270. And in that case he has to serve three years?—Yes.

59,271. You compare your position with that of second division clerks and the Civil Service generally?—Yes, we do; but would you allow me to point out that it is not more than a comparison, because we hold that we are better than second division clerks. What I mean is that we do not desire to be made second division clerks. We hold that we are entitled to special treatment in respect that our office is a professional office, and the qualifications are higher than are required for second division clerkships.

59,272. As regards the scale of pay, your point of entry is slightly higher?—It is; it is 10*l.* higher.

59,273. And the age of entry is also higher?—Yes, it is three years higher.

59,274. Your maximum is 50*l.* lower than the maximum of the second division?—Yes.

59,275. In order to reach that maximum the second division clerk has to pass a barrier?—I understand there is such a barrier. There is no examination, and I fancy it is just a proficiency barrier.

59,276. In the Sasine Office, above the second class, there are other classes?—There are.

59,277. There are 13 first class clerks with salaries rising to 400*l.*, six chief clerks with salaries rising to 450*l.*, and six assistant keepers with salaries rising to 575*l.*, and one accountant with a salary rising to 520*l.*?—Yes.

59,278. These posts are all filled by promotion from the second class clerks?—Yes.

59,279. In the case of the second division clerks, have they any definite sphere of promotion corresponding to that?—I understand their sphere is quite as large as ours. On that point, of course, I do not speak from special knowledge, but they do fill, at all events, a considerable number of higher posts.

59,280. Is it not the case that the second division clerks have no right to promotion, and no definite chain of promotion higher than their own class, and that in most departments the only posts that are normally filled from the second division are certain staff posts, as they are called?—As I said, I do not speak with any knowledge, but I certainly understand that the second division clerk might rise considerably, and does so rise. Of course, we of the second class in the Sasine Office do not have the right to fill those posts. What I mean is, although these higher posts are certainly filled from the second class clerks, yet men are passed over and may not fill any of these higher posts.

59,281. That is to say, that the individual is passed over, but that the posts are filled from the class?—Yes, that is so.

59,282. Have there been any cases in your experience in which men have been introduced from outside to the higher posts?—No.

59,283. So that they are regularly filled from your class?—Yes.

59,284. The presence of a considerable number of higher posts, which are regularly filled by promotion from the lower class, has a direct bearing on the question of whether the scale of pay of the lower class is adequate?—Yes. Still, in that connection might I draw your attention to a part of the statement which we sent in where we say that there will be a barrier

11 June 1915.]

MR. JAMES FISHER.

[Continued.]

within a short time—a barrier in the way of the second class rising to fill those higher posts. That barrier arises in this respect, that about the year 1899 a considerable number of men were brought in—some 14 men—to fill up the second class ranks. These men were brought in within two or three years. Now, they are pretty much of equal age, and the number of vacancies are fairly few. That means that there is certainly a barrier to the promotion of those men who subsequently entered the office. All these men cannot be promoted; they will have to stand at their maximum of 250*l.* for a considerable number of years.

59,285. That is to say, owing to the accidental circumstance of a number of men being brought in at once, there will for a certain period be slow promotion?—Yes.

59,286. It equally follows that when that body of clerks arrive at the time for retirement there will be rapid promotion?—That is also true.

59,287. These accidents are liable to occur in all offices?—They unfortunately occur to a considerable extent in our office. That is one of our hardships.

59,288. Your particular suggestion is that the maximum of the second class should be raised to 300*l.*?—That is the suggestion we put forward here, but if you will permit me I should again like to emphasise the suggestion that special treatment might be accorded to our particular office, seeing that it is a special office with special qualifications.

59,289. Special treatment of what kind?—Well, with regard to the minimum salary and with regard to the maximum salary.

59,290. You have mentioned the maximum salary, but what is the special treatment as regards the minimum salary?—What I mean is just this, that the recent change in the examinations heightened the qualifications necessary, as I pointed out a moment ago, and what I suggest is that the office be treated altogether as a law office, and, looking to the point of age—20 to 25, the increased age—it would be better to have no reference at all to the second division scheme, but give us an increased minimum salary, possibly 100*l.* rising to at least 300*l.* What I want to bring out is the special qualifications that our office requires. We do not want to put the thing too high, and therefore we suggest 300*l.*, being the maximum of the second division; but with the increase in the qualifications which has recently taken place, I do not think I am putting it too high to suggest that we should get special treatment. It is a professional office, a law office. It does work, which, I believe, is on much the same lines as the work of the Land Registry Office in London. Now, if that be so, the question arises, why should the Sasine Office clerks be treated on different lines? For example, in the statement, we say that a certain number of us are qualified solicitors, and that a certain number have taken the law classes at Edinburgh University. Now, neither of these qualifications is required of a second division clerk, and I think that the second division clerk has no university experience at all, so that on these grounds I think I might reasonably suggest that we should be treated as a separate and professional office.

59,291. The candidates for admission to these posts have necessarily served in a law agent's office?—Yes.

59,292. Have you compared the scale of salary which they receive with the salaries they might expect to receive if they had continued in law agents' offices?—Well, of course, undoubtedly in that respect they are better in the Sasine Office.

59,293. They are much better, are they not?—Yes, but might I point out that this is the Civil Service. We all know that the law clerk, in Edinburgh at all events, is very poorly remunerated, and it would, I think, if I may say so, be wrong to institute a comparison between the solicitor who has gone into the Sasine Office, and a solicitor who stays on as a clerk, or practises as a solicitor outside the Sasine Office.

59,294. For what reason?—Because of the very poor return which the men in outside offices get. We know, for example, that in Edinburgh the average salary in a law office is 70*l.*, 80*l.*, or 100*l.* at the most. A man might remain at 100*l.* for a great number of years.

59,295. Is there any difficulty in obtaining men for that employment at those rates?—That is the unfortunate thing. There is no such difficulty, for this reason: Edinburgh having the law classes, men are glad to come from the country for the sole reason of gaining experience while they are attending the law classes. I think that is one reason why the rate of salary in a law office in Edinburgh is so low.

59,296. Such men are attending the law classes with what object in view?—Of qualifying as a solicitor.

59,297. But then the salaries continue throughout their service, not merely while they are qualifying?—Of course, there is always a continual inflow and outflow of these men.

59,298. Where does the outflow go to?—The country districts all over Scotland.

59,299. Are they men who practise as solicitors in country districts, or who serve as clerks in solicitors' offices in country districts?—In both capacities.

59,300. Do they get higher remuneration there?—Yes.

59,301. The rate in Edinburgh is low, because of the number of men coming into town to go to the law classes?—Yes.

59,302. And who maintain themselves by serving in a solicitor's office?—Yes.

59,303. (Sir George Paul.) If they come to attend the law classes, of course they are junior men?—Yes; but might I just say again that I hardly think it right to institute a comparison between the Civil Servant in the Sasine Office and men in law offices, because the men in law offices, as I have just remarked, do not get, from the financial point of view, fair treatment, but the Sasine Office official expects to be treated fairly.

59,304. Unless you have some regard to the rate of remuneration in the open market, how are you to arrive at a standard for Civil Service remuneration?—Of course, if we go into that aspect of the question, we know quite well that the ordinary clerk is very badly remunerated, but we find the second division man rising from 70*l.* by annual increments to 300*l.* per annum. Surely we might as well institute a comparison there, and we should find, I feel sure, that the second division clerk is much better treated than an ordinary clerk in an outside office.

59,305. (Mr. Boutwood.) With regard to the point that you have been talking about just at the end of your evidence, the rates of remuneration in outside offices in Edinburgh, I do not know how far you would agree with this, that the State in determining the salaries of these servants, although it has to pay some attention to the general rates obtaining for similar work outside, may properly be asked to pay very much higher rates—that the market rate is not the sole thing that might reasonably be supposed to govern the action of the State?—Yes, I think you state it fairly.

59,306. Coming to the question of the second division and the clerks in the Sasine Office, I see here at the top of your statement that there is a Keeper and six Assistant Keepers and an Accountant. Well, now, are those eight posts filled by promotion from the lower grades, or from outside?—They are filled by promotion from the second class clerks.

59,307. (Chairman.) Not the Keeper?—No.

59,308. (Mr. Boutwood.) All except the Keeper?—Yes.

59,309. That leaves you with 48 second class clerks and 26 possible promotions?—That is so.

59,310. I do not know whether your knowledge of the second division would be sufficient to confirm this statement, that the prospects of the second division in the Civil Service depends wholly on whether the person is in one of three classes of offices—whether, in the first place, he is in an office which has a professional higher establishment, in which case he probably has no chance of promotion; in the second place, whether he is in an office where there are Class I. posts, in which case there is a possibility of promotion, which may or may not be realised; and, in the third place, whether he is in an office constituted on what may be called a clerical basis, somewhat like this office of yours, where the whole office from top to bottom, with the exception

11 June 1915.]

Mr. JAMES FISHER.

[Continued.]

perhaps of the top post, is filled from the lower grades. I suppose it is the latter sort of office that you really have in mind in making your comparison?—Yes. Of course, in the first class of office you mentioned, there is promotion.

59,311. No. The first class of office is where the higher class is strictly professional, barristers, as a rule. In such cases there is no promotion. Well, that, of course, is not analogous to yours at all. The second class is where they have the university class, in which case there is a possibility of promotion; and the third group of offices is where the whole of the higher establishment is recruited from the bottom by promotion. The last case is the one that is analogous to your office?—Yes.

59,312. So that really the mere fact that you have this definite prospect of promotion does not spoil the comparison you make with the second division, because, to quite an appreciable extent, the second division have similar prospects also?—Yes. Might I suggest again that with regard to the second class of office where the higher staff is of a professional nature, that would suit our case, because although we have here instituted a comparison with the second division, yet our work is of a professional nature.

59,313. (Sir George Paul.) You said there was some difficulty in promotion to the higher places owing to people being brought in from outside to the second class. How did that arise?—About 1899 our office was being reconstructed. Prior to that a considerable number of temporary men, not Civil servants, were brought in to bring the work up to date. These men, after being in the office for some time, were in 1899 taken on to the staff.

Mr. JAMES A. FLEMING, K.C., called and examined.

59,322. (Chairman.) You are Sheriff of Fife and Kinross?—Yes.

59,323. Before that you were Sheriff of Dumfries and Galloway?—Yes.

59,324. Will you tell us what the staff is in each of these sheriffdoms?—I am sorry I cannot give the exact number of the staff.

59,325. I mean specially the higher staff?—In Dumfries and Galloway there are three counties. In Dumfries there is one Court-house, with one Sheriff Clerk, and one Procurator Fiscal, with the various staffs. In Kirkcudbright there is also a Court-house with a Sheriff Clerk, a Procurator Fiscal and staffs. There is also a Court at Maxwelltown, but it is only held every fourth week, and is negligible. No separate staff is kept there. In Wigtown, which is the smallest of the three, there are two Courts, one at Wigtown, the county town, and one at Stranraer. In Wigtown there are the Sheriff Clerk and the Procurator Fiscal, with staffs, and at Stranraer there are the Sheriff Clerk Depute and Procurator Fiscal, with staffs.

59,326. So you have three Sheriff Clerks and one Sheriff Clerk Depute?—Yes, what I call a real Sheriff Clerk Depute, a man on his own. There is, of course, always a Sheriff Clerk Depute at each Court to act in the absence of the Sheriff Clerk, but at Stranraer the Sheriff Clerk Depute acts separately. The sheriffdom of Fife and Kinross comprises these two counties. In Fife there are three Court towns, the county town of Cupar, Dunfermline, and Kirkcaldy. At Cupar there are a Sheriff Clerk with, of course, his depute, and the Procurator Fiscal, and their staffs. At Dunfermline there are a Sheriff Clerk Depute and his staff, and a Procurator Fiscal with his staff. At Kirkcaldy there is a Sheriff Clerk Depute, but, as there is no criminal work there, there is no Procurator Fiscal.

59,327. Is Kirkcaldy in the Dunfermline district for criminal work?—The criminal work for Kirkcaldy goes to Cupar. In Kinross, which is a separate county, there are a Sheriff Clerk and a Procurator Fiscal with their staffs.

59,328. Is the volume of work greater in your present sheriffdom than in your former sheriffdom?—Yes, considerably greater. In Dumfries and Galloway the work was rather below the average 59,314. Was that for the Search Sheet?—Just the general work of the office.

59,315. Which had gone into arrear?—The staff was reduced before this time and these temporary men were brought in by the then Keeper to cope with the work, and as it was afterwards found that it was better to have these men to keep the office on a proper footing, an examination was instituted, not a competitive examination, but a qualifying examination, and they were taken on to the staff. The result is that we are now suffering, or will suffer, in a very short time.

59,316. Were you in the office then?—I was not.

59,317. (Sir Donald MacAlister.) There are 48 of the second class clerks?—Yes.

59,318. And 27 posts, up to the Keeper, to which they may aspire if they are found good enough?—26, I believe.

59,319. Do you know of any second division office where the number of posts to which the second division clerks may aspire is as high as that?—No, I do not.

59,320. Is not that one thing which gives the Sasine Office quite a special position?—Yes, but there you have only 26 as against 48. These men who are fully qualified men, and who do not get posts, have to stay at 250*l.*

59,321. There is no second division clerk that I know of who has got such a numerical chance of promotion?—Yes, but there are no second division clerks who suffer by having to stay at 250*l.* per annum, and there are no second division clerks, I maintain, who have the qualifications of a second class clerk in the Sasine Office.

in all the Courts. It was very small in Wigtown, a little larger in Stranraer, and a little larger in Kirkcudbright. Dumfries is the only Court-town where there is anything like a volume of work. On the other hand, in Fife and Kinross sheriffdom, there is a good amount of work in all three of the Fife towns. Dunfermline is exceptionally busy; Kirkcaldy is also a busy place; and Cupar, because of the amount of county work done there, it being the head town, is also very busy.

59,329. In Fife there are three Sheriff Clerks Depute in all?—Yes, one is at the county town with the Sheriff Clerk. The other two conduct their business at their own courts.

59,330. Do they give their whole time to the work?—The Cupar Sheriff Clerk Depute gives his whole time. In Kirkcaldy and Dunfermline there is no restriction in any way, but, as a matter of fact, they have not time for outside work, so they give their whole time. In Kinross there is no restriction, and the Sheriff Clerk there does a considerable amount of other work. As regards that outside work, he is County Clerk, Clerk of Lieutenancy and Clerk of Peace, Clerk to the Income-Tax Commissioners, and Clerk to the Kinross School Board. He also carries on business as a law agent. Of course, his business as law agent is restricted, because he is not allowed, directly or indirectly, to practise in the Sheriff Court, so he cannot do Court business, but he does a considerable amount of conveyancing and estate business.

59,331. Do you find that the staffs are thoroughly satisfactory as regards the manner in which their duties are performed?—Entirely so.

59,332. You are acquainted with the evidence of Sheriff Maconochie?—Yes, I read it.

59,333. Do you agree with it?—Generally, I concur in it. I concur in it absolutely as regards Procurators Fiscal.

59,334. In the case of Procurators Fiscal, do you think the present system of appointment is the right one?—I think so.

59,335. You do not think it is practicable or desirable to diminish the numbers of Procurators Fiscal?—I agree with Sheriff Maconochie. I think it is extremely undesirable in the case of the Procurator Fiscal, who should give his personal attention to the

11 June 1915.]

MR. JAMES A. FLEMING, K.C.

[Continued.]

very important matter of detection of crime and the preparing of cases, to give him too wide a district, so that he cannot give his personal attention to cases occurring in the extreme margin of the district.

59,336. The result of that is that in many districts there is not enough work to occupy his whole time?—That is so.

59,337. In these cases do you consider he should be allowed to undertake other professional work?—I have no doubt about that.

59,338. You see no objection?—That is so. I see a great advantage in his being allowed to do other work, I will give you an instance of that. In Dumfries, which is a large county, a Procurator Fiscal was appointed by Lord Advocate Balfour (I do not recollect the date), just after the agitation got up about Procurators Fiscal being agents for landlords in crofting counties, and, unfortunately, the restriction was extended to Dumfries. Dumfries is a very law-abiding county, and there was very little work for the Procurator Fiscal, but he could do nothing else. The result has been that a very good man indeed has rusted, and he is a very much older man than his years, and is really now barely fit for his work. I put it down to the fact that he had nothing to occupy his mind and keep him alert.

59,339. We have heard that in recent years appointments to the larger posts of Procurators Fiscal have been made to a greater extent than in the past by transfer from one place to another; do you think it is desirable to extend that?—I think it is desirable. The transfers that have been made have been extremely good appointments, if I may venture to criticise those in authority.

59,340. One witness has suggested to us that the value of Procurators Fiscal depends so largely on their knowledge of the locality and the local people that transfers may not always produce the best results?—That is quite so, but you must not take that as barring transfers altogether. For instance, a Fiscal who has been working in a West Highland county would be of very little use if taken away to a county in the south of Scotland or to a town. His experience, his local experience, and his usefulness, and even his language would be lost, if he were taken to a different place.

59,341. Turning to the Sheriff Clerks, do you agree generally with Sheriff Maconochie's remarks?—Yes.

59,342. Are there any points you wish to emphasise otherwise than he has done?—I think he attached rather more importance than I would to the desirability of previous official experience. I cannot help thinking that in the smaller towns the desirability is rather in favour of legal experience.

59,343. By legal experience do you mean experience in a law agent's office?—A knowledge of law. I think he should be a qualified agent, the reason being that unless you get a man who has a knowledge of the law or has official experience, he had got to pick up one or the other. I think it is rather more likely that a man, by picking up, would get official experience rather than a knowledge of the law. I think he should be trained to law, because he could pick up the official experience.

59,344. Do you agree with the view that the higher posts of Sheriff Clerk and Sheriff Clerk Depute should as a rule be filled by promotion from among the staff of clerks?—If it can possibly be done.

59,345. We have been told that the staff is at present recruited at an early age by boys fresh from school; would it be possible for them, if that age of recruitment continues, to acquire the law agent's qualification, which you suggest is necessary for the higher posts?—I think it might be, if the Sheriff Clerk were a qualified law agent and allowed to practise—of course the limited amount of practice, excluding Court work. Then he could take the boys in as apprentices, and, after serving their apprenticeship, they could go through their examination and qualify. So long as the Sheriff Clerk is not a law agent, any apprenticeship that may be served with him is of no use for the law agent's examination.

59,346. That, in many cases, would cut the staff off from promotion?—Yes it would cut off the staff entirely, where the Sheriff Clerk's whole time is taken up, and there are many cases where the Sheriff Clerk's whole time should be taken up with his duties.

59,347. Are you familiar with the recommendations of Lord Salvesen's Committee on Minor Legal Appointments?—Yes, I have read the recommendations as regards Sheriff Clerks Depute.

59,348. That Committee recommended that a person who has served as clerk in a Sheriff Clerk's Office not less than five years should be eligible for promotion to the office of Sheriff Clerk Depute; also that Sheriff Clerks Depute who have served for five years as such, or ten years in a Sheriff Clerk's office, two years of which have been served as Deputes, should be eligible for promotion to a Sheriff Clerkship; do you agree to these recommendations?—Yes, to this extent, I quite agree that anything I have said in regard to the desirability of their being law agents may be restricted to these places where there is not full time worked. In regard to part-time appointments, an opportunity should be taken to secure law agents.

59,349. In the case of whole-time appointments, do you agree that the conditions suggested by Lord Salvesen's Committee would be sufficient without absolutely requiring a law agent's qualification?—Yes.

59,350. Would you give the Sheriff Clerks' staff greater fixity of tenure than they have at present?—I think the Sheriff Clerks Depute, especially those acting in Courts of their own, should not be left so much to the mercy of a new Sheriff Clerk as they are at present. Their appointment falls with the death or resignation of the Sheriff Clerk, and the new Sheriff Clerk can appoint them or not as he pleases. That is a distinct hardship. The alteration I suggest is very small, but it is that, as is the case with many of these subordinate appointments, the appointment should subsist, to fill up the gap, till the new Sheriff Clerk is appointed, and the new clerk should only have power to recall by permission of the Sheriff. You may say the Lord Advocate or the Secretary for Scotland, but the inevitable result would be that he would ask the advice of the Sheriff, and I do not see why we should go round about when we can go straight.

59,351. We have had evidence about the promotion in the Sheriff Court offices by transfer from one place to another. The suggestion has been made that all vacancies should be filled up from the staff already in the office, if suitable persons are available, and if, in the particular office, no suitable person is available, that the appointment should be made, as a rule, by transfer; do you think that is a practicable system?—It is very difficult to say. My experience in the smaller places is this—the boys are always brought in at an early age. They serve their time of apprenticeship, or first two or three years of office work, at a merely nominal salary of 10*l.* or 15*l.* Then comes the termination of that period, and the question is, what are they to do? There is a gap, and there is no money to keep them going with an increase of salary, and there is no vacancy in the next grade, which runs from 50*l.* to 60*l.* or 70*l.* What they do is to live off, and we very seldom get a boy who sticks to the Service, that is to say, who, when he has got up to his 25*l.* a year, gets an opportunity of stepping into a regular clerkship. It is a very small Service, and there are very few vacancies in it. In regard to transfers, I am afraid I do not quite see how any system of transfer would increase the number of vacancies and so increase the number of promotions. It would be better for the promising clerk, because he would get more rapid promotion; but any step he got would block another man for promotion. It would simply give a promising boy a rapid promotion. To that extent it is good. You get a better man; but, on the other hand, it will not increase the promotion.

59,352. It might equalise promotion?—I am afraid I do not understand what you mean.

59,353. I mean that by accident promotion might be much more rapid in one district than another?—Yes, it might.

59,354. If there were transfers it might equalise it?—Yes, in small places there might be a number of deaths, and that would equalise it.

11 June 1915.]

Mr. JAMES A. FLEMING, K.C.

[Continued.]

59,355. As regards increasing prospects of promotion, the recommendation of Lord Salvesen's Committee is that vacancies in Sheriff Clerkships should, as a rule, be filled by deputes, and vacancies among deputes should be filled, as a rule, from the staff; that would increase the vacancies?—Yes.

59,356. Are you in favour of that recommendation?—Not as it is framed. As regards that I cannot say I am. I do not think that those who have the power of appointment should be restricted in the selection of a Sheriff Clerk to a person who has already been in the Sheriff Clerk's service. I think it would be rather unfair to them to have their hands tied by having to select a man already in the Service when there was an excellent man not in the Service and worthy of the place. There is another matter which should be considered as regards this question of promotion. If a man is promoted by transfer, then, presumably, he is transferred from one place to another where the salary is greater. To make it worth his while to go from one place to another, the increase of salary must be sufficient to cover the cost of removal in a very short time. There are very few cases where a sufficient increase could be given to do that. The cost of removal is a serious matter, and, as my Lord Dundas knows, I have some experience of the removal of bank agents.

59,357. (Lord Dundas.) Yes?—I fancy, till you got up to the higher transfers from Sheriff Clerk Depute to Sheriff Clerk, you would find difficulty in making people see it was worth their while.

59,358. (Chairman.) They might have the option?—Yes.

59,359. You mentioned bank managers; is it the practice to promote by transfer in that service? It is frequently done. It is more often done with a bank accountant or teller being promoted to be bank agent (as we call them in Scotland) in a smaller place.

59,360. There might be a similar process in the Sheriff Clerks' service?—Yes, but the difficulty is cost of removal, which, I may say, is borne by the banks out of a special grant for it.

59,361. If the system is to work freely and fully, you suggest some grant for removal expenses would be necessary?—Almost necessary. You might lose a man, who was worthy of promotion to another place, through that disadvantage.

59,362. You mentioned that boys in the Sheriff Clerks' offices frequently go off to other places; does that lead to difficulty in providing suitable staff for the offices?—Yes. The difficulty is greater in the smaller towns, and it is increased when you cannot hold out the inducement of making them apprentices. If a boy can become a law apprentice you can nearly always get him, even in the smallest town.

59,363. That difficulty would be diminished if they had better prospects of promotion?—Naturally, but that would carry with it a larger Vote to run the Service.

59,364. You said you thought it would be unfair to the appointing authority, if their hands were tied in any way in regard to appointments to higher posts?—Yes.

59,365. The present freedom of appointment results largely, does it not, in appointments being made on political grounds, for services rendered?—I think it does.

59,366. We have heard from many witnesses that that is well known?—I have known of political appointments and appointments that were not political, but entirely on merits.

59,367. When you say it is undesirable to tie the hands of the appointing authority, do you mean it is desirable that they should be at liberty to apply the present principles?—That is so. I have seen appointments made from outside the Service which have been most excellent appointments, and I should regret if the Sheriff Court should be deprived of getting these people by the appointing authority having his hands tied.

59,368. Do you think a political appointing authority is a desirable one?—I really cannot say. I should think the natural thing, when the appointment is made by a person who has got his own appointment through politics, is to let politics weigh a little bit. I can only judge by results. In my experience I have had very little to complain of in any political appointment, and the little I have thought I had to complain of has turned out to be better than I expected.

59,369. Does the opinion you express go further than saying that the system has produced better results than you might expect?—If you assume it is a bad system.

59,370. Is it your opinion that it is a bad system?—No, I do not think it is. It is a system that, from what I have heard, might lead to undesirable appointments, but, on the whole, I do not think it is a bad system.

59,371. Apart from the question of whether a person is competent nor not, is it desirable that political services should lead to advancement?—Speaking generally and coming back to principle, I should say no. The only principle that should obtain is that the best man should be appointed to the place.

59,372. That is the natural and obvious principle that should be followed?—Yes. You asked me as to the desirability of giving a free hand to appoint from outside the Service, and I should supplement my answer by this. If, as I think is the case, there are many Sheriff Clerkships and Procurator Fiscalships where there is not enough work to take up the man's whole time, and it is desired to appoint men with outside interests and work to keep them alert, you must almost necessarily go outside for appointments. The reason is that you appoint as Sheriff Clerk a man who is already a law agent, or in some other work, or holds some other appointments. He is a desirable man, because you have a man who has his mind fully occupied, thereby enhancing his value, but if you restrict yourself to the Service, then you have either got to transfer from another place or promote in that particular place some man who has been acting as Sheriff Clerk Depute, or a clerk who has not had the opportunity of working outside or of getting outside work. Therefore, I think in these smaller places you should have the power to appoint an outside man. Of course my object in all this is to secure efficient service in the Sheriff Courts. I am satisfied that you will thus get efficient service and find a man whose mind is fully occupied to keep him alert. If you do not find such a man you expose the one you appoint to the temptation of drink, laziness, or something else, and the result is bad work.

59,373. The recommendations of Lord Salvesen's Committee in regard to promotion apply specially to full-time appointments?—Yes, and I do not think they consider sufficiently the part-time appointments.

59,374. The special class of deputes they propose to create would be entirely full time?—Yes.

59,375. They say: "That the appointment of all Sheriff Clerks Depute who are not included in the special class hereinafter mentioned should remain in the hands of the Sheriff Clerk, who would continue to be liable for their acts and intromissions"?—Yes.

59,376. Your objection would not apply to that?—Not to a full-time appointment.

59,377. Do you concur with the recommendation that the number of Sheriff Clerks should be reduced so that there should be one in each sheriffdom?—No, I do not understand that suggestion. It seems to be for the purpose of saving a man on one side to increase the salaries of the deputes on the other. Now, the result is a pretty clear one. Let us take Dumfries and Galloway. The result of that recommendation would be that there would be a Sheriff Clerk of Dumfries who would do nothing but Court work, and who would not be a Process clerk. He would not pay any attention to the work of the court.

59,378. Is that part of the recommendation?—Yes. The sixth recommendation on page 14 of the Report states: "That the Sheriff Clerks should no longer be called upon to act as Clerks of the Process in the Civil Courts, or to attend as clerks in the Criminal Courts in the sheriffdom."

11 June 1915.]

Mr. JAMES A. FLEMING, K.C.

[Continued.]

59,379. Does "Clerk to the Process" mean a clerk who attends in court?—Yes, and takes charge of all the documents, the various pleadings in each action. That would mean that the Sheriff Clerk Depute would have to undertake that duty. There is not much difficulty there, except that it is throwing more work on to the depute. But when you come to Kirkcudbright, where there is at present a Sheriff Clerk, there is to be no change in the work at all. He is to be called a different name, and I presume he is to get a smaller salary. The Sheriff Clerk at Kirkcudbright has a part-time appointment, that is to say, he is unrestricted. He is to be made a whole-time man, with a diminished salary and a change of name.

59,380. Does it necessarily follow that the depute, who takes the place of the Sheriff Clerk, will be one of the special class of whole-time officers?—That is the proposal—the Sheriff Clerks and the Sheriff Clerks Depute who are in charge of a court.

59,381. The special class of deputies would not necessarily include all deputies in charge of a court?—I read that the special class of deputies were to be those who were conducting the work of a court, distinguishing them from the Sheriff Clerk Depute who is working in the same court. I go on to the eighth paragraph on page 15 of the Report which says: "That a special class of deputies should be formed from the deputies at the courts mentioned in the excerpt from the fifth Report of the Royal Commission, already given." I find also on page 12: "At every seat of an ordinary Sheriff Court, not being the place where the Sheriff Clerk resides and personally officiates, in place of the present Sheriff Clerk Depute appointed by the Sheriff Clerk there should be a Sheriff Clerk Depute appointed by the Crown, paid by Exchequer, and entitled, if prohibited from private practice, to a retiring allowance."

59,382. I do not understand that as meaning it is to include the whole of them; no depute is to be placed in that special class except those whose full time is taken up with the work?—That is so. Then my remark would go. There still stands this instance of the Sheriff Clerk of Kirkcudbright, where you would have a depute doing the same work as a Sheriff Clerk, and getting less pay, otherwise the recommendation has no practical effect.

59,383. Do I gather you would prefer to leave the number of Sheriff Clerks as it is?—Yes. I should like to say as regards that, the work of the Sheriff Court is greatly facilitated by the position which the Sheriff Clerk holds in the town where the court is held. If he is a man of some position and standing, and respected by the townspeople and all the local boards, then the work goes on smoothly and steadily. If, on the other hand, he has not that respect or attention, but is just a clerk, there is a constant attempt to get the better of him. The result is unfortunate, and the Sheriffs are called in to redd up mistakes, which should not have been made, and which would not have been made by a man with an outside training and an outside knowledge, and who had the respect of the townspeople in the place. I value a great deal the system we have in these smaller towns of having a local man, with considerable interests outside the Sheriff Court, appointed as Sheriff Clerk.

59,384. Then you do not regard it as best to have as many whole-time officers as possible; you think it preferable for them to have other work as well?—That is to be taken with this remark, that if there is enough work to occupy a man's whole time he should be a whole-time officer.

59,385. None of these officers is pensionable?—None. They should be made pensionable, because there should be an age limit. I do not see how there can be an age limit without a pension.

59,386. What age do you suggest?—Seventy.

59,387. That is a higher age limit than in the Civil Service, which is 65?—At 65 we would lose many valuable men.

59,388. Do you prefer 70?—I think so.

59,389. How far will you extend the system of pensions; would you include part-time officers as well as whole-time officers?—Certainly.

59,390. That would be contrary to the established practice as regards Government pensions?—I understand that as a part-time official I am entitled to a pension, I am paid out of a separate fund, but what is good for the Consolidated Fund out of which I am paid cannot be wrong for any other fund. If you have one man paid 800*l.* for whole-time and another man paid 800*l.* for half-time, I cannot see why a similar retiring allowance should not be paid to each. I don't care whether you pay him whole-time or not. You are giving him 800*l.*, and, when he retires, you should give him a pension applicable to 800*l.*, whether he has been whole-time or half-time. That has not obtained in all cases, and it is a question whether the rule should not be departed from.

59,391. Would you apply that to the staff in the Sheriff Clerks' offices?—Do you mean a system of pension?

59,392. Yes?—I think not. I would be inclined to confine it to the Sheriff Clerk and depute.

59,393. Not to any of the clerks?—No. There might be some senior clerks in the larger towns. For instance, the clerk who does the commissary business, and who is a very important man, might be put on a pensionable scale. That would require further consideration. As a rule, however, I would not pension the junior clerks.

59,394. Do you think the remuneration of the service is adequate?—It is small, as all things in Scotland are. I am not so much concerned with increase of remuneration as with objecting to having full-time men put in to do half-time work. I want men there who have enough to do to keep them from going to sleep. If you do not give them enough to do, let them take up outside work. I cannot complain much about the scale which obtains in Scotland. Of course there are cases where cheeseparings have been at work, and, unfortunately, salaries have been cut down too small, but that is a small matter. Taking it generally, as regards part-time people, I cannot put forward any claim for increase of salary.

59,395. (Mr. Matheson.) On what ground do you dislike a committee to appoint or recommend?—There is a suggestion there should be a committee for selection or a committee to appoint, and I dislike it on this ground. There has been a hint in many of these inquiries as to wire-pulling. I am certain, if you had a committee, there would be more wire-pulling. You can take the number of men on the committee as the multiplier for the amount of wire-pulling. If the appointment is left in the hands of one man, there is much less wire-pulling. It will not be stood by one man, but a committee will stand it.

59,396. You think it is not possible to find a committee who can be proof against that sort of thing?—I don't say that at all. What I say is that there is more chance of getting members of a committee who will not be proof against that sort of thing. There is a feeling abroad that when there is a committee there is more chance of wire-pulling. If you take water directors they are much more pestered by wire-pulling than individuals.

59,397. (Sir George Paul.) They are pestered, but do they yield?—I am glad to say they have not done so in my experience. It is looked upon as a bar.

59,398. Rather a nuisance?—Yes.

59,399. (Mr. Matheson.) Are you aware that many educational appointments are made in England by committees who select and recommend candidates without any difficulty being experienced?—I can only speak from my personal experience. I do not know about that.

59,400. (Sir Donald MacAlister.) Have you ever taken part in a selection committee?—As one of a board of directors.

59,401. For a commercial company?—In an insurance company or a bank or such like.

59,402. Do such committees of directors work all right?—Yes.

59,403. Better than if you left the appointment to the managing director?—I am not sure.

11 June 1915.]

Mr. JAMES A. FLEMING, K.C.

[Continued.]

59,404. Does such a committee give greater confidence to the company?—It works with greater satisfaction to the directors themselves. They feel they have some interest in it. I much prefer the individual appointment.

59,405. (Mr. Graham Wallas.) We are told that with two exceptions the Procurators Fiscal are paid lump sums, from which they draw both their own salaries and those of their clerks; whereas the Sheriff Clerks are paid a lump sum each, and a sum is allocated to the clerks. Which is the best system?—I cannot say. So far as the Sheriff Clerk is concerned, he is paid a lump sum personally, and an allowance is allocated for the clerks. I do not know who allocates that sum, but it is allocated by someone. That is of great advantage to the Sheriff Clerk Depute, whose salary must be as big as possible, because he occupies an exceedingly responsible position. As regards the Fiscal, his clerks are mere clerks. He has no one approaching the Sheriff Clerk Depute. The Procurator Fiscal's Depute is generally not on his staff at all. He is a man from outside, and gets a Fiscal deputation. I cannot compare the two. The Sheriff Clerk's staff is a permanent staff, and has more responsibility than the Fiscal's staff, which is merely a purely clerical staff. The two systems work very well, each in its own case.

59,406. We had a complaint from the Sheriff Clerks Depute that in one case when, owing to death, a sum of 400*l.* a year was left to be allocated, then instead of giving an increase of salary, the whole 400*l.* was given to a brother of the Sheriff Clerk, who was a bankrupt draper; is there any machinery to find that out and correct it, if such a thing occurred?—I am very much surprised to hear of it, and I thought it would have been found out by the Exchequer, because the returns are made every quarter by the Sheriff Clerk, giving the amount of the salaries to be made to deputies and clerks for the quarter.

59,407. All that is necessary is that the draper should be appointed to the post at 400*l.* and give his receipt yearly; so far, everything would be in form; he is appointed to this post, and is in receipt of his salary; is there any way of getting behind that?—I cannot tell you, except that if I found anything like that happening in my district, I would have an interview with the Sheriff Clerk.

59,408. It is within your powers to make an official inquiry?—I am afraid not, but I would make it uncomfortable for him.

59,409. Do you say there should be in existence in the Public Service a principle that, when a man works part time, there shall be allocated to him with regard to that part time a sum representing a proportionate pension?—I would rather say there should be allocated to him a pension proportionate to the salary paid to him.

59,410. Yes; supposing the part time were not so many hours a day but so many years of his life; suppose a man is taken up by the Government for a definite period, six years, ought the Government to lay up for him a pension for that salary which he has received during the six years?—You are putting the question on very different ground here, because we are considering the salaries of people who are appointed for their whole life, and I only suggested that I wanted to have power to retire men at a certain time, and not have them lingering too long on the stage. That, of necessity, means a pension. As regards an appointment for a six years' job, I am not at all sure that the man is appointed for anything more than six years, and he gets his pay for the six years. Therefore, there is no claim for anything more.

59,411. You said it is desirable that Sheriff Clerks should be local men with considerable local interest?—If I did say that I made a mistake. I did not say local men, but that they should have local knowledge and a knowledge of local men.

59,412. Yes, a local knowledge, and a knowledge of local men; we have been told in evidence that there is a system by which the post of Sheriff Clerk is given to a man who has been an agent on one side or another at elections, and paid by his political party. Is that so?—Undoubtedly there are cases like that. It happens that the party agent of the county, when a vacancy occurs, and his party is in power, puts in an application, and is quite frequently appointed. On the other hand, it is quite frequent that people who are not party agents are appointed.

59,413. The party agent has much knowledge of local men, and much influence over them; is not that knowledge and influence subject to certain limitations? Are not they only with men of the one party, and not with the other?—In these country districts I think the party agent has as much knowledge of those on the other side of politics as of those on his own. He knows his enemies as well as his friends.

59,414. Do you think his influence is equivalent in each case?—I said nothing about influence. I am not sure I want influence. I want a position and a man who obtains the respect of the people.

59,415. Take respect. Do you think the respect I have for the paid agent of another party, after an election, is the same as the respect I have for the agent of my own party?—Yes, if he has played the game honourably.

59,416. (Sir George Paul.) Do you know of appointments to Sheriff Clerkships of men belonging to the other party?—I know of one instance where the party agent was appointed, and within a year you could not tell what his politics were; and in another year he was on the other side of politics.

59,417. You differ from Sheriff Maconochie as regards legal and administrative experience?—Yes.

59,418. You represent the smaller towns?—Yes.

59,419. He is representing the larger?—Yes.

59,420. So you are not necessarily contradictory?—No, I do not say I differ from him in regard to the towns of which he speaks, but I think he has omitted the interests and the different conditions in the smaller towns.

59,421. He is speaking for the larger towns, and you are speaking for the smaller towns?—Yes. He is speaking from his own experience of the larger towns.

59,422. You are speaking from your own experience of the smaller towns?—Yes.

59,423. You are not contradicting him?—No.

59,424. Do you find in regard to the Sheriff Clerks in smaller places that legal experience is necessary?—Yes. I think they have less opportunity to pick up a legal knowledge in small places than a practical knowledge, and they have to pick up the one or the other.

59,425. That is very different from the larger centres?—Yes.

59,426. (Mr. Boutwood.) I am not certain that I clearly understand your point of view about one matter; a primary consideration in making appointments is that you want to keep a man fairly busy, to keep him alert, and you have two systems, either the whole-time appointment, which presumably keeps him fully occupied, or the part-time appointment, where the man has other occupations; both these systems keep the man occupied and alert; which is the better?—It depends on the place.

59,427. The question I was leading up to was this: is your view on one side or the other so clear that you would make any attempt to increase the number of whole-time appointments?—I should certainly not attempt to increase the number of whole-time appointments unless there was enough work to give the man whole-time work.

59,428. For instance, it has been said that by a process of amalgamation you could convert what are now three or four part-time appointments into two whole-time appointments; do you see any advantage in that, merely substituting a whole-time appointment for two half-time appointments?—No, and when I look at the practical effect of such a proposal, it simply comes to this, that the whole-time appointments are really, under a different name, taking a man's whole time to do half-time work. I cannot get beyond that, unless you do away with Sheriff Courts, Sheriff Clerks, and Procurators Fiscal, and give the Sheriff Court, Sheriff Clerks, and Procurators Fiscal a much wider district to cover. May I illustrate my point. Kinross is a separate county. The Sheriff Clerk gets a salary of 130*l.*, out of which he has to pay his whole clerical staff. The Procurator Fiscal has a salary of 65*l.*, out of which he has to pay his clerical staff and for his stationery. How could you give a whole-time man any of these appointments? It would not be fair to him to give him such an appointment without enormously increasing the salary, so that he could live on it. From my point of view, it would not be fair to him, because you are putting him into a place where he is faced with the temptations of laziness, sloth, and drink. You could only get clear of that by merging counties in the neighbourhood into that county, that is, by extending the area of the Procurator Fiscal, and getting him to work two districts or a greater district. I do not agree with such a suggestion, because you cannot get away from the sentimental point of view. Each county has its own history, its own sentiments, and its own records that have existed for hundreds of years, and to merge one county into a neighbouring county would raise an opposition, the end of which you would not hear for a long time.

11 June 1915.]

Mr. JAMES A. FLEMING, K.C.

[Continued.]

59,429. Procurators Fiscal are paid a lump sum, out of which they have to pay themselves and their clerks?—Yes.

59,430. We heard of a case where the Procurator Fiscal's staff was normally five; three went to the war. Do you know what happened to the money. Were the salaries of the three paid back to the Treasury, or did the Procurator Fiscal appropriate them to himself?—Fortunately I am able to tell you exactly. I have here a statement from a Procurator Fiscal who gets 650*l.* in a lump sum. His office salary and expenses were 50*l.* or 60*l.*. One clerk is meantime on military service, and only a boy is employed, making the total expenses only 30*l.* He keeps the balance.

59,431. (Sir John Kempe.) You propose that pensions should not be given below deutes, not to ordinary clerks?—With this qualification, that there are some special senior clerks whose case might be considered, but, I think, not as regards the junior clerks, whose appointment and dismissal I should leave entirely in the hands of the Sheriff Clerk.

Mr. WALTER JAMES LEWIS, S.S.C., called and examined.

59,442. (Chairman.) You appear as a representative of the Society of Solicitors in the Supreme Courts of Scotland?—Yes.

59,443. You are yourself a practitioner before the Court of Session?—Yes. I have been so for 30 years.

59,444. You gave evidence before the Departmental Committee on Minor Legal Appointments in Scotland in 1911?—Yes.

59,445. The evidence that you are prepared to give, we may take it, is the expression of the views of your society?—That is so.

59,446. Dealing first with the departments specially connected with the Court of Session and the Court of Justiciary, the first question to which we will turn our attention is that of appointment and promotion. Do you consider that previous legal experience outside the public service is desirable for appointments in the offices of the court?—Before entering?

59,447. Yes?—I do.

59,448. Do you think that a definite qualification should be laid down, that no one should be admitted who is not qualified as a law agent?—I think so.

59,449. Would you admit any equivalents to the Law Agents examination?—I would admit all the recognised equivalents; for instance, a degree in law is an equivalent to the Law Agents examination, and the Writers to the Signet examination is also an equivalent.

59,450. You would accept degrees in law without apprenticeship?—No, I would in all cases require a certain amount of outside experience.

59,451. Do you think that the present system of appointment has been satisfactory?—As regards the individuals holding office, I think I may say that the profession is quite satisfied with the way the work is being generally done.

59,432. But you wish to encourage the promotion of the clerks to be depute clerks?—Yes, that is very desirable.

59,433. How about their pensions; would you allow their time served as clerks to count when they are deutes?—I think necessarily it must be so.

59,434. If their service as clerks counts, is not it rather hard to refuse pensions to clerks who have not got promotion?—I do not answer as to that.

59,435. You have not thought that out?—No.

59,436. (Miss Haldane.) Regarding the sentimental grounds you mentioned; is not it the case that counties are merged for political purposes?—In regard to politics, the merging raised local opposition, and I fear in this case the local opposition raised would be greater.

59,437. Do you say that merging is not justifiable for that reason; after all the public have to consider what is best for the Service?—I do not think I was asked whether it was justifiable or not. What I said was that any attempt to do away with local counties would raise opposition.

59,438. Has Clackmannan a Sheriff Clerk?—Yes, and a Court and a Procurator Fiscal. While Kinross and Clackmannan are merged for political purposes, they maintain their own names; they are Kinross and Clackmannan.

59,439. Do you think Sheriff Clerks and deutes ought to be allowed to act for local bodies such as Parish Councils; why is that objected to?—I may be wrong, but I think it is objected to because the view of the Civil Service people is that no person can be entitled to a pension unless he is a full-time Civil servant, and does not take up outside jobs. I think it is highly desirable that these public appointments should be open to Sheriff Clerks and deutes.

59,440. If these appointments were given to Sheriff Clerks we might get more whole-time people doing Government work?—They would be fully occupied for the whole time.

59,441. Even if they did not get a private practice?—Yes.

59,452. We have had evidence from numerous witnesses that it is perfectly well known and recognised that considerations relating to political services have entered largely into the method of appointment?—That is generally understood.

59,453. Do you think that is desirable?—I think not.

59,454. You think that that system ought to be done away with?—That system should be done away with, so far as it is possible.

59,455. In the Court of Session in particular the form which that system has taken has been generally the appointment of the Lord Advocate's clerks?—That has been a sort of recognised system.

59,456. Do you think it is desirable that that should continue?—If the Lord Advocate's clerk has been admitted as a law agent, then, to my mind, he should stand his chance along with others, and I would not make any objection to him because of his being in the post of clerk to the Lord Advocate.

59,457. Some witnesses have objected to that system on the ground that the appointment of the Lord Advocate's clerk to a comparatively high post in the service was unfair to those who were already there in the lower posts? Do you agree with that criticism?—I quite agree with that.

59,458. Your observations on the question of appointment on political grounds are general, I suppose, and apply not only to offices connected with the Court of Session but to other offices also?—Yes.

59,459. How would you do away with the present system?—As long as the patronage is with the Crown, I do not see that you can, from the nature of things, get it absolutely excluded. I do think that some new method should be adopted. The method which I have ventured to suggest is having something of the nature of a standing committee of appointment.

11 June 1915.]

Mr. WALTER JAMES LEWIS, S.S.C.

[Continued.]

59,460. What exactly would be the function of the committee?—Being a standing committee, it would be acquainted with the needs and requirements of every office in the court. It would also be acquainted with various men who are to some extent acquainted with the duties. The members would be in a position to select suitable persons for any vacancies, and, to my mind, a committee such as that would be in a better position to appoint than any single individual.

59,461. Would their function be to appoint, or to recommend to a Minister for appointment?—I do not see myself how you can absolutely exclude the Crown as the final appointing agency, and, therefore, that is why I have suggested that the real right of appointment must remain in the Crown; but I think that if there was a committee specially charged with the responsibility of this, the Lord Advocate would be almost bound to act in accordance with the views of that committee.

59,462. At any rate, if he departed from their recommendation he would have to be prepared to meet criticism?—That is my view; and therefore it would come to be, although the patronage was with the Crown, the result would be that a man would be appointed without Crown influence and not upon political grounds.

59,463. How would you compose such a committee?—It might be composed of two judges of the Court of Session along with the Principal Clerk of Session. The Principal Clerk of Session I include on the footing that in the course of time he may possibly be the official who will have absolute control, or, at least, control to a very large extent, of the whole court establishment, and he will be in touch with it and have some controlling influence over everybody in the court, and, therefore, he would be in a position to advise and consult with two members of the Bench.

59,464. Do you apply that suggestion of a committee to the local legal appointments as well as the central legal appointments—I mean the Sheriff Court appointments?—No, I keep that in a separate category I am speaking solely of the Court of Session offices.

59,465. Various witnesses have criticised the suggestion of a committee to deal with appointments on the ground that the committee would be exposed to personal or political pressure to a greater degree than an individual. That criticism suggests, I presume, that a committee would be less able to resist such pressure. Do you agree with that?—No; with all respect, my feeling is the other way. At present, I think the Lord Advocate is exposed to a great deal of pressure as it is. It seems to me that with a committee—this is a committee of men more concerned with the administration of the work of the court than any other interest—it would not be open to any outside influence of any kind, because they would have all the knowledge in their own hands. They would have a first-hand knowledge and acquaintance with the candidates, and I should imagine they would be able to go very much more independently about it than any individual.

59,466. At any rate, they would not have any political claims to satisfy?—Certainly not.

59,467. If you had a system of that kind, would you assume that the higher posts in the offices with which we are dealing would be filled by promotion from the lower posts?—Naturally so.

59,468. If there were qualified persons?—Yes.

59,469. That is to say, you would give the committee a voice in the promotions as well as in the original appointments?—Yes.

59,470. Competitive examination has also been suggested as a method of original entry into the offices, but I gather that you would prefer a system of appointment such as you have described?—Yes; I do not see in what subjects there could be competition and I do not see how the results of any competitive examination could be satisfactory.

59,471. In order to work such a system satisfactorily, would it be necessary to bring the various special departments of the court into closer relation with each other?—It is difficult to answer that, because all the departments are, to a certain extent, separate, but if you had a committee it would certainly be in a very good position to transfer from one department to another.

59,472. At any rate, the Court of Justiciary would have to remain separate?—I think it would have to remain absolutely separate.

59,473. And the Crown Office would remain separate?—Yes.

59,474. Do you consider that transfers might take place more frequently than they do between, for instance, the Extractor's Department and the Clerks of Court?—Yes, I think the Extractor's Department might be looked upon as the more elementary, and a person might pass from that department to be an assistant in the Bill Chamber, or an assistant in the Outer House.

59,475. And, having done that, he might be eligible for the position of Assistant Extractor or the Extractorship?—Yes.

59,476. Might there also be some degree of interchange with the Bill Chamber?—Yes, I think from the Bill Chamber to the Depute Clerks or Assistant Clerks; I am not so sure about vice versa.

59,477. Some difficulty arises at present from the location of the offices?—Yes.

59,478. The recommendation was made by Lord Salvesen's Committee that the offices of the Court should be removed from the Register House to the Parliament House. Do you concur in that?—Yes, I quite concur.

59,479. Do you think considerable advantage would result?—I think very great advantage would result.

59,480. Would you explain that a little more in detail?—Well, the system just now in force is one which would not be adopted in any scheme now instituted for the first time. The offices of the Court are in Princes Street, while the Court is up in Parliament House, and it means that documents have to be taken up every morning for cases that are on the Roll, and it means they have to come down again when the cases are over in the afternoon. One result is, you cannot deal with the Process or deal with any papers except in the afternoon; you can only get papers from 2 o'clock to 5 o'clock in the afternoon. This system lends itself to all manner of troubles. Suppose you get an interlocutor in the afternoon and you find something not quite right in it, the official who has charge of the paper in the afternoon is not the official who has been dealing with it in the morning, and you cannot get hold of him to put it right. You have to go back to the court in the morning and find the man responsible for it. There is loss of time in running about for little things like that.

59,481. That would be righted if the offices were in Parliament House?—Yes; I think if the offices were in Parliament House it would come to this, that the Process Office would be open the whole day.

59,482. And the offices which are at present attached to each particular court would be combined in that Process Office?—Yes, I think that would result in a great saving of labour and a saving of men, and necessarily a saving of money. Another difficulty at the present moment is, for instance, the Auditor's Offices—another department of the court—are up in George IV. Bridge, and that means that clerks have to take papers which they can only get in the afternoon from Princes Street up to George IV. Bridge, and there is a great deal of time wasted and unnecessary trouble caused.

59,483. As you have already mentioned, it would be of importance to have the offices open during longer hours each day if they were up at the courts?—Yes.

59,484. Would it also be desirable to place the offices of the Auditor in close conjunction with the court?—I think that is highly desirable.

59,485. Do you consider that the members of the staff should be restricted from all outside business?—Yes.

59,486. And what about an age limit for retirement?—I understand suggestions have been made in some quarters that 65 should be the age limit. I am quite in favour of an age limit, but from the nature of the work of the court officials my impression is that a man up to 70 is quite able to do the work, and probably able to do it better, with his years of experience.

11 June 1915.]

Mr. WALTER JAMES LEWIS, S.S.C.

[Continued.]

59,487. Then you would suggest that the Civil Service limit, which is 65, should be somewhat raised?—I understand just now that it is 70 with regard to some of the appointments under the Crown, and I don't see any reason for limiting that.

59,488. Turning now to the Register House departments, and, in particular, to the Office of Sasines, questions have been mentioned before the Commission concerning the various authorities who control the Register House departments, and their relation to each other and to the departments. The four authorities who have some voice in the matter are, the Court of Session, the Deputy Clerk Register, the Treasury, and the Secretary for Scotland. Will you give us your views as to what should be the measure of control of each of these authorities?—I don't think that is a matter that our society has really considered very carefully or has really very much interest in. I don't know that it has ever come before us very definitely, except when a good many suggestions were made some time since about altering the method of registration. I think until a recent decision our members were not really brought face to face with the question of control. It seems to me to be clear that there is some necessity for having the jurisdiction of the Court of Session maintained over the whole register and everything connected with it. The decision I refer to is that of the Court of Session in a case—Macdonald (1914, Session Cases, 854).

59,489. You would maintain the jurisdiction of the Court over all matters affecting the system of Registration?—Yes. I think it lay originally with the Court of Session, but in one way or another it seems that the Treasury has managed to get a considerable amount of control. It appears that there was some difficulty with regard to the respective rights of the Keeper of the Register and the Deputy Clerk Register. Many members of the profession seemed to think it rather a serious matter if the Keeper of the Register of Sasines was to have this unlimited control with regard to the registration of deeds. So much depends upon it that it seems to be too much to be left in his hands. We think that is a matter which certainly affects the interests of clients and should be made clear.

59,490. Turning now to the Sheriff Courts: Is it the case that the work of the Sheriff Courts has been increasing considerably of late years?—Very considerably.

59,491. In volume or in complexity?—Both in volume and in complexity.

59,492. Do you infer from that that it is more important than in the past that a very high standard of qualifications should be required for the officers of the Court?—I do.

59,493. Then what do you think should be the qualifications for appointment as Sheriff Clerk?—I would have every one, either Sheriff Clerks or Depute Clerks, pass the examination of a law agent, or its equivalent, and they should also have a certain amount of experience.

59,494. Experience of what kind?—Experience with a court practitioner would be very good, but in the case of the Sheriff Clerk's office, I think experience in the office would be practically as good. Five years' training in a Sheriff Clerk's office should be, I think, equivalent to five years' apprenticeship outside.

59,495. But you would require that the Law Agents examination should be passed before a person who had served in the office would be eligible to promotion to the post of depute?—Yes.

59,496. You are aware that Lord Salvesen's Committee made some recommendations in the direction of giving the staff better prospects of promotion to the higher posts. Do you concur generally in these suggestions?—Yes.

59,497. You think it desirable that the staff should have an opportunity?—Yes; and, of course, that depends on bringing in the right sort of men to begin with.

59,498. How do you suggest that the right sort of men should be brought in?—There is a difficulty, I understand, in getting boys to come into the Sheriff

Clerk's office, because it is often a hopeless career; but I think if it was recognised that an apprenticeship in a Sheriff Clerk's office should be equal to an apprenticeship in a law agent's office, he would feel that he could go outside after serving his apprenticeship in the office. On the other hand, if he turned out all right, he would be eminently fit for promotion in the office.

59,499. Would legislation be necessary to make service in the Sheriff Clerk's office equivalent to apprenticeship in a law agent's office?—I think it would. Prior to the Act of 1873 such a course was possible; but since that Act you cannot be indentured to a Sheriff Clerk or a Sheriff Clerk Depute.

59,500. Lord Salvesen's Committee also recommended that the number of Sheriff Clerks should be reduced, that there should be one Sheriff Clerk in each sheriffdom. Do you concur in that view?—Yes.

59,501. They also suggested that there should be a special class of deposes who should be whole-time officers, and who would, no doubt, be pensionable. Do you concur in that recommendation?—I do. The difficulty is you cannot put all the Sheriff Clerks Depute on one basis or in one category.

59,502. Do you see any objection to a Sheriff Clerk or depute in a place where there is not enough work to occupy his whole time doing other business as well?—I think in a case like that he must do other business. I do not see how it could be avoided, but I think every means should be taken to avoid such a practice, either by making the districts larger, if possible, or by confining the nature of the work he is allowed to do. I think it is a very bad plan if he is to be in private practice. Of course, there are a good many appointments one could hold in the country to which objection might not be taken.

59,503. Public appointments?—Yes.

59,504. If a Sheriff Clerk or Depute has any private practice, would any conflict be likely to arise between the interests of his clients and his duties as a public officer?—It is difficult to say. There is bound to be a certain amount of conflict and difficulty. We have had that state of matters in Scotland both with regard to Sheriff Clerks and Fiscals, and I do not know that any instance of great trouble has come to light, but it is liable to cause a great deal of friction and difficulty now and again.

59,505. In the case of the Procurators Fiscal, some similar questions arise. Do you consider that it is desirable, wherever possible, to restrict the Procurator Fiscal from private practice?—I think it is most desirable.

59,506. Within recent years that has been the tendency?—Yes.

59,507. We have had evidence from certain witnesses who have expressed their opinion in the other direction. They have expressed the view that it is very undesirable that a man should not have a full day's work, and that if there is not enough public work to occupy his time it is desirable that he should be at liberty to do private work?—If a man is busy at his work all day his work is better done than the work of a man who is half the day idle. In criminal work, my view is that it is better to have an official who will be confined to that special work.

59,508. In the case of the Procurators Fiscal, would any friction be likely to arise if they were doing other work?—I think so. I think they are liable to get into an awkward position.

59,509. It has been pointed out to us that there is difficulty in reducing the number of Procurators Fiscal, because crime may arise at any moment, and it is therefore undesirable to make the districts too large?—That does not altogether appeal to me. My impression is that the difficulty would be solved by large districts. Of course that would mean that competent clerks would be placed in different parts. Now that travelling is so easy, I do not think any district would likely be so large but what the Fiscal could be on the spot immediately and make all the investigations necessary.

59,510. You would be in favour, therefore, of a reduction in the number?—Yes. I think a great deal of the work could be done in the centres. The superintendent of police and the local constables are able to do a good deal of the preliminary investigations.

11 June 1915.]

Mr. WALTER JAMES LEWIS, S.S.C.

[Continued.]

59,511. You told us you were in favour of promotion, as far as practicable, in the Sheriff Clerks' offices from the lower to the higher posts. Do you apply that also to the Procurators Fiscal?—Yes, I do.

59,512. You would, as far as possible, fill the posts of Procurators Fiscal from deputes; and would you go further and fill these posts from the clerks in the offices of Procurators Fiscal?—I would.

59,513. In both of these cases the question of promotion raises the question of transfer from district to district. You would be in favour of free transfer for that purpose?—Yes, I would.

59,514. It has been suggested that in many cases the expenses of transfer would be prohibitive, and that it would not be worth a man's while to move for a moderate increase of salary?—I cannot quite follow that. I cannot conceive that the mere expense of going from one town to another would be a drawback where there were other advantages.

59,515. At any rate, the man might have the option of going?—Yes. We have had several instances of Fiscals being transferred from one county to another in recent years.

59,516. The suggestion you made as regards a committee to make appointments applied to the Edinburgh offices?—Yes.

59,517. What do you think is the right system of appointment, taking first the Sheriff Clerks and their offices?—Well, the plan I suggest is that it should remain in the Crown, but in consultation with the Sheriff.

59,518. You think it desirable to exclude political grounds for this service also?—Yes, certainly.

59,519. Do you think that would be secured by requiring the Lord Advocate to consult the Sheriff?—I do not see what body could be set up to manage a better system in the Sheriff Courts.

59,520. You would lay it down as a principle that in the event of a vacancy in one of the higher posts the claims of those already in the Service should be considered specially?—Yes.

59,521. As regards the Procurators Fiscal, what system of appointment do you think is right there?—We propose that the Crown Agent should be consulted.

59,522. The Crown Agent is himself a political officer?—There is that awkward feature, perhaps; but there again I look upon him as the active head of the department, and I do not see what better sort of committee we could get than that.

59,523. It hardly seems likely that consultation with him would tend to the exclusion of political considerations?—That is so; but then, on the other hand, we have got a special department here, and we have seen the tendency of late years, I think, not to go so much on political lines. I do not think that any head of the Crown Office would allow politics to enter very much into it. While I see that objection, on the other hand I do not see any other competent authority for the appointment of prosecuting officials.

59,524. The question has been raised with regard to the Commissary Court of Edinburgh, whether it is necessary to maintain it as a separate organisation, or whether its work might be transferred to the Sheriff Clerk. Will you give us your views?—I do not agree with that suggestion at all.

59,525. You think the Commissary Office should be maintained?—I think it occupies in Edinburgh such a peculiar position that it should be preserved intact. I cannot see anything to be gained by transferring it to the Edinburgh Sheriff Court, either in management, administration, or any saving in any direction.

59,526. The work differs in some respects from the work done in the Sheriff Court?—Yes, it does. It has a sort of jurisdiction in matters of succession over the whole world. To transfer it would mean that it would simply be a transfer in name, because, as regards management and everything else, I think such a change would have no justification.

59,527. (Lord Dundas.) Would there be any money-saving over it?—I think none whatever.

59,528. You told us that, as regards some of the departments of the Court of Session, you thought there might, with advantage, be a rather more mixed changing among them?—Yes.

59,529. For instance, the Assistant Clerks of Court might interchange, perhaps, with the Bill Chambers underlings, or the Extractor's underlings, or the like?—Yes.

59,530. On the other hand, I think you made it quite clear that there should be no such freedom of exchange between the Court of Session, the Judiciary Office, or the Crown Office?—I think there should not.

59,531. So that leaves a very small residuum?—Yes.

59,532. I see in your précis you sum it up in this way: "I do not think that anything can be done by consolidation of the departments of the Court of Session with any appreciable benefit as regards efficiency"?—Yes; that is my view.

59,533. As regards the present method of Crown appointments, you have indicated to the Chairman that you deprecate the system of party politics being a consideration in such appointments?—Yes.

59,534. That attitude is rather a question of principle than because you think the public has been badly served up to now?—That is so; we have had some remarkably good results under it.

59,535. But, as a matter of principle, you feel that?—Yes.

59,536. Then you have told us that except as regards the Court of Session appointments you think that probably the Lord Advocate must be left to appoint, but that as regards Sheriff Clerks he ought to consult with the Sheriff?—Yes, that is so.

59,537. The only question on that is, are you under the impression that the Lord Advocate at present does not consult the Sheriff before he makes the appointment?—I have no doubt he does.

59,538. Then there is no reform needed?—If he does, I do not think there is.

59,539. But if he does not you think he should?—Yes.

59,540. In the same way I should have thought that the Lord Advocate in all probability did consult the Sheriff with regard to Procurators Fiscal?—I should think so.

59,541. It is only as regards the Court of Session appointments that you have made a somewhat different suggestion, namely, an advisory committee to advise the Lord Advocate?—Yes.

59,542. That would only really apply, I suppose, to about one dozen or 15 men?—Yes, or perhaps 20.

59,543. It is a very small area for reform?—I want to go a step further; I was going to devolve a good deal more on that body. That was only to be a part of their work.

59,544. You mean as regards supervision?—Yes.

59,545. But, as regards appointment, it is that very limited area that you propose to form a committee for?—Yes.

59,546. The suggestion you make is a couple of judges and the Principal Clerk of Session to assist the Lord Advocate?—Yes.

59,547. Might I ask, is it your own idea?—It is very largely my own idea.

59,548. Have you considered whether it is a good thing that judges should have patronage?—If I am not mistaken there is patronage in the hands of the Lord Chancellor of England.

59,549. But he is more than a judge?—I think in questions of administration and the working of the Court that really the judges are best qualified to deal.

59,550. You have no objection to a judge with a certain measure of patronage?—No, I think not.

59,551. The Lord Advocate is directly responsible to Parliament and to Parliament House as it is?—Yes.

59,552. The judges are responsible to nobody?—No.

59,553. Is not that fact one which ought to be kept in view?—At present the Court is so anxious to see that the work is carried on well that if it was thought that this was really an improved method, the question of not being answerable to anybody would not, I think, be an element.

11 June 1915.]

MR. WALTER JAMES LEWIS, S.S.C.

[Continued.]

59,554. I suppose you will agree with me, on such a question as to whether there should be an advisory committee of any sort to advise the Lord Advocate, the views of Lord Dunedin would be valuable, would they not?—I should think they would.

59,555. One last matter. As regards Procurators Fiscal and their fitness, capabilities, and requirements, I suppose that an experienced Sheriff would really be a person more likely to have valuable knowledge than anybody else?—Yes.

59,556. And the opinion of an experienced Sheriff on such matters are, I suppose, those which would carry most legitimate weight?—Yes.

59,557. (Miss Haldane.) Have you ever thought, in regard to this advisory committee, of a suggestion that has been made in England of having a Civil Service Commissioner on such a committee?—I have not considered that, but the matter being so technical, and, so to speak, a matter of domestic economy as regards the courts, it does not strike me that a person from outside would be of assistance.

59,558. You understand what I mean by a Civil Service Commissioner representing Scotland?—Yes.

59,559. But you have not considered that?—No.

59,560. Then you were speaking of larger districts. I suppose that would entail some of the small counties being merged in others, like Clackmannan, Kinross, and so on?—Yes.

59,561. Would there be any objection to that?—I don't think so.

59,562. Would there be much feeling?—No, because at present we have some of the smaller counties forming one sheriffdom; they are already bound together as one sheriffdom.

59,563. Then you say that you would prefer to have the men giving their whole time and attention to public duties, but you would not exclude an official acting as Auditor of Court, unless in a large city. You mean that they might do certain work under Government?—It is not exactly under the Government. It is auditing accounts in litigations—work which the Sheriff Clerks perform in the smaller towns.

59,564. Would that be the only extra work?—If possible, that would be the only extra work that I would allow them to do.

59,565. (Lord Dundas.) Your advisory committee of two judges and the principal clerk, I think you were going on to say, was not merely to be appointed with regard to the appointments, but with some supervisory functions which they would have to exercise in some sort of way?—Yes, in a much enlarged capacity.

59,566. (Miss Haldane.) Would you allow the Procurators Fiscal to undertake other work?—Not if it could possibly be avoided.

59,567. Would you allow any of them to undertake work for school boards or bodies of that kind?—Not unless it was in a case where it was impossible to get a man to take the place of Fiscal otherwise.

59,568. What is the objection?—There is the general principle. One never knows what difficulties they may get into.

59,569. (Mr. Boutwood.) I gather that you are rather in favour of letting some of these legal officials aggregate offices, that is to say, hold several offices?—I do not think they should, as a rule.

59,570. Did not you say that you thought some of these legal officials, who did not hold full-time appointments, might hold other public appointments?—Certainly. In some places it might be impossible to get men otherwise.

59,571. That would bring a large section of the legal administration into one pair of hands in a country district, would not it?—Well, that is the state of matters that exists now very largely.

59,572. I dare say Scotland is very different from England, but I happen to live in a district in England where that thing does happen, and the men are not the sort of men that one would naturally associate with, and one feels as if one were under an alien tyranny?—At present, in the country districts, a man who does hold one of these appointments has necessarily other small appointments that he can aggregate, or he could not live, and I think that is one of the things we should try to remove if we can.

59,573. (Sir George Paul.) Did I understand you aright when you said that you would restrict the Sheriff Clerk from all private work?—Yes.

59,574. In a place, like, for instance, Kinross, there is very little for a Sheriff Clerk to do. Would you rather keep him half the day idle?—I treat that case by suggesting that the district should be enlarged.

59,575. Taking things as they are?—Taking things as they are, in a small county I do not know that you could do that.

59,576. It would depend on the sort of county and the sort of work?—Yes.

59,577. As regards auditing accounts, it is very common, I think, for the Sheriff Clerk or the Sheriff Clerk Depute to audit the accounts of the Court?—Yes.

59,578. But I think they also act as referees, auditing accounts as between agents and clients?—They have a great deal of that work to do.

59,579. I think they have always done that, and I think some of the witnesses we have had before us approve of it?—Yes, I think there would not be very great objection to that.

59,580. As regards young boys going into Sheriff Clerks' offices, you say that you think five years' training in a Sheriff Clerk's office should be equivalent to five years' apprenticeship with a law agent, but that would not always hold good. In a Sheriff Clerk's office like Edinburgh that would be all very well, but in a Sheriff Clerk's office like Kinross that would not always apply?—My theory would be that every Sheriff Clerk and every Sheriff Clerk Depute would be a law agent, and therefore everybody coming in could be apprenticed to him. I am dealing with this scheme as a whole. Of course you have to make an allowance for exceptional places. In some places just now it would not answer for a boy to serve five years' apprenticeship.

59,581. (Mr. Graham Wallas.) It has been suggested that it would be a good thing to have a maximum age beyond which people should not be allowed to hold these appointments, the age being appropriate in each case to the appointment. Has your society thought of that?—No, I do not think so. Of course, if the question of five years' service was involved, it would practically result in an age limit of 21 for entering the service.

59,582. But take other higher appointments, do you think your society would feel that the appointment of a gentleman of 67 to be a Depute Clerk of Session was a little unfair?—I think they would probably feel that.

59,583. May I take it that, with regard to these legal appointments, the tradition is that, in the first place, personal obligations incurred by the Lord Advocate ought to be satisfied—his personal obligations to his clerks, for instance?—Well, I cannot tell what view any Lord Advocate takes on that matter.

59,584. But there is a tradition?—Presumably appointments are made on political ground as an appreciation of political services.

59,585. When there is no personal claim political services seem to count. May I take it that the purpose of your evidence is that your very important professional body disapproves of that tradition and desires to see it broken?—Yes.

59,586. And that one very valuable service to be performed by the committee you suggest would be the breaking of that tradition?—Yes.

59,587. And if any other method could be suggested, which would have the result of breaking that tradition, your society would agree with it?—Yes, I think they probably would.

At Royal Commissions House, Old Palace Yard, S.W.

ONE HUNDRED AND FORTY-FIRST DAY.

Wednesday, 23rd June 1915.

PRESENT:

SIR HENRY BABINGTON SMITH, K.C.B., C.S.I. (Chairman).

Sir GEORGE MORISON PAUL.

Mr. ARTHUR BOUTWOOD.

Mr. JOHN ROBERT CLYNES, M.P.

Mr. ARTHUR EVERETT SHIPLEY, F.R.S.

Mr. PHILIP SNOWDEN, M.P.

Mr. GRAHAM WALLAS.

Miss HALDANE.

Mr. E. W. H. MILLAR (Secretary).

The Hon. LORD KENNEDY (Chairman of the Scottish Land Court), called and examined.

59,588. (Chairman.) My Lord, you are Chairman of the Scottish Land Court?—Yes.

59,589. You had formerly been Chairman of the Crofters Commission?—For the last four years of the existence of that Commission I was the chairman—1908 to 1912.

59,590. Before that had you practised in the Legal profession in Scotland?—I had practised in the Legal profession, and I was Sheriff of Renfrew and Bute.

59,591. The Scottish Land Court has been in existence now for some three years?—Yes, since 1st April 1912, when it formally came into existence.

59,592. In some respects it succeeded to the Crofters Commission?—Yes, it took over all the duties of the Crofters Commission, which related solely to the seven crofting northern counties of Scotland. Those duties, and a considerable number of new duties, were conferred on it, especially in relation to the Board of Agriculture.

59,593. Those duties were defined by the Small Landholders (Scotland) Act, 1911?—That is so.

59,594. For the purposes of this Commission it will be unnecessary to go in detail into the nature of the jurisdiction and duties of the Court, but perhaps you will tell us very briefly and generally what the work of the Court is?—In very general terms the powers of the Court mainly concern the fixing of rents for the landholders and statutory small tenants to whom the Act applies, and also to a large extent fixing compensation for permanent improvements when landholders renounce or are removed from their holdings. We have also jurisdiction in a great number of incidental questions of boundary, succession, assignment, and so on. Then the most important of the new duties of the Land Court are the authorising of schemes on the application of the Board of Agriculture for Scotland for the creation of new landholders' holdings on available land, and also—which is an extension of a power under the Crofters Act—for enlarging existing holdings up to the statutory limits of a holding.

59,595. Do those duties apply to the whole of Scotland or only to certain counties?—These duties apply to the whole of Scotland, though our work from time to time lies more in some counties, especially the northern counties, than in the others. Our powers extend over the whole of Scotland, but the Crofters Commission's powers were limited to the seven northern counties.

59,596. Is the work done centrally or on the spot?—The greater part of the work is done on the spot. Excluding applications of the Board of Agriculture, I may say the whole of the work is done locally, except applications which are from the area within, roughly speaking, 35 or 40 miles of Edinburgh.

59,597. The members of the Court spend a considerable part of their time in local sittings?—That is so; the greater part of the year is spent in local sittings in districts and parishes throughout Scotland.

59,598. The Court consists of the chairman (yourself) and four lay members?—Yes, four lay agricultural experts.

59,599. How is the work of the different members of the Court arranged? Do the different members of the Court tour in different localities for the purpose of holding sittings?—Each member of the Court has primarily a special district. For instance, the Gaelic member has the Gaelic-speaking parts of the northern counties primarily. It depends largely on the amount of work at the time. The Gaelic-speaking member might also take the county of Caithness, and sometimes part of the county of Aberdeen, so that there is no east-iron division of districts; but, primarily, each member has his own district.

59,600. Has the chairman a special district?—No.

59,601. Does he circulate through all districts?—I circulate through all districts.

59,602. In what circumstances does the Court sit as a whole?—The Court sits as a whole, that is to say, with a quorum of three members, including the Chairman, for practically all Board of Agriculture applications, because they are usually very extensive in area, involving a good deal of money, and the Board of Agriculture having its counsel and agents, and very often expert witnesses, in Edinburgh, it is more convenient that in their cases the sittings should be held in Edinburgh.

59,603. The Court, as a body, also hear appeals from individual members?—The Court, as a body, sit to hear appeals from individual members.

59,604. Are those sittings in Edinburgh?—Only when the parties desire it, or when the appeal comes from a district within easy range of Edinburgh. Of course, you will understand that if we were to require parties to come from a distance for the hearing of appeals, it would be practically inflicting on them the same expense as if it were a Supreme Court appeal.

59,605. So that in districts away from Edinburgh, appeals would ordinarily be heard on the spot?—We must go to the spot. For example, we have lately been hearing appeals in Stornoway from the Isle of Lewis; and in Shetland we should have to go at least to the seat of the local Sheriff Court, and probably to the separate islands to hear appeals. There is this other reason, that an appeal very often involves, if the parties desire it and we think it reasonable, a re-inspection of the holding or holdings to which the appeal relates, and therefore a visit of one or more members of the Court would often be necessary even if the sitting were held at a distance from the actual locality where the holdings are situated.

59,606. Will you tell us now what the staff is for dealing with the clerical work under the Court?—The staff consists in all of 16 members, including the three lady typists.

59,607. You have been good enough to give us a list of the staff with their ages and salaries?—Yes; I have put in a table at the end of my précis, as desired. The first is Mr. Mackenzie, the Principal Clerk and Secretary of the Court, who was originally appointed when the Crofters Commission began, and was transferred under the Act of 1911.

59,608. What are his duties?—In the first place he is the head of the whole staff of the Court, and, of course, he is responsible for the supervision of the staff. He conducts all correspondence, which is pretty large. Then he makes, or supervises, all working arrangements for the conduct of the business of the Court, and he also acts personally as Principal Clerk of Court in all applications heard by a full Court, that is to say, a Court of at least three members, or by a division of the Court over which the Chairman presides. He prepares the annual report of the Land Court for Parliament, and he is also accounting officer for the department of the Land Court.

23 June 1915.]

The Hon. LORD KENNEDY.

[Continued.]

59,609. Then there are four Depute Clerks of Court with salaries varying between 300*l.* and 600*l.*?—Yes, they begin at 300*l.* to 500*l.*, and they go on to 400*l.*, 500*l.*, and 600*l.*

59,610. The senior depute clerk has a higher scale of salary than the others?—He has, because he also acts as taxing master, or Auditor of the Court, for which he gets no fees. Auditors are very often paid by fees, but his salary was fixed so as to include all duties with regard to the bills of costs of solicitors or parties before the Court.

59,611. The second Depute Clerk of Court has a higher salary than the other two. How does that arise?—His general duties are the same, but, I think, when we were arranging the scale of salaries we were anxious to have one post with a somewhat better salary so as to get a man of great experience; otherwise they would have begun on the same level.

59,612. Will future appointments all be on the lower level?—On the lower level. The posts as they stand, with the scales of salaries, were duly sanctioned, but there was certainly the understanding that every future appointment should begin on the lower scale—every future appointment if made outside the office.

59,613. The depute clerks, besides acting as clerks of Court, act as legal assessors?—Yes, each to one of the four expert lay members of the Court.

59,614. What are the duties of the four assistant clerks?—They assist in the clerical work connected with all processes before the Court, and they also take a share in the general work of the office.

59,615. Do they remain in Edinburgh?—Some of them, I think, are always in Edinburgh; but when the Principal Clerk is on circuit (as he is for a large part of the year), at least one assistant clerk goes with him—sometimes two if there is a good deal of general business to be forwarded to the Principal Clerk and myself, and undertaken by us when we are sitting on circuit.

59,616. You have certain special officers in addition to those you have enumerated?—Yes.

59,617. Will you tell us what they are?—The first is the Draughtsman and Surveyor of the Court. His especial duties relate to the correcting and preparing of plans in relation to applications, particularly, perhaps, the applications of the Board of Agriculture, which involve often very extensive plans, and reporting as to the area of holdings and buildings, or any matters which we remit to him instead of putting the parties to the expense of a separate remit to an outsider. He also acts as an assistant clerk regularly, both in the office work and in the work of the Court.

59,618. You have a Clerk of Accounts?—The Clerk of Accounts' special duty is keeping the accounts of the department of the Land Court under the supervision of the accounting officer; but he also acts as assistant clerk in the work of the office.

59,619. Who is the accounting officer?—The accounting officer of the department is the Principal Clerk, but the Clerk of Accounts is a Civil servant whom we took from the Scottish Exchequer Office, as the accounts have to be made up according to their system.

59,620. You have a Keeper of the Rolls of Court?—Yes. He is an additional clerk of Court also, but his main duties are keeping a set of books, entering each application to the Court, and recording each step in procedure until final determination, and then preparing lists or tables of cases awaiting disposal. He also authenticates copies and extracts of orders and proceedings of the Court. He acts as additional clerk of Court and takes part in the general work of the office when required; for instance, he usually gets his holiday in July, so that he can be in the office during vacation.

59,621. You also have a Grazings officer?—His special duties relate to common pastures which are found almost exclusively in the seven northern counties of Scotland. We have very extensive administrative and judicial powers with reference to those common pastures; he visits the common pastures and the committees or constables who are in charge of them, and reports as to regulations, and advises the existing local committees in cases of difficulty. He also takes part in the general work of the office as required, but he does not act as assistant clerk on circuit.

59,622. I gather that all these four special officers take part in the general work of the office as occasion offers?—They do.

59,623. For copying work you have three typists?—Yes.

59,624. What is the method of appointment to the clerical staff?—Except the Principal Clerk all the rest of the staff are appointed by the Land Court, as the staff under the Crofters Commission was appointed under their Act of Parliament. The present Principal Clerk and the senior clerk depute, the senior assistant clerk and the Grazings officer were originally appointed by the Crofters Commission, and were transferred by the Secretary for Scotland with the consent of the Treasury to the Land Court staff under the power in the statute of 1911. The Principal Clerk is appointed by the Secretary for Scotland under Section 3 (6) of the Land Court Act 1911. All the other members of the staff are appointed by the Court under Section 3 (7).

59,625. The Court has complete power as regards both original appointments and subsequent promotions?—Yes, as it stands, that is so.

59,626. Are any special qualifications laid down either for the Principal Clerk or the other members of the staff?—For the Principal Clerk the sole statutory requirement is that he should be a fit person, and it is for the Secretary for Scotland to judge of the fitness of a man for the office.

59,627.—As regards the other members of the staff nothing is laid down in the Act?—With regard to the Depute Clerks of Court, we laid it down as a rule, in making the existing appointments, that every Depute Clerk of Court, as he had to act as a legal assessor, must be either a qualified solicitor of considerable experience or a member of the Bar. All the existing depute clerks are solicitors. The salary was not sufficiently attractive to bring in applications, I think, from members of the Bar; we had some inquiries but no applications.

59,628. That is a principle adopted by the Court for its own guidance, and is not laid down otherwise?—Yes. It is laid down in correspondence with the Scottish office, and is laid down in a rule made by us before these appointments were made.

59,629. What qualifications are required for assistant clerks?—The qualifications required are that they shall have considerable experience in a law office of good standing, preferably an office which has a good deal of landed estate work, and also preferably an office that has had a good deal to do with Land Court work, or that they shall have experience in the legal department of a public office, which is an equivalent qualification in many cases. We also require skill in shorthand and typewriting. At present the Civil Service Commissioners have prescribed an examination for these assistant clerkships consisting of English, English composition, copying manuscript, arithmetic, typewriting, and shorthand.

59,630. Are the assistant clerks employed to report the proceedings of the Court, or for what purpose do they use the shorthand which they are required to know?—Sometimes they are so employed, but not regularly. They require shorthand mainly for the office work—for correspondence, and for orders of the Court, and for making out the draft of the record of the Court. There are other purposes, but these are the main purposes.

59,631. Have the members of the staff to obtain a Civil Service certificate?—All, excepting the Principal Clerk, have obtained a Civil Service certificate with two exceptions in the special offices. One female typist has not got her certificate yet.

59,632. Do they obtain that after examination or without examination?—The depute clerks and legal assessors obtained the certificate of qualification without

23 June 1915.]

The Hon. LORD KENNEDY.

[Continued.]

passing any examination; but then, of course, they had passed the necessary examination for qualification as solicitors.

59,633. Did they obtain their certificates under Clause 7?—Yes, under Clause 7 of the Order of 1910, and so did the others.

59,634. Were they required to pass a medical examination?—Yes.

59,635. Are they all pensionable?—The depute clerks and the assistant clerks are all pensionable. Two of the female typists are; the third is temporary, and is not as yet pensionable. The first exception I have already mentioned—the third female typist—she has passed the examination for typewriting; but she is not pensionable because she has not yet passed the medical examination. The other member of the staff who is not pensionable is the Keeper of the Rolls and additional clerk of the Court.

59,636. What is the reason for that last exception?—The post is regarded as pensionable; but the Civil Service Commissioners, I think, did not consider that, on account of his age, which was 61 at the time of appointment, a certificate should be granted, and accordingly his appointment is during the pleasure of the Court.

59,637. Had he served previously with the Crofters Commission?—No, he had not.

59,638. Then, apart from the typist you mentioned, he is the only member of the staff not pensionable?—He is the only member of the staff in that position.

59,639. Do you think the present system of appointment is the best system?—It is a good system; we have got very good men by it.

59,640. You are satisfied with the system?—I am satisfied. Of course, it has recently been instituted by the Act of Parliament. The method adopted for the Crofters Commission has been confirmed and instituted, and, as far as it has gone, it has been a good system.

59,641. Open competition has been suggested as the means of filling the junior appointments in the legal departments. Would that be applicable, do you think, to the Department of the Land Court?—I do not think it would be so good as the present system, by which they have to pass a qualifying examination. I have been an examiner of law agents and of graduates in a university for many years. A competitive examination, especially if followed by an oral examination, does adequately test the amount of knowledge a man has acquired, or that has been put into him; but it does not test other qualities—practical ability and industry, and the kind of experience which we find desirable.

59,642. You prefer, therefore, the method of selection from persons possessing the necessary qualifications accompanied by a qualifying examination?—Yes; I think that gives us the kind of man we want for our work.

59,643. Is it your view that the higher posts under the Court should be filled by promotion from the lower posts, or will it be necessary to make appointments direct from outside?—I do not think at present it will be necessary to make appointments from outside. We should certainly prefer, other things being equal, that promotion should take place inside the office.

59,644. You have told us that for the depute clerks the Land Court have laid it down that they should be either qualified law agents or advocates?—Yes.

59,645. The assistant clerks, I suppose, do not possess that qualification?—We do not require it, and we could not, as a rule, expect a duly qualified solicitor who is in practice on his own account, to take a salary of 120*l.* a year rising to 200*l.*

59,646. Would not that make a difficulty as regards filling the higher posts by promotion from the lower posts?—In that case, if we had not a qualified man among the assistant clerks, we should have to take a qualified solicitor from outside.

59,647. Is it possible for an assistant clerk to acquire the law agent's qualification while in the office?—Yes. In point of fact one of our four junior clerks is a qualified solicitor. He was in the Congested District Board's Office and was transferred to the Board of Agriculture for Scotland, and from the Board of Agriculture he came to us.

59,648. To acquire the law agent's qualification, it is necessary to pass certain examinations and to have served a certain apprenticeship?—That is so.

59,649. The examinations, presumably, they can pass while serving the office, but can they acquire the qualification as regards apprenticeship?—I think it would be difficult certainly while doing the work in the office, but I think it could be acquired.

59,650. The work in the office, I suppose, does not count as apprenticeship?—No.

59,651. Would they in any case have served an apprenticeship before entering the office? The men who are appointed to the office come from law agents' offices, do they not?—I think none of our present staff except the gentleman who came from the Board of Agriculture as a qualified solicitor, have served an apprenticeship. It could be done, but it would need a great deal of work at night.

59,652. None of them had served an apprenticeship before entering the office?—None of them had served an apprenticeship before entering the office.

59,653. It would seem, therefore, that that would create a considerable bar to the possibilities of promotion from inside the office?—Yes, I think there would be difficulties in the way.

59,654. If a man was fully qualified as regards his knowledge and acquirements, it would be possible, I suppose, for the Land Commission in suitable cases to modify that rule which they have laid down?—Yes, it would be possible for a member of our staff to qualify by taking university classes, because the law classes are usually early in the morning or late at night. He could serve an apprenticeship outside, but it would mean that he would have to do a good deal of very late night work.

59,655. Another suggestion that has been made with regard to certain legal offices is that the appointment should be by the Secretary for Scotland, advised by a committee of selection. Would that, do you think, be a suitable method?—Yes, I do not think that would be at all an unsuitable method, but whether it is worth while applying that to junior clerkships, is, of course, more a question for the Commission than for me. That method might work quite well.

59,656. You see no objection to it from the point of view of the Land Court?—I see no objection to it. I think the experience of most bodies with patronage of that kind is, that while it is naturally to their own interest to get the very best man, because if they did not the trouble just falls back on themselves, at the same time I think that no desire of keeping patronage would influence them in saying that for that reason the present system should be retained. I would only say that if the Royal Commission should think that that is a good system for similar bodies—for other judicial bodies—then I would not say that we should be made an exception. On the other hand, I do not see any reason why we should be made an exception the other way, and why, if there is no general change, the system so recently instituted by Act of Parliament should be changed in our case.

59,657. We have heard from a number of witnesses that in the case of many legal appointments in Scotland political services have largely been taken into account. Has that been the case at all with regard to appointments under the Land Court?—I can only say that I think none of us inquired, and none of us knew—I do not know yet—what the political or religious opinions of the depute clerks or the assistant clerks are.

59,658. So your answer is that that consideration did not enter at all into the appointments?—Certainly not. I have always heard members of one party admit freely that the members of the other party made their appointments on that principle.

59,659. When your staff was originally formed, were steps taken to invite applications?—We did not advertise.

59,660. Did you have many applicants?—We had a very large number. Many came to us direct. Many

23 June 1915.]

The Hon. LORD KENNEDY.

[Continued.]

were addressed to the Scottish Office, and were forwarded by the Scottish Office to us.

59,661. It had become widely known that a staff was to be appointed?—That is so. I cannot commit myself to a definite number, but I know I was for a fortnight doing little else except going through the applications and making out a list of persons who might be considered.

59,662. What was the practical method of selection from among the candidates?—The practical method of selection was this: I think there were somewhere about 500 applications, giving a wide figure. Some were for definite posts; others were just for a post, and they were accompanied in most cases by a statement of qualifications and testimonials from legal employers and others, and so on. We began by making up different lists. The first was a list of persons qualified primâ facie to be selected from it as depute clerks of Court. Then we made a separate list for assistant clerks, and soon, and then one for surveyors and assistant surveyors. I think in that way we reduced the number to about 20 persons for depute clerks, and to about 50 persons for assistant clerk and others. I do not know that I am giving the exact figures, but they come very near it.

59,663. Did you then have personal interviews with those whose names were on the short lists?—Then we made personal inquiries as to those persons on these lists, and had personal interviews with most of them. For the depute clerks we came down to a short list of four, I think, and then we interviewed particularly these gentlemen.

59,664. Have there been any vacancies since the first formation of the staff?—No.

59,665. Would it be your practice to give public notification of vacancies when there are any?—We have not done it.

59,666. The occasion has not arisen yet?—It has not arisen. I think if we had not any considerable number of applicants we should certainly do so, but hitherto our difficulty has been the other way; we have had a great number of applicants.

59,667. What is the organisation of your staff? Is the Principal Clerk in charge of the discipline and distribution of the work?—That is so, and in his absence the senior member of the staff present in the Edinburgh office.

59,668. That works satisfactorily?—It does.

59,669. What are the hours of attendance?—In Edinburgh, at the office, the regular hours of attendance are from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. on weekdays except Saturdays, when they are from 10 a.m. to 1 o'clock. During these hours the office is open to members of the public interested who call. Since the Court was constituted the staff have, with fair regularity, worked overtime beyond these seven hours.

59,670. (Mr. Philip Snowden.) Are they paid extra for overtime?—The junior assistant clerks have received an allowance for overtime in the Edinburgh office—I think it came to about 100l. a year.

59,671. (Chairman.) Do the members of the staff who go round to local sittings have longer hours than that?—They all of them very often have longer hours at local sittings. For instance, the Court frequently sits from half-past 10 or 11 to 7 or 8 at night. We have sat longer. There is always a good deal of night work after the Court has adjourned its sittings. Ten to twelve hours is quite a common day's work when we are sitting in the country.

59,672. Do the vacations follow the vacations of the Court of Session?—Not as yet. We have never fixed a spring vacation. The autumn vacation is supposed to be August and September, but one or more Courts have usually sat on until well on in August, to the 15th or 20th, and have begun sittings in the latter part of September.

59,673. As regards vacations, your work is more arduous than the work of the Court of Session?—One of the judges sits for the vacation work. I think 11 of the judges take vacation work in turn, but we have not a spring vacation of six weeks.

59,674. I gather from what you have said that you go rather on the principle of making the staff interchangeable as far as possible, each member taking up other duties as required. That is so. I do not think we could put them into compartments.

59,675. That, I suppose, is partly rendered necessary by the local nature of your work?—That is so, part of it being done centrally, but a great deal of it in the country, and therefore, both with regard to the work and with regard to possible promotions also, it is desirable that every one of the assistant clerks should be able to take the work of any other, and any one of the depute clerks is able to take up the work of any other.

59,676. (Mr. Philip Snowden.) Are the lay members of the Court permanent appointments?—Yes.

59,677. Are they paid?—Their salaries are paid out of the Consolidated Fund.

59,678. What is the amount of the individual salary?—1,200l. a year each.

59,679. (Sir George Paul.) That is fixed by statute?—Yes, by the Act of 1911.

59,680. (Mr. Philip Snowden.) Are the present lay members of the Court transfers from the Crofters Commission?—No. The two lay experts on the Crofters Commission retired.

59,681. These lay members have been appointed not on account of their legal knowledge, but, I suppose, on account of their practical knowledge of the land question?—That is so. I think they have all farmed their own land, and have been managers of landed estates, and have had large experience in agricultural arbitrations and valuations.

59,682. I take it that, seeing you have had no vacancies in your staff yet, the question of promotion has not arisen?—It has not arisen, and I have stated the lines on which we should probably go.

59,683. Supposing you had a vacancy amongst your depute clerks, would you take into consideration the likelihood of any of the present staff below that grade being suitable for the appointment?—Certainly. For instance, one of our assistant clerks who was transferred from the Board of Agriculture is a qualified solicitor.

59,684. How did he acquire the necessary qualifications of service in a solicitor's office—the apprenticeship?—He did acquire it in the ordinary way.

59,685. In regard to your answers to the Chairman on that point, there seems to me to be an insuperable difficulty in the way of the assistant clerks who had not that qualification of service before they entered your Court acquiring it during your service?—I would not go so far as to say it is insuperable, but it certainly would be very difficult. It would require a great deal of very late night work. It would be legally possible, and I think one of our staff, who is at present an officer in one of the Territorial regiments, the clerk of accounts, proposed to acquire it.

59,686. (Chairman.) Did the assistant clerk who has the qualification of law agent acquire it before he entered the Government service at all?—He acquired it before he entered the service of the Board of Agriculture.

59,687. He acquired the qualification first in the outside profession?—That is so.

59,688. He then entered the service of the Board of Agriculture and was subsequently transferred to the Land Court?—Yes, he entered, I think, as a very young man, when he was just 21.

59,689. (Mr. Philip Snowden.) Is it necessary, shall I say, that to become a solicitor in Scotland the person should have served his articles as is the case in England?—He must serve articles for at least three years, or for five years if he is not a graduate in arts of a university.

59,690. Then how would it be possible for an assistant clerk serving in your office to get a qualification like that?—He could only do it by entering as an apprentice with an Edinburgh solicitor, and doing the night work of the office after 7 o'clock at night.

59,691. And run the two things together?—Yes, that is the only way that I think he could acquire it.

59,692. Do you consider, then, that it is absolutely essential for the work of the depute clerk that he should be a qualified solicitor or advocate? May I add this: Do you think that the experience and knowledge that a smart assistant clerk would acquire in the course

23 June 1915.]

The Hon. LORD KENNEDY.

[Continued.]

of several years' work in your office would be equal to the qualifications that he might have as a solicitor before entering the office?—I think that is quite possible. The difficulty would rather lie in this, that any legal assessor is almost always, in practice, a qualified solicitor or member of the Bar, and therefore there would not be the same confidence in the opinion of a man who had not that qualification though the opinions might, I quite admit, be quite as good opinions in themselves in particular cases.

59,693. Was your typist appointed under some system of competition?—Not open competition.

59,694. Did she have to qualify?—There was a qualifying examination.

59,695. Is she on a Civil Service scale of salary?—Yes.

59,696. How did it happen that she was not able to pass the medical examination?—That is the third of the female typists. Two of them did pass the medical examination.

59,697. How did it happen that the third one was not able to pass the medical examination. I should have assumed that that was a condition of appointment?—I think she had a weakness in the chest. At the same time she had been with us for a considerable time and not been absent a single day from illness. We regard her appointment as temporary. She may still pass the medical examination.

59,698. I want a little further information about this man who holds the post of Keeper of the Rolls, and who was appointed at 61 years of age. What is the salary attaching to that post?—200*l.* rising by 10*l.* to 300*l.*

59,699. How long is it since he was appointed?—He was appointed shortly after the Land Court was instituted.

59,700. Was that an appointment made directly by the Secretary for Scotland?—No, that was one of the appointments made by the Land Court. The Principal Clerk is the one appointed by the Secretary for Scotland.

59,701.—Then you as Chairman of the Court would be really responsible for the appointment of this official?—Undoubtedly, but we all went through the particular appointments.

59,702. Just so, but I shall be able to get the information I seek first hand. What induced you to appoint a man 61 years of age to this post?—For this reason, that he was a person who had written largely upon and taken a great interest in the land question, and he had a very large knowledge of the local conditions throughout the northern counties.

59,703. What were his antecedents in the way of profession or occupation?—He had been a grain agent and a commission agent in Inverness.

59,704. Was he in business at the time of his appointment?—Yes.

59,705. And he was willing to give up his business and come to you for 200*l.* a year?—Yes; he did it.

59,706. (Mr. Graham Wallas.) May I ask the name of the gentleman in question?—Mr. Duncan McTavish.

59,707. Had he been to your knowledge either an agent or candidate at an election?—He had never been a candidate at an election that I know of.

59,708. Had he been an agent?—No, I do not think he was an election agent or sub-agent.

59,709. Had he been an active politician?—He was president of the County Liberal Association for a great many years, and he had taken a great interest in this question, certainly.

59,710. His certificate was refused by the Civil Service Commission?—Yes.

59,711. Doubtless we can get from the Civil Service Commission a statement as to the reasons for their refusal?—I understood his age was the reason.

59,712. The appointment was not made conditional upon his getting a certificate?—The appointment was made by the Court, and we probably expected at the time that a certificate would be given.

59,713. What results upon the refusal of a certificate?—That he is not pensionable, and that his appointment instead of being under Civil Service rules is just during the pleasure of the Court.

59,714. That is to say, in your judgment, he will probably hold it for life?—I do not say that.

59,715. But if you are appointed at 61, and the Civil Service rules require you to retire at 65, you get a very small pension, do you not?—Yes.

59,716. Therefore it is a clear advantage to a man who is appointed at 61 to be refused a certificate by the Civil Service Commission, because instead of getting four years with a minute pension he gets what may prove to be a life appointment?—It is no doubt possible.

59,717. You say the Court appoints. Does appointment by the Court mean an appointment by a majority of those present and voting of the five persons constituting the Court?—It would. I do not know that we had a division, but all the members of the Court did consider the applications.

59,718. Have you ever known a division take place on an appointment of that kind, and an appointment carried by a majority?—I do not recollect that any appointment went to a vote.

59,719. The Secretary for Scotland appointed your Principal Clerk, but appointed him originally on the Crofters Commission?—The Crofters Commission appointed their whole staff under their Act. The present Principal Clerk was appointed by the three members of the Crofters Commission.

59,720. Do you remember whether he had been either a candidate or an agent at an election, or president of a political association?—I do not think so, but I cannot say.

59,721. You do not happen to remember?—I had no connection with the Crofters Commission at that time. I could not now say what Mr. Mackenzie's political opinions are—I have never inquired.

59,722. Do you know whether the rule that appointments in the legal departments are political applied to the four lay members of your Court. Do you know whether they had been active politicians with political claims?—I can certainly say that I have never publicly or otherwise heard of any of them except, at most, two as politicians. One I knew was a member of the Conservative party. I knew that one other of the appointed members belonged to the Liberal party. With regard to the other two, as far as I know yet, or knew then, they had no definite connection with either political party, but I did not inquire, certainly.

59,723. (Miss Haldane.) How do you select the women typists? How do you find them?—We just get a list of names and particulars of their experience and the examinations they have passed, and we test them personally, and then they pass the Civil Service examination for typists.

59,724. How do you get the list. Who forms the list?—In our particular case we only wanted two, and then another one. The Principal Clerk formed the list.

59,725. How did you procure the names?—One of the ladies, Miss Reid, the senior, had been doing work, though she had not been paid out of public funds, for the Crofters Commission for a year or more before, so she really was a transfer.

59,726. The Principal Clerk simply fixed on certain individuals. Was that how it was done?—Yes, in that case.

59,727. There was no announcement that typists were required, so that other people might apply?—There was no advertisement, certainly.

59,728. He simply nominated them?—We selected them. We considered their qualifications, and then they passed their examinations.

59,729. But he brought them before your notice from his own private knowledge?—That is so.

59,730. I want to know whether there is any possibility of women rising to be assistant clerks. As I understand, one objection to that happening in many cases is that a legal qualification is necessary, but in this instance a legal qualification is not required. Would it be possible for women to qualify for the assistant clerkships?—Certainly, I hope some of them will, if they have had experience in a solicitor's office or in the legal department of a public office.

23 June 1915.]

The Hon. LORD KENNEDY.

[Continued.]

59,731. Was it considered in appointing them that they might be women of that type who would have the power of rising, possibly, to assistant clerkships?—I do not think it was, for this reason, that I do not know as yet of any case in Edinburgh where women are doing regular work as solicitors' clerks.

59,732. I think we had evidence that it was done to a certain extent in Glasgow?—I think in Glasgow there are a good many women copying clerks.

59,733. Would there be any objection to appointing a Glasgow typist?—Not the least.

59,734. I was going to suggest that if it had been somewhat more open others would have had the opportunity of competing for these posts?—That is so, but at the same time our typists have no superiority in any way over ordinary typists in Government offices. They are in the same position as typists in any other Government office.

59,735. At present their position is the same, but I want to know if in your opinion they might rise, seeing that there is no barrier as there is in other Government offices?—We have made no barrier, certainly.

59,736. There is no barrier, really?—There is no barrier. I think it would be quite competent for us to put a typist a step higher, if she were sufficiently qualified, and employ her as assistant clerk in the office. We have certainly not negatived that in any way.

59,737. No, but you have not made any regular ladder of promotion from the typists upwards?—That is so.

59,738. With regard to the committee of selection, have you thought of the possibility of there being a Civil Service Commissioner representing Scotland on such a committee of selection? Perhaps you have not considered the matter?—No, I do not think that suggestion has been made to me. It would depend very much on the number of appointments and the number of different departments in which the appointments were with which they had to deal.

59,739. (Sir George Paul.) As regards typists, if you found that one of your women typists was qualified for promotion, nothing would stand in the way so far as you know?—Nothing stands in the way.

59,740. As regards a vacancy, I suppose if you found a suitable man in the office you would naturally promote him rather than go outside?—Certainly, other things being equal, we would naturally promote him.

59,741. If you found a man whom you were quite satisfied you could promote, you would do so?—Suppose, by way of illustration, that the present senior Depute Clerk were to become Principal Clerk—that does not depend on us, but it might happen—then merit being equal, the next Depute Clerk would succeed to his place.

59,742. That is what I was assuming?—Certainly. In the same way with the assistant clerks we should, if there was a vacancy, for example, if the senior assistant clerk retired, or were promoted to anywhere else, merit being equal, take the next clerk.

59,743. Then is it simply an office rule that the clerks should be qualified law agents. It is a rule gathered from your office experience, and is not statutory?—It is not statutory. It just arises from this, that, as far as I know, invariably the legal assessor to a magistrate, or any person sitting judicially, is a person with a legal qualification. As I said, a person who had not a legal qualification would not be trusted to the same extent by persons concerned in cases before the Court.

59,744. It is known in Scotland that Mr. Mackenzie is a very competent man. Is he a qualified law agent?—No, but then he has never acted as legal assessor to the Court. I think we should be very fortunate if we got another Principal Clerk as efficient as Mr. Mackenzie.

59,745. Then if one of your clerks had considerable experience in the office, and also had attended law classes, and had obtained certificates from his professors, would you consider that as equivalent to apprenticeship? As an office rule, might that qualify him for promotion?—I think it would be competent. There is nothing against the competency of appointing such a man.

59,746. So that you practically have a free hand?—We have a free hand.

59,747. Within certain limits?—Within certain limits.

59,748. And you might bring that case within the limit?—I think it would be competent to do it.

59,749. (Mr. Shipley.) The only question I want to ask is, how is your Court financed?—The salaries of the Chairman and the members of the Court are paid out of the Consolidated Fund. All other expenses are paid out of moneys voted by Parliament.

59,750. They are not paid out of fees?—There is one exception, though a small one, where the expenses are really paid or recouped to a certain extent by fees, but that relates solely to the clerks of the local Sheriff Courts, which correspond roughly to the County Court. They perform certain services for us, and they are paid by fees fixed by the Court, with the approval of the Treasury, varying from 6d. to 15s., fees which are paid by means of adhesive stamps. To that extent our expenses, so far as they relate to these particular duties of the Sheriff Clerks, are recouped by fees; they may not be recouped in the same year, but they are recouped.

59,751. (Mr. Philip Snowden.) Referring to the appointment of Mr. Duncan McTavish, may I ask whether you had any representations or recommendations made to you from political quarters?—None whatever. I may say with regard to none of the applications that I remember was there any recommendation from any political official of any party.

59,752. Do you lay it down as a rule that an officer in your department must possess the Civil Service certificate?—If he were to receive a pension, of course he must either be transferred or admitted to the office with the certificate of the Civil Service Commissioners under Section 7 of the Order in Council of 1910.

59,753. Then you might appoint a man to a post and make no application at all to the Civil Service Commissioners for endorsement?—It is possible.

59,754. Who fixes the scales of salary?—The scales of salary were fixed by the Treasury on the recommendation of the Scottish Office after consultation with us, and I think the scales of salary, if I recollect rightly, were all fixed before the question of appointments began. The main scale certainly was fixed quite apart from appointments, though not formally agreed to, before we had begun considering any of the applicants for the new posts, as distinguished from the posts filled by transference.

59,755. Was Mr. Duncan McTavish the first person to hold this post?—Yes.

59,756. He was appointed on the formation of the Court?—That is so.

59,757. His appointment is slightly better than the post of assistant clerk?—Yes; he is also an additional clerk of Court, and that is partly why it is slightly better.

59,758. Then there were not, among these numerous applications that you had, younger men whom you considered qualified?—I would not say that. There were men of all ages. I think we had some venerable applicants over 70 years of age.

59,759. To sum up the matter, we may take it that Mr. Duncan McTavish was appointed because of the great interest he had taken in land questions?—No doubt, and his knowledge of the counties chiefly concerned.

59,760. Because of his local knowledge?—Yes; and also his knowledge of Gaelic, which is important.

59,761. And his good Highland name?—There is a commodity of good names in the Highlands; but I do not think we considered the merits of various clans.

59,762. (Chairman.) Do the Orders in Council which regulate the Civil Service apply to your staff?—Generally they do. Of course, we have no second division clerks.

59,763. They apply, for instance, as regards age for retirement?—That is so.

59,764. And also as regards such matters as sick leave?—Yes.

Mr. EDWARD PETER THOMSON, W.S. (Principal Extractor of the Court of Session), called and examined.

59,765. (Chairman.) You are Principal Extractor of the Court of Session?—That is so.

59,766. How long have you held that office?—Nine years; since August 1906.

59,767. What had been your professional experience before that?—I was admitted a member of the Society of Writers to the Signet in July 1885, and I had practised the profession for 21 years previous to my appointment.

59,768. Will you tell us generally, first, what work is done by your department?—The main work of the Extractor's Department consists of the preparation and issue of extracts of the Acts and Decrees pronounced by the Court of Session. It may be well to remark that, while the English "Certificate of Judgment" is as nearly as may be the equivalent of a Court of Session extract, the extract seems to be a more elaborate and complex document, and the great variety in the nature of the various causes, renders it quite impossible to standardise the extracts, or to reduce them to one simple or uniform form. Extracts dealing with heritable rights and those in entail proceedings form a link in the title deeds of properties, and in some cases extend to many pages. In one case since my appointment, eight years ago, I have had occasion to sign an extract over 400 pages of foolscap in length. This, of course, was quite exceptional, the Decree in question being an authority to complete a title to a very large number of properties belonging to a trust, and the unusual length being due to the necessity of each property being fully described; but extracts of from 20 to 100 pages are not infrequent.

59,769. In the case of that particular extract you mention, the great length would simply be due to the repetition of the verbal description of the number of different properties?—That is so.

59,770. So that would be a mere matter of copying, and would not add to the complexity of the document?—More or less, subject to this remark, that the heritable subjects are described in the prayer of the petition to the Court in such cases. The Court's interlocutor grants warrant, say, to complete a title to the subjects described in the prayer of the petition. It is necessary to read over very carefully the description in the petition, because it is quite possible that phrases might occur in the course of the description which might not be applicable to the extract. In this way we have to be very careful of a word which comes in sometimes in the course of the description of property—"the said so and so," or "the said subject." The word "said" comes in frequently, referring to a full description, either of subjects or of persons, which occurs, not in the prayer of the petition, but in the body of it; and sometimes we have to search until we can find out the full description. Of course, it would not do to put the words "the said so and so" in our extract if he were not previously described.

59,771. The extract has to be an independent document to be read without reference to any other document?—That is so; it must be entirely self-contained; and really the task of preparing an extract consists in making the document self-contained, so that it can be intelligible to anyone who reads it without reference to any other document.

59,772. Has your department any other work besides the preparation of extracts?—The Register of the Acts and Decrees of the Court of Session, and making duplicates of the extracts and decrees issued. We make a complete duplicate of each extract, and those duplicates are bound up in volume form, and are subsequently transmitted in volumes to the Deputy Clerk Register.

59,773. Their subsequent custody rests with him?—Their subsequent custody rests with him, and so long as they are in my office I regard myself—after an extract has been finally issued—as his representative, so far as custody is concerned; and that also applies not only to the volumes themselves, but to the processes, consisting of all the documents dealing with the case.

59,774. You hand the process together with the record copy of the extract to the Deputy Clerk Register.

ter for final custody?—Yes. In a large case the process may consist of over 100 numbers, and in exceptional cases more than that. Those processes require to be very carefully examined to see that they are all in order and that no numbers of the process are missing. They are also bound up in parcels and transmitted to the Deputy Clerk Register. We require the special authority of the Court to accept any process which is defective, and that very frequently happens. It happens in the course of every week or two that a case occurs in which some important number of a process, although it may not be an essential number, has become missing and cannot be found. In that case the agent applies to the judge, who pronounces an interlocutor dispensing with its production, and authorising the Extractor to issue an extract without it.

59,775. What is your staff for dealing with these matters?—The staff consists of myself as Principal Extractor, my Assistant Extractor, the Clerk of Records, and the engrossing clerks, of whom there are now three. Formerly there were four, but I reduced the number of them two or three months ago, and I succeeded in effecting a very much and long desired reform in getting those clerks paid by salary instead of by the piece. Formerly they were paid 6*d.* a page, and that was a practice which I found extremely undesirable in every way.

59,776. The Committee on Minor Legal Appointments made a recommendation on that subject?—That is so.

59,777. And that recommendation has been carried into effect?—It has been carried into effect within the last three months, and the results are satisfactory already.

59,778. Has it been long enough in operation to enable you to make a comparison between the amount of work done by each clerk under the former system and under the present system?—Hardly; but at the same time I may add that during the last three months the department has been exceptionally busy; there has been more work than usual, and the work has been turned out, I think, on the whole, better than usual and more quickly than usual.

59,779. At the same time, you have been able to dispense with one of the four clerks?—That is so.

59,780. That would appear to indicate that more work is done by each clerk now, unless they were not fully employed before?—Distinctly; they are busier than they were before, and they work harder.

59,781. (Sir George Paul.) Have you been able to shorten the extracts?—Yes.

59,782. Is that how the improvement arises?—It has not arisen through that; but during the last two or three years there has been very little work, and not nearly enough for the four engrossers, with the result that they suffered and their income was very much reduced. Now the three men are doing all the work, and doing it better, because they feel that they are secure in their salaries.

59,783. (Chairman.) The recommendation of the Committee on Minor Legal Appointments, as regards the omission of the Long Warrant, has been carried out?—It has not been carried out. I have submitted to the Lord Advocate and several Scottish members of Parliament a Bill which would carry that into effect.

59,784. Is legislation required in order to carry it into effect?—It distinctly requires legislation. The Long Warrant is statutory, and the Lord Advocate does not indicate that there is any prospect in this session of having the Bill carried through, although it is non-controversial, and has the support of all the Scottish members connected with the legal profession.

59,785. You hold your own appointment from the Crown?—I do.

59,786. Is any limit of age fixed in your warrant?—70.

59,787. How were the other members of your staff appointed?—They all hold office subject to my pleasure. They hold their appointments from me, and they can be dismissed at any time by the Principal Extractor.

23 June 1915.]

Mr. EDWARD PETER THOMSON, W.S.

[Continued.]

59,788. Is any limit of age fixed in their case?—There is no limit.

59,789. What are the ages at present of the members of your staff?—The Assistant Extractor, Mr. Whyte, has been in the service of the department for, I think, 54 years. His age is 75 in August of this year. The other official Clerk of Records, who attends to the public office and whose work is very arduous and varied, I think would be a man of from 45 to 50. The three engrossing clerks are men of middle age. I think one of the three is perhaps between 30 and 40, and the others are about 50, but they are all pretty well on in years.

59,790. Are you required to give your whole time to the work of your office?—I am.

59,791. You are not allowed to take private practice?—I am precluded from private practice.

59,792. Was that so in the case of your predecessors also?—It was the case in regard to my immediate predecessor, Mr. Glen, who held office for nine years. It was not the case in regard to his predecessor, Mr. William Duncan, who carried on a large practice, and who died at the age of 87 in office.

59,793. He did not perform the duties in person?—He did not; and I may say that I do not think my predecessor performed the duties in person either. I ascertained when I went to the office that he had satisfied himself with revising the drafts, which were all prepared by the assistant, and signing the extracts.

59,794. Do you perform the duties personally?—I do personally. I draft every extract that comes out of the office. I found that the work of the office was very much in arrear, and I knew from my own experience during the 21 years I was in practice, that it was a very common complaint upon the part of members of the profession that it took a long time to get an extract out of the department. I set myself at once to see if that could not be remedied, and I think the profession generally are satisfied that they get extracts now as quickly as can possibly be managed, and the Parliamentary Committee reported to that effect in their report.

59,795. The other members of your staff, being appointed by the Extractor and dismissible by him, are, I suppose, not pensionable?—They are not, subject to this exception: that in the Clerks of Session Act, 1889, there is a clause enabling the Treasury to grant superannuation to persons serving in the Court of Session at the date of the passing of the Act in all respects as if they had been admitted to their respective offices with certificates from the Civil Service Commissioners or held their appointments direct from the Crown. That clause was inserted in the Act, as I understand, to make special provision for persons in the position of my assistant, Mr. Whyte; and he labours under a very heavy grievance, and has done so for years, ever since that Act was passed, in respect of the refusal hitherto of the Treasury to allow him to retire upon a pension or superannuation.

59,796. Did the Committee on Minor Legal Appointments make a recommendation on that point?—A very strong recommendation, which is contained on page 7 of their report. They bear witness that Mr. Whyte's case demands very special consideration, and they state that for a long time prior to 1906, which was the year of my own appointment, the main work of the Extractor's Department was thrown upon Mr. Whyte, and the profession agree that he discharged his duties admirably. The Committee, in their report, further refer to this clause which I have quoted, and they add: "In our opinion it is not in any way stretching the Act to hold that it applies to the Extractor's Department of the Court of Session. We desire to record our opinion that Mr. Whyte has strong claims to be favourably considered by the Treasury, and that it would be only a tardy act of justice if he were now placed in the same position as he would have been if the Bill passed in its original form."

59,797. To what does that last sentence refer?—I have a copy of the Bill as originally introduced into the House of Commons, and it was there enacted that the Assistant Extractor of the Court of Session, the Clerk of Records, a public official attending to the public office, should receive their appointments direct from the Crown the same as other officials dealt with by the Act. When the Bill emerged in the form of an Act, the assistant extractor and the Clerk of Records did not appear in it, and that, I understand—in fact, it is well known—was due to the interposition of the then Principal Extractor Mr. William Duncan. He was over 80 at the time, but he did not wish to be deprived of the privilege of appointing his assistant and the rest of his staff, and he brought pressure to bear upon the then Lord Advocate at the close of a busy Parliamentary Session, with the result that the Lord Advocate, rather than lose the Bill, as there seemed some signs of his doing, omitted those two officials from the provision. I know that Mr. Duncan told Mr. Whyte, who was naturally very much upset at the disappointment of his hopes, that he considered this clause giving the option to the Treasury would keep him right as regards his pension. So far, I may say that no direct application has been made to the Treasury since my appointment, but they have declined on previous occasions to grant Mr. Whyte superannuation rights.

59,798. Has any application been made to the Treasury since the report of the Committee of 1911?—No, not directly.

59,799. So that the Treasury have not directly declined to carry out the recommendation of that Committee?—Not in the meantime. The matter is a little delicate. I feel, personally, that my position is rather difficult in the matter. Mr. Whyte is still able to do his work so far, but he might break down at any moment at his age, in which case I should feel myself in a most painful position if I were faced with the alternative either of dispensing with his services with no provision made, or else continuing to work along with him when he was unable to do his work.

59,800. You mentioned that in the Bill, or in the Act of 1889, it was proposed to take away the patronage of these appointments in the Extractor's Department from the Extractor himself and make them Crown appointments?—That is so.

59,801. Is it your opinion that that is what should be done?—It is. I think it is a most desirable change.

59,802. What reason is there for making them Crown appointments?—So far as I know they are the only appointments in connection with the Court of Session which are not appointments by Crown Commission. Clerks of Court are all appointed by the Crown.

59,803. Is there any reason why they should not be appointments by the Secretary for Scotland on a Civil Service basis?—I am not quite sure of the alternative suggested.

59,804. The effect of Crown appointment is to remove the requirement of the Civil Service certificate on admission, with its accompaniment of medical examination and satisfaction of the Civil Service Commissioners as to character and fitness. It also exempts the holder of the office from the ordinary Civil Service rules as regards age for retirement and so forth. Is there any reason why those characteristics of a Crown appointment should apply in the case of these particular appointments?—I should be inclined to take it that efficiency in all those appointments depends upon legal experience and some acquaintance with legal practice in the courts. I am not sure that that would be secured by Civil Service examination.

59,805. That is a separate question. The method of selection by the Secretary for Scotland might be such as to secure that those qualifications, should be possessed by the persons appointed?—That is so. I should certainly advocate, if those appointments are made Crown appointments, that there be some provision that the persons appointed have passed the Law Agents examination and been qualified law agents or solicitors.

59,806. You think that is necessary for such appointments?—Yes, I think it is eminently desirable.

59,807. You apply that to the two appointments of Assistant Extractor and Clerk of the Records?—I do.

59,808. As I understand it, you think that the appointments should not be made by the Extractor himself, but you do not attach importance to their being Crown appointments?—No, I do not, so long as you secure that the person appointed has some legal experience, and is accustomed to deal with Court of Session practice and had some experience in it; then, I think, you have all the necessary qualifications.

23 June 1915.]

MR. EDWARD PETER THOMSON, W.S.

[Continued.]

59,809. Were there any other recommendations with regard to your department made by the Committee of 1911?—There is a strong recommendation that the Clerk of Records should be better remunerated.

59,810. Has that been carried out?—That has not been carried out.

59,811. In fact, the only recommendation that has been carried out is that which referred to the engrossing clerks?—That is so; otherwise we are in the same position as we were. Perhaps I may mention that, in carrying out that change with regard to the engrossing clerks, the Treasury suggested—in fact, I rather think they stipulated—that in future appointments we should have lady typists appointed on the occurrence of any vacancy, or at least two of the engrossing clerks should be lady typists.

59,812. That raises the question whether typewriting is suitable for the extracts?—That is so. I have no doubt on that point. I think, if it is sufficiently indelible—which can certainly be secured—the extracts would be better written in typewriting than in manuscript.

59,813. You see no objection to typewriting?—None whatever.

59,814. If typewriting were adopted for the extracts, are you in favour of the appointment of lady typists?—I am, if it could be arranged. The question of accommodation would arise in our present position in the Register House, but if they could get a separate room I should be perfectly satisfied.

59,815. Can your present engrossing clerks typewrite?—No.

59,816. Are they of an age to learn it?—I fear not.

59,817. There would therefore be a certain difficulty during the period of transition?—There would, most distinctly. That is a difficulty which has occurred to me. As long as there are any engrossing clerks left one would require either to type all the extracts and write all the duplicates, or vice versa. Now, with two typists and one engrossing clerk, the work would go on at a very irregular pace.

59,818. We have been told that typing is about twice as fast as writing, and therefore it would seem that with two engrossers and one typist the work might be balanced?—I believe it might. You would require two engrossers and one typist, or all typists.

59,819. The question has also been raised whether the Extractor's Department should be brought into closer relation with the other departments of the Court of Session. The suggestion was made before the Committee of 1911 that the extracts might be prepared by the Clerks of Session and deputes. The Committee of 1911 expressed an opinion against that suggestion?—They did; and the representatives of both the legal societies were equally unanimous on the subject. Personally I do not know if my opinion may be regarded as altogether unbiased, but I do consider that at present it would be perfectly impossible for the Clerks of Session to issue their own extracts. I do not think they could do it; they have not the staff to enable them to do it. On the other hand, in our office we examine the process and we examine the interlocutors which the clerks have written very carefully. It is the first occasion on which there is a careful and exhaustive examination made of the papers connected with the case. The Clerks of Court have not the time to do that. The agents have not time to do that while a case is proceeding; they have too many other things to look after. We frequently find irregularities and informalities which require to be corrected; we act as a check both upon the agents who conduct the case and upon the Clerks of Court. We frequently require to send papers back to be corrected. I do not think it would be possible for the Clerks of Court to correct their own work so efficiently as another person can. They write their interlocutors in court, and there may be considerable interruption with a certain amount of distraction, and they have not an opportunity of being so absolutely accurate as is necessary.

59,820. You are clearly of opinion, therefore, that the work of preparing the extracts should continue to be done by a separate branch of the offices of the court?—I am.

59,821. Is there any reason why that branch should not be brought into closer relation with the court by being placed more definitely under the general control of the Principal Clerk of Session, and by establishing a freer system of transfer for the purposes of promotion between that and other branches of the court?—In point of fact the Extractor's Department is under the control of the Principal Clerk of Session. The Extractor's Department was placed on its present basis by the Act of 1 and 2 Victoria, chapter 118, and in that Act the Principal Clerk of Session is instructed to supervise the issue of the extracts and to advise the Extractor in any difficulty after consulting with the Court. I have once or twice required to ask the Principal Clerk to decide on questions of difficulty which had arisen, to relieve me of responsibility. In regard to the question of promotion, I do not know what change could be effected that would secure promotion. I have frequently given strong recommendations in favour of the present Clerk of Records on the occasion of a vacancy among the Clerks of Session, and I think he is eminently fitted to make a good Clerk of Session; otherwise I do not know that the question of promotion arises.

59,822. Is there at present any reason why he should not be selected for appointment as a Depute Clerk of Session?—None whatever, he is perfectly eligible, and he has applied on several occasions.

59,823. Do you think that promotion by transfer of that kind is desirable?—Very desirable.

59,824. The question has been raised as to the transfer to your department of certain of the other minor departments—the Keeper of the Minute Book, for instance?—That is so; the Departmental Committee recommended that that should be done.

59,825. Also the office of the Interim Director of Chancery; would there be any difficulty in making that transfer of work?—I may say at once that I do not think the Interim Director of Chancery is an office that ought to be amalgamated with the Extractor's. It has nothing to do with the Court of Session. The only reason for that suggestion so far is that it appears in the Crown commission, both of myself and my predecessor, as a stipulation that we should be prepared, in the event of it being decided to combine the office of Interim Director of Chancery with that of the Extractor, to undertake the duties of the office at such increased remuneration as might be agreed; but I am not aware that anybody has ever regarded it as desirable or recommended it. I have really never considered that. The transfer of the Minute Book was considered carefully by the Departmental Committee, and they strongly recommended it. That, I think, is a very desirable change; at least it is a change which I should be quite prepared to welcome.

59,826. The work of that branch could be satisfactorily combined with the work of your department?—Yes, I think it could.

59,827. For what reason do you think the work of Chancery could not be combined with your department?—The work is not of a similar character to Court practice. I should imagine that there may be other departments connected with conveyancing more in line with the Director of Chancery than any of the court offices. It has nothing to do with the Court of Session, but has to do with the service of heirs.

59,828. (Sir George Paul.) Although nothing to do with the Court of Session it is similar to your department in this, that it extracts the judgments of the Sheriffs of Chancery and the Sheriffs as regards services of heirs?—That is so.

59,829. That is how it would be akin to yours?—Possibly; but I could imagine that the Sheriff Clerk of Chancery might be a more suitable person to undertake those duties, or the Crown Receiver of Rents, which is an office which has not been filled up. I have never heard any one seriously argue in favour of the amalgamation of my department with that of the Interim Director of Chancery, and I have had no occasion to consider it. But personally, of course, I should be very glad to undertake any additional duties on the conditions stated in my Crown commission, and my experience in legal practice would quite enable me to undertake the duties of the Interim Director of Chancery; but I merely express the opinion that the Keeper of the Minute Book would be a more suitable office to amalgamate with mine.

23 June 1915.]

Mr. EDWARD PETER THOMSON, W.S.

[Continued.]

59,830. (Chairman.) Could some economy be effected by that transfer?—Distinctly. I understand that the salary of the Keeper of the Minute Book is 300*l.* and the salary of the Assistant Keeper is 200*l.* I was asked if I could undertake the duties with my then staff of four engrossing clerks, and I admitted that that might be possible, but now that my staff of engrossing clerks has been reduced to three I should require to have another appointed.

59,831. The only charge to be set against the economy of the two salaries, amounting to 500*l.* a year, would be the salary of one engrossing clerk?—Subject to any increased remuneration to the Principal Extractor on the terms of my commission. Of course the responsibility of the two offices would be greater than one, but it would leave room for that.

59,832. The Commission have had evidence strongly in favour of the transfer of the offices of the Court of Session from the Register House to the Parliament House or its immediate neighbourhood. Would that transfer, if it could be carried out, be advantageous to the work of your department?—I do not think it would affect my department. We must follow the Clerks of Court and must be beside them, of course.

59,833. If they were transferred to the Parliament House it would naturally follow that your department would be transferred too?—Yes, and that question is, I think, entirely a matter of convenience, certainly not to my staff, but to members of the profession. In 1910 when this question was raised before the Parliamentary Committee, I rather think that one of the legal societies recommended the change, and the other one deprecated it. I do not know what the feeling is now amongst agents with regard to it. There is a good deal to be said both ways, but it is entirely a matter of convenience for the members of the profession who use those offices.

59,834. So far as your office is concerned there would be no objection?—None whatever; it would make no difference.

59,835. (Sir George Paul.) In copying the extracts there is no objection to their being typed?—I do not think so.

59,836. You have no female typist?—No.

59,837. Your difficulty is as regards accommodation. You have not very much accommodation?—I have not, and, of course, I have not had any vacancies occurring. I have those three engrossing clerks.

59,838. At present none of your men can type?—None of them.

59,839. And you cannot turn them away?—No.

59,840. And you cannot make vacancies?—No.

59,841. You are under the general supervision of the Principal Clerk of Session?—By Act of Parliament, I am.

59,842. Is that under the Act of 1889?—1838—an older Act.

59,843. The Principal Clerk of Session is made the principal of many of the offices under the Act of 1889, but you are not within that?—We are not.

59,844. But you are under him by virtue of a previous Act?—Yes, the Act of 1838. It is rather a grievance with my assistant that the Extractor's Department has had no legislation affecting it since 1 and 2 Victoria.

59,845. That legislation was attempted, but through Mr. Duncan's influence the clause in favour of the Assistant Extractor and others was struck out?—That is so.

59,846. So they are still in that precarious position that they are entirely dependent upon the Principal Extractor?—That is so.

59,847. Lord Salvesen's Committee recommended that piece-work should be done away with and salaries substituted, and that has been done?—That has been done.

59,848. But nothing has been done as regards Mr. Whyte?—Nothing at all.

59,849. No application has been made?—No application has been made. Mr. Whyte has not indicated to me that he was ready to retire, and I have always felt that it was a little difficult to make another application to the Treasury until he said, "Now I wish to retire."

59,850. But perhaps his reason for not wishing to retire is, that he would have no income on which to retire?—That is so; it is really moving in a circle. The Treasury refused to put him on the superannuation list before my appointment and it has been a grievance with him ever since.

59,851. But following upon the strong recommendation of Lord Salvesen's Committee nothing has been done?—Nothing has been done.

59,852. And Mr. Whyte is 75?—Yes, in August.

59,853. Some people do not think that 75 is very old, but is it not time that he should be thinking of retiring if you could get a pension for him?—If I could secure him a pension I should certainly ask him to retire now, because he is rather old for the work, and one feels that he might break down at any moment.

59,854. (Miss Haldane.) With regard to the typists, do you think it desirable that they should be brought in under Civil Service rules or in some other way?—I do not know what other way there could be, unless they were simply left to be appointed to hold office on a precarious tenure, as the engrossing clerks are; and I should think it more desirable that they should be Civil Service appointments.

59,855. Would they require some amount of legal knowledge before they came in?—No.

59,856. But you think ordinary typists could do the work quite well?—They could.

59,857. You know the salaries of ordinary typists are less than the salaries you are now paying to the engrossing clerks?—Very distinctly so.

59,858. Would you consider that it would be desirable they should have some opportunity of promotion?—Yes.

59,859. Can you see any way of accomplishing that end?—That the lady typists should have promotion from my department to another, I am afraid not.

59,860. Promotion is impossible in your department at present?—It would be, certainly.

59,861. What would you consider should be their future, because if appointed on those terms they would have nothing to look forward to, so to speak?—They would not, so I think it is most desirable that they should have Civil Service appointments.

59,862. But in addition to that they would have no opportunity of being promoted, as things are just now?—No; but I understand, if they passed the Civil Service examination they would be pensionable.

59,863. They would be pensionable, but they would have no opportunity of promotion?—No, I fear not.

59,864. Do you think the desirable thing would be that they should be admitted to the profession and thereby allowed to be promoted?—That is a very controversial subject. Personally, I should be very pleased to see ladies enabled to get promotion in the profession, if they desired it.

59,865. But as a matter of principle you think it desirable that people occupying such posts should have something to look forward to?—Undoubtedly.

59,866. It makes them do their work better?—Unquestionably.

59,867. You do not lay any stress upon the point about typing, which has been brought forward sometimes, that there is greater possibility of erasure in connection with typing than with ordinary writing?—I suppose that is so, but the Court sanctions the typing of most important deeds in Scotland, and have also decided that summonses may be typed.

59,868. You do not think it a practical difficulty?—I do not.

59,869. Probably the typing ought to be in good ink, and so on?—Yes, very indelible ink.

59,870. (Chairman.) In the case of extracts, a duplicate copy remains among the official records?—It does.

23 June 1915.]

Mr. EDWARD PETER THOMSON, W.S.

[Continued.]

59,871. That would be a check on any alteration in the copy issued?—I should certainly admonish any lady typist who came into my employment, as I do my engrossing clerks, that in all circumstances they must avoid making erasures, and that if they make a mistake they must either correct it in some way that would be absolutely visible or write the page over again.

59,872. That is the rule in formal documents?—That is the rule. We press it on our employés. I think the Professor of Conveyancing impresses it on his students, and I think members of the profession are in the habit of impressing it upon their clerks; and I certainly should impress it very strongly upon any lady typists.

59,873. (Sir George Paul.) The only question is, really, can you rub out a "5" and substitute a "4" for it?—That is so.

59,874. If that cannot be done there is no objection to the work being typed?—None whatever.

59,875. But, as regards wills or deeds, a person might leave 400*l.* instead of 500*l.* to A B, and it may be possible that the "4" might be rubbed out and a "5" put in, and nobody be any the wiser. If you were satisfied that the ink was indelible it would be a great advantage to have typewriting?—Unquestionably.

59,876. (Miss Haldane.) Then you think it is a pity that your department should be, so to speak, self-contained, and the Assistant Extractor and Clerk of Records, for instance, should not be able to qualify for Clerks of Court?—Distinctly. I deprecate any inferiority that may exist, but the Clerk of Records is certainly eligible, although he has failed to procure an appointment, and although he has been a candidate.

59,877. You think it would be desirable that they should be eligible for such an appointment?—That is so. They are eligible at present. Although the Clerk of Records has not succeeded in being appointed, there is no reason why he should not be appointed.

59,878. No; but it has not been the custom?—It has not been the custom.

59,879. And you think it desirable that it should be the practice?—I do; and I am not without hope that it may be done. If a vacancy occurred I should certainly bring all the pressure I could to bear on the Lord Advocate in favour of my present official.

59,880. (Mr. Graham Wallas.) Are you familiar with the following statement made by Mr. Whyte before Lord Salvesen's Committee: "Since July 1906 my salary has been 500*l.* per annum. This was granted to me, as the Lord Advocate's Secretary wrote to me on the 3rd August 1906, in consequence of the long and excellent service which I had rendered in the Extractor's Office, and was consented to by His Majesty's Treasury, the increase of 100*l.* in my salary to be paid until I retired, or until I reached the age of 70, whichever of those events should first happen"?—I am quite familiar with that, because the arrangement was really made with my consent.

59,881. The first of those events to happen was that Mr. Whyte reached the age of 70, which was five years ago?—That is so.

59,882. And he is still enjoying that 500*l.* a year which was granted to him under the specified conditions?—No, it was stopped.

59,883. He says, since that date his salary has been 500*l.* per annum, and this was granted to him to be paid until he retired or reached the age of 70, whichever of those events should happen first?—He reached the age of 70 without retiring, so the 100*l.* ceased. He has not been receiving 500*l.* since he was 70.

59,884. It has been interpreted to mean that it is only the 100*l.* which was given to him until he reached the age of 70?—That is so.

59,885. And he then dropped back to his original salary?—He did. I may explain that the Lord Advocate at my interview when I accepted this appointment, pointed out to me Mr. Whyte's long service and the fact that the Treasury had then refused him superannuation, and he asked me if I would have any objection to accepting 100*l.* less salary for those four years and allowing Mr. Whyte to receive 500*l.* instead of 400*l.* The Lord Advocate had an interview, while I was waiting, with Sir George Murray, of the Treasury, and he returned and told me that Sir George had suggested that the arrangement should be an entirely private one and that I should pay the money to Mr. Whyte; but the Lord Advocate pointed out Mr. Whyte being an old man and my coming in as a stranger, that might be a little awkward, so the Treasury agreed to pay the 500*l.* direct to Mr. Whyte. I may mention that when Mr. Whyte attained the age of 70 the Treasury at once reduced his salary to the original 400*l.*; but they did not pay the Principal Extractor the salary of 750*l.* to which he was entitled, and it required a certain amount of correspondence through the Scottish Office before I received the normal salary of the Principal Extractor.

59,886. Would not it appear to you obvious that that extra 100*l.* a year was given in full expectation that Mr. Whyte would retire either at 70 or before?—Undoubtedly I think so.

59,887. And the fact that that full expectation was not fulfilled, and that Mr. Whyte has enjoyed the salary of 400*l.* a year for an additional five years, rather diminishes the extent of Mr. Whyte's grievance, does it not?—Possibly. Of course, I have no doubt he would have been quite prepared to retire if he had thought there was any chance of his getting his pension; but I pointed out to Mr. Whyte that he could not have it both ways, and if he was made pensionable he would have had to retire five years ago.

59,888. And if it had not been expected that he would retire at 70, he would not have had that extra 100*l.* a year?—Possibly not.

59,889. I understand you have recommended Mr. Hume from time to time to be assistant or depute Clerk of Session?—I have.

59,890. There was a vacancy for a depute Clerk of Session last December?—Yes, I think so.

59,891. Do you remember whether you recommended Mr. Hume then?—I did.

59,892. Do you remember the age of the gentleman whose claims were considered superior to Mr. Hume's? Was it not 67?—I could not speak with regard to the year; but he was certainly a very much older man than Mr. Hume.

59,893. Is it not, in fact, notorious that the reason that prevents any such promotion from within the office is the custom that the Lord Advocate should satisfy his personal obligations to his clerk by appointing him to these higher posts?—I believe the Lord Advocate's clerk is frequently appointed—not always.

59,894. Were you appointed to your present post on the recommendation of the Lord Advocate?—I was.

59,895. We have been told that there is a traditional and avowed custom that such appointments are made on the ground of political claims?—I believe so.

59,896. May I ask whether you had any political claims at the time of your appointment?—Frankly, I applied for the appointment on the ground of my professional experience and my political record.

59,897. What was the political record?—Political work done during 20 years.

59,898. As agent, as president of an association, or as candidate?—I never was a candidate; I could not run to that. I had been an election agent at three or four different elections previous to my appointment. I had acted as secretary of a political committee for 10 or 15 years, and I had been engaged in active political work at every election, including the General Election of 1885 down to the General Election of 1906.

59,899. As far as one can judge from your case, is it the custom to give the promise of such an appointment, or is the appointment open and settled by comparing the political claims of the appointee when any vacancy occurs?—I have never heard of any promise being given.

59,900. (Mr. Philip Snowden.) A statement has been made as to the loss of a Bill some time ago in Parliament through the action of the Principal Extractor. I understood you to say it was near the end of the Session, and rather than lose the Bill altogether the Lord Advocate agreed to amend it in accordance with the demand of the Principal Extractor?—Yes; that is not a recent Bill, but it was in 1889—26 years ago.

23 June 1915.]

Mr. EDWARD PETER THOMSON, W.S.

[Continued.]

59,901. So probably you do not remember the circumstances. Of course the Principal Extractor would not be able to bring direct pressure to bear upon Parliament; he would do it, I suppose, through Scottish members; of course the Scottish members alone would be able to bring influence to bear upon the fate of the Bill?—I am afraid it is impossible for me to speak with knowledge on the subject. As it was reported to me the story I received was, that Mr. Duncan told Lord Advocate Robertson that if those two offices were not deleted from the Bill he would use influence with certain members of the House of Lords to block the Bill. It was not in the House of Commons that this was done; it was actually after the Bill had gone through; but, of course, I am merely repeating the story. The fact remains, and nobody has any doubt that it was through his intervention that those omissions were made.

59,902. (Mr. Graham Wallas.) May I put it that such intervention is more likely and would be more powerful in the case of officers who hold their original appointments by political claims than if they were ordinary Civil servants?—I hardly think so. Mr. Duncan was over 80 at the time and had been out of public life for many years. He had held the office for 40 years, and I do not think he was a politician at all.

59,903. (Mr. Philip Snowden.) Do you think it desirable that all these officials should be pensioned in order to deal with such cases as that of Mr. Whyte?—I do think they should be pensioned.

59,904. If they had to retire on pension there would be less reason why they should continue in more or less active service to a very advanced age?—Distinctly.

59,905. Have you formed any opinion, generally speaking, as to what age would be desirable for retirement?—I think in my department 70 is a very good age.

59,906. Do you think a man retains his faculties up to that age, as a rule?—I do; a man who has led the life of a professional man, and has been engaged in work of that sort, I do not think loses the capacity of doing it until he is 70. It does not require any great physical endurance as long as his health remains.

59,907. May I ask if Mr. Whyte is fairly regular in his attendance at the office?—Entirely. I do not expect Mr. Whyte to appear quite so early in the morning as I do myself, and I do all I can to relieve him. I do not exercise a very strong discipline over Mr. Whyte; but he is regular; he has never been absent from the office. I think he had an illness about six weeks ago, and was confined to the house with a cold for about ten days, and he boasted to me that it was the first illness he had ever had.

59,908. It is not a case like some of which we have heard where the post is more nominal than active?—No; he gives regular attendance. Of course I make his post as light as I can now. I made up my mind about that when I went there. Mr. Whyte had had control of the department practically all his life. He is a most efficient public servant; he has a passion for accuracy, but he was not conspicuous for driving through work, and I saw that, if I did not intervene personally, things would go on as they had been doing. So I said at once: "If there is any work waiting to be done in the office I am going to do it." With the result that I took over the drafting of the extracts, and he did not make any objections. I draft them all myself on a typewriter, and I think the work is done in two-thirds of the time it used to be done in, and there certainly have been no arrears since I was appointed. In the old days I remember it used to take weeks to get a simple short extract. One went along to the office and found piles of processes waiting for extracts.

59,909. (Chairman.) How long does it take to get a simple extract now?—Within a week, but it depends on the pressure of work in the office at the time. Some extracts are more urgent than others. If an agent wants an extract in a hurry, either as regards the appointment of a judicial factor or some appointment that requires to be in his hands to enable him to act, or if he is apprehensive of a debtor absconding and wishes to do diligence, and he tells me, I give it him in a couple of days.

59,910. (Sir George Paul.) You take it out of its turn?—Yes.

59,911. And there is what is called an "expedition fee" paid in those circumstances?—I do not know anything about that.

59,912. I have heard of it?—I have heard of it, and I have invariably said to any agent who has mentioned it to me: "I do not think it has ever been done in my time."

59,913. My experience goes back many years before your time?—I know. I very strongly deprecate it. I think it came into practice simply owing to the unsatisfactory condition of things in the office through the system of paying the clerks by the amount of their writing.

59,914. (Chairman.) There is one point I wish to ask you about as regards your own post. Do you think that normally the appointment should be made from outside, or by promotion from the staff in the office? In asking that question I refer to normal circumstances, and not to the particular position at the present moment?—The question whether my own post should be filled from outside or by promotion is one on which my opinion may not be regarded as altogether unbiased. There is always a natural sense of grievance on the part of the second in command with long experience of the details of the work when an outsider is appointed over his head whom he may possibly at first have to instruct in those details. On the other hand, the public official who has spent most of his life in one department is notoriously apt to get into a groove and to become hide-bound by custom and tradition. A man with some years' experience of professional practice will generally take a broader view when any question of difficulty arises. He knows the wants of the profession and their clients, and will not look at things so readily from the point of view of officialdom. Unless he regards his appointment as a comfortable sinecure he will be anxious, as far as he can, to introduce improvements and bring the department up to date. On the whole, I venture to think that the Principal Extractor should continue to be chosen from among the members of the profession.

Mr. WILLIAM BOYD ANDERSON (President of the Incorporated Society of Law Agents in Scotland), called and examined.

59,915. (Chairman.) You appear on behalf of the Incorporated Society of Law Agents in Scotland?—I do.

59,916. Will you tell us what your own professional experience has been?—I have been practising since 1876 in Glasgow, and to a small extent in other counties—in Renfrewshire.

59,917. You are at present president of the Incorporated Society of Law Agents?—I am.

59,918. May we take it that the evidence which you give us to-day is given on behalf of your society?—Yes, on behalf of the society.

59,919. Dealing first with the Sheriff Clerks, what does your society consider the proper qualification for appointment to that office?—They are unanimously of opinion that the qualification for a Sheriff Clerk should be that of a law agent, that is to say, he ought to have passed the examination, after indenture, and be a qualified law agent with considerable experience of Sheriff Court business.

59,920. Will you explain why you consider that necessary?—He has a very large number of Acts of Parliament to administer and he is responsible for the form of all orders, and procedure in Court, both civil and criminal; and the final decrees, the warrants carrying out the orders of the Court are issued on his sole responsibility. The Sheriff in Scotland has a very much wider jurisdiction than the County Courts have in England. It is unlimited in amount, and with the exception of actions relating to heritages and status, and more serious crimes, such as murder and arson, and the reduction of deeds and all actions against the Crown, it can entertain any other class of action.

23 June 1915.]

Mr. WILLIAM BOYD ANDERSON.

[Continued.]

59,921. Do you think experience in the office of the Sheriff Court is not in itself sufficient qualification for the post of Sheriff Clerk?—Not entirely. A man ought to have a much wider experience of the practical working of the office as it affects the public outside—something more than merely handing out papers and seeing that orders of Court (interlocutors) are in proper form. He is often called on to interpret an Act and to act upon that interpretation.

59,922. Would not a senior member of the staff in one of the larger courts have considerable experience in the kind of work that the Sheriff Clerk himself is called upon to do?—After a long course of years he might have as much practical experience as was necessary, but occasionally questions even to him would arise that he would find it rather difficult to meet unless he had a proper legal training.

59,923. Do you attach importance to the wider experience that a man would have had in the outside profession?—I do. We all do.

59,924. How far do you apply the same considerations to the office of Sheriff Clerk Depute?—A Depute, of course, has not quite the same responsibility, and he is concerned more with the routine of the office, but in the absence of his principal he has, of course, to undertake the work that a principal would be called on to do; and he also has to interpret statutes and take charge of the whole procedure of the Court and ought to be a law agent.

59,925. But you do not consider that qualification indispensable in his case?—I think it would be too much to make a hard and fast rule that every man who is a Sheriff Clerk Depute must have the qualification of a law agent.

59,926. In the smaller places his duties would be of less responsibility?—In smaller places they are comparatively formal, and I am informed—I do not know it of my own knowledge—by one of the Sheriff Substitutes that in some places they have men like shopkeepers who are called Sheriff Clerks Depute, who merely receive papers and issue them, a most formal matter, but who still have the status of a Sheriff Clerk Depute. It would be nonsense to expect that he should hold the qualification of law agent.

59,927. Turning to the Procurators Fiscal, what is the view of your society about their qualifications?—We are strongly of opinion that the Procurator Fiscal must be either an advocate or a law agent and that his deputies ought to be law agents.

59,928. What is the position at present? Are the existing Procurators Fiscal in possession of that qualification as a rule?—As a rule they are.

59,929. Are there some who are not?—I knew of one case where the Procurator Fiscal is not a law agent.

59,930. In that case had the Procurator Fiscal had previous experience in a Procurator Fiscal's office?—Yes, he had been many years in the office of the Procurator Fiscal of Lanarkshire and was promoted to be Procurator Fiscal in another county in the east of Scotland. There could be no objection to his qualifications; his experience was as wide as it was possible for any one to have in a Procurator Fiscal's office.

59,931. Speaking generally, you think a Procurator Fiscal should hold the qualification of law agent or advocate?—Certainly.

59,932. Do you apply that also to the Procurator Fiscal's depute?—Yes, I do.

59,933. We were told that, in some cases, the depute is more or less an honorary office, and that his principal duty is to take the place of the Procurator Fiscal if he is accidentally absent through illness or on leave?—Yes.

59,934. Would the same qualification be necessary in those cases?—It ought to be, because the responsibility is as great whether he is a law agent or not. He has to conduct a case in court and it might be a very serious matter that was before the Court, and if he had not the qualification of a law agent you are then putting a man who has not a proper qualification against a person who has; that is to say, the prisoner would not be allowed to appear except by a qualified agent of some kind or other—either a law agent or an advocate—and against him you are putting a man without a proper qualification.

59,935. You are, of course, acquainted with the present system of appointment of the Procurators Fiscal?—Yes.

59,936. What is the opinion of your council as regards that method of appointment?—They think that if, theoretically, it is not the best, it has worked well enough. There has never been any complaint of a notoriously inefficient Procurator Fiscal who has got in by influence, without the proper ability to conduct his business. Of course, there are men who are perhaps a bit lazy, and others who are not very well up to their work, but that would arise under any system.

59,937. We have been told by several witnesses that it is quite recognised and known that the system of appointment is largely political?—Yes, it is.

59,938. We have also been told that within the last few years some departures have been made from that system chiefly in the direction of promoting Procurators Fiscal or Sheriff Clerks from one district to another, irrespective of political considerations?—Yes.

59,939. Do you confirm the evidence we have had, that speaking generally and broadly, the system is a political system of appointment?—It is a political system. It is perhaps not recognised, but it is known to be so.

59,940. What is the view of your council on that point?—They think it should not be a political appointment, that is to say, there are a very strong majority who are of that opinion. One or two think it has done well enough and there is no reason to change it.

59,941. Taking the opinion of the majority, have they formed any view as to the manner in which the change of system should be carried out? In the case of the Procurators Fiscal appointments are made by the Lord Advocate?—Yes.

59,942. Has your council considered whether there should be a change in the person who makes the appointment, or whether there is any other way in which the political element in the appointment could be eliminated?—It has been suggested that there might be a committee either to make the appointments or confer with the Lord Advocate about them; but the great majority seem to think that it is not the slightest use, and that it would not alter the matter unless you had a committee to make those appointments, and altogether take it out of the hands of the Lord Advocate; and then most of us think that that is undesirable.

59,943. You would prefer a system under which a committee created for the purpose would actually make the appointments?—No, I do not think we would care for that. We say if you are to have a committee it must be an independent one, but people rather smile at a committee.

59,944. You are not in favour of a committee either to recommend or to make the appointment?—No, we do not think it would do much good.

59,945. But if a committee were to be created, you think it better that it should have the responsibility than be merely a recommending committee?—Yes; by it being merely a recommending committee you do not get rid of the political influence at all. You recommend a man, and all the Lord Advocate has to say is that he would rather have some other body.

59,946. If the Lord Advocate departed from the recommendation of the committee, he would have to be prepared to justify his action?—To a certain extent, but you are limiting his responsibility, and as he is the head of that department, I do not think he should be relieved of the responsibility.

59,947. When you say the head of that department, I suppose you are speaking specially of the Procurators Fiscal?—Yes.

59,948. He can hardly be described as head of the Sheriff Court Department?—No, it is the Lord President who would be ultimately responsible in that case.

23 June 1915.]

MR. WILLIAM BOYD ANDERSON.

[Continued.]

59,949. If your council are not in favour either of a committee of appointment or of recommendation, are they in favour of leaving the appointment where it is at present—with the Lord Advocate?—Yes, they are.

59,950. Assuming that that is done, have they any suggestions to make as to the manner in which the political element could be excluded from these appointments?—I do not think we have ever discussed that. Beyond advising that the Lord Advocate should not make a political appointment, I do not think we have anything to suggest.

59,951. Who is to say it to the Lord Advocate? This Commission can make a recommendation, but it has no authority over the Lord Advocate?—I think it might just as well be left unsaid. It would ultimately come back to be a political appointment.

59,952. I gather that you are not very hopeful as to the prospect of eliminating the political element?—No, I do not think as things are under the present system you could eliminate it very well. You could not eliminate it, but to minimise any difficulty that might arise from that, if you increase the qualifications, such as insisting on having a law agent or an advocate to be a Procurator Fiscal, and a law agent to be a Sheriff Clerk, then you have a choice from the more educated or better class of men as a rule.

59,953. Would it not be the case that, speaking generally, the persons who would have claims to appointment on political grounds would be law agents?—Yes, you may take it they would.

59,954. So the requirement of that qualification would not exclude claims on their part?—No.

59,955. A suggestion has been made by certain witnesses that the power of appointment should be transferred from the Lord Advocate to the President of the Court of Session. That suggestion referred rather more especially to the legal appointments in the offices at Edinburgh, but it might, of course, also apply to the local appointments. Has your council ever considered that suggestion?—They have not considered that.

59,956. Are you prepared to express any opinion upon it?—I think not, because what I say just now must necessarily be subject to revisal. I do not know that it would be at all a bad system to get the Lord President to appoint. Before he did it he would make inquiry, and you would have some one who is absolutely independent of any local influence, and before he appointed any one he would necessarily inquire into his qualifications.

59,957. The criticism has been made that the Lord President would not be responsible to Parliament, and that it is desirable that appointments of this kind should be in the hands of a person who is responsible to Parliament, and who can if necessary be called to account. Do you attach importance to that consideration?—I cannot conceive anything on the part of a Procurator Fiscal or a Sheriff Clerk that would call for the interference of Parliament. The worst that he could do would be either neglect of his duties or some malversation in his office.

59,958. The question is not so much the conduct of the Sheriff Clerk or Procurator Fiscal; the question is whether the appointing officer ought not to be one who could be called to account by Parliament in respect of his appointments?—I should think that the offices of Procurator Fiscal and Sheriff Clerk are comparatively humble offices compared with others, and I do not think it is at all likely that a mis-appointment would be so gross as to require the attention of Parliament.

59,959. You think it is therefore more a theoretical question than a practical one?—I think it is entirely theoretical.

59,960. Has the political element entered at all into the appointment of the deutes and the clerical staff?—I have not heard of that. I do not think so.

59,961. It is only with regard to the main offices?—The main offices.

59,962. The deutes and the other staff are appointed at present by the Sheriff Clerk and the Procurator Fiscal respectively?—They are.

59,963. Have they security of tenure?—No, they are liable to dismissal by the Procurator Fiscal or the Sheriff Clerk, like any other employee.

59,964. A new Sheriff Clerk or a new Procurator Fiscal is not under any obligation to employ his predecessor's staff?—No.

59,965. Do you think there should be any obligation in that respect?—There certainly should.

59,966. In what form do you suggest that that should be carried out?—Once appointed, whilst a Sheriff Clerk might have the power of dismissing his subordinates, or a Procurator Fiscal might have the power to dismiss his deutes, it should be only with the consent of either the Sheriff of the county or the Lord Advocate.

59,967. Would you apply that both in the case of persons appointed by the Sheriff Clerk himself and in the case of those appointed by his predecessor?—Yes.

59,968. That is to say, once a man is appointed the Sheriff Clerk should not have the power of dismissal, except with the approval of the Sheriff or the Lord Advocate?—Yes.

59,969. Have you known any cases where a newly-appointed Sheriff Clerk has not kept on his predecessor's staff?—They have not come under my personal observation, but I have been told of cases; and as it is quite within the Sheriff Clerk's power to do those things, I can quite understand it has been done once or twice, although I must say from my experience of the Sheriff Clerks—and I have known several—it does not happen very often. I do not think it has happened more than once or twice.

59,970. As a rule, a man entering upon such an office would be glad to have the assistance of skilled clerks on his office staff?—He would, to begin with.

59,971-2. At present there is nothing in the nature of a united service or any systematic arrangement for transfer and promotion between the different offices?—No.

59,973. Do you consider that any change is possible or desirable in that respect?—It certainly would be desirable that a Sheriff Clerk Depute or a Procurator Fiscal Depute should have the opportunity of going to another county. Of course, as he would only do it on some increase of salary it would be some advancement for him, and the public would have the advantage of the experience that he brought with him.

59,974. Would you apply that also as between Procurators Fiscal. Do you think it desirable that the Procurator Fiscal of an unimportant district should have the opportunity of promotion by transfer to a more important district as vacancies occur?—Yes, I think so. I am assuming that their qualifications are looked at.

59,975. Assuming a man is qualified, you think the appointing authority should, if possible, fill the better appointments by transfer from the less highly-paid appointments rather than by appointment from outside?—I think that would be an advantage.

59,976. Would you apply that also in the case of the Sheriff Clerks and their deutes?—I would.

59,977. How far would you apply it as regards the staff generally in the offices of the Sheriff Clerks and the Procurators Fiscal?—At present it could be done; that is to say, a lad in one Sheriff Clerk's office hears of a situation likely to be vacant in another county, and if he applies and is qualified he can be transferred now in that way. It would always need to be done in that way unless you made the service a consolidated service and part of the Civil Service.

59,978. Would that be practicable?—I do not know that it would. The duties of the Sheriff Clerks are so various all over Scotland.

59,979. At present there is some difficulty in bringing about promotion by transfer because each Sheriff Clerk has knowledge only of the staff of his own office, and would not have knowledge of a person in another office who wished to obtain promotion?—Yes.

59,980. Those employed in other offices might not have knowledge of vacancies?—That is so.

59,981. A suggestion has been made that a small committee of Sheriff Clerks might be brought into existence for the purpose of considering promotions by

23 June 1915.]

Mr. WILLIAM BOYD ANDERSON.

[Continued.]

transfer from one office to another. Has that suggestion come before your society?—That suggestion has not come before us.

59,982. Does it strike you as a good suggestion?—I think it would be a very good thing if the Sheriff Clerks could meet periodically and discuss that, and perhaps other matters in which they were mutually interested, and find out if there was a vacancy occurring and if any good man could be had from another office.

59,983. Do you know whether there is any difficulty at present in finding suitable men to enter the Sheriff Clerks offices?—I do not know. I know in Glasgow we have several men now as Sheriff Clerks Depute who went in simply as clerks.

59,984. You have no knowledge of whether for the junior posts there is any difficulty in recruiting satisfactory men?—I do not know.

59,985. In any case a system of promotion by transfer such as we have been discussing would add to the attraction of the Service?—Certainly it would.

59,986. A suggestion has been made that the number of Sheriff Clerks should be reduced and that there should be one Sheriff Clerk for each sheriffdom, which reduces the number to 15. Are you in favour of that suggestion?—Yes, we have considered that, and think it is a reasonable proposal.

59,987. If that proposal were carried out it would to some extent facilitate the question of promotion by transfer among the staff, because the number of separate offices would be reduced?—Yes.

59,988. A small committee of the principal Sheriff Clerks out of those 15, would, in the offices under their own view, include a very considerable proportion of the general staff of the Sheriff Clerks' offices?—They would.

59,989. Lanarkshire, for instance, would include a much larger number than in any other sheriffdom?—Yes.

59,990. So that the proposed reduction in the number of Sheriff Clerks would probably tend to facilitate arrangements for promotion by transfer among the staff?—I think it would.

59,991. Have you considered the question of the restriction of private practice on the part of Sheriff Clerks and Procurators Fiscal?—Yes, we have considered that several times, and the opinion is that it would be advisable that both Procurators Fiscal and Sheriff Clerks should be debarred from private practice.

59,992. In speaking of private practice, do you include in that the holding of other public appointments of a local character?—No, I do not think there is any objection to a public appointment such as, say, clerk to a School Board, or perhaps registrar of births, or something of that kind.

59,993. You see no objection to offices of that character being held either by a Sheriff Clerk or a Procurator Fiscal?—Not where an office in its nature does not conflict with the duties of a Procurator Fiscal or a Sheriff Clerk.

59,994. What you would exclude is private practice as a law agent?—Yes.

59,995. We have been told that as the Procurator Fiscals' districts are at present arranged, there is in many cases not nearly enough work to occupy a man's whole time?—That is quite so.

59,996. It has been suggested to us that where that is the case it is undesirable to debar a man from private practice, because the man who has not a full day's work is apt to rust. Do you attach importance to that?—You cannot carry on your present arrangement and debar a man from private practice, because in many cases for weeks, and possibly for months, a Procurator Fiscal, say, in some of the outer districts in Scotland in the Highlands, has really nothing to do.

59,997. Then how would you modify the system to meet that?—I would combine districts so as to give a man a wide enough district to take up his whole time.

59,998. The objection which has been stated to an arrangement of that kind is, that in the less thickly populated districts of Scotland that would mean creating districts of very large geographical extent?—Yes.

59,999. And that as cases of crime may arise at any moment at any point in that district, the geographical conditions would render it impossible for the Procurator Fiscal to perform his duties efficiently?—Undoubtedly, that is a very considerable difficulty which would have to be considered and got over. Of course, serious crime in those districts is rare.

60,000. But can the difficulty be got over? In the thinly populated districts can you make a district sufficient to occupy a man's whole time?—For example, take districts like Western Ross-shire, the Hebrides, or Mull; there is very little serious crime in those districts—never any premeditated serious crime, such as murder, burglary, or things of that kind. But you might have a depute who, when the Procurator Fiscal himself is away making inquiries, could take up his duties during the time he is away and deal with anything that arose in that period; or the Procurator Fiscal could remain at his head-quarters and send a depute.

60,001. Would not that be only transferring the difficulty a step further and creating part-time deputies instead of part-time Procurators Fiscal?—You might then give a Procurator Fiscal power to create a deputy ad hoc, and then if he has to go away, as I have known to be the case, to an island, and may by storms have to stay there three days doing nothing and not able to get back, his depute could do what is necessary in his absence.

60,002. The deputies created ad hoc would not have experience in criminal investigations?—No; but if it was merely during a temporary absence—I do not mean an absence for a couple of days or anything of that kind—but if a man had to go away, say, for a fortnight, and something arose, in that time a depute could not go so very far wrong; he could carry on what was absolutely necessary, and perhaps make a few preliminary inquiries if a case arose.

60,003. Then you think it would be practicable to arrange the districts so as to give full employment to a Procurator Fiscal in each district?—I think it would be practicable by doing that, and having some system of appointing a depute if a man were to be away too far from his head office; but that is a matter on which the opinion of a Procurator Fiscal would be very much more valuable than mine.

60,004. If it were not practicable, and if you still had to maintain a number of part-time districts, would you in those cases debar the Procurator Fiscal altogether from private practice?—I do not think you could, unless you gave the Depute Procurator Fiscal a pretty wide area too.

60,005. If you debarred him from private practice it would mean that you would have to pay him a larger salary than would otherwise be necessary, and during part of his time he would be in enforced idleness?—That would be so.

60,006. In those cases I gather you would not think it necessary to enforce the prohibition against private business?—No; it might be in those cases very difficult to enforce it.

60,007. What are the objections that you see to the exercise of private practice by a Procurator Fiscal?—You do not know how his private practice might be affected or influenced by a prosecution. He might be drawn two ways.

60,008. You mean if a client of his had committed a crime there might be some conflict of duty or interest?—That, of course, is the most obvious thing; but there are others. For example, in dealing with a defaulting law agent, he might be thought to be unduly using his office as Procurator Fiscal against a competing law agent to try and make a little private advantage out of it.

60,009. Is there any feeling that his position as Procurator Fiscal would give him an unfair advantage in competition with his professional brethren?—Some people think so, and I think it is quite likely. He has an official position and is meeting people, and has opportunities of influencing business his own way that an ordinary man would not have.

60,010. Do the same considerations apply in the case of the Sheriff Clerks?—They do; and also in some of the districts the agents object to Sheriff Clerks who are in private practice getting information in their capacity of Sheriff Clerks; for example, getting detailed inventories of estates that are lodged with them, and getting to know the sums placed on deposit receipts in disputes, and so forth, and by that means getting a certain knowledge which, in the struggle for business, is used, perhaps, unprofessionally.

23 June 1915.]

MR. WILLIAM BOYD ANDERSON.

[Continued.]

60,011. It would be easier in the case of the Sheriff Clerks than in the case of the Procurators Fiscal to enlarge the districts so as to ensure their being whole-time posts?—Yes.

60,012. At present none of the officers whom we have mentioned are pensionable?—None.

60,013. Do you consider it desirable that they should be?—I think the deposes should certainly be. The Sheriff Clerks and the Procurators Fiscal have larger salaries; they have had businesses of their own, and have chosen to leave them for the appointments that they take, which they know have no pension attaching, and they know what is in front of them. But a Sheriff Clerk Depute or a Procurator Fiscal Depute has probably never been in business at all, and he has been brought up to a limited salary. You ask him to undertake very onerous duties and considerable responsibility, and I think it is only fair that a man who has been in the Public Service so long, and always on a salary, should get something when he is no longer able to earn his own livelihood.

60,014. Do you apply that both to the Sheriff Clerks Depute and to the Procurators Fiscal Depute?—I do.

60,015. You think it extremely desirable that they should be made pensionable, and you think it desirable, but not quite in the same degree, that the Sheriff Clerks and the Procurators Fiscal themselves should be made pensionable?—Yes.

60,016. What about the staffs of the Sheriff Courts?—It is a very difficult matter. An incompetent fellow getting into a Sheriff Clerk's office remains a clerk all his days, and is worth, perhaps, about 80*l.* a year. He would probably make no more if he were in the outside world, and he is probably paid his full value; but still it would be an advantage to a man like that, too. There is one thing about the life in any office, whether a Sheriff Clerk's or another, where a person never rises above the status of clerk, he has probably never acquired any knowledge that would enable him to gain a livelihood when he has ceased to work. He could not work at anything else, say, at gardening, or any hobby. He is limited in that way compared to a working man who has worked with his hands all his life, and when he gets old can turn his knowledge to some use and make a little; but a clerk cannot; he is, therefore, worse off, and if he could get a pension it certainly would be a great advantage to him, and enable clerks also to remain longer in the offices, and they would not look out so much for other situations.

60,017. At present do they frequently leave the Service for other situations?—I think the junior clerks do—at least from the Sheriff Clerk's office in Glasgow. I think they take situations in lawyers' offices. We have had several, and we have found them useful men. Their knowledge of the procedure in the Sheriff Clerk's office saves many a journey down there to ask what would be done, when your own clerks can tell you on a mere matter of routine.

60,018. If they were pensionable it would be easier to retain their services in the Sheriff Court?—Of course, because they would not get a pension by changing.

60,019. Turning back to the question of private practice, do your observations on that head apply to deposes as well as to the Sheriff Clerks and the Procurators Fiscal themselves?—It ought to apply to deposes whose whole time is taken up with the duties of their office, such as a depute in a Sheriff Principal's office, as you have in the larger offices; but where you have a depute in not a large town, whose time is only occupied occasionally when the Court meets, you could not well ask him to give up private practice. There might be such a system as would give deposes wider areas and take up their whole time, and, when they must have local offices in some of the smaller towns where the Courts meet on circuit, they might be established solely for the receiving and giving out of papers under the charge of a junior clerk, or only open on certain days—perhaps it might be in the office, say, of the Registrar of Births, or somebody like that. It certainly is more difficult to say that a detached depute should not do private practice.

60,020. If private practice were allowed in those cases it would make a difficulty about working the system of promotion by transfer?—Yes. A depute who has private practice naturally, if he got promotion, could not take all his private business with him; he must leave that in the locality. But that is no objection to promotion, because if it did not suit him he simply would not take it.

60,021. If he had the offer of promotion in that way it is his own affair if he does not find it convenient to accept it?—Yes.

60,022. Speaking generally, do you find that the office work of the Sheriff Courts is satisfactorily done?—Yes, it is very well done. I am speaking chiefly, of course, of Glasgow, but I have not heard complaints about other places either. You sometimes do get autocratic Sheriff Clerks, and we had occasion in the Council of the Incorporated Society of Law Agents, some time ago, to object to the practice of one of them, which was changed.

60,023. Generally speaking, the convenience of the public and of the practitioners is considered?—Yes, I think it is safe to say that it is quite a good service, subject only to the defects that you find in any human service.

60,024. (Mr. Graham Wallas.) I understand you to say that the general professional opinion in Scotland would be, that in so far as you could abolish political appointments to administrative posts, such abolition should take place?—Yes, there is that opinion.

60,025. (Miss Haldane.) Do you find, as I think we were told by some witnesses, a good deal of canvassing, and so on, for appointments under the Lord Advocate?—No; so long as they are political naturally the number of aspirants is limited, and if there is canvassing it is between, perhaps, four or five men.

60,026. Are you talking of the posts of Procurators Fiscal, Sheriff Clerks, and so on?—Yes.

60,027. As regards the Lord President, you rather approve, I gather, of the Lord President being the appointing authority. Would it be possible for him to be represented in Parliament somehow in case questions were asked about appointments?—Of course the Lord Advocate would necessarily answer from his place in Parliament any question that affected an appointment by the Lord President.

60,028. I have been told—I do not know whether it is the case—that a good deal of the canvassing is done in Parliament through other members of Parliament?—I do not know whether that is the case or not.

60,029. The Lord President, perhaps, would be immune from that kind of pressure?—Yes, he would.

60,030. About public appointments being held by Sheriff Clerks and Procurators Fiscal, would you consider it rather a good plan that they should hold public appointments as distinguished from private practice?—Yes, I think it would be an advantage.

60,031. It would give them a certain status in the place to which they belonged as well as an additional income?—It not only gives them a status but it makes them independent of the public. They have simply to discharge their public duties; they are not drawn one way or the other by any private interest that they might have as to how a particular line of action would affect their business.

60,032. Is it your idea that it would give them an additional status in the places in which they lived as well as an additional income?—I do not know that their status would be affected very much. I think they would be just as well considered whether they had private practice or not.

60,033. Anyhow, it would add to their incomes and make it easier to make them whole-time appointments?—Yes, and add to their independence.

60,034. It seems to me that the Sheriff Clerk's staff has a very poor outlook, in the smaller places especially?—It has.

23 June 1915.]

Mr. WILLIAM BOYD ANDERSON.

[Continued.]

60,035. I do not know whether you have made any suggestions in your précis, but is there no means by which that staff could have some opportunity given them for promotion?—I do not see very well how it could be done unless you gave a member of the staff a certain right to promotion. Take a lad in not a very large town where there are perhaps three assistants in the Sheriff Clerk's office; there is no prospect in front of him at all.

60,036. No; but if there was an opportunity of their being promoted elsewhere it would be better, would it not?—It would be better, but my experience at present is that when they see what is in front of them, which they do before they have been very long in the office, if they have any foresight at all, they leave it.

60,037. But that is not a very satisfactory service if they are trying to leave it at the very first opportunity?—No, it is not a very satisfactory service.

60,038. Cannot you conceive of any way being devised of getting the staff by a different method and with a view of their having promotion. Instead of allowing the Sheriff Clerks to appoint their own staff would it not be possible to have a better system?—I do not think you could do otherwise than have a Sheriff Clerk appoint his own staff.

60,039. I do not quite understand why not?—The duties of the offices, comparing one county with another, are somewhat different in their character. Take the Sheriff Clerk of Greenock—he is dealing with a certain series of Acts affecting people there—shipping cases, mercantile cases, and workmen's compensation cases. That is entirely different from the case of a man who is away in a country district altogether, say, Dumfries; and that, again, is probably different from a district away up in the north of Scotland. It is difficult to get a series of promotions from one place to another in that way, and the Sheriff Clerk wants somebody who can do the particular technical work, and, of course, it is very technical work that is required. You must give him some say as to his employés.

60,040. I should have thought if one got an intelligent lad he could adapt himself to the different conditions, supposing the service were somewhat consolidated?—Yes, so he could.

60,041. And you would, at any rate, get a better class of young men in that way, and a more intelligent class of young men if they had some prospect of moving elsewhere. In the smaller courts it strikes one that it must be a very depressing service?—It is a depressing service for anyone who is compelled to remain in it in a small place. He may get promotion in a very short time, and, on the other hand, it may be delayed for years.

60,042. I should have thought he would be much better really if he had a prospect of improving his condition, supposing he qualified himself and showed his intelligence by his work?—If you consolidated the service it would be an advantage in that way; but I am afraid it is too limited a service.

60,043. Would you agree that it is a very depressing occupation just now?—I think it is, certainly.

60,044. (Chairman.) Can you say how the salaries paid to the clerks in the Sheriff Courts compare with the salaries paid to clerks in private employment in law agents' offices?—I think they are much about the same.

60,045. (Miss Haldane.) In some cases they are very small?—Yes; the lads begin with a few shillings per week and are quite unable to keep themselves.

60,046. There is no control over them; they may be paid at any rate the Sheriff Clerk thinks proper?—Yes; the Sheriff Clerk has an allowance for his staff.

60,047. (Sir George Paul.) As regards the point which Miss Haldane made as to promotion, the Chairman suggested that there might be a committee of Sheriff Clerks who would get to know all the deutes in the country, and would probably know well the capable men who would be suitable for promotion, and you rather approved of that?—Yes; I think it might be a great advance for deutes.

60,048. That would be a way in which it might be discovered who were fit for promotion?—Yes.

60,049. Would you make it a hard and fast rule that a Sheriff Clerk should be a qualified law agent?—I think a Sheriff Clerk should be.

60,050. We had before us the other day the Sheriff Clerk of Midlothian, who began life as a junior in the Sheriff Clerk's office, and who was promoted gradually to be Sheriff Clerk. He is a very competent man; and we were told also that a Mr. Sellar, who, too, was not a qualified law agent, was a very good man?—Yes, I know him; he did his duties uncommonly well.

60,051. Then Sheriff Fleming was in favour rather of your view, and he said: "All the same, I must say the best Sheriff Clerk I ever had was promoted from a Sheriff Clerk Depute"; so it is a matter of circumstances?—Of course, it depends to a certain extent on the man.

60,052. I know; so if you had a good man you would not disqualify him because he was not a qualified law agent if you were satisfied that, but for that technical difficulty, he was perfectly qualified for the post?—Quite so.

60,053. What is your suggestion as regards the simplest way of appointing a Sheriff Clerk Depute? His is a precarious position at present?—The tenure of office is precarious.

60,054. His tenure of office is precarious because he is appointed by the Sheriff Clerk and may be dismissed by the Sheriff Clerk?—Yes.

60,055. What other suggestion have you to make?—I believe in the appointment as it is by the Sheriff Clerk, because he must be held responsible for his depute; but once appointed I would certainly not give the Sheriff Clerk the absolute power of dismissal.

60,056. I think it was suggested by one witness that the Sheriff Clerks Depute might be appointed by the Sheriff after consultation with the Sheriff Clerk?—That would be an advantage, but the Sheriff could never very well dissent from what the Sheriff Clerk suggested, because the Sheriff Clerk has made inquiries and he is the person responsible for the man, and he will be working with him.

60,057. But still the Sheriff would have to give his approval?—It might be an advantage that the Sheriff should be asked to give his approval.

60,058. That was the suggestion made to us?—I do not think there would be any objection to that.

60,059. As regards the Sheriff Clerk who is not a whole-time officer, you said there might be difficulty as regards his having private information, which would give him an advantage over other law agents, and he might be competing with them, for instance, in regard to inventories of personal estate?—Yes.

60,060. But anybody—Tom, Dick, or Harry—might go and find out as much as a Sheriff Clerk about it, by paying a shilling?—Yes, they could, but the Sheriff Clerk, when parties come to him, has opportunities of asking the representative from the office who presents the inventory various questions, and has a chance of gaining information in that way, all apparently in the way of this particular business, which a member of the public has not got.

60,061. But you would not attach any importance to that?—I do not myself, but I know in some of the country districts they do.

60,062. That is as regards local gossip, I suppose, about other people's affairs, and what other people have left?—It is not only the gossip; it might be jealousy, but they do think in some places that the Sheriff Clerk has got an undue chance of picking up business which an outsider has not.

Sir THOMAS MUNRO and Mr. JAMES E. SHAW, representing the Association of County Councils in Scotland, called and examined.

60,063. (Chairman.) (To Sir Thomas Munro.) You are the County Clerk of Lanarkshire?—I am.

60,064. (To Mr. Shaw.) You are the County Clerk of Ayrshire?—I am.

60,065. You wish to lay before the Commission certain points relating to Procurators Fiscal and the arrangements for their remuneration?—(Sir Thomas Munro.) We do, and we are obliged to the Commission

23 June 1915.]

Sir THOMAS MUNRO and Mr. JAMES E. SHAW.

[Continued.]

for hearing us at this late stage. I have not been able to submit a précis, because the gentleman who has been taking the main interest in this question is unable, unfortunately, to be present to-day, but Mr. Shaw and I have come to make a very short statement, and perhaps you will be good enough to do without a précis.

60,066. Perhaps I should explain first that the reference to this Commission does not authorise us to deal with points of judicial procedure or arrangements of that kind, but matters affecting the work and remuneration or appointment of Procurators Fiscal or the organisation of the system do come generally within our reference?—Mr. Shaw and I have considered the reference, and we will endeavour to keep within the scope of it.

60,067. Will you explain to us what you wish to bring forward?—Procurators Fiscal in the Sheriff Courts of Scotland are appointed by the Sheriff of the county subject to the approval of the Secretary for Scotland. They are now mostly whole-time officers, especially in the larger counties, though I believe in some of the smaller counties they may, as practising agents, be allowed to do a certain amount of outside business. The original liability for the remuneration of the Sheriffs Fiscal lay upon counties in Scotland under an Act of Parliament called the Rogue Money Act, passed in 1724. I do not trouble the Commission with a detailed statement of the various steps by which the counties were relieved of the obligation, if it was an obligation, imposed by that Act, but I come to this point: By the year 1851 the Treasury had practically taken over the responsibility for the payment of the Sheriffs Fiscal in, to use the general words of the old Statute, "Apprehending and bringing to trial prisoners." There are Sheriffs Fiscal appointed in the manner I have named, and Fiscals appointed by justices of the peace who exercise quasi criminal jurisdiction, but these latter are not Crown officers, and we do not bring that aspect of the question before the Commission, although incidentally I may mention, as being pertinent to the matter, that the expense of administering the criminal jurisdiction exercised through the J. P. Courts is a considerable burden upon counties in Scotland. In my own particular county I think the expenses will probably amount to nearly 2,000*l.* a year. That is a liability from which we cannot ask this Commission to suggest that we should be relieved. But to revert to the position of the Sheriffs Fiscal, there was in 1851 a good deal of complication as to what the effect of the Treasury Minute of that date was. In my county (Lanarkshire) it was held that the effect of that minute was to relieve the counties of any claim on the part of the Sheriffs Fiscal, because they were paid by the Treasury for practically everything that was done, except for this class of work, namely, the consideration of informations, which they had to peruse in the ordinary course of their duties, but on which no proceedings followed. Some of the Fiscals, however, contended that all that the Treasury minute relieved the counties of was the class of case which was either reported to Crown counsel as being of sufficient importance to justify the consideration of Crown counsel, or cases that had actually gone to trial in the local Sheriff Courts; but that it did not relieve them of the claim which Fiscals had for considering informations submitted to them, which resulted in none of those steps following. In my county we steadfastly refused from 1851 onwards to make any payments for work of that nature. The great majority of the other counties in Scotland, however, did make certain payments, very often very small payments, but a certain recognition to the Fiscals for the ordinary labour of perusing the informations, upon which no proceedings followed. In the year 1868 the position of matters was altered by the abolition of all existing statutes, imposing or authorising charges on county funds, and by an enactment, which said that the Commissioners of Supply (who are now represented by the County Councils in Scotland) were to be liable for any expenses which at the date of the passing of that Act they were in use to pay in connection with criminal proceedings or investigations. Since then the majority of the counties have made payments either of the exact amount which they were in use to make in 1863, or probably increased amounts which they may have considered that the Fiscals were fairly entitled to, with the result that there is being paid by counties in Scotland to-day a comparatively small amount in the aggregate, anything between 1,500*l.* and 1,800*l.*, to the Sheriffs Fiscal. The only exception, I think, is the county of Lanark, who resisted a claim made a few years ago by the Fiscals, that they were entitled to these payments. That case went to the House of Lords, and a unanimous decision of the House of Lords was given to the effect that the County of Lanark, not having been in use to make the payments claimed for in 1868, were not liable to the Fiscals. Accordingly, in Lanarkshire we make no payment to the Fiscal as do the other counties in Scotland. If the Treasury were right in the contention—because they supported the Fiscals in their claim against the county—that part of the duties which the Fiscals were not remunerated for by the salaries paid by the Treasury should be paid for by the county—and yet the Court has decided that the county is not liable—it seems a little unfair to the Fiscals that they have not got some consideration from the Treasury in respect of the loss of emoluments which the Treasury thought they would obtain from the counties when they fixed their salaries. So far as the county of Lanark is concerned, then we are free of all liability for the future. The other counties, however, are continuing to make these payments, and that fact has given rise to a little grievance on the part of the counties. The work for which the claim is made is the perusal and consideration of police informations on which no proceedings follow, and in the great majority of cases all that is done is that the Fiscals read the information, see that it is not a case to take up at all—it may be a simple case of an accident or a fire or anything of that sort—and marks on it "No proceedings." For that he makes a charge. In my own county the charge they made was 7*s.* 6*d.* for each perusal. I have here the actual account rendered—I do not trouble the Commission with it—but really it was rather a ridiculous account to be rendered, because in 800 items they were practically all of an apple-pie order, "receiving and perusing police information, and marking 'no proceedings,' 7*s.* 6*d.*" One makes no criticism on the nature of the claim except to say that it does seem an anomalous position that a man has a fixed salary which covers every case on which he actually requires to take action; but if, however, he does not take action on any case, he is remunerated in addition to his salary. I do not say for a moment, looking at the class of Fiscal that we have in Scotland, that that temptation is one that is present to the minds of the Fiscals; but it is quite obvious that if a man is going to increase his salary by not taking action, it puts him into rather an awkward position.

60,068. Does he in no circumstances get separate remuneration from a county for actual prosecutions?—No, except for statutory offences where there is an actual liability on the county imposed by statute.

60,069. In some cases of statutory offences, does he receive remuneration from the county for prosecutions?—Yes. Under Acts of Parliament such as the Weights and Measures Act or the Foods and Drugs Act, where the prosecution may be at the instance of the public prosecutor, and where although it is the Sheriff who tries the case, the authority instituting the proceedings is not the Crown but the local authority. In such cases, if the local authority employ the Fiscal, of course they pay him. But we think even in that class of case it would be very much better that all public prosecutions, common law and statutory, should be at the instance of the Sheriffs Fiscal and that he should be remunerated entirely by the Treasury.

60,070. In that case any penalties recovered would go to the Treasury?—Obviously all penalties must go to the Treasury. As a matter of fact I may say that the Treasury get practically all the penalties now. The only concession they make is that occasionally, if the penalty imposed is sufficient to meet the expenses, they allow the expenses out of the penalty. I have put the case for the counties as broadly as I can. It is an

23 June 1915.]

Sir THOMAS MUNRO and Mr. JAMES E. SHAW.

[Continued.]

anomalous position, we think, for the reasons I have already explained; and it is rather an irritating position, because while most of the counties have been able to arrange salaries with the Fiscals, it is always open to the Fiscal to say, "I want an increase in my salary," and he there and then makes up an account showing a large number of these items, "perusing, considering, and marking 'no proceedings'."

60,071. You say the majority of the counties have fixed a composition for these things?—The great majority pay by a commuted fee.

60,072. Do those commuted payments remain fairly constant, or are applications for modification often made?—They have remained fairly constant in recent years, but I remember about twenty years ago there were rather numerous applications on the part of Fiscals for reconsideration. Mr. Shaw will be able to show the position in his own particular county, but it is rather an irritating position, I think, both for the Fiscal and for the County Council. The sum involved is comparatively small; something like 1,500*l.* a year would get over all this irritation. In addition to that we think that if the Fiscal was wholly paid by salary his salary should cover any necessary clerical assistance which he may require. Our interest, as a county, in that part of the question is a very small one, but again it is rather an irritating position. The Fiscal by long custom has had the admitted right of asking for the assistance of a qualified police officer (very often an officer of some standing, such as an inspector) whom he uses as his clerk. The salary of the police officer is paid by the local authority, but he really is the servant of the Fiscal. Now we think that the Fiscal should be sufficiently remunerated by the Treasury to enable him to provide whatever assistance may be required. Of course, that might mean that in fixing the emoluments and fees of the Fiscal one would have to take into consideration what a reasonable salary for an active man doing the greater portion of the work would be. We do not for a moment suggest that we would dictate to the Treasury that in every case Fiscals must have a qualified clerk. It is a question as to the amount of salary which reasonably remunerates a man and enables him to get such assistance as is necessary for carrying out his work. Practically that is all I have to say, except to again point out the anomaly of my own county, the largest county in Scotland, where, if we had admitted the claim of the Fiscals, it would have amounted to at least 1,000*l.* a year, and we have actually escaped it because our predecessors were shrewd enough to take a Scotch view of the Treasury Minute of 1851; whereas other counties who may have been more liberally inclined towards the Fiscal, for personal reasons, have thus been subjected to a payment which we are escaping. In addition the position is anomalous in that a man has the temptation to increase his emoluments by being slack in his work. I apologise for such a rough statement, but I hope I have put the point before the Commission.

60,073. You do not suggest any other change in the relations between the Procurators Fiscal and the counties, except as regards these payments of which you speak?—No, except that I think these officers should, as part of their duties as officers of the Crown, undertake the prosecution of all statutory offences in counties.

60,074. They would still continue to peruse the informations and decide whether proceedings should be taken or not, as at present?—They would have to, because that is the only way by which they are enabled properly to fulfil their duties. The system in Scotland is this: in the old days the Procurator Fiscal practically searched out the criminal himself, because there was no police force in Scotland until 1857. The Procurator Fiscal was, therefore, not only a prosecutor of, but a searcher for, the criminal; in other words, he got his information from the public and made his own investigations either personally or through what were known as Fiscal's officers. In 1857 a police force was made compulsory. Practically now every case of a criminal prosecution in Scotland emanates from the police. The police send in what is a full precognition, as we call it in Scotland; that is to say, a full statement of the nature of the crime, the locus, and all the information to enable the Procurator Fiscal to see at a glance on perusal whether it is a case needing further investigation. Very often no further investigation is required, because the police information is so full that the Fiscal can actually take it into the court and lead his witness's evidence from it; but if further investigation is necessary the Procurator Fiscal causes further inquiry to be made, again through the police in the majority of cases, but sometimes by personal investigation. So that to enable the Fiscal to do his work he must read the police informations. It may be an information on an accident or a fire which need not lead to proceedings or be reported to Crown counsel, but he must read it to see if there is anything criminal in it. We do not think the mere fact that he reads that in the ordinary course of his work and does not take any action should justify any claim for remuneration from the county.

60,075. (To Mr. Shaw.) Is there anything that you wish to add?—If I may I would like to add one remark in regard to the use of the police officers in the offices of Procurators Fiscal. He uses these officers very much as clerks, and so reduces the staff in his office. Sir Thomas Munro has brought out the question of the remuneration of the police officer by the county; but there is a further inconvenience which I think you will appreciate: That police officer is under the control and command of the Chief Constable, and when he is transferred to the Procurator Fiscal's office he remains nominally under the command or control of the Chief Constable, but he really comes under the control of the Procurator Fiscal, so that the Chief Constable is in the position of not being able to use that man to the full extent that he could for proper police purposes. The arrangement, of course, was made in the old days before the days of telephones, when a policeman was required in a Procurator Fiscal's office to execute warrants of arrestment as required; but now there is no practical necessity for that, because by telephoning over to the police station he can get either an Inspector, a Superintendent, or a constable, for the particular purpose that he requires him. I thought, perhaps, that was an additional point to what Sir Thomas Munro had said on the subject. With regard to the other main question, the remuneration by the County Council of the Procurator Fiscal for perusing informations that do not go to trial, if the Commission thought right to report that that remuneration should be taken over by the Treasury, I think it right to suggest that compensation should be paid, either by the County Council, or by the county and the Treasury jointly, according to the extent to which either benefited; but I would then ask to be taken into consideration that the compensation should not be paid according to the amount that is being paid to these officials at present, for the reason that these amounts have really been arranged by compromise, as a rule, to avoid litigation between the County Council and the county official—the Procurator Fiscal. In the case of Lanarkshire the matter was of great deal more importance, and they took a case to the House of Lords in which they were successful; but that did not rule in all the other counties, and, rather than have an expensive litigation over a question of 100*l.* or so—sometimes only a matter of 25*l.*—certain County Councils thought it better to compromise the matter by arranging a payment of so much a year to the Procurators Fiscal. Now I suggest and maintain that if compensation is to be paid to the Procurators Fiscal, it should be paid upon what they are legally entitled to, and not on what they have been paid as a compromise in order to avoid litigation with those officials. Those are the only two points I wish to make in addition.

60,076. In the case of your county, has the payment been converted into a fixed sum?—In the case of my county it was converted into a fixed sum. Prior to 1868 the county of Ayr did not pay the Procurators Fiscal anything at all, so really, when that Act was passed, they were not legally liable to pay anything. But many years after that, by arrangements with the Procurators Fiscal, they paid a sum of 25*l.* in one court and 20*l.* in the other. Subsequently, in 1904, I think, after the case of Hart v. The County Council of Lanarkshire, a new Procurator Fiscal having built up an account for perusing these cases that did not go to trial, the County Council recognising that, if that work should be remunerated at all, it was not being sufficiently remunerated at 25*l.* and 20*l.* respectively, compromised the matter accordingly by making a payment of 100*l.* in one case and 80*l.* in the other. But as a matter of fact I am free to maintain that they were not really entitled to any remuneration at all, because, prior to the Act of 1868, no remuneration had been paid, and that Act only authorised the County Council to pay what they had been in use to pay formerly.

23 June 1915.]

Sir THOMAS MUNRO and Mr. JAMES E. SHAW.

[Continued.]

60,077. In fact, Ayrshire was really in the same position as Lanarkshire?—Exactly in the same position; but it was not worth while going to expensive litigation with an official in order to save a matter of 100*l.*

60,078. (Mr. Graham Wallas.) (To Sir Thomas Munro.) If any compensation was paid in this case it would apply only to the holder of the office for the moment—the present Procurator Fiscal?—Quite so.

60,079. In the case of a vacancy the matter could be adjusted by having an inclusive salary, which need not necessarily be higher than the present salary?—That is so. In fact, I think, if the Treasury accepted the principle we are contending for, if any compensation were payable, it would be payable to the Treasury from the county, because the Treasury would increase the Procurator Fiscal's salary by a sufficient amount and so relieve the county. If any compensation did emerge it would be between the county and the Treasury.

60,080. It need not increase the salary of any future Procurator Fiscal?—I quite agree.

60,081. Besides acting as prosecutor, or examiner of papers for counties, the Procurators Fiscal afford help to smaller bodies, such as Parish Councils and School Boards?—Only where there is under the Act which the Parish Council or the School Board may administer a direction that the offence is to be tried by the Fiscal, in which case the Fiscal institutes the prosecution, but not under the Crown; he does not require to go to the Crown, but takes instructions from the prosecuting authority, and in the majority of cases he makes a charge. I believe many of the authorities rather contest his right to make a charge, but I think a great many pay something.

60,082. We shall not have any representatives of the parishes here, I suppose, but do you think a similar solution of the difficulty in the case of the Parishes and School Boards might also be desirable?—I think that all public prosecutions carried out by the Procurators Fiscal should be covered by an inclusive salary, and that they should prosecute all offences, whether common law or statutory, in the counties.

60,083. That is to say, it should be part of his official duties?—It should be part of his official duties. I think in many ways it would improve the status of the Procurator Fiscal, because if he collected all these small items it would obviously mean that he is entitled to some increase of remuneration, and it removes any suggestion as to making a business out of criminal prosecutions.

60,084. A suggestion has been made that the matter might go a little further than that, and that a Procurator Fiscal who, as part of his official duties and for an inclusive salary, is acting in prosecutions on behalf of small local authorities in Scotland, might also act in non-criminal business on their behalf, for instance, in buying land, or doing any other legal work, as part of his official duties. That would save a great deal of expense to the smaller local authorities, and would provide a more dignified position for the Procurator Fiscal himself, and make it more likely that we should be able to employ Procurators Fiscal who would give their whole time to the work?—That is a novel suggestion to me, and one would like to turn it over in one's mind. There is this objection to it, that the official who devotes himself to a specialised subject becomes a specialist. Now to entrust the ordinary Procurator Fiscal, as I know him, with conveyancing work, which is very intricate, would be a little anomalous, I think. Some of the Procurators Fiscal, as a matter of fact, are not qualified law agents. Mostly now, I think, they are; but I have known very responsible Procurators Fiscal who were not qualified law agents, and who therefore could not undertake that class of work—at least they could not charge fees for it. I am afraid it would be looked at a little askance by the profession; I agree that most of the Procurators Fiscal are now men who pass their legal examinations and are qualified in their profession; but they are specialists, and I think some of them would look rather aghast at the idea of doing conveyancing work at this stage.

60,085. I have been a member of a County Council for a considerable time, and I think buying of land for the purposes of new schools does not involve necessarily very difficult conveyancing work, does it?—Have you ever seen a Scotch title?

60,086. Yes?—I am approaching the matter with an absolutely open mind, but the best way of illustrating it is to take one's own position. I suppose in my day I was quite a good conveyancer; I still do a great deal of conveyancing in my office, but I would not undertake without very responsible assistance from a man specially qualified in the work to prepare a title to-day because I am a specialist in particular work. Mr. Shaw, on the other hand, who keeps himself abreast with things, and who does private practice, of course would do it.

60,087. That is in reference to the question of buying land?—I think that is, perhaps, going a little too far.

60,088. But there are other questions, such as settling claims for compensation, which come day by day before a municipal body, which could be well done by anybody who is a qualified law agent and is on the spot?—I quite see the point, and the attraction of it from certain aspects; but on the other hand I see grave difficulties. I think, for instance, the Treasury, or, as we know it, the branch of the Treasury called the Exchequer in Scotland, would be rather averse to their specialists in criminal work having an excuse for saying, "Well, I am very busy doing other work." (Mr. Shaw.) I think that the Parish Councils and School Boards and other authorities that you suggest might be met in this way would object to it. They would infinitely prefer, I think, to select their own conveyancer and whoever they wanted to do the work for them. I think you would find strenuous objections from Parish Councils, and School Boards particularly.

60,089. But it might be cheaper, might it not, in the case of a small local authority whose clerk was not a qualified lawyer and not able to give his full time to the appointment?—Manifestly, if they can get it done for nothing it would be cheaper; but in Scotland the general rule, except in the very rural districts, is that the School Board Clerk, the Parish Council Clerk, the Heritor's Clerk, and nearly all those sort of people, are law agents practising in the locality. (Sir Thomas Munro.) It is rather a novel suggestion, and therefore one does not want to dispose of it at once by giving an absolute negative or affirmative. I have been trying to figure in my mind the class of work where the Procurator Fiscal would be useful, and I confess, honestly, just on the spur of the moment, if you eliminate conveyancing, which is, after all, a comparatively rare occurrence in the case of the School Boards or Parish Councils, except the very large ones, I am not able to figure out where the Procurator Fiscal could usefully intervene. Might I ask whom the suggestion emanated from? If from the Procurators Fiscal they might have suggested to the Honourable Commission how they could be useful?

60,090. It emanated from a distinguished Scotch lawyer, but not a Procurator Fiscal. At present do the Procurators Fiscal do the work of enforcing the School Attendance Acts where it is necessary to prosecute a parent?—They may. In my opinion they should.

60,091. (Miss Haldane.) Is not that a class of work that they might do?—I am quite at one with you. Whenever you find that a duty is imposed upon either the Crown or a local authority of invoking the aid of the Court, keep away from the private agent and give

23 June 1915.]

Sir THOMAS MUNRO and Mr. JAMES E. SHAW.

[Continued.]

it to the public prosecutor. We are at one with regard to that. (Mr. Shaw.) Quite.

60,092. (Mr. Graham Wallas.) There is a lot of minor work in connection with the Public Health Act?—Yes.

60,093. Might not that normally pass through the Procurator Fiscal?—There is nothing to prevent a Procurator Fiscal doing that just now, I should think. As a matter of fact, the prosecutions under the Public Health Act in most cases are at the instance of either the solicitors of the local authority or qualified agents. In my own county for the Public Health Act most of the local authorities employ a qualified law agent who has made himself rather an expert in the matter; but I do not think there is anything to prevent the Procurator Fiscal being employed in that class of work if the Treasury allow it; the same with the Food and Drugs Act, and things of that kind.

60,094. In Scotland, the county is the public health authority?—The County Council is the public health authority, but the administrative authority is the County Council and the District Committee, which is composed of representatives of the County Council and representatives of the Parish Councils. You may say that, differing from England, the County Council and District Committee are the local public health authority. (Mr. Shaw.) I think the sort of prosecution which you have in mind is one that has frequently come before me in my capacity as an honorary Sheriff Substitute of the county. The Parish Councils have to prosecute in cases where a man neglects to aliment his wife or his children when he is able to do so. I have found that in order to obtain the fees, I suppose, for conducting the prosecution, the parish clerk frequently appears and conducts the case himself, and he is totally unable to do so. It would be very much better that it should be conducted by a Procurator Fiscal. Whenever it is Court work I think your suggestion is perfectly correct, but when it is not Court work, but conveyancing or ordinary practice, then I think you would find that in Scotland the smaller local authorities are well provided in that respect.

60,095. But all Court work arising out of the great body of compulsory statutory legislation of late years could well be done by the Procurator Fiscal for the local authority?—Certainly. (Sir Thomas Munro.) Going back to our original report, the second recommendation of the Association of County Councils is: "As regards contraventions of statutes, by-laws, &c., "prosecuted by Procurators Fiscal, a general arrangement should be come to under which, in each case "where any penalty or expenses recovered would go to "Exchequer, the Procurator Fiscal's remuneration and "all expenses incidental to the trial would be borne by "the Treasury." In addition to that we recommended that as far as possible all prosecutions should be by the Procurator Fiscal. (Mr. Shaw.) Yes; that is the practice in most counties. In my own county, for instance, I made a special point of it, because I think it is quite wrong that anybody who is interested in causing the prosecution or raising the prosecution should get any remuneration out of it. (Sir Thomas Munro.) As a further illustration of this particular point, I find in the county of Inverness they pay a salary which covers the class of case we think should be paid for by the Treasury and on which we have represented to-day, and also includes all contraventions of statutes for which the County Council would be liable to pay the expenses under statute. In other words, they pay the Procurator Fiscal, not only for the class of case which we think should be paid for by the Treasury, but in the salary they include any work of a public prosecuting nature. That is a very sensible arrangement.

60,096. (Sir George Paul.) Your main point is very much a question between the County Councils and the Treasury, is it not?—Quite so.

60,097. As to who should bear the cost?—Yes. May I add one word? It is only fair that if this arrangement is given effect to, then any allowance which the Treasury now makes to the county through the police or otherwise towards the pay of the Procurator Fiscal's officer—the police officer who assists the Procurator Fiscal—should cease in future to be paid to the county because they are being relieved of the duty.

ONE HUNDRED AND FORTY-SECOND DAY.

Thursday, 24th June 1915.

PRESENT:

SIR HENRY BABINGTON SMITH, K.C.B., C.S.I. (Chairman).

Sir DONALD MACALISTER, K.C.B.
Sir JOHN ARROW KEMPE, K.C.B.
Sir GEORGE MORISON PAUL.
Mr. ARTHUR BOUTWOOD.
Mr. PERCY EWING MATHESON.

Mr. ARTHUR EVERETT SHIPLEY, F.R.S.
Mr. PHILIP SNOWDEN, M.P.
Mr. GRAHAM WALLAS.
Miss HALDANE.
Mrs. DEANE STREATFEILD.
Mr. E. W. H. MILLAR (Secretary).

The Right Hon. ROBERT MUNRO, K.C., M.P. (Lord Advocate), called and examined.

60,098. (Chairman.) You hold the office of Lord Advocate?—I do.

60,099. Will you tell us what your previous professional and political experience has been?—I was called to the Scottish Bar in the year 1893. When the late Liberal Administration came into office in 1905–6 I was appointed to the post of Advocate Depute in the Sheriff Court. I subsequently held in succession the post of Extra-Avocate Depute, the post of Junior Counsel to the Inland Revenue, the post of Ordinary Advocate Depute, the post of Senior Advocate Depute, and in October 1913 I was appointed to my present position.

60,100. We should like first to have some information about the departments which are more particularly subordinate to the Lord Advocate. In the first place will you tell us about the Advocates Depute?—There are four Advocates Depute appointed by the Lord Advocate. They conduct prosecutions in Court at the instance of the Lord Advocate, and act in the general discharge of the duties which devolve on the Lord Advocate in virtue of his position as Public Prosecutor. In addition to the four Advocates Depute there is an Extra-Avocate Depute attached to the Glasgow circuit, which is the heaviest circuit in Scotland, and accordingly there is an Extra-Avocate Depute who appears in one of the two courts of the Glasgow circuit, while an ordinary depute appears in the other Court. These ordinary Advocates Depute receive a salary of 700*l.* a year. The Extra-Avocate Depute receives remuneration at the rate of 52*l.* 10*s.* for each circuit, of which, generally speaking, there are six in the year at Glasgow. The Advocate

24 June 1915.]

The Right Hon. ROBERT MUNRO, K.C., M.P.

[Continued.]

Depute in the Sheriff Court is paid by fees. I may say that the Advocate Depute in the Sheriff Court is a practising counsel of the Scotch Bar, and in important cases where the Lord Advocate thinks it proper that exceptional skill should be put at the disposal of the Sheriff Court and of the Procurator Fiscal, the Lord Advocate of the day has the power to send, and in point of fact does send down, the Advocate Depute to the Sheriff Court to conduct the prosecution. That is quite an exceptional duty.

60,101. He may be sent to any part of the country? —To any part of the country from Caithness to Kirkcudbright, as, in point of fact, has happened in my experience.

60,102. Are all the Advocates Depute allowed to carry on private practice?—Yes; all the officials to whom I have referred—the four Advocates Depute, the extra depute, and the Sheriff Court Depute—are practising counsel, and their private practice, while no doubt subordinated to the calls of public duty, proceeds as usual. All these officials do carry on, and, I think, always have carried on, private practice. In addition to these officials there is the legal secretary to the Lord Advocate. He is a member of the Scottish Bar, and receives a salary of 750*l.* a year, together with certain allowances for expenditure when he is detained in London. Apart from his duties as legal secretary, he has two rights which are not very frequently invoked; the one is to appear before the House of Lords in peerage cases and the other is to appear before the Privy Council in baronetcy cases.

60,103. In those cases does he appear for the Crown or for the litigants who may be concerned?—I have only had one case in my experience of which I can speak from personal knowledge. The Lord Advocate of the day is called upon to advise the Home Office, and appears at the Privy Council more as performing the functions of amicus curiæ than any other, not taking up, what Lord Dunedin called on that occasion, anything more than an attitude of mild hostility to the claimant. The legal secretary appears as junior counsel along with the Lord Advocate in that capacity.

60,104. Are all those officials whom you have mentioned appointed by the Lord Advocate, and do they go out with him?—That is so. All their appointments fall when the Lord Advocate demits office.

60,105. Is that the case when an individual Lord Advocate demits office, or when the Government as a whole resigns, and there is a change of Government?—I should say that, technically, the appointments fall when the particular Lord Advocate vacates office. I cannot remember a concrete case; but I should have little doubt that they would all be re-appointed, with the possible exception of the legal secretary, by the successor in office of the same shade of politics. I should think so; but that is a matter of conjecture. Perhaps I should add that the Lord Advocate receives, for clerical assistance, a sum of 350*l.* Of that sum, 250*l.* is paid to a clerk who is employed in the department in London or in Edinburgh, as the case may be; he travels from one place to the other, and he, in practice, remains in office though the Lord Advocate goes out of office. The remaining 100*l.* is paid to a clerk in Edinburgh, who acts as clerk to the Lord Advocate in any business in the court in Edinburgh conducted by the Lord Advocate of the day. His appointment also falls when the Lord Advocate goes out of office.

60,106. As you are aware, the Minister, who, in some respects, corresponds to the Lord Advocate, and in particular as regards legal patronage—I mean the Lord Chancellor—has a permanent secretary, and not a political secretary. Has the question ever been considered whether there would be an advantage in making the Lord Advocate's legal secretary a permanent officer, instead of an officer who changes with a change of Government?—Personally I should extremely deprecate any such change. One can only speak of one's own views in a matter of that kind, I think; but my experience is that one's relation with one's legal secretary are of a peculiarly intimate character, and unless one had the free choice of the man whom one desired to have as one's legal secretary,

I do not think the relations would be so agreeable or the public interest be so well served.

60,107. In the case of the Lord Chancellor, his secretary used formerly to be an officer changing with the changes of Government, and, indeed, I find that the Royal Commission on Legal Departments in 1874 made this statement: "We have considered the question whether advantage might not result from the permanent appointment of a secretary who should act in that capacity to successive Chancellors, but looking to the confidential and personal character of much of the business transacted by the principal secretary we do not think that the suggestion of permanence in this appointment would be easily practicable or acceptable to those most concerned." In spite of the opinion held at that time the change was made, I think, in the year 1884, and I believe it will be generally agreed that the result has been eminently satisfactory. Without causing the disadvantages which might have been expected, it has secured a very useful degree of continuity in the administration of the legal departments and the legal appointments. I gather from what you say that you are not of opinion that the same change would have the corresponding advantages in Scotland? —I am not, unfortunately, in a position to say how close an analogue is presented by the Lord Chancellor's position with reference to his secretary to the position of the Lord Advocate and his legal secretary. No doubt a very great deal depends on the man who is chosen as the Permanent Secretary, and a very great deal depends upon the holder of the office to which he is attached; but expressing my own personal view—and I think it consistent with the public interest, as I understand it—I should infinitely prefer to choose a man whose methods of work and methods of thought I am familiar with, and whom I can implicitly trust, and with whom my relations would be extremely pleasant, rather than have a permanent official who might be antipathetic in many ways, and whose methods of work might not be so familiar to me as those of a man whom I selected. I think it is largely a matter of personal preference.

60,108. The work of the legal secretary is, I suppose, almost entirely in personal contact with the Lord Advocate?—Yes, in connection with all correspondence, in connection with Bills in the House, and in connection, in fact, with every duty which the Lord Advocate has to perform. I am not aware really of the precise duties which the Lord Chancellor's secretary has to perform, but I should think there are considerable differences both with regard to quantity and quality between them.

60,109. In particular relation to the legal departments, which is the point which concerns this Commission specially, I think there is this difference: that the Lord Chancellor is much more directly concerned in the control and regulation of the legal departments and their staff than the Lord Advocate is with the similar control of the Scottish legal departments. In that respect I think there is an important difference. But in many other respects I imagine that the work is very similar, and in such matters as drafting Bills, and other political work of that kind, the Lord Chancellor relies on the assistance of his permanent secretary, as I suppose the Lord Advocate relies on his legal secretary? —All I can say is, that I find that the arrangement works exceedingly well, and so far as I have discussed it with any of my predecessors in office they agree that in their case also the arrangement worked extremely well, and could not be bettered in the public interest.

60,110. Will you now tell us about the arrangements of the Crown Office?—The Crown Agent is at the head of the Crown Office, and is appointed by the Lord Advocate. His appointment falls when the Lord Advocate demits office. Under the Crown Agent there are two permanent clerks, both of whom hold Civil Service certificates, and who receive respectively salaries of 500*l.*, increasing by increments of 25*l.* a year to 650*l.*, and 300*l.*, increasing by increments of 10*l.* a year to 400*l.* Those two clerks are entitled to superannuation. The Crown Agent receives for clerical assistance a sum of 680*l.* a year, out of which he pays for three other clerks, who are also employed in the Crown Office.

24 June 1915.]

The Right Hon. ROBERT MUNRO, K.C., M.P.

[Continued.]

There used to be four, but at present the work is being done by three. These three clerks are appointed by the Crown Agent, and in practice they remain in office under successive Crown Agents; they are not pensionable officials.

60,111. What is the work done by the Crown Office?—At present it is almost exclusively concerned with the criminal law of Scotland. Under the Crown Office are the various Procurators Fiscal scattered all over the country, who are in constant touch with the Crown Agent, who report to him regularly the criminal cases which come under their cognisance, in many cases for instructions. These instructions are given by the four Advocates Depute whom I have referred to, one of whom is attached to each of the four parts of Scotland. One has the Home Circuit at Edinburgh; one the west, Glasgow; another the north, Caithness, and so on; and another the south. The Procurators Fiscal report their cases to the Crown Agent, through whom they reach the four Advocates Depute, and they give the appropriate instructions. The Crown Office, of course, has to do with the preparation of criminal cases, which are conducted in Edinburgh, in the High Court.

60,112. To what extent does the Crown Agent carry on the business of the office in person?—In connection with the cases that I have referred to, the criminal cases which are tried in Edinburgh, he has the whole management and responsibility of getting up the case; he instructs the Lord Advocate just as an ordinary solicitor instructs counsel; he is responsible for the preparation of the case, and for its presentation to the Lord Advocate and his junior, who are to conduct it in Court. That is one of his duties so far as trials in Edinburgh are concerned. Then he has the general supervision of the Crown Office, and is responsible for all its work.

60,113. He is a solicitor in practice?—Yes. That, I believe, has been so from time immemorial—he is a solicitor who has an office of his own, and probably partners of his own, and who accordingly divides his time.

60,114. Does he, as a matter of fact, devote much of his time to the work of the Crown Office?—I cannot speak about previous holders of the office. The present holder certainly does to my personal knowledge. I think the time devoted has varied, according to my information, in past days.

60,115. I suppose the actual work of preparing cases for the Lord Advocate and his deutes in so far as it is not done by the Procurators Fiscal, is done by the permanent staff of the office mainly?—They have very important functions to perform I agree, in particular the two clerks to whom I have referred, who are most invaluable public servants. They divide the responsibility, but the ultimate responsibility, of course, rests upon the Crown Agent, who is at the head of the establishment. If I might be permitted, I should like to make a suggestion to the Commission with regard to the Crown Office, which I think, if I may humbly say so, is worthy of consideration. It has seemed to me that its functions might be considerably extended to the public advantage. At present it is concerned, as I said, solely or almost exclusively with the criminal work in Scotland, and I think it is well worthy of consideration whether it might not extend its functions in this way: that the Crown Agent should also have the conduct of all Government legal business in Scotland—I mean civil business. At present that business is scattered over quite a number of private solicitors in Edinburgh. There are solicitors who represent, for example, the War Office, the Treasury, the Board of Trade, the Office of Woods, the Office of Works, and so on. I think it is well worthy of consideration, if I may say so, whether these various functions might not be usefully performed by the Crown Agent in the Crown Office. That would involve, no doubt, an increase in the staff; it would also involve an increase in the accommodation, but according to the best consideration that I have been able to give to it, I think it would have compensating advantages. It would certainly be highly convenient to co-ordinate these various offices under one roof and in charge of one man. It would also result in uniformity of practice.

s (5)30320

60,116. At present does each of those various public departments employ its own firm of solicitors for business which it has to transact?—That is so, and I venture to think that the change suggested might be more convenient and uniform, and also, I may add, efficient and economical. I notice, for example, referring to the last point, that the Civil Service Appropriation Accounts for the year to 31st March 1914, show the following expenditure on law agents in Scotland for sundry departments. I will not trouble the Commission with the precise figures, but the total is 4,415*l.* per annum. I think that even with the increased staff which would be required in the Crown Office, the cost per annum would not exceed on a rough calculation 1,500*l.* to 2,000*l.*, even adding a conveyancing department and a process department, which would probably both be required in the event of any such change as I suggest being made. I would add that if any such change were made, I do think that the Crown Agent would have to be confined to the performance of the duties of his office, and would have to be a whole-time official, who did not in addition to these duties conduct an ordinary practice. It might also for consideration whether he should not be a permanent official.

60,117. I was going to ask that question. Would not there, in the civil work in particular, be considerable inconvenience in having it in the hands of a person who is changed with each change of Government?—I am disposed to entirely agree.

60,118. It strikes me at first sight that there is a difference between the criminal work and the civil work in that respect. In the criminal work a case arises and is done with, but in civil work you have matters going on year after year, and it may be very important that the solicitor dealing with it should have a long knowledge of precedents in the matter?—I agree, if I may say so, that there is continuity in the civil work which renders that proposal eminently desirable.

60,119. A change of that kind would put the system of transacting both the criminal and the civil business somewhat more on the same lines as are followed in England, where the whole of that work is done by permanent officers and not by officers who change with each Government?—Yes. I venture to think that it has the advantages, which I have endeavoured to specify, of convenience, uniformity, efficiency, and economy. I would only add that I would not suggest that the Revenue Department should be treated in that way. The department of Inland Revenue in Edinburgh has a solicitor of its own, who devotes his whole time to the duties, and he has a permanent staff. I would not suggest any change in that department.

60,120. Could all other departments be conveniently dealt with by the same office?—In my humble judgment, they could.

60,121. The volume of work is not too great for that?—I think not.

60,122. (Sir John Kempe.) I suppose the Customs work is on the same footing as the Inland Revenue?—That is so. Sir Philip Hamilton Grierson is at the head of that department and has been for years. It is a department where the whole resources are devoted to the work of the Inland Revenue—I mean, it is not like the other offices to which I have referred where the work of a public department is simply an incident in the year's work.

60,123. (Chairman.) Before asking you to give us your views on various points connected with particular legal departments in Scotland, there is a general question on which we should like to have your opinion. We have been told by numerous witnesses that, speaking generally, the legal appointments in Scotland are largely made upon political considerations—that is to say, upon considerations of political services rendered. The opinion has been expressed by several witnesses—by the great majority of witnesses—that that system is undesirable, and that it would be advantageous to eliminate the political element in those appointments. Will you give us your views on that question?—I do not agree with the suggestion that it would be desirable to eliminate that element from the system altogether. I am far from saying and far from admitting that in the cases that I have personally had to do with the

R R

24 June 1915.]

The Right Hon. ROBERT MUNRO, K.C., M.P.

[Continued.]

appointments that have been made have been uniformly of a political character, because in many instances, which I can show to the Commission if they desire it, I have promoted from inside the Service instead of making an appointment from outside. My view shortly stated is, that it would be undesirable to lay down an extreme proposition either way. I mean it would be undesirable on the one hand to say that all appointments of Procurators Fiscal and other officials must be made from within the Service; on the other hand, I think it would be undesirable to lay down an extreme proposition at the other end, that these appointments should all be made from outside the Service on political considerations alone. My view would be that you should endeavour to get the best man that you can. If the best man is in the Service, appoint him; if the best man is not in the Service, do not let his political services prove a disqualification and prevent his appointment. My view would be that the middle course is the desirable one, and that one should have a free hand. I think it has worked fairly well, so far as my experience goes.

60,124. The evidence which we have had has pointed rather to this: In cases where a man is appointed from outside the Service, it has not been a question of his political service not being an obstacle to his appointment but the selection has been made on the ground of political services. There has been no allegation that the persons appointed were not competent to fulfil the duties of the post, but it has been stated that it was commonly recognised that the selection was made not necessarily upon the ground of absolute superiority of merit, but upon the ground of definite political services actually rendered?—There is no doubt that that happens, and has happened on many occasions, although I am not aware of any bad appointment which has been made, even assuming that that was the ground on which it was made.

60,125. I think the Commission would be interested to know in your own practice what proportion of appointments have been made by promotion in the Service and what proportion have been made primarily on political grounds?—With regard to Procurators Fiscal, for example, the appointments which have been made in my time have been made at Wick, Duns, Perth, Kirkcudbright, and Portree. The appointment made at Wick was what would be called a political appointment, because in that case I appointed my agent as Procurator Fiscal. That appointment I think can be abundantly justified; I considered him the best man for the post. It is difficult to promote a Procurator Fiscal to Wick—I speak of the place with all respect because I happen to represent it in Parliament—where you are promoting to a post which is not a lucrative one or the place a large one.

60,126. What is the salary of the Procurator Fiscal at Wick?—It is 400*l.* That, as I say, was the appointment of a man whom I considered the best man, and I do not quite know where I could have looked for another. The next one is Duns. That is a peculiar case, because there I combined the office of Procurator Fiscal of Jedburgh with that of Duns, and thereby effected a saving of 150*l.* a year to the public service.

60,127. (Mr. Philip Snowden.) What considerations induced you to make this selection for Duns?—In combining the post?

60,128. No, in making the personal selection?—The places are adjacent, and Jedburgh was the place where the Procurator Fiscal was. I understand before my time there had been an idea of combining on the occasion of a vacancy, and when the vacancy occurred combination was given effect to, and Mr. Hilson, who had been serving at Jedburgh with great acceptance for a number of years, seemed to me the best man for the combined post. That was inside the Service and not an outside appointment. The next vacancy was at Perth. To Perth I promoted the Procurator Fiscal who had hitherto been at Kirkcudbright. That was promotion, the salary being considerably more at Perth than at Kirkcudbright. To Kirkcudbright I promoted the Procurator Fiscal who had hitherto been at Portree. It was a sort of “general post,” if I may say so. These two, I need hardly say, were not political appointments.

60,129. (Chairman.) We may take it, I suppose, that in the case of promotions inside the Service the selection is made entirely apart from any political considerations?—I think so. All I am entitled to say is, that I have reason to believe that both these gentlemen were appointed at the time when Sheriffs appointed Procurators Fiscal and not the Lord Advocate, and that they were both of a different political complexion from my own. Then in Portree, which was vacated by the translation of Mr. McLean from Portree to Kirkcudbright, I appointed a local solicitor, Mr. Robertson, and there again that would be described, I suppose, as a political appointment. He was, in point of fact, a Liberal agent. I appointed him because I considered, on full inquiry made, that he was the best man for the post. I further considered that in a place like Portree, for reasons which I need not detain the Commission by stating, it was very desirable to have a local man who knew the people, who knew the language, and who knew local circumstances intimately and well from long residence in the place. Mr. Robertson seemed to me, apart from political considerations, to be the best man from that point of view, and, I think, it will be obvious to the Commission that it would have been difficult, if not impossible, to promote another Procurator Fiscal to Portree.

60,130. What is the salary at Portree?—It is small—350*l.* I am told. I think these exhaust the appointments of Procurators Fiscal which I have made since I came into office, and I think the Commission will, therefore, see that the appointments have been a blend, if I may say so. There have been political appointments made because I considered the men who were appointed the best for their posts, and there also have been these cases of promotion to which I have drawn attention. I may say that I entertain a very strong view in favour of the promotion of Procurators Fiscal and of other officials, when that is feasible. I quite agree that it is in the interest of the public service, when you get a man to go to a remote place either as Sheriff or Procurator Fiscal, if he has a reasonable certainty that he is not going to get a life sentence, and has a reasonable assurance that his work is being watched from head-quarters, and that if it is well done he will, in course of time, be translated to a higher post. As I say, you get a better man to accept the small post if he has that in his mind, and he is likely to do his work better and to avoid excesses of various kinds if he has the reasonable assurance of subsequent promotion.

60,131. (Sir George Paul.) Mr. Robertson was a solicitor in Portree?—He was.

60,132. And there are not many solicitors there?—Very few; I think three or four at the outside.

60,133. (Chairman.) Has your practice in that respect differed from that of your predecessors as regards the proportion of appointments made by promotion from within the Service?—I think I may say not. I think I am entitled to say that I am well aware that I entertain precisely the same view as Lord Strathclyde, as he now is, entertained with regard to the desirability of promotion, and I know he acted upon it. In fact I have the cases before me here in which he promoted on many occasions, but, of course, I do not know the circumstances so intimately as those in which I have been personally concerned.

60,134. Then you would favour applying that principle wherever a suitable man is available within the Service and where special local considerations do not require the appointment of a local man?—I think it is a principle to be applied frequently and I have applied it frequently. I may be quite wrong and the Commission may take quite a different view from mine, but I suggest that in the interests of the public service it is better that one should have a free hand in these matters than that one should be restricted to promote on all occasions rather than take in some one from outside.

60,135. Turning to the other branches of the legal service in Scotland, what is your opinion as to the political system of appointment as applied to the offices in Edinburgh—the offices of the Court of Session and other offices?—As regards promotion?

24 June 1915.]

The Right Hon. ROBERT MUNRO, K.C., M.P.

[Continued.]

60,136. We are told that such appointments as the Principal Extractor, the Principal Clerk of the Bill Chamber, and other appointments of that character in Edinburgh have been filled on the ground of political services, and also (though it is a somewhat different point) that depute clerks of Session have been very often appointed, not on the ground of political services, but on the ground of personal services rendered to the Lord Advocate by his clerk?—That is so.

60,137. We should like to have your opinion on those two points, whether the system which has been followed in the past is the best, or whether it is desirable to make any change in that system?—I think, so far as I know, that the system has worked perfectly well. I do not know of any better. I should apply the same principle to the Court of Session appointments as I have suggested might be applied to the appointments of Procurators Fiscal. But the question of my clerk has been raised. I have not had the opportunity of reading much of the evidence given before this Commission; I am sorry I have not had time to do so, but as that question has been raised and you have alluded to it, I may be permitted to clear that out of the way at the outset. I considered the situation very carefully and before making the appointment I came to the conclusion that I could justify it on the floor of the House of Commons or in any other place if challenged, and I am glad to have the opportunity of stating the circumstances. In the first place the Lord Advocate's clerk has always been singled out for preferential treatment in appointments of the sort that are now under discussion, and I notice that Lord Salvesen's Committee, as probably this Commission well know, on page 11 of their Report say: "On a vacancy occurring in any of the higher grades, we think it should be filled up preferably by the promotion of one of the existing staff—provided his competency has been certified by the Principal Clerks of Session; or, otherwise, by the appointment of the Lord Advocate's clerk, or a judge's clerk who has served as such for at least three years—these qualifications being deemed equivalent to any of those above specified for intrants generally." Lower down the page the Committee say, after dealing with the assistant clerks, "We recognise, however, that in some cases it might be desirable that the Lord Advocate's clerk, or the clerk of one of the judges should be appointed to such offices where the Lord Advocate saw fit to make such appointments, but we think that in no other case should appointments be made from the outside." Accordingly there is a distinct recommendation by that Departmental Committee of preferential treatment of the Lord Advocate's clerk. He is singled out and put into the same compartment with judge's clerks. In addition to that recommendation it is well known that numerous precedents—the Commission may deprecate them or not—for precisely the same act are to be found in our system. In addition to the precedents and the recommendation of the Committee, I had to consider that I was dealing with a man who had given me loyal service for nearly twenty-one years at the Bar, and who had during that time proved himself to be a most efficient and competent servant in the capacity in which he served me, and I had no doubt at all that he would exhibit the same competence and efficiency as a depute clerk. I have not been disappointed. I am assured on all hands that in competence and also, I may add, in popularity, Mr. Smart has given great satisfaction in the Parliament House, and that the appointment has been in the public interest as well. Some criticism has been made on the age at which the gentleman was appointed. I am bound to say that I do not quite see the point of that criticism unless it be to suggest—and I am repudiating the suggestion—that at 67 he was incompetent to do his work. That is not so. His competence at that age was in my humble judgment as great as it was 20 years before. He has picked up the work rapidly, and unless it is a criticism upon his competence at that age I am afraid I do not follow it. There is this advantage, if I may say so from the public point of view; he does not qualify for any pension, and he costs the State nothing when he retires, as he is bound to do at 70. I do not want to take up the time of the Commission on this matter unduly. I pass from that now, subject to this, that I am desirous of answering any questions that any particular member wishes to put to me regarding that appointment.

63,138. How long had the gentleman whom you appointed served you as Lord Advocate's clerk?—Since my appointment in 1913—a comparatively short time.

60,139. Was it very shortly after your appointment as Lord Advocate that he was appointed?—It was certainly not long. I cannot remember now—a matter of probably months, I think I am right in saying. Might I just add this with regard to the appointments by Lord Advocates of their clerks? They have been called, as I believe erroneously, political appointments. I want to point out to the Commission, if I may, what the position of a clerk in the Parliament House is. He is clerk to possibly half a dozen or a dozen men of varying shades of politics. Some one of them, who may be a Conservative or a Liberal or a Coalitionist in these days, may attain to a high position of office afterwards, but he does not know which of them; he does not trim his sails and adapt his politics so as to ensure a future appointment for himself. I have a case in mind which I think I might state without offence to anybody. I intended to state it in Lord Dundas's presence if he had been here. There was a gentleman who was a clerk in the Parliament House to Lord Dundas as a practising counsel and also to Mr. Ure, now Lord Strathclyde. I do not know what the politics of that particular clerk may have been, but he served, amongst others, these two gentlemen representing opposite shades of politics, one a Lord Advocate under a Liberal Government, the other a Solicitor-General under a Conservative Government. He is an assistant clerk of Session to-day. I do not know what his politics are. I merely mention that case in order to point out, if I may, that you can call it a personal appointment if you please, but please do not call it a political appointment, because, except in the sense that it is made by a person who happens to be a member of the administration of the day, it has got nothing to do with politics.

60,140. The suggestion with regard to these appointments is rather as regards their depressing effect on junior members already in the Service who have been looking forward to promotion to a post which is in that way filled from outside?—There I found myself on the Report of the Departmental Committee, which singles out two classes of people—Judges' Clerks and Lord Advocates' clerks—and puts them in the same category with members of the Service, with similar rights. That may be right or may be wrong, but it is the recommendation of Lord Salvesen's Committee, and it is in accordance of the practice for many years.

60,141. Apart from the question of precedents and apart from any particular cases, may I ask whether it is your opinion that, as a matter of principle, it is desirable that appointments of that kind should be made?—I should say what I have said before, if I may repeat it, that I should desire that the Lord Advocate of the day, whoever he might be, should have a free hand in the matter, and he may be left, I think, very safely to the judgment either of Parliament or of a Royal Commission or of the Parliament House. There are very shrewd critics to be found in the Parliament House, and if anything savouring of a job were perpetrated by any Lord Advocate of the day—I do not know of any, but if it were to be so and were so regarded, I do not think that the Parliament House would be backward in expressing its opinion, nor probably the House of Commons either.

60,142. (Sir Donald MacAlister.) Has the Lord Advocate a free hand with regard to his clerk? Has not the clerk a traditional claim to a vacancy?—I think I should be correct in saying that that is so—a traditional claim; it is held by tradition—it may be right or it may be wrong. I am conservative enough to believe in that tradition.

60,143. (Chairman.) Returning to the question of political appointments proper, which as you have pointed out are to be distinguished from appointments for personal services, you were about to give us your opinion on the question of principle, whether such appointments are desirable?—Of course, the Commission will probably regard me as a prejudiced witness in this matter, but I do think that the present system is better than anything that can be substituted for it. I have not heard of any effective substitute. I should be quite willing to consider it on its merits if I did hear of it. I think the present system, with its blend of promotion and political appointments, if you like, has worked exceedingly well so far as the Court of Session is concerned, in my experience.

24 June 1915.]

The Right Hon. ROBERT MUNRO, K.C., M.P.

[Continued.]

60,144. The object of an appointment, I suppose, is to get the best man for the Service generally, looking both at the particular post, and the effect on the holders of other posts. Looking at it first of all as affecting the particular post, would it be the case that selection on the ground of political services would invariably secure the best man for the post?—Not invariably—I should not say that. I am not contending for an invariable selection of appointees chosen on political grounds.

60,145. Then you would limit it to the case where a person who has political claims to a post is without doubt the best person for appointment to that post?—I think it is a question of circumstances in each particular case. There is such a very large variety of circumstances to be borne in mind, and unless one trusts the holder of my office to give fair consideration to those, I really do not know any other principle that can be laid down. To suggest that the posts are all to be filled by promotion or any such cast-iron system, would, I think, be disastrous to the public service.

60,146. Clearly if there was not a fit man available for promotion to a higher post it would, as you say, be disastrous to lay down that it should be filled by promotion; but assuming that an appointment has on occasion to be made from outside the Service, does not it hamper the choice of the best man if it is part of the recognised and traditional system that political services should have considerable weight in the selection?—I do not think so. With reference to the Court of Session we are speaking, I take it?

60,147. We are taking that as an instance?—My view very strongly is—again I say I may be regarded as a prejudiced witness—that the selection in the particular circumstances in which the vacancy arises should be entrusted to the discretion of the holder of my office, who may be trusted.

60,148. Take the case, for instance, of the Principal Extractor, who appeared before us as a witness yesterday; I believe he is an extremely efficient official?—That is so.

60,149. He told us candidly the political services for which he was appointed. Supposing there was a vacancy and it fell to you to select a successor, if your hands were perfectly free to select the best man for the appointment, you would have the whole field of the legal profession in Scotland to choose from. If your hands were to some extent tied by the tradition that such appointments were made for political services, you would be limited to a certain small and select number out of that profession who have rendered such services?—If I may say so, where we differ is that I do not regard my hands as in any way tied in order to make a political appointment. There is the one exception, perhaps, of the Lord Advocate's clerk which has been discussed, and that, as I say, is a personal appointment, and there is tradition there, which is of a somewhat insistent and compelling character, as has been pointed out to me. Apart from that, I do not regard my hands as tied in making any appointment by any tradition with regard to political services. I consider myself free to promote or appoint from outside as I think best.

60,150. Supposing the conspicuously best person had been a political agent to the other side, would the tradition permit you to appoint him to a legal post?—I should certainly consider the case on its merits.

60,151. Has such an appointment ever been made?—There is the appointment of Lord Kinross, which is a very striking example. He was appointed Lord President of the Court of Session by the Conservative party. Mr. Scott-Dickson has been appointed Lord Justice Clerk of Scotland, I will not say by the Liberal party but under a Coalition Government. I am far from saying that the appointment would not have been made otherwise.

60,152. In the case of Lord Kinross, what post was he holding when appointed Lord President?—He was Lord Advocate, according to my recollection.

60,153. (Mr. Philip Snowden.) Lord Advocate, did you say? That would be a political appointment, then?—I beg your pardon, he had been Lord Advocate. He had held that post, and was appointed by the Conservative Government to be Lord President. Of course he was not Lord Advocate at the time.

60,154. (Sir George Paul.) And he was a very eminent member of the Scottish Bar?—Oh yes, as you know, Sir George, one of the most eminent that the Scottish Bar has ever known. That is a somewhat striking example of the question that you put to me. I cannot recall the cases, but I think there are other cases.

60,155. (Mr. Philip Snowden.) Would that be patronage exercised by the Lord Advocate or by the Government?—The Lord President is not appointed by the Lord Advocate.

60,156. Quite so. Then it has not much bearing on the point we are discussing just now with regard to the Lord Advocate's patronage?—To that extent I agree it is irrelevant. It is not made by the same person, but under the same administration.

60,157. (Sir George Paul.) I think such appointments are made by the Prime Minister?—The Lord President is appointed by the Prime Minister, as is the Lord Justice Clerk, the Lord Advocate, and the Solicitor-General.

60,158. (Chairman.) Various suggestions have been made to the Commission in evidence as to alterations in the present method of appointment, the object of those alterations being the elimination of the political element in appointments. I gather, however from what you have told us that you do not consider it necessary or desirable to eliminate the political element?—I do not.

60,159. Except so far as you have spoken of the advantages of making promotions, where possible, in the Service?—Yes. The suggestion you are referring to is the appointment by a commission, I think. I have read about that.

60,160. Two suggestions have been made; one that the Lord Advocate should be assisted in selecting among possible candidates for legal posts by a non-political committee, of a similar character to the committee which has been suggested to us for assisting the Lord Chancellor in the case of English appointments. The other suggestion was that the patronage at present exercised by the Lord Advocate should be transferred to the Lord President of the Court of Session, in the expectation that, as he is a non-political officer, he would exercise the patronage entirely on non-political grounds. Will you give us your opinion on each of those two suggestions?—If I may say so, I am against both, and very strongly indeed. With regard to the suggestion of a committee, I think that is open to two objections. The first is that it is unnecessary, and the second is that it is undesirable. It is unnecessary, from this point of view at least, that in England, I understand, where the area is large, it may be difficult, or, indeed, impossible, for the Lord Chancellor to have personal knowledge with regard to the various people who have claims to advancement or who desire to be appointed; but that consideration really does not apply in Scotland, where the area is very much smaller, and where the Lord Advocate of the day is in constant touch, either directly or indirectly, with everybody who desires an appointment of whatever character. I think from that point of view it is quite unnecessary to have a committee. As regards it being undesirable, I am always against putting responsibility in commission, as it were. I think it is extremely difficult to work out. I think the pressure, even if you had a non-political committee to advise the Lord Advocate, would be increased to the *n*th degree by the mere fact of having a commission composed of a variety of individuals, all of whom would be written to and pressed to support the claims of candidates. I really do not quite know what are the powers which it is suggested that the committee should have. Either they are to have the power to override the discretion of the Lord Advocate or they are not. If they are to have power to override his discretion in making the appointment, I venture to say that that would be quite intolerable, and would reduce the office which I hold to the most undignified position conceivable. If, on the other hand, they are not to have power to override, it seems to me that they are superfluous, keeping in mind that they are not required in order to inform the Lord Advocate of the day regarding the qualifications of the various applicants for office.

24 June 1915.]

The Right Hon. ROBERT MUNRO, K.C., M.P.

[Continued.]

60,161. The suggestion was, that the final responsibility for appointment should rest with the Lord Advocate, but that the committee should report to him on the candidates, and, naturally, he would have to be prepared to justify his action if he selected otherwise than as recommended by the committee?—To justify it in Parliament?

60,162. In Parliament?—It seems to me that that might lead to very curious consequences. If Parliament were to be informed that the committee had taken one view and the Lord Advocate had taken another, and that it fell to him to justify his view in the absence of the committee who would be unable to explain theirs, I am bound to say that it does not seem to me, with great respect, a very useful suggestion. At any rate, I do not think it would serve any useful purpose in Scotland from the point of view, as I say, of informing the mind of the Lord Advocate of the day. As to getting advice with regard to, say, Sheriff Court appointments, he can get advice under existing circumstances; and he often does—and acts upon it—from the Sheriff and people who are intimately acquainted with the candidate if the Lord Advocate should happen not to be—and that last is a rare occurrence in my experience. As regards the Lord President appointing, I venture to suggest that it is not consistent with the dignity of his office that he should meddle in matters of that kind where, do what he might, his action would be subject to public criticism—newspaper criticism possibly—and then he would be without an opportunity of answering. He is not in Parliament, and he cannot write a letter to the newspapers consistently with the dignity of his office. I think it would introduce the head of the Court into an arena which is quite unfamiliar to any Lord President of whom one has known or heard. There is the further difficulty, as it seems to me—I think it has been mentioned, so I have been told—that the Lord President, especially after a considerable tenure of office as such, is to a large extent out of touch with candidates, and would require, if you like, a committee to tell him something about them; whereas the Lord Advocate, who is on the floor of Parliament House, and in constant touch with the Bar and the other officials up and down Scotland, is in a very much better position to know the candidates who apply for posts. Therefore, so far as I have been able to consider the matter at all since I heard of the two suggestions, I should respectfully oppose both.

60,163. Then your conclusion is that you would leave the method of appointments as it is at present, in the hands of the Lord Advocate and entirely at his discretion?—That is so; subject, as I think it is, to the wholesome check of public opinion, professional opinion in the Parliament House, opinion in the country outside in the districts affected, and opinion in Parliament. His conduct is open to challenge in any of those ways, and very effective challenge too; and I think the absence of any such challenge on any occasion that I can think of is one of the best tributes to the success of the present system.

60,164. Do you think it desirable that the system of promotion should be extended?—As I said, I am very strongly in favour of the system of promotion, but whether it should be extended further than I have extended it I am not prepared to say.

60,165. Would you apply it in the different departments of the Court of Session, for instance? Would you make appointments by promotion there when practicable?—I think so. I have made appointments to the Court of Session by promotion—clerkships, for example, and I have a note of them. I have had several clerks to appoint in the Court of Session. In August of last year I promoted Mr. Antonio, who was an ordinary Clerk of Session, to be Depute Clerk of Session. I promoted Mr. McLaren, who was an ordinary clerk in the Bill Chamber, to be an Assistant Clerk of Session. I appointed Mr. Carragher, who was a clerical assistant in the Bill Chamber, to be an ordinary clerk in the Bill Chamber. So the Commission may give me credit in the appointments with which I have been personally concerned for having given a very large tinge of the principle of promotion in the making of these appointments. These are the clerkships about which you have been asking, all of which instances are instances of promotion.

60,166. Whether your successor took the same view of the question of promotion would entirely depend upon his personal opinions?—That is so.

60,167. Can you suggest any means by which his personal opinions could be effectually influenced in the direction of following the same system that you have followed?—I am afraid I cannot. I should put it negatively, and say that probably one of the worst ways to influence it would be the advice of his predecessor. I think it would have to be left, if I may say so, to the discretion of a man who is thought of sufficiently sound judgment and responsibility to receive the appointment.

60,168. Is there considerable pressure in favour of appointments from outside when vacancies occur?—I do not disguise the fact that one receives, whenever there is a vacancy of the kind that we have been discussing, hundreds of letters in favour of this, that and the other candidate, both inside and outside.

60,169. It would entirely depend on the personal disposition of the Lord Advocate of the time what weight he allowed such pressure to exercise upon him?—Subject to the considerations I have mentioned, namely, that I think anyone holding the office which I have the honour to hold, must be trusted to a large extent to exercise a fair discretion in the public interest, and not to subordinate the public interest to his political views, whatever colour they may be.

60,170. There is one point as regards the Lord Advocate's clerk which we should be glad to have cleared up. One witness told us that the Lord Advocate's clerk, in the sense in which the term has been formerly used, had ceased to exist, and that you had appointed as a clerk a permanent officer from the Scottish Office. Is that accurate?—I think there is some confusion about that. I remember there was some rearrangement in Lord Strathclyde's time with regard to the Clerk in London, but that has no reference to the Clerk to the Lord Advocate, who serves in the Parliament House in Edinburgh. He is quite a different official. The arrangement has no reference to my clerk who was appointed and to whom reference has been made. In the sense of a clerk in Edinburgh, who serves the Lord Advocate, there is still a clerk who does serve the Lord Advocate in Edinburgh.

60,171. Does the statement I have referred to relate to a clerk who is paid out of the clerical allowance to the Lord Advocate?—I think that is the reference. I confess my recollection is not clear about what happened in Lord Strathclyde's time, but all I can say quite definitely is, that if the suggestion be that the Lord Advocate of the day has ceased to have a clerk in the Parliament House, Edinburgh, the suggestion is quite wrong.

60,172. There is still a clerk in the Parliament House at Edinburgh who probably shares the expectations of his predecessors as to his ultimate destination?—I do not know if he is of a sanguine disposition or not.

60,173. (Sir George Paul.) I think you explained at the beginning that you still have a clerk in Edinburgh who gets 100*l.* a year for official duties, and who also acts as your clerk in your private practice in the Parliament House?—He acts as my clerk as regards private business, but I am afraid nowadays the Lord Advocate has very little opportunity of indulging in that luxury; he attends to certain business for me in Edinburgh—correspondence, and so on. Then there is a clerk in London who receives the balance of 250*l.*, making up the 350*l.* which I am allowed for clerical assistance.

24 June 1915.]

The Right Hon. ROBERT MUNRO, K.C., M.P.

[Continued.]

60,174. (Mr. Philip Snowden.) And is the London clerk a permanent Civil servant? As I understand the evidence which has been referred to, the system adopted by Lord Strathclyde (Mr. Ure) was the system with regard to the appointment of private secretaries to Ministers generally, and that is, to select some clerk who was in the department already. Is not that the case?—I ought to know, but I am sorry to say I do not know whether this particular clerk, Mr. Herd, is pensionable or not. That is really the point of the question.

60,175. What were his antecedents? What was he doing at the time he was appointed clerk to you?—He was a clerk in the Crown Office in Edinburgh, and was appointed from the Crown Office to be clerk in the Lord Advocate's Department. It was an appointment from inside.

60,176. (Chairman.) And if he ceases to hold that appointment will he revert to the Crown Office?—I think I said that in all probability, though the tenure of office of such officials is precarious, he would carry on even if there was a change in the office of Lord Advocate.

60,177. There are certain points relating to the offices of the Court of Session on which we should be glad to have your opinion. In the first place, it has been suggested to the Commission that it is eminently desirable that the offices of the Court should be transferred to the Parliament House or placed in close proximity to the Parliament House?—As to that suggestion I entirely agree. I think it would be most convenient. I do not know whether any members of the Commission had the opportunity of seeing the antique system of carting papers from the Register House, and vice versa, to the Court of Session daily. It is really extraordinary that it has prevailed so long, I think.

60,178. It was suggested also that if that transfer was effected it would be possible to make some economy in the staff;—for instance, by combining the separate judge's offices into one office for the custody of processes and reception of papers, and so forth?—I should have thought there would be resulting economies.

60,179. It has also been suggested that the minor departments, such as the Extractor's Department, and the Bill Chamber, should be brought rather more directly than they are at present under the control of the Principal Clerk of Session, and that the practice of regarding them as a single whole for the purpose of promotion should be extended. Are you in favour of changes in that direction?—My recollection is that I read some evidence which was given on that point, and I rather agreed with it. I do not remember who the witness was who said it was questionable whether it was worth while, considering the small number of departments, to co-ordinate them; you could not have the Teinds Office and the Justiciary Office combined.

60,180. The suggestion really applies to the other offices with the exception of those two, and, as you say, the scope is not great?—The residuum is small, but I think the principle is excellent. Whether it is worth while may be a matter which is open to doubt.

60,181. Some questions have been raised as to the management of the Register House Departments and the functions of the different authorities concerned in their control. The authorities concerned are the Court of Session, the Deputy Clerk Register, the Secretary for Scotland, and the Treasury. There is some difference of opinion as to the exact degree in which the Deputy Clerk Register should be responsible for all the Register House Departments, and in particular for the Register of Sasines. The suggestions made by several witnesses come to this, I think: That the Deputy Clerk Register should have full responsibility for the departments subordinate to him, the Treasury being ultimately responsible for the regulation of staff and salaries, the Secretary for Scotland for discipline, and the Court of Session for all matters affecting the system of keeping the Register, and the method in which the legal part of the work is arranged. Have you any observations to make on those suggestions?—Honestly, I should prefer not to express an opinion on that subject. It is a very thorny one, I know. I have heard about it, but it is quite outside my department. I have nothing to do with the Register House really, and I do not know enough about the ins and outs of the controversy to offer any opinion of the slightest value to the Commission. I would willingly do so if I thought I could help the Commission, but I really fear I cannot.

60,182. Is the Lord Advocate responsible for any appointments in the Register House Departments?—No, I think I am correct in saying that I have nothing whatever to do with those appointments. The Deputy Clerk Register and the Keeper of the General Register of Sasines are both Crown appointments; I do not either nominate or recommend. Nor do I have anything to do with the patronage of the Keeper of the Register of Deeds, the Deputy Keeper of Records, the Curator of the Historical Department, or any other official; they are appointments which are all made by the Secretary for Scotland. Really, the Register House is beyond the ambit of my duty or official knowledge.

60,183. Turning to the Sheriff Clerks and their offices, you are acquainted with the recommendation of Lord Salvesen's Committee in favour of the reduction of the number of Sheriff Clerks, so that there should be only one Sheriff Clerk for each sheriffdom. In that way the number of deposes would be increased; and the Committee suggested that a certain number of deposes should constitute a special class of whole-time deposes. It may be inferred, although it is not definitely recommended by the Committee, that the intention was that the Sheriff Clerks and the special class of deposes should be made pensionable officers, at any rate so far as they are whole-time officers?—I entirely agree with those views. So far as the reduction in number is concerned it does not seem to me a very vital affair. It is largely a question of nomenclature; you may call a man who is left a Sheriff Clerk or a Sheriff Clerk Depute; but you have to have an official there, although you may have a cheaper one.

60,184. Is not there this difference of organisation: the staff in all the offices under the Sheriff Clerk is appointed by the Sheriff Clerk, and therefore, if you diminished the number of Sheriff Clerks from 33 to 15, you would reduce the number of separate staffs to which appointment is made by a separate person?—That is so.

60,185. That touches on the further question—the position of the staff in the offices of the Sheriff Clerks. They are at present appointed by the Sheriff Clerks, and are not pensionable. Two claims have been made, one that the staff or, at any rate, part of them, should be made pensionable; the other, that promotion by transfer from one place to another should be more frequent than it is at present?—With regard to the latter suggestion, I think it is a very good one, subject to the practical difficulty that these officers are so indifferently remunerated that the cost of removal would be a very serious consideration if it happened to be a long journey. I would venture to suggest that if any such recommendation were contemplated it might be possible, just as in the case of the removal of Sheriffs, that there might be some grant from the Treasury to defray the cost of removal. When Sheriffs are transferred from one place to another the Treasury make an allowance of something about 50*l.* where a transfer does not involve, if I remember rightly, an increase of more than 100*l.* of salary to the man who has been transferred. That seems to me a very useful and humane arrangement which might with advantage be applied to the transfer of a humbler official like a Sheriff Clerk Depute, to whose advantage it might be to go, but whose advantage might be more or less neutralised by the cost incidental to going.

60,186. (Sir George Paul.) I think that is also the practice in the case of banks in Scotland?—I am told the same principle applies to banks.

60,187. (Chairman.) If a system of that kind is to work satisfactorily and freely it would appear to require some central body, or authority of some kind, who would be able to take a general view of all the separate staffs; and the suggestion was made that a small committee of Sheriff Clerks might be appointed to deal with the question of transfer from one place to another. Does that appear to you to be a practical

24 June 1915.]

The Right Hon. ROBERT MUNRO, K.C., M.P.

[Continued.]

suggestion?—I do not dissent. I am afraid I have not considered the point, and have not had an opportunity of reading much of the evidence; but prima facie that sounds a reasonable proposal.

60,188. There would clearly be some difficulty in making a transfer unless there was something in the nature of a clearing-house at a central point where applications and vacancies could be brought together?—Yes.

60,189. What is your opinion as to the claim to make a portion, at any rate, of the staff pensionable?—I am in entire accord with that proposal. I assume, of course, a whole-time service.

60,190. You would only apply it in any case to whole-timers?—I think so; but I am bound to say that I regard the claims of the Sheriff Clerks Depute to some amelioration of treatment as one of the most clamant of the various reforms which are awaiting fulfilment.

60,191. You think that their position at present does not correspond to the functions that they perform?—I do indeed. I have had the opportunity, I may say, of meeting deputations from the Sheriff Clerks Depute of Scotland, who presented their case most moderately and temperately, and it is regrettable, although it may be inevitable, that many of the valuable recommendations made so far back as 1911 have not yet been carried out.

60,192. Have you any knowledge whether there is difficulty in recruiting the staff of the Sheriff Clerks' offices at present?—I am afraid I have not. I cannot speak from personal knowledge of that matter.

60,193. A similar question has been raised in the case of the Procurators Fiscal—whether it would be practicable and advantageous to diminish the number of districts and so to increase the number of whole-time posts. That, of course, has some connection with the question of the restrictions on private practice?—I was not aware of the suggestion to restrict the number, but as regards private practice the invariable system now is to appoint Procurators Fiscal subject to the restriction that they shall devote their whole time to the duties of their office.

60,194. Even in the smaller places?—I am aware of no recent appointment where that condition has not been inserted. I am quite aware that there are Procurators Fiscal in a number of small towns, appointed some considerable time ago, who are entitled to practise privately. There are 15 of such posts, I think, in Scotland.

60,195. (Mr. Philip Snowden.) Did Mr. Robertson, of Portree, give up his private practice as a solicitor when he was appointed Procurator Fiscal? That is one of your recent appointments?—Yes. I do not think the Treasury, from my experience of them, would look at any such appointment nowadays apart from such a restriction; at least I have not asked them to.

60,196. (Chairman.) Do you consider it desirable from the point of view of the work of the Procurator Fiscal that he should be restricted from private practice?—I do. There may be very exceptional cases in outlying spots where some relaxation of that rule, both in respect of the small remuneration of the Procurator Fiscal, as such, and the small amount of work which he has to do, might be made; but speaking of the general case I am entirely in favour of whole-time service.

60,197. Some witnesses have expressed a strong opinion that, in cases where there is not enough work to occupy a man's time and energies, the restriction on private practice has serious drawbacks, on the ground that a man who is for a large part of his time in enforced idleness is apt to degenerate. Do you attach weight to that?—No such case has come under my personal observation. As stated, it is quite conceivable, but I do not know of any case in practice where it has happened.

60,198. You do not consider that that weighs against the advantage of the restriction?—Not in the general case. As I say, there are one or two particular places, like Lochmaddy, which is remote, where a man, in addition to his office as Procurator Fiscal, was allowed one or two public appointments, both in respect of the small quantity of work and small remuneration of his office as Procurator Fiscal.

60,199. Do you see any objection to the Procurator Fiscal holding offices of that kind in addition to his own office?—In the general case I think it inadvisable. I think in the general case it is better that the Procurator Fiscal should be clear of all influence which may arise from private practice with its large ramifications, and even from holding certain appointments which may result in complications in the criminal courts.

60,200. (Miss Haldane.) Would that apply to prosecutions for School Boards and Parish Councils, and so on?—There are such prosecutions, I think, instituted and carried out by the Procurator Fiscal.

60,201. Would you have any objection to their having that work concentrated in their office?—No, I think I see no objection to that.

60,202. Especially where the clerks to the School Board, say, or the clerks to the Parish Council were not law agents it might be a desirable thing?—For them to hold office as clerks?

60,203. To undertake all the public prosecutions for those public bodies?—I may say that that would be quite in line with their present duties.

60,204. It would correspond really to the concentration you were speaking of in the Crown Agent's office?—Precisely.

60,205. (Chairman.) At present none of the Procurators Fiscal are pensionable?—I am sorry to say the office is not pensionable; I wish it were.

60,206. Do you think it desirable that all Procurators Fiscal who give their whole time to their duties should be made pensionable?—I am very strongly of that opinion.

60,207. Do you apply that observation to their staff also—to the deputes and other staff?—With regard to the rest of the staff there is a difficulty. Take the deputes, for example, they are not whole-time servants, and it might be a little difficult to apply pension rights in such a case.

60,208. There is no opportunity of making whole-time deputes?—No, the deputes are really appointed by the Procurator Fiscal, subject to my consent, under the Act of 1907, which transferred the patronage of Procurators Fiscal from the Sheriffs to the Lord Advocate. That Act provides that, with the assent of the Advocate of the day, the Procurator Fiscal may appoint one or more deputes, and in point of fact he does so; but always with the full knowledge and assent of the holder of my office. I may say that I have recently made it a condition that the depute, as a condition of receiving his appointment as depute, shall relinquish the right to practise in criminal matters in the Court where he may be called upon to prosecute as depute of the Procurator Fiscal.

60,209. But he retains his right to practise in other matters?—Yes, because it is a comparatively small amount that he receives; it varies in respect of his services, which are only requisitioned when the Procurator Fiscal cannot take the case himself.

60,210. (Sir Donald MacAlister.) His appointment is ad hoc to a particular case?—That is so, on a particular day to meet an emergency. I believe there are certain exceptions to that in the larger cities.*

60,211. (Chairman.) At present, in the case of a good many of the legal appointments, no age has been fixed for retirement. The suggestion has been made that either the ordinary Civil Service limit of age should apply to all legal departments, or that a special age should be fixed?—I am very strongly of opinion that an age should be fixed, whether 65 or 70. I have no very strong view. I should incline rather to 70 in the ordinary case, but that there should be an age limit I think is urgently required.

60,212. In the case of the offices of the Court, for instance, is there any reason why the limit should be higher than in other parts of the Civil Service?—I do not know that I can specify any reason why it should.

* This answer is not strictly accurate. The appointment covers all cases taken by the depute. But he is only called upon, in virtue of that appointment, to act in particular cases where the Procurator Fiscal cannot himself attend.—R. M.

24 June 1915.]

The Right Hon. ROBERT MUNRO, K.C., M.P.

[Continued.]

60,213. The limit in the Civil Service is 65, with power of possible extension to 70?—Yes, I am aware of that.

60,214. In the case of recent Crown appointments we have been told that the warrant of appointment has in most cases fixed the age of retirement as 70, but that appears not to be invariable, and in some cases no age limit has been fixed?—Yes. That is a very difficult question for me to answer. It is a very wide question of public policy affecting the whole Civil Service. I am unable to point off-hand to any distinctions in the offices I have been discussing from those to which the age limit of 65 does apply. On the other hand I think there are many officials whom I know of in Scotland whom it would not be in the public interest to lose at 65; but that observation probably applies to other places in Scotland. It is a question of relative advantage.

60,215. We have heard that a large number of appointments, especially in the Edinburgh offices, are direct Crown appointments, including some of a comparatively modest character, such as the Macers of the Court. Is there any object in retaining that system of direct Crown appointment for the minor appointments?—None that I can see.

60,216. There is no reason why they should not be appointed by the Secretary for Scotland?—I think it would remove an anomaly if that result were achieved.

60,217. (Mr. Philip Snowden.) Was I correct in assuming that the Advocates Depute are appointed on the advent of a new Lord Advocate, and that their appointment ceases when he leaves office?—Yes, technically that is so, because they receive a written appointment, and they receive that appointment under the hand of the Lord Advocate.

60,218. They are men who are in private practice as well as devoting part of their time to the duties of depute?—That is so.

60,219. Are they paid by fees, by commission, or by fixed salary?—Four deputies are paid by a fixed salary of 700*l.* a year. The extra depute is paid about 300*l.* odd.

60,220. In addition to those four Advocates Depute, are there any other appointments of a similar character depending on the tenure of office of the Lord Advocate?—The extra Advocate Depute, who is really a fifth depute, does his work in the Glasgow circuits exclusively; and then there is the Sheriff Court Depute, whom I mentioned as conducting prosecutions of an important character in the Sheriff Court, where it is thought desirable—I will not say to supersede the Procurator Fiscal, but where it is thought he should have skilled assistance.

60,221. Roughly speaking, how many officers will there be in that class whose tenure of office depends upon the length of tenure of office of the Lord Advocate?—I think I have mentioned them all. There is the Crown Agent also, and the legal secretary.

60,222. Are these Advocates Depute, who have held office during the time of a particular Lord Advocate, re-appointed by his successor?—I should think so. I cannot just at the moment remember what happens in such a case as you figure. I should think there is very little doubt about it, assuming that the successor were under the same administration.

60,223. But they are looked upon as part of political spoils that can be appropriated by a change of Party Government as the result of political services?—I am not sure that I should phrase it in the same way, but I do not know that we differ very much with regard to the substance of your question.

60,224. It is something on the American system of the spoils to the Party victors. Now about your clerks, of whom we have heard so much this morning and at other times. You had two clerks, I understood you to say, one who received a salary of 250*l.*, and one of 100*l.* The clerk who was last appointed, who was in receipt of 100*l.* a year, was fixed in Edinburgh?—Yes.

60,225. Did he for that salary of 100*l.* a year devote all his time to your service?—The system is this: A man who is appointed to my position has a clerk before he is appointed to my position. The duties of a clerk to a counsel at the Bar who has not an official position, are purely with relation to his private practice. Mr. Smart looked after me in that capacity for over 20 years. Then, when I became Lord Advocate, I appointed him, as is always done, as clerk as Lord Advocate. That entails 100*l.* a year, in addition to anything which he might draw in respect of any private practice which I might continue to have. That is the position. Perhaps I should say to the Commission—you probably know it already—that these clerks are paid, not by the man to whom they are attached, so far as private practice is concerned, but by percentage on his fees; it is the privilege of the client to pay the clerk as well as the counsel whom he employs.

60,226. But I understood you to say that your private practice now, as Lord Advocate, was a negligible quantity?—It has vanished.

60,227. Then there would be a corresponding reduction in the remuneration of your clerk?—That is quite true.

60,228. I do not want to press the question unless you feel free to answer it, but would his total remuneration during the time he was acting as your clerk at 100*l.* a year be much in excess of that 100*l.* a year?—So far as I am concerned from private practice?

60,229. Yes?—I have no hesitation at all in answering the question. It would not be much in excess of 100*l.* a year, for the simple reason that nowadays, differing from past days, the holder of my office is bound really to spend nearly all his time in London when the Courts are sitting in Edinburgh. It did not use to be so, and one was entitled to practise at the Bar. But now—and I have no hesitation in saying it—any person who holds my office has really to abandon private practice.

60,230. Then your acceptance of the office of Lord Advocate would mean a serious reduction in the income of your clerk?—I have not worked it out.

60,231. Surely if he received fees from your income when he acted as your clerk in private practice, and these fees ceased when you became Lord Advocate, there must be some reduction in his income?—Oh, yes; I think that is perfectly obvious; but what I have in my mind is this: my experience has not been quite a normal one as a practising counsel at the Scotch Bar since I came into Parliament in 1910.

60,232. So that his reduction in fees began before you were appointed Lord Advocate?—Yes, four years before.

60,233. I do not want to cast any reflection upon the capacity of your late clerk, because I do not know the man at all; but it might strike one that a man who was 67 years of age, and who was in receipt of 100*l.* a year, had not been a very great success at the work in which he had been engaged the greater part of his life?—I think that is hardly a fair way of putting it, if I may suggest it. In the first place, he was not only in receipt of 100*l.* a year up to the time when abnormal circumstances resulted in a reduction in my practice; and in addition to that fact he had a great deal more than 100*l.* a year. You must remember that he was clerk to a number of other counsel also, from whom he drew a substantial income.

60,234. Did he continue to be clerk to those during the time he was acting as private clerk to the Lord Advocate?—Yes. These clerks have a dozen different men.

60,235. Then that rather answers a question I intended to put to you about the fate of the clerk of your predecessor. What became of him when you were appointed Lord Advocate and you found your own clerk to supersede him?—That is Mr. Ford, who is being referred to.

60,236. I do not know the name. Did he get the advantage of the traditional expectation of being appointed to a permanent Civil Service post?—At present he holds the office of Keeper of the Rolls. The clerk to a newly-appointed judge usually goes on the Bench with him, as we phrase it, in some capacity. Mr. Ford, who was clerk to Lord Strathclyde, is Keeper of the Rolls of the Court of Session.

60,237. I understood you to say, when the Chairman was putting questions to you about political influence

24 June 1915.]

The Right Hon. ROBERT MUNRO, K.C., M.P.

[Continued.]

in the making of appointments in the Scottish Legal Departments, that although you would not ignore political services, you considered it to be your duty to place the interests of the State paramount?—I think that is obviously the duty of the holder of my office.

60,238. Then really it could only be, one would think, in exceptional cases where you find a combination of the best man from the point of view of qualifications for the post to be filled and past political services, that your policy would be carried out, and that political service would count at all?—I agree. I think that is stating it quite fairly.

60,239. But still you do not deny that political services have, I do not say a determining influence, but, at any rate, an influence in the case of most of the legal appointments that have been made in Scotland?—I would not like to say that; I do not know. They may have in certain circumstances, but it would be quite impossible for me to give an affirmative answer to that question without having personal knowledge of the appointments to which you refer.

60,240. You referred to the hundreds of letters which you received in respect of any appointment about to be made?—Yes.

60,241. Are most of those letters urging the political services of the person on whose behalf they are written?—Many of them do.

60,242. That seems then to indicate that there is a very widespread impression that services rendered to a political party are likely, if not to result in some public appointment, at any rate to be considered in making a public appointment?—That may quite well be. I have heard it put in this way—and perhaps you have, too—that politicians on neither side would not get the services of such good agents and representatives in and about their constituencies as they do were it not that these agents and representatives expect that their claims will be considered if a suitable opportunity for promotion or appointment occurs. I have heard it put in that way often.

60,243. Might not the retort be made to that, that the State would be likely to get better public servants if there were not the practice of appointing men to those positions because of their party political services?—I do not agree with that. I think the State may get a better public servant from outside, although he is a politician, than by promoting a public servant who is inside.

60,244. But not because he has been a politician?—No, in spite of his being a politician.

60,245. Referring to the instance that you gave of the appointment of a man who happened to be of the opposite political party to the party then in power, that did not depend upon the patronage of the Lord Advocate. But can you call to mind a single instance where the Lord Advocate has exercised his patronage in favour of a man who had a reputation for services to the opposite political party?—It is difficult. I can only speak of my own experience with any value, and I would not like to mention names. In some of the appointments to which I have referred, and which I have made, it may be accurate to predicate certain services by the man whom I appointed to the opposite political party. I would not like to mention names, because I do not know of them sufficiently intimately; but I will say, with regard to certain appointments that I have made and to which I have referred, that to the best of my judgment the persons whom I appointed had been, when in politics, of the opposite view from mine.

60,246. Would you be prepared to subscribe to this opinion, that during the tenure of office of, say, a Liberal Government, the most eligible man for a public appointment is invariably Liberal, and that during the tenure of office of a Conservative Government the most efficient man invariably belongs to the party which is in power?—No, I would not subscribe to that. I think it is putting it too widely. I do not agree with “invariably.”

60,247. But is not that the practice?—Not my practice.

60,248. I asked you if you could furnish a single case where a man had been appointed because he was the most suitable man for the post and he happened to be of a different political party?—I have given examples of Procurators Fiscal whom I promoted, who were appointed.

60,249. That is not a case of appointment but of promotion?—It is an appointment from inside. Does your question relate to appointments from outside?

60,250. Yes, from outside. Is it a condition that, say, a Sheriff or a Procurator Fiscal shall not take part in politics after his appointment?—It is not made an express condition so far as I know, but in both cases that tradition is honourably observed—or in most cases it is.

60,251. Referring to two of the appointments which you made—the one to Wick and the other to Portree—the appointment you made at Wick was of your former election agent. He does not continue to hold that post now, I suppose?—Certainly not.

60,252. In the case of Portree, does the Procurator Fiscal take no part in politics?—Certainly not. That is understood; the principle is implicitly observed by Procurators Fiscal up and down Scotland.

60,253. And by the Sheriffs also, or the Sheriffs Substitute?—I would not like to offer any observations on Sheriffs Substitute or Sheriffs.

60,254. They come within your purview?—I recommend, certainly. I will put it in this way. It is an understood thing in all these offices that when a man is appointed to his office, be it Sheriff or Procurator Fiscal, or any other office of the same kind, he ceases to take an active part in politics.

60,255. (Sir George Paul.) I think it is the case that if a Sheriff wishes to stand for Parliament he resigns his office as Sheriff?—Yes, that has happened on several occasions.

60,256. (Mr. Philip Snowden.) Should I correctly represent your views on the question of appointments and patronage if I were to say that you believe that the public service can be best served by retaining the patronage in the hands of the Lord Advocate without any control except the criticism of public opinion of the profession and of Parliament?—I think that fairly represents my view.

60,257. You are aware, of course, that most of the appointments in the Civil Service are filled by means of a system of open competition?—Yes.

60,258. And you are aware, too, that formerly the system of personal patronage was universal in making appointments to the Civil Service?—I have heard it so stated.

60,259. You are aware, I suppose, also, of the reasons which brought about the change?—I cannot profess any intimate acquaintanceship with them.

60,260. That was because of the abuses to which the system of unlimited patronage was liable?—I will take that from you. I will assume it; I do not know it.

60,261. Is there any reason why the abuses which made the system so notoriously objectionable should be entirely absent from patronage when it is exercised in regard to legal appointments?—I do not know about the reason of it.

60,262. Can you draw any distinction?—Probably one reason is that so far as the holder of my office is concerned, he is a man, as a rule, whose fairness and discretion can be trusted, and who may be trusted not to indulge in the abuses to which you have referred. I know of none which have occurred in the history of my office.

60,263. You would imagine that that would be precisely the answer given by those who enjoyed the patronage in the old days?—Yes, but the difference seems to me to be that there were abuses, and we have not been pointed to any in the case of the holders of my office. That seems a substantial difference.

60,264. Now I want to go back again to the case of your clerk who was appointed to this post at 67 years of age. In reply to the Chairman you expressed the view that you considered it to be desirable that a public servant should retire at 65 or 70 years of age?—65 or 70, yes. I did not commit myself to 65 or 70.

60,265. If it be desirable that a person should retire at 65, is it a desirable thing that he should first be appointed to a post in the public service at 67?—No, I think that follows. I think the question, if I may say so, answers itself; but then I did not commit myself to the age of 65, and I said that in many cases of which I was aware, great hardship resulted in Scotland, and, I doubted not elsewhere, from compelling resignations at 65; although I quite recognise that as a relative matter, it may be necessary to impose a restriction which works hardly in particular cases.

24 June 1915.]

The Right Hon. ROBERT MUNRO, K.C., M.P.

[Continued.]

60,266. Was it a condition of his appointment that he should retire at 70?—Yes.

60,267. And can that condition be enforced?—I cannot remember the terms. I imagine it can. I do not think there will be any necessity to endeavour to do so, but it was quite an understood thing.

60,268. But you are not quite sure that it could be enforced?—I presume it can—probably by petition to the Court. I am not aware that in any case it has been necessary to resort to that expedient. I do not doubt that it can be enforced.

60,269. But supposing when a man gets to 70 years of age he does not voluntarily resign, what action will have to be taken to compel him to do so?—You mean supposing there was in his commission a condition that he should resign at 70? I do not know of a case which has occurred.

60,270. We heard yesterday of the case of a man who was at any rate considerably above 70 years of age, and it had been understood that he was to retire at 70 years of age. He is now 75?—That is Mr. Whyte.

60,271. No steps appear to have been taken to enforce that?—Of course, that is rather outside my sphere, but I believe that has been treated as a very special case, a case where Mr. Whyte had given very long and efficient public service, and is still an efficient public servant. I very much doubt whether there is anything in the terms of Mr. Whyte's appointment to the effect that he should retire at 70; but I do not know. In answer to your question as you have put it, I think there is no doubt that if in the commission of a public servant it were stipulated that he should retire at 70 and he did not, a civil action could be brought in the courts to bring about his retirement.

60,272. (Sir George Paul.) Mr. Whyte was appointed by the Principal Extractor, and he does not hold his appointment except from the Principal Extractor, and that, I think, was his answer?—I do not suppose there is anything about the age of 70 in his appointment. It is quite beyond my sphere.

60,273. (Mr. Philip Snowden.) I am not putting your view unfairly when I say that you have admitted that there is a considerable amount of political pressure brought to bear on the Lord Advocate in the making of these appointments?—I think that is quite accurate.

60,274. Do you think it would be desirable, therefore, in the interest of the Lord Advocate that he should be relieved in some way from this political pressure?—I do not think so. It does not incommode me in the least.

60,275. You enjoy the pressure?—I do not enjoy it, but it does not distress me. It is very interesting.

60,276. Then we may take it, from all you have said to us this morning, that apart from a few suggestions you have made, one being with regard to pensions, and another with regard to the age of retirement, you consider with regard to the present system—I will not say that it is incapable of improvement, but at any rate it is undesirable that it should be improved or changed in any respect?—I put it in this way: that there is no better substitute of which I have heard, or which has come under my personal notice. I have not had the advantage of reading all the evidence before this Commission, or I might have to alter that reply. I know of no better substitute for the present system, which, in my judgment and experience has worked, if I may say so, well.

60,277. I, of course, would be far from casting the slightest reflection upon any holder of the position of Lord Advocate, but still, in order to safeguard the public from the possibility of a Lord Advocate abusing his position, you do not think it desirable that the powers of his patronage should be limited in any way?—I do not, and for the best of reasons, that in the long line of holders of my office I do not know of any such instance.

60,278. (Mr. Graham Wallas.) You have large general responsibility for the administration and discipline of the Scottish Legal Departments?—Certainly so far as the criminal administration is concerned I have full control.

60,279. But with regard to the administration, for instance, of the Court of Session, your power varies curiously from section to section?—With regard to the Court of Session, yes; I do not know that I have very great disciplinary power there, if any.

60,280. Would you think it desirable that your administrative responsibility should be cleared up and enlarged and that you should be put more in the position of a minister who is responsible for all disciplinary powers in the department over which he presides?—I do not quite follow the question. There is the Court of Session (the Civil Department), the Court of Justiciary (the Criminal Department), and departments outside.

60,281. Take for a moment the Edinburgh departments—the civil courts of the Court of Session; each man who has appeared before us who is at the head of a special section has claimed that he has at present a large measure of responsibility, and, I think it is clear, of independence, and that that degree of independence varies in the various sections of the Court of Session?—Yes.

60,282. Do not you think it might be a good deal simplified and that the holder of your office might be put more in the position of a Minister who is generally responsible for the conduct and discipline of his office?—I should doubt very much, if you add the responsibility for the administration of the Court of Session to the duties of the Lord Advocate, whether it would be a useful innovation, because it would be an innovation. At present I have no responsibility for civil administration in Scotland at all; my duties are confined to the criminal administration.

60,283. In the civil administration you have the patronage, but nothing else?—The patronage, but no disciplinary powers whatever, so far as I know.

60,284. You have no disciplinary control over the people you appoint?—I think not.

60,285. (Sir George Paul.) I think, under the Act of 1889, the general supervision is vested in the Principal Clerk of Session, subject to the ruling of the Lord President?—I am obliged. That is so. So far as the clerks in the Court of Session are concerned, they are all under Mr. Adam.

60,286. (Mr. Graham Wallas.) Do not you think the power of appointment and discipline should normally in a department be in the same hands?—Of course, really, I have not the power of appointment in many of these cases. I merely recommend.

60,287. But your recommendation is by custom followed?—I am not aware that it has ever been disregarded.

60,288. You said it was desirable that the Crown Agent should give his whole time in future to the office?—On the assumption that the scope of his duties were enlarged.

60,289. The scope of his duties enlarged so as to cover all the normal legal work of most of the Edinburgh departments?—Of the London Government Departments I meant to suggest.

60,290. Do you think a corresponding change might be made in the position of the Procurator Fiscal—that he should take the ordinary prosecuting work under the District Committee, the Parish Council, or the School Board, in their administration?—I think that would require very serious consideration, because many of the Procurators Fiscal at the present time have their full time and attention occupied with their official duties of a criminal character. I think it would overload many Procurators Fiscal whom I know of if you were to put these duties upon them, and would involve a corresponding increase of salary, I think.

60,291. But from the point of view of the local authorities, if they could get their work of prosecuting under the Education Acts, the Public Health Acts, and so on, done by one official, it would amount to a considerable saving?—I suppose it might.

24 June 1915.]

The Right Hon. ROBERT MUNRO, K.C., M.P.

[Continued.]

60,292. And in many cases it would transform the work of a Procurator Fiscal, which is insufficient to take up the full time of an official, into a day's work which would be sufficient?—There are certainly cases in which the Procurators Fiscal are not overworked; but there are many in which they are.

60,293. Where they are not overworked that change might be desirable, you think?—It might work well. It would require very careful consideration and possible readjustment of salary.

60,294. You told us that in appointing Procurators Fiscal from outside you consider each case on its merits?—Yes, each case according to its own circumstances.

60,295. You have made two appointments of Procurators Fiscal from outside otherwise than by promotion, and they both have been paid political agents?—They have.

60,296. One of them being the political agent whom you, as a candidate, used to pay?—That is so. I so stated.

60,297. You have also made certain appointments, or recommended certain appointments from outside, of Sheriff Clerks?—Yes.

60,298. Could you tell us the character of the appointments, not by promotion but from outside—whether they have had the same political character?—Only two outside appointments. We discussed my own clerk, and you know all about that.

60,299. He was appointed in the Sessions House?—In the Court of Session, yes.

60,300. I am referring now to the Sheriff Clerks?—I have appointed two; the one was in Midlothian, where I promoted the Sheriff Clerk Depute.

60,301. I want to exclude that from my question?—I am going to give the only two appointments I made, in order to prove my point, if I may be allowed. The one was Mr. Harrison, the Sheriff Clerk Depute, whom I promoted, and the other was Mr. Ritchie, in Perth, who was a solicitor, and who was also, I believe, a Liberal agent.

60,302. Then your appointments of Sheriff Clerks have consisted of one appointment by promotion and one appointment of a Liberal agent from outside?—Yes.

60,303. So all three appointments you have made from outside have been of paid Liberal agents?—That is so.

60,304. You told us that no candidate in Scotland could get so good a political agent so cheaply if it were not that this expectation existed?—I do not recognise my statement in that disguise. I think what I did say, if I may remind you, was, that I have heard it said by candidates that they could not get such good men to act for them were it not that these men look forward to a time when they might have their claims considered. May I add that in the case of Mr. Ritchie in Perth I have been assured from all quarters on both sides of politics that a more excellent appointment could not be made. I do not say that from my point of view, but from the point of view of Mr. Ritchie. I think it is fair to say it.

60,305. You have told us that this goes on under the wholesome check of professional opinion?—That is one check.

60,306. And that there has hitherto been a complete absence of any professional challenge on the point?—I have had none.

60,307. I want to read to you two or three sentences from what seems to me to constitute responsible professional opinion upon the matter. The first is Mr. James H. Jamieson, who told us he was appointed to give evidence on behalf of the Society of Writers to the Signet. He said, when asked about political appointments, "I think that the public do not get the 'best service'—and when asked 'The system that you deprecate is the political element, which you tell 'us exists too much?'" he answered, "Yes." The next is Dr. David Murray, who gave evidence on behalf of the Faculty of Procurators, and he stated: "The view 'that because a man has been a political agent of some 'important person he should therefore be appointed 'to an office in the Register House, is entirely out of "date, and I do not think that anyone would be found 'to uphold it now.' He further said: "I think the "legal profession in Scotland is all against it." Then comes Mr. Boyd Anderson, who gave evidence on behalf of the Incorporated Society of Law Agents in Scotland, and he told us that the general opinion of the profession was against political appointments to administrative posts. Then comes Mr. Walter James Lewis, who stated that he gave evidence on behalf of the Society of Solicitors in the Supreme Courts in Scotland, and he said, when asked about political appointments, that the system should be absolutely done away with as far as possible, and for that purpose he proposed a standing committee of appointment. Lord Salvesen told us: "I do not like political appointments "if you can substitute something better than the system that we have at present." Lord Salvesen's statement is subject to "if you can substitute something better", but the other statements are absolute. They do represent a not unimportant body of professional opinion against the system which now exists?—I have the greatest respect for the gentlemen whom you have referred to; I know them all, I think; but I am bound to say that I think their evidence would have been much more helpful and valuable if they had given examples of any appointments which they deprecate. It might be invidious, but I think it is quite necessary; general sweeping statements of that sort neither assist a Commission nor a Lord Advocate.

60,308. You appointed Mr. Andrew Harrison by the exceptional course of promotion to be Sheriff Clerk of Midlothian?—I deprecate the use of the word "exceptional."

60,309. And you did so because you trusted his judgment?—I did so because I thought he was a very good man for the post.

60,310. When he was asked about the appointment of political agents, he said, as a rule, the person appointed is not a good lawyer or a good politician, and added "they are just adventurers." Does that opinion weigh with you at all?—I do not agree with it.

60,311. Would you agree that in considering the effect of a system of this kind one has to consider its influence on the whole political system of the country, and not merely on the efficiency of the particular person appointed?—If by that question you mean that the public interest ought to be paramount, I should not dissent.

60,312. But the public interest includes the reaction of the system upon the general life of the country, does it not?—I suppose so.

60,313. And you would agree that, for instance, in the Colonies in some cases, and in America, the reaction upon the general political life of the country of a spoils system has been bad?—I should be agreeing with a proposition of which I have really no intimate knowledge if I said so.

60,314. Would you say, at any rate, that if the system tended to create what Mr. Harrison called political adventurers, it would be a bad system, putting aside any other question?—I think any system which tends to create political adventurers is a bad system.

60,315. Referring for a moment to the appointments made in discharge of personal obligations rather than political obligations, you feel that your appointment of Mr. John Smart last December did not go in any sense contrary to the opinion of the profession?—I think it was conforming to tradition, and also it gave satisfaction to the profession.

60,316. Lord Salvesen, in the précis which he submitted to us, said: "No Lord Advocate of my acquaintance would care to risk his reputation in order to 'perpetrate what the profession would regard as a job 'appointment'?"—I respectfully agree.

60,317. This appointment was pointed out to him, and he said: "I think that was very exceptional. I "may explain that I had not that case in my mind at "all when I wrote that précis?"—But did not Lord Salvesen add that he had reason to think that Mr. Smart was an efficient public servant? I think it is only fair to Lord Salvesen and to Mr. Smart to add that. I did not read it myself but it was pointed out to me.

24 June 1915.]

The Right Hon. ROBERT MUNRO, K.C., M.P.

[Continued.]

60,318. No; the answer to the question was this: the age was called to his attention, and the question was, "The age in this case was manifest enough." The answer is: "Oh, yes; I think it was very exceptional. I may explain that I had not that case in my mind at all when I wrote that précis. I was thinking more of the higher appointments such as the judicial appointments in the Supreme Court?"—Yes, it is in another part.

60,319. Yes, two questions before. I think what you are referring to is the statement in Question 59,039?—I think that is it. He says: "I believe he is thoroughly qualified for his duties."

60,320. But he stated that he thought that that appointment was exceptional and he had not that appointment in his mind when he spoke so?—That is highly probable.

60,321. Sir Kenneth Mackenzie had his attention called to that, and he said: "I am not saying that the appointment of a man at the age of 67 is defensible in my humble opinion." Those two opinions are opinions of great weight, are they not?—I have the highest respect for both, and I do not dissent from Lord Salvesen's opinion for a moment. I agree that it is an exceptional case; but, on the other hand, some men are more robust, both mentally and physically, at 67 than others.

60,322. Supposing this Commission were to desire to create a change of tradition both with regard to political appointments and what we have called appointments on personal claims, can you suggest any change of machinery by which that could be carried out?—I cannot.

60,323. You think the Commission is entirely helpless, and that nothing it could recommend in that way would have any effect?—I do not presume to say that for a moment. All I do say is that no alternative system occurs to me.

60,324. You say you are not familiar with the efforts that have been made in the Colonies and in America, or in other departments in England?—I am afraid not. That is where the Commission has an advantage.

60,325. At present we are under a Coalition Government?—Yes.

60,326. You have been very frank in telling us the principles on which you acted under the old Government. May I say that you propose to act exactly on the same principles under the new Government?—That is a question which I should prefer not to answer for more than one reason. The principles on which one may act under the present administration may be different—I do not know. I have not had occasion to apply my mind to that subject up till now.

60,327. May I ask you whether you would recognise this distinction, that appointments to these offices may either be non-party—that is to say, that a man is appointed without reference to any particular political service he may have rendered, or they may be what the Americans call bi-party—that is to say, he may be appointed for services rendered either to one party or to the other party, and possibly in alternation. You would recognise that the two principles are different?—Yes, I suppose so.

60,328. Could you tell the Commission whether you yourself have any preference as between a bi-party system under a Coalition Government and a non-party system?—I should prefer not to offer any observations as to procedure under a Coalition Government. It is a novelty.

The Right Hon. CHARLES SCOTT-DICKSON, K.C., M.P. (Dean of the Faculty of Advocates), called and examined.

60,340. (Chairman.) You are Dean of the Faculty of Advocates?—I am.

60,341. What legal offices have you held?—I served my apprenticeship as a law agent, and was passed as a law agent in 1874, and I acted as such for two years. I was admitted as an advocate in 1877. I succeeded Lord Dunedin as Senior Advocate Depute in 1892, and acted as such until 1895. I succeeded Lord Dunedin 60,329. (Sir Donald MacAlister.) When you appointed your clerk to this post, I presume you appointed another clerk to take his place?—Yes, I did.

60,330. Would he have the same traditional claim for a vacancy if it occurs?—I do not know. The Lord Advocate's clerk, as I say, has been singled out by precedent and the recommendation of a committee for preferential treatment. I must leave it there, I am afraid.

60,331. I wanted to know whether the term "Lord Advocate's clerk" applied only to one who had served the Lord Advocate in his private capacity before he was appointed, or whether it applied to all that clerk's successors appointed during the tenure of office of the Lord Advocate?—I am not aware. There may have been such a case where two successive holders of that office have both secured promotion under the same régime, but I do not remember one.

60,332. If there happens to be a series of vacancies during your tenure of office, the question will have to be considered a number of times as successive clerks are appointed?—Yes; no doubt they would be considered on their merits, but I should not like to say anything about the prospects of success of such clerks.

60,333. (Sir John Kempe.) With regard to your proposal about the Crown Office, and the concentration of the legal work of the different departments there, I think you said you proposed to except those departments where there is a Central Office for the whole kingdom in London; that is to say, the Customs and Inland Revenue would be excepted, and, I suppose, the Post Office?—The Post Office at present has a solicitor in Scotland, in Edinburgh, and my suggestion would include the incorporation of the Post Office with the Crown Office work as well as the work of the Board of Trade, the War Office, and so on.

60,334. But both the Customs and Inland Revenue have agents in Scotland in the same way?—The Inland Revenue Office in Edinburgh is a permanent institution run simply and solely for the purposes of the Inland Revenue, with a permanent head who devotes his whole time to that particular work; whereas, in all the other Government departments, so far as Edinburgh is concerned, the Government work is simply an incident in the conduct of professional business.

60,335. The Inland Revenue have a Government office there?—Yes.

60,336. (Sir George Paul.) He, in point of fact, is not a solicitor at all, but an advocate?—That is quite true. I was junior counsel to the Inland Revenue, so I know a little about that particular office.

60,337. (Sir John Kempe.) Then it is not the same with the Customs, because they have an agent?—I think they have an agent.

60,338. I thought there was also an agent for the Inland Revenue. In the Law Charges Vote, under "Clerks to Advocates Depute," there are four clerks, and the Note says that three of those clerkships are held by the same person, who is also in receipt of an annuity out of the Consolidated Fund of 100*l.* a year as a late judge's clerk. Can you explain that?—If my attention had been drawn to it sooner I should have inquired; but I suppose it means what it says, that three of the holders of the particular office happen to have the same clerk—I mean the clerks in the Parliament House, as I endeavoured to explain, serve a number of different counsel, and I suppose it so chances that this particular clerk is fortunate enough to have as his employers three of the Advocates Depute.

60,339. Then the Note should have been put the other way?—I agree; it would have been more accurate.

as Solicitor-General in 1896 and acted until 1903, during which time I was a member, under the Act of that time, of the Local Government Board in Scotland. I succeeded Lord Dunedin in 1903 as Lord Advocate, and acted as such until 1905. I was appointed Dean in 1908. I never was a Sheriff and, of course, I never was, as Lord Dunedin was, the Secretary for Scotland. My period of office as Lord Advocate was very much

24 June 1915.]

The Right Hon. CHARLES SCOTT-DICKSON, K.C., M.P.

[Continued.]

shorter than his was, because all the time I was Solicitor-General he was Lord Advocate; but we were in close touch during the whole of that time so far as appointments were concerned. I do not think he made any, as Lord Advocate, that he did not consult with me and with others about.

60,342. As you are aware, the Commission are at present dealing with the legal offices generally in Scotland?—That is why I explained that I have not such a wide experience as Lord Dunedin, because he had been Sheriff, which I never was, and he was Lord Advocate for a much longer period than I was; and then, of course, he was also Secretary for Scotland, which I never was.

60,343. The first point to which we would ask you to turn your attention is the question of the system of appointment to legal posts, both those in the departments in Edinburgh and those in the local services, and particularly the Sheriff Clerks and the Procurators Fiscal?—I cannot speak from personal experience as to the local services, except that I know that so far as they are under the control of the Crown, and, therefore, the patronage is exercised by the Lord Advocate, they have been in the main, I think, political. That applies also to those in the Court of Session and the various departments connected with that—that, generally speaking, they have been political.

60,344. That is a question of principle which has occupied the attention of the Commission, whether the political system of appointment to which you refer is desirable, and if it is not desirable, what alternative could be introduced?—Of course I think, frankly, that on principle it is not defensible, because the appointments are not political so far as their duties are concerned. On the other hand, I am bound to say that I think it works out in practice quite well, and that I do not think that the come and go of the parties works out unfairly politically. I do not say it is universal, though as a rule the party who are in office appoint men of their own political colour; but there is a constant change, and I think in the end both sides get a fair representation. I think also that the men who are selected, even though they are selected because of their political feelings, are always men of position, character, and capacity; so I do not think the public service suffers from that, though I agree on principle that I do not think it is defensible.

60,345. It has this defect, has it not, that persons of the legal profession who have not taken any active part in politics on either side are practically debarred from legal appointments?—That is so. On the other hand, the members of the legal profession—I do not care which side of politics they belong to—who take part in politics, are generally men of capacity and ability to discharge any duties that they are called on to perform. I do not think in that respect there is any difference between the two sides.

60,346. You think the system is not open to criticism based on the character of the appointments made or the capacity of the persons appointed?—I am sure it is not, because whatever the party in power at the time, the Lord Advocate, who in the main has the ultimate disposal of most of the offices, regards it as essential that the man whom he appoints should be a man fitted for the post.

60,347. It has also been argued that, from the point of view both of politics and of the legal profession, it is undesirable that services of that kind should be the regular road to preferment?—I agree. I think on principle that that criticism is quite sound; but, on the other hand, I do not think, in practical working out, it in any way interferes with getting men who are capable of doing the work, and also it does not interfere with there being really a fair distribution between the two political parties of offices of that kind. You do not find—I do not care whether it is in Edinburgh or Glasgow or the larger centres of the country—that the legal practitioner who is associating himself with politics is otherwise than a perfectly capable and thoroughly straightforward man. That is my view about it.

60,348. The system has also been criticised by some witnesses on the ground that it involves frequent appointments from outside to the higher posts in the legal service, and that that is discouraging, and has a bad effect on the junior members?—I think that used to be more than it is now. I think more and more it has been recognised on both sides that as far as possible there should be promotion—that men should be promoted even up to the higher offices. I agree that that is not always followed out; but even when you bring in an outside man he is a man who is generally of such position and character that no wrong is done to the actual work; also I am not sure that, having regard to the qualifications and emoluments in some of the offices, you could always find a man who had been in a subordinate position who was fitted to take the head of the department.

60,349. Would you agree with the view that where there is already in an office or in the Service a man possessing the necessary qualifications for the higher posts, he should normally be appointed?—Unquestionably.

60,350. It would clearly be very discouraging to the junior man in the office if the higher posts were always filled from the outside?—I have no doubt about it. I have been for 20 years associated more or less with it, not myself as exercising patronage but knowing what was done, and I think the effort should be to encourage the view that the man who was faithful in small things should have a chance of being promoted to discharge his duties even up to the head of the department.

60,351. We heard from the Lord Advocate this morning that he had personally carried out that view to a considerable extent in the appointments that he had made to the posts of Procurators Fiscal and Sheriff Clerks?—I had only some two years' experience as Lord Advocate, but I know for the last 20 years it has been the view of the Lord Advocate that as far as possible the practice should be to promote the official from one position to a higher or a better paid position. It is not confined merely to officials such as this Commission, I understand, is concerned with, but even taking Sheriff Substitutes, that has been altered lately so far as the minimum salary has been raised, but the idea always was to give a man a better place if he showed capacity. It applies, for example, not only to the Sheriff Substitutes but to Procurators Fiscal and to various officials whom I am speaking of, so far as the present Commission is concerned.

60,352. Our attention has also been called to the frequency with which Lord Advocates' clerks have been appointed to clerkships in the Court of Session office. That system has been criticised on the same grounds?—I have to plead guilty, if that be the proper term, that when I was Lord Advocate there was one of these clerkships that fell vacant, and at that time it was a matter of course that the Lord Advocate's clerk got it. On the other hand, I am not sure that the fact of describing him as the Lord Advocate's clerk just adequately pictures what he really has to do. He does not get that appointment, so far as my experience goes, without being a man of considerable capacity.

60,353. He would usually be the clerk who has served the Lord Advocate before he assumed office?—He would be. In my own case that was not so. My present clerk was taken from one of the offices in Dover House, and I should think latterly his capacity for acting as a clerk brought him a great deal larger emolument from his engagements to other counsel than it did from being clerk to me. I am not speaking only of my own clerks—the two only that I have had as Lord Advocate—but from my knowledge of other Lord Advocates' clerks, they need to be men of considerable capacity apart from the mere fact that they are clerks to eminent counsel, as the Lord Advocate always is.

60,354. Would you agree that that system is open to criticism on the ground of its effect on the Service generally?—Except that it has been absolutely recognised from, I think I may say, time immemorial, that the Lord Advocate's clerk was always entitled to get one of these jobs—I do not use the term “job” in an opprobrious sense.

60,355. Speaking generally, I gather you are of opinion that where there are suitable men already in the Service, the system of promotion from below should be applied, and that it should be definitely accepted as

24 June 1915.]

The Right Hon. CHARLES SCOTT-DICKSON, K.C., M.P.

[Continued.]

a principle that that system should be extended?—Absolutely.

60,356. Supposing there are cases where there is no suitable person eligible for promotion, and appointment has to be made from outside, does it necessarily follow that the selection must be made on political grounds?—No, I think it does not necessarily follow. On the other hand, I think there is great difficulty—and I have considered it quite carefully—in putting the responsibility of the selection upon another than the Lord Advocate. He is responsible to Parliament, and he is responsible to the profession, and I think there would be a very very serious difficulty in divesting him of the patronage and of the responsibility that that involves. So far as my personal experience is concerned I would be thankful to be relieved of it, but I think there would be a great deal of difficulty in getting a man or a body of men who could be as amenable to public and professional criticism, and also who would realise their duties to the profession and to the office, as you would find in the Lord Advocate.

60,357. Then your opinion would be in favour of leaving the appointments with the Lord Advocate?—It would. I quite realise, of course, that in saying that, probably in most cases—I do not say in all cases; I know instances on both sides—it would be what is called a political appointment, and the gentleman selected would have the same colour in politics as the Lord Advocate. Still, even with that, I would far rather trust to the Lord Advocate—I do not care which side he is on—with those safeguards I have referred to, namely, his feeling of responsibility to his office, to the profession, to the public service, and to Parliament, than interfere with it.

60,358. You would not be in favour of assisting him in his choice by any permanent committee of recommendation?—I would not. I am only entitled to speak vicariously of Lord Dunedin's mode of exercising his patronage, but I knew it pretty intimately; and in the short time I was Lord Advocate, I know what I did. You consult people in the neighbourhood of the officials, or people connected with the Court of Session, or whatever the department was, as to the various candidates, and, under the sense of responsibility I have referred to, you endeavour to get the best man you can.

60,359. The extent to which any particular Lord Advocate would observe the principle of promotion of which you have spoken, would depend entirely on his own personal views?—It would, and quite frankly there have been instances where the system of promotion has been disregarded. There have been exceptional cases where that has not been followed out. Then the difficulty it seems to me would be in laying down a hard and fast rule that you were to have promotion absolutely by seniority.

60,360. It would clearly be inadvisable to lay down a hard and fast rule of that kind, because it might produce very unsuitable appointments?—I do not want to speak evil of dignitaries, but I might illustrate it in this way: take the English Judicial Bench; promotion there does not depend upon seniority. With us in Scotland, apart from the two chairs, it does. Each judge just goes up from being what we call Junior Lord Ordinary (which corresponds to being Junior Puisne Judge) in the Outer House to a seat in the Inner House. On the English Bench a man may be selected from a Puisne Judge and be put in any position on the judicial bench which those charged with the patronage think proper.

60,361. Turning from the general questions to matters affecting particular offices or groups of offices, the suggestion has been made in evidence that there would be very great advantage if the offices of the Court of Session were transferred from the Register House to the Parliament House or its immediate neighbourhood. Are you prepared to express an opinion on that?—That is a matter that I think the other branches of the profession—the agents' branch, if I may so speak of them—would be better able to speak of, because it does not come before us as counsel so much. It is a matter of practical convenience. I do not know whether it would be more convenient to have the offices up near the court, or to have them down at the Register House. After 4 o'clock the Parliament House is a good distance away from the solicitors' offices, or a good deal further away from most of them than the Register House. That however, is a matter of agents' business, and I am not prepared to express an opinion that is worth considering compared with what the members of the other branch of the profession would say to it.

60,362. So far as the business of the courts is concerned, would not there be great advantages in having the offices close at hand?—I think not, myself. Speaking of it from a practising advocate's point of view, I do not think it matters very much to us, because the process is all there and can be had for the actual causes in court. I really do not think I am able to give the Commission any useful information on that matter compared with what could be got from the solicitors.

60,363. (Sir George Paul.) It is said that productions in the process very often suffer from having to be carried backwards and forwards from the Register House to the Parliament House every day?—You would have to cart them from the court to some other place in the building, and I have never known any case where there was any trouble that arose about that. It would not be in the actual transit. It does not matter very much whether you carry it from Room A to Room B in one building, or from Room A in one building to Room B in another building.

60,364. It is said that they are put into a barrow and wheeled up, and productions may be knocked about. I have no personal experience, but that is what we have been told?—All I can say is, that I have been at the Bar for nearly 38 years and I have never known of a case where a production was so knocked about that it at all interfered with the conduct of the business.

60,365. (Chairman.) In another branch of the office—the Crown Office—the question has been raised whether the Crown Agent is a necessary appointment or whether it could be dispensed with. In that connection the Lord Advocate told us this morning that, in his opinion, the office was necessary, but that its functions might with advantage be extended, and that the Crown Agent might take charge of the civil legal business of the various Government departments concerned with Scotland. That system should take the place of the present system under which the different departments have their own private law agents, and in that case he suggested that the Crown Agent should cease to be a political appointment and should be a permanent appointment, the Crown Agent giving his whole time to those duties. Have you ever considered a scheme of that kind?—The latter part, I confess, I had not considered before. I have no doubt myself that, so far as the Crown Agent is concerned, who at present really practically only attends to the criminal work, that is essential. There must be an agent of that kind to attend to the ordinary agents' business in connection with criminal work. I had a good deal of experience, taking both my Solicitor-Generalship and my Lord Advocateship, and I may say that when I was solicitor, the Lord Advocate of the day, Lord Dunedin, practically left me in charge—he was in Parliament and I was not for most of the time—of the criminal work; and I think it is essential that there must be an agent to attend to the solicitor's duty, so far as criminal work is concerned. I found also many times, and I have no doubt other Lord Advocates have found the same, that the sound sense and judgment of a man of experience, though he was an agent and not counsel, was of immense importance in carrying on the criminal business. Of course, as the Commission are aware, in Scotland practically no private prosecutions are allowed at all in matters of any importance. From time to time there came up questions of policy and discretion, where the Crown Agent's advice in consultation with him was of immense importance. As to making a Crown Agent responsible for all the Government departments, or, as the Lord Advocate said, that there should be an agent to do the whole thing, I have never heard it suggested until now. Of course that could be done, but it would involve a very great change, and I hesitate to express an opinion on what is to me a new idea. I think at present, probably the State is better served by having solicitors for each department than it would be by having one solicitor who was to attend to all the departments. There are the War Office, the Board of Trade, the Post Office, the Customs and Excise, and all the rest who at present have separate agents for each department, and to my mind, approaching it for the first time, I think I should prefer the present system rather than have as Agent of the Crown a solicitor who was to attend to all business, both civil and criminal.

24 June 1915.]

The Right Hon. CHARLES SCOTT-DICKSON, K.C., M.P.

[Continued.]

60,366. The suggestion was that there would be not only greater convenience and efficiency but also economy in concentrating the functions in that way?—It would come to this. I think if an agent were appointed to attend to all the Crown business, of course he would have to have a very much larger staff. I suppose they are paid in the ordinary way by fees, some perhaps by salaries; but you would need certainly to get a man of the first standing, and you would need to give him a salary proportionately large as he would have to give his whole time to it.

60,367. It would no doubt require an increase in the staff of the office?—You would really have to have a Crown Solicitor's office with all these various departments brought into it, and the expense of that office, of course, would be very much larger than the expense of the single offices that at present exist.

60,368. But the aggregate expense need not necessarily be larger than the aggregate expense of the separate offices?—I quite agree, but I confess I do not think I am able to express any opinion to the Commission that would be useful on that point, because I have not heard it suggested before.

60,369. Would there not be this advantage, that the work of the different departments may in many points touch, and also that similar questions may arise in connection with different departments, and there would obviously be inconvenience if you had varying advice given to different departments on similar points?—I do not think that would apply in Scotland, because, differing from what is the course in England, the Lord Advocate and the Solicitor-General have to advise the Crown in all cases as part of their ordinary duties for the salaries they are paid. Differing from what happens in England, the Scotch law officers for their salaries—the Lord Advocate for his 5,000*l.*, and the Solicitor-General for his 2,000*l.*—have to conduct all cases, and to advise in all cases for the Crown, without any fees at all being given. Accordingly they are always consulted in those matters, and though the agents may be different, the ultimate advisers for the Crown are the same. If I were Lord Advocate or Solicitor-General, I might advise for the Customs to-day, for the Board of Trade to-morrow, the Post Office the next day, the War Office the next day, and accordingly in any question that comes up that is of importance at all and is put before the Crown counsel, he is the same man; while the solicitor instructing is different, the counsel advising is always the same. My own impression—but it really is only an impression, because I have not considered it—is that I would prefer the system of having separate solicitors, the counsel advising being always the same, subject always to this qualification, that the junior counsel, of course, differs, but the Lord Advocate and the Solicitor-General are always the senior counsel for all the departments.

60,370. Does the Crown Agent give any considerable amount of time to his official duties?—He is at his Crown Office every day for an hour or an hour and a half or two hours, and so on, taking the normal thing. Then when criminal trials are taken at the High Court he is there in constant attendance as the solicitor. Take a case which lasts for a week or so; the Crown Agent has to be there all the time in personal attendance. In my own experience I think the gentlemen who hold the position of Crown Agent are always gentlemen of high position, of great experience, and of great service on consultation with counsel.

60,371. Is there any necessity or advantage in the Crown Agent being a political office?—No, I think not.

I might qualify that by saying that there are questions of criminal prosecution which sometimes involve questions of political policy, and I am not sure that there are not cases where it would not be against the public service to have a Crown Agent with political views on certain questions and a Lord Advocate or Solicitor-General with political views differing from them.

60,372. I was contemplating the possibility of making the Crown Agent a non-political office altogether, as is the Solicitor to the Treasury in this country, or the Public Prosecutor in this country?—But I am afraid you cannot divest a man of that position from having political leanings one way or the other.

60,373. It has been found possible to do so in England?—I do not say it is impossible.

60,374. Has not it been found possible to do so in the non-political offices in Scotland?—I do not say it is impossible, but personally I can conceive cases—I have known them myself in my own experience—where I should prefer to have a Crown Agent who was of the same political views as myself.

60,375. You mentioned that your experience had not brought you so completely into contact with the local legal services?—No; I never was a Sheriff. I had a short experience as an agent practising in the Sheriff Court, but then it was so short that I could not claim to have any special knowledge about it.

60,376. As Lord Advocate you were in constant contact with the Procurators Fiscal?—Yes, and as Solicitor-General, too, when I was probably more intimately associated with the Procurators Fiscal than even the Lord Advocate was.

60,377. The question has been raised whether the restriction on private business should be applied to all Procurators Fiscal, or whether exception should be made in cases where the Procurator Fiscal's own work is not sufficient to fill his time?—I think it would be better if the Procurator Fiscal had enough work to render it unnecessary for him to have any private practice at all. But I am quite certain that there are a great many places in Scotland where you must have a man there, and where, if you confine him to Procurator Fiscal work, he would be idle for far the greater part of his time; and I think that is a bad thing. I think, in the country districts where, of course, it would only happen, it is far better to get a man of good standing, and, under the necessary qualifications, allow him to have private practice.

60,378. It would not be practicable, I suppose, to increase the districts in size, so as to give a whole-time job to each man?—I think, within limits, something could be done in that way; but then any abuse, or risk of abuse, on the part of the Procurator Fiscal who is in private practice misusing his office is, to my mind, removed by this fact, that he really acts under the instructions of Crown counsel. There are four Advocates Depute and the Solicitor-General, who is in command, and the Procurator Fiscal has to report any proceedings he proposes to take or any case he proposes to consider, and they would see that there was no impropriety in his conduct on these matters. I think it would cause considerably more expense if you were to insist on all Procurators Fiscal being Procurators Fiscal and nothing else, and doing no private practice. You would have to increase the payments, and, I think, what is even worse, the result would be that in many cases the men would not have enough to occupy themselves; they would have far too much idle time.

60,379. That, I suppose, is demoralising?—It is; or at least it is apt to be demoralising.

60,380. The remarks which you made about promotion by transfer would, I suppose, apply in the case of the service of Procurators Fiscal?—Yes, it is carried out regularly now. I think both sides have realised that where a man in a smaller office shows capacity, the opportunity of promoting him where he is to have more serious duties is quite aptly taken.

60,381. Would that apply also in the Sheriff Court services?—Yes, it would.

60,382. You would be able to promote deputes and Sheriff Clerks by transference to more important places?—Yes, I think, generally speaking, that that is a system which I would be entirely in favour of in all cases.

24 June 1915.]

The Right Hon. CHARLES SCOTT-DICKSON, K.C., M.P.

[Continued.]

60,383. A recommendation was made by Lord Salvesen's Committee in favour of reducing the number of Sheriff Clerks, so that there would be one Sheriff Clerk for each sheriffdom, instead of, as at present, one for each county?—I would rather not express an opinion on that. I have never had the advantage of being Sheriff, and I think that is a question that the Sheriffs can give useful information to the Commission upon, and I cannot, because I have no personal experience.

60,384. One other point which has come before the Commission is the question of fixing an age limit for retirement in the legal departments. Such a limit is fixed in some cases by the warrant of appointment, and we have been told that where such limit has been fixed it generally has been 70. As you are aware, the limit in the Civil Service generally is 65, with power to extend the service in special cases to 70 as an extreme limit. Do you see any reason why the general Civil Service rule should not apply in the legal departments in Scotland?—Except for my own age, which makes me very diffident in expressing an opinion, I do not.

60,385. It has not been suggested that the same limit should apply to the judicial offices?—I am approaching 65 now, and have considerable hesitancy in fixing a limit. The question is quite a fair one to put, and, honestly speaking, I do not see any reason why, so far as an age limit is concerned, there should be a distinction, so far as these legal appointments are concerned, from those in the ordinary Civil Service.

60,386. At present a large number of the legal appointments, including some of quite minor importance, are direct Crown appointments. Do you see any reason why that system should be maintained?—That practically means that they are made by the Lord Advocate; I do not mean to say directly made, but he may nominate them through the Secretary for Scotland, or directly make them. Of course, I may be tinged with the official view, but my own impression is that the Lord Advocate is probably the better man to trust with the patronage than any other individual or body of men that you could get, just for the reasons I have already indicated, that he has the sense of responsibility of his office, of his duty to the Service, of criticism which would be applied so far as the profession is concerned, and also the fact that he is answerable in Parliament.

60,387. I asked that question, not so much from the point of view of the person by whom the nomination is made, which is a point you have already dealt with in the earlier part of your evidence, but rather from the point of view of the conditions of appointment. In the case of a direct Crown appointment, there is no necessity for the person appointed obtaining a Civil Service certificate, and he is therefore exempt from the scrutiny of the Civil Service Commissioners as regards health, as regards character, qualifications, age, and so forth, and also, unless it is fixed in his warrant of appointment, no limit of age applies?—Very often now, as the Commission I think have learned already, there is in the commission a limitation of age. So far as the other points you have referred to are concerned, I think the class of officials I am speaking of are not large enough, and also the divisions of the offices and the special requirements of the special offices are so many, that I doubt whether you could bring them into line with any general system such as prevails in the ordinary Civil Service. After all, we are dealing, so far as these offices are concerned, with a very small number of men; and the offices are so divergent in the training and duties they have to discharge, that I do not think you could get a co-ordination of them that would enable you to shift one man from one office to another office in such a way as to secure efficiency. I mean, the man in the Crown Office has one kind of duty to do, the man in the Justiciary Office has another, and the man in the Teinds Office has a third. To take a man from the Crown Office and put him in the Teinds Office would not be a bit of good, and yet he might be an excellent official in the Crown Office. In the same way, if you take a man from the Teinds Office and put him into the Justiciary Office, he would not know in the least where he was, and his special gifts for the peculiar duties he has to perform would just be thrown away.

60,388. You mean that those reasons would render it impracticable to set up a uniform system of recruitment for all the offices?—I think so. By the time you take out the Bill Chamber which requires special training, the Crown Office which requires special training, the Justiciary Office which requires special training, and the Teinds Office which requires special training, the number of exceptions would exceed the rule. According to the best judgment I could give, I do not think you could co-ordinate the offices so that you could make the men in one office interchangeable with men in another.

60,389. Apart from any question of general co-ordination, the question remains as to what scrutiny is exercised over a person on his original appointment. In the case of a Crown appointment no such scrutiny is exercised. The fact that he has a warrant from the Crown entitles him to hold the appointment and entitles him to pension if it is a pensionable post, and so forth. But in case of appointments made, for instance, by the Secretary for Scotland, whether on his own choice or on the nomination of the Lord Advocate, the person appointed has to obtain, even if not appointed on a system of competitive examination or on any co-ordinated system, a Civil Service certificate, and to satisfy the Civil Service Commissioners as regards health, character, age, and so forth. Is there any reason, in the case of a number of minor appointments, for maintaining the direct Crown appointment which exempts him from that necessity?—Frankly, I think there is not. The only guarantee against any misuses is the sense of the responsibility in the officer who makes the appointment. I have been at the Bar now over 38 years and have more or less known about these appointments, and I suppose there have been cases, but I cannot call to mind any case where abuse has arisen.

60,390. But is it not rather anomalous for instance that the macers in the Court of Session should hold a direct Crown appointment?—Yes; and our trumpeters, who go round on circuit, I believe, get a commission from the Crown. The macers do not bulk very largely, there are only five or six.

60,391. That is perhaps the lowest of the appointments which are direct Crown appointments; but we have been told that a number of junior clerical appointments, even the assistant clerks in the Court of Session, are direct Crown appointments?—I think that is so. I think the Dean of Faculty is sometimes asked to give a recommendation for a macer, although he has nothing to do with the appointment.

60,392. (Mr. Matheson.) You said that in principle you thought political appointments were not desirable, but you did not see any practical way of dispensing with that method. What reason do you think there is for saying that an advisory committee would not strengthen the position of the Lord Advocate and to some extent put him outside the region of political appointment?—I quite see that there are points where an advisory committee would be useful; but the reason that actuates me in expressing my opinion is, that I would prefer to have an individual who is vested with the responsibility and who could be called to account for it; and I do not think you would have the same hold over a committee as you would over a man in the Lord Advocate's position with responsibility such as I have already indicated.

60,393. You are aware that many public bodies such as universities and schools make appointments on the advice of an expert committee?—Yes.

60,394. In that way they get a sort of public confidence which appointments by individuals do not always obtain?—I quite realise that there are considerations on the one side and the other, but on the whole my view is—of course, I may be prejudiced by having been a Lord Advocate myself—that I would prefer to have the individual responsibility of a man in the position of Lord Advocate, subject to the criticisms and considerations I have referred to.

60,395. What do you think is the effect on the legal profession in Scotland of the fact that a young man with ambition finds it necessary to go into politics if he is to get an advancement of that kind?—I do not believe it affects the young men in the legal profession a bit. They take up their politics apart altogether from their profession. Further, I do not think the emoluments and position of the class of officers we are considering now would affect any man in making him take up his position on the one side or the other of politics, plus this, that he never can tell which side is to be in when his turn comes.

24 June 1915.]

The Right Hon. CHARLES SCOTT-DICKSON, K.C., M.P.

[Continued.]

60,396. (Mr. Shipley.) I want to know about the private prosecutions. Lord Salvesen when he gave his evidence expressed an almost unbounded admiration for the judicial arrangements in Scotland, and he partly based it on the fact that there were practically, with hardly an exception, no private prosecutions, but I think you said private prosecutions were not allowed?—Yes, they are allowed, in this way, for example: A few years ago the Crown refused to prosecute in a case where it was said that a false certificate of the pit from which certain coal had come had been granted. The Crown refused to prosecute, and then the firm who complained went to the Judiciary Court and said, "The Crown will not prosecute in this case, and we think it ought to be prosecuted," and the Judiciary Court said, "Well, you have made out a case; you are entitled to go on with your prosecution." Accordingly the prosecution was instituted. I appeared for the defence and the accused was convicted; he was merely censured, or something; there was no sentence of imprisonment, or anything of that kind. You can have a private prosecution in Scotland subject to the Judiciary Court, which is our Supreme Criminal Court, saying, "We think this is a case where there should be a prosecution, and as the person who has been injured wants to conduct the prosecution we will allow him to do it."

60,397. Still, if the Crown can forbid these prosecutions and habitually does so, it rather knocks the bottom out of that particular argument?—They do not forbid them. They say, when the matter is brought before them, "We do not think this is a case that can be proved, or that ought to be tried," and in 99 cases out of 100 that ends it. In my experience I do not think there have been more than four or five cases of private prosecutions in the last 40 years. As I say, the last one which was of any importance as a private prosecution was vindicated, because they got a conviction.

60,398. (Sir John Kempe.) I think you and some of the witnesses have founded an argument against open competition and selection by a committee, and in fact any change in the Scottish system, on the ground of the smallness of the services in the legal departments?—Yes.

60,399. Of course, that ignores the question whether the present system is the best system; but you would not argue that if there is any objection to the present system the others are impossible?—Oh, no.

60,400. You have not considered it from that point of view?—I have to this extent, that I do not think you could get enough candidates. Taking, for example, a competitive examination such as you have for the ordinary Civil Service, I do not think for those offices, which require special attainments, you would get enough candidates to give you really any effective competition at all.

60,401. The present system has the result of keeping the appointments entirely within the legal profession, in point of fact?—Very nearly; I think that is so. A legal professional qualification for many of them is not required, but I think to a large extent that probably is so.

60,402. The reason is that the Lord Advocate has a large acquaintance with the legal profession, and, therefore, it is better to keep it in that way?—Yes. Still, it is not a necessity at all that the successful candidate for the post should have a legal professional qualification in many cases.

60,403. In this country there is a professional qualification required in many cases, although it is not necessary in all legal departments?—No.

60,404. And there is no reason why the same should not hold good in Scotland?—I agree.

60,405. Is the smallness of the legal department proportionate to the smallness of the population in Scotland, do you think?—We are said to be a very litigious people, but I do not know what the proportions are.

60,406. Would you have quite as good a field proportionately in Scotland for appointments by open competition?—Probably, except that we are paid on a much less satisfactory scale than in England.

60,407. If you keep the appointments within the legal profession, it tends to make the political appointments rather more frequent?—Yes, probably that may be so.

60,408. You argued, I think, that both sides get a fair representation?—I think with the turn about of politics it really is the result that both sides have a pretty fair chance.

60,409. Each side in turn can get its best men appointed?—Yes.

60,410. And there is a very large residuum in the middle, probably quite as good men, who never get anything at all?—That is so, but I think, probably, most Scotch lawyers are keen politicians on one side or the other.

60,411. You said just now that you did not think it tends to make people take sides?—No, I am perfectly certain that no professional man in Scotland ever argues for a moment, "I am going to be a Whig or a Tory because I may have a chance of being Sheriff Clerk or a macer in the Court of Session."

60,412. (Sir George Paul.) A certain amount of legal experience is required for a post like that of assistant clerk or ordinary clerk of Session?—I think so, and I would prefer that they should be legally qualified men. On the other hand, I quite recognise that there are cases where men have done the actual work and yet have not got the legal qualifications.

60,413. As regards competition, I suppose the man with the experience is past the age of competition?—Yes, he is too old to get the office.

60,414. And if he is a qualified law agent he has gone through the general knowledge examination twice and also the law examination?—That is so.

60,415. (Miss Haldane.) I suppose when you were Lord Advocate, there was a great deal of canvassing for appointments?—There was some; I would not say a great deal, and one was subjected to a certain amount of correspondence from one's political friends, and sometimes from one's political opponents, to say that So-and-So was a very good man for the place.

60,416. Could not you think of any way in which that might be reduced, and is it partly due to the fact that you are in the House of Commons and that it comes a good deal from the House of Commons, or from representatives in the House of Commons?—The disposer of patronage could intimate that if any letters were sent to him recommending anybody, that would score a point against him.

60,417. You have never thought of anything of that kind?—No.

60,418. The position of men in the Sheriff Clerk's office is not very satisfactory, is it? They have very little chance of promotion and they are poorly paid?—I only know that, not from my own experience, but from complaints that have been made or from letters that I have had.

60,419. You would hear of it when you were in office?—Yes.

60,420. I suppose you think that something ought to be done to make transference more easy and promotion more easy in those offices?—I have no doubt about that; and the understood rule should be that, as far as possible, if there is a fit man in the office, when a higher vacancy occurs he should get it. I am quite clear about that, and I think really that has come to be recognised by those who have the dispensation of patronage.

60,421. I mean as regards the staff of the Sheriff Clerk's office, at a certain age, would not it be a good thing if they could come into the Civil Service?—Yes, I think probably it would; but I confess I have great hesitation, because, as I have said, I have no experience

24 June 1915.]

The Right Hon. CHARLES SCOTT-DICKSON, K.C., M.P.

[Continued.]

in connection with the Sheriff Court office or the administration of it at all.

60,422. But you must have heard a great deal about it while you were in office?—I think the men themselves would like it so far as I can gather.

60,423. It seems to be rather a serious matter that these men come in and are not prepared for any other work, and yet they are in what, at any rate, in the smaller courts may be called a blind alley occupation?—That is quite true, but I doubt whether the training of those men would fit them to go into the ordinary Civil Service work. That is the trouble.

60,424. Might not the whole of that Service be brought into one, so that they could be promoted from one post to another?—I would be quite in favour of that. The only trouble is, that many of these offices are not very remunerative, and there would be great difficulty in shifting the men.

60,425. At present they are what might be called farmed out?—That is quite true.

60,426. That is not a good system?—In the abstract I think it is not.

60,427. Should not there be some sort of supervision to ensure the men in these offices having a chance?—Again rather deprecating my being able to give any satisfactory evidence upon the Sheriff Court administration, it involves a considerable wrench to take away a man from the Sheriff Court at Dumfries, for example, and transfer him to the Sheriff Court in Perth. His whole surroundings are in the one place, and he would have to start a new social life in the other.

60,428. He might not be adverse to that?—That is quite true.

60,429. I suppose you have had no experience in the employment of women?—No.

60,430. And you have no suggestions to make regarding that matter?—No.

60,431. (Sir Donald MacAlister.) With regard to the Court of Session offices, you have told us quite clearly that you would like to see promotion from the lower to the higher ranks carried as far as it conveniently might be. Those who enter in the lowest rank are not as a rule qualified legally to hold the higher posts, are they?—I do not know what is the rule, but certainly in many cases they are not.

60,432. Are there any facilities by which a clerk who enters at the lower rank can acquire a legal qualification while he is in the office?—Yes; for example, I know in my experience of a case where a man became a Lord Advocate's clerk, and then just thought he would like to have the legal qualification, which was easily adjusted, and he was able to attend classes, go to his examinations, and acquire the necessary legal qualifications. I appreciate entirely that that is an immense advantage to him.

60,433. That is to say, in Scotland a clerk in one of these offices can attend the university classes which are required for qualifying as law agent?—Yes. The only trouble is that he would need to serve his apprenticeship in addition to attending classes. So far as attending classes is concerned, there is really no difficulty about it; but there is a necessity to have either three or five years' apprenticeship. Of course, while he is doing that he cannot be doing anything else.

60,434. But he could proceed so far as to get a law degree while acting as clerk?—Yes, perfectly.

60,435. Both at Edinburgh and Glasgow?—At either. I do not know whether at Aberdeen too, but certainly Edinburgh and Glasgow.

60,436. So if by legal qualification you meant not the certificate of law agent, but the evidence of a legal education, that can be done perfectly well by those who enter in the lowest ranks?—Yes, it can be.

60,437. (Sir George Paul.) A University degree?—Yes.

60,438. But an apprenticeship is required to make a man a qualified law agent?—I think that in many cases would make a complete barrier, because while he is serving his apprenticeship he must give practically his whole time to that.

60,439. If a man has a University degree in Arts, for instance, a three years' apprenticeship is all that is wanted?—Yes; I had my degree in Arts, and I served only for three years. If I had not had my degree in Arts I would have had to serve five.

60,440. (Sir Donald MacAlister.) But there are now degrees in law which can be taken by a clerk in the Court of Session?—Yes.

60,441. (Mr. Graham Wallas.) You told us that you thought it was unwise to appoint a Procurator Fiscal, asking him to give his whole time, however desirable that might otherwise be, unless there is enough work for him to take up his real day. In the small districts it is difficult to find that work?—It is.

60,442. Have you ever considered whether it might be desirable to introduce a practice by which the local Procurator Fiscal did the prosecuting work for the various local bodies—the prosecution work under the Public Health Act, for the District Committee, for the School Board, and for the Parish Council?—I think that is to some extent done, and, quite frankly, I think it would be an advantage if the Procurator Fiscal did it all.

60,443. If it is done now, it is done at a high rate for fees. It could be done more regularly, and perhaps in a more dignified way, and certainly cheaper, if done as part of the Procurator Fiscal's duties?—I agree about that. Probably you would find that the controlling body wanted to have their own prosecutor, but, no doubt, it would be far better if all these prosecutions were undertaken by the local Procurator Fiscal, his salary being proportionately increased, and the bodies for whom the prosecution was undertaken having to contribute in some way or other to the general fund.

60,444. If the local Procurator Fiscal was occupying that position, do not you think it would make it rather less desirable even than at present that he would be chiefly known in the district as the paid election agent of one side at the last election?—I do not know of any case where that has happened, but if it has happened I would be quite against a Procurator Fiscal being an election agent.

60,445. I said undesirable that he should be chiefly known as having been before his appointment a paid election agent?—You observe that the local Procurator Fiscal has all his proceedings, so far as political prosecutions are concerned, subject to the revision of Crown counsel, and I do not think any local Procurator Fiscal, and I do not think any Crown counsel—I do not care which side they belong to—would be affected by one hair's breadth by whether it was a political prosecution or not.

60,446. You told us that the present frankly political system of making appointments to these posts is, in your judgment, not defensible in principle, but that it works fairly well in practice. Would you agree that when one uses that distinction between principle and practice one is very often referring under the name of practice to the immediate effect of the system, and under the name of principle to certain large considerations which ultimately affect it?—If I may respectfully say so, that is probably quite a fair way of putting it, but I do not think, with the class of officials I am speaking of, there is any large enough body of officialdom that would be affected one way or the other by it.

60,447. But you would agree that in a country living as Great Britain lives, under party government, party government only works well when, on the whole, people work hard for their party when they entirely agree with it, slack off when they are doubtful about the party, and, when they think their party is definitely wrong, leave it?—I am not sure that I would agree with all that. The golden rule is that when your party is wrong you ought to stick to it harder than ever.

60,448. That obviously was the opinion of the Sheriff Clerk of Midlothian when he gave evidence before us. He said, with regard to the people who are now appointed, having been agents: "As a rule he is 'not a good lawyer or a good politician,' and then he added they are 'just adventurers'?"—I do not agree with that.

60,449. It struck the Commission as being said with obvious sincerity?—I have no doubt. All I say is, with all his obvious sincerity, I do not agree with him.

24 June 1915.]

The Right Hon. CHARLES SCOTT-DICKSON, K.C., M.P.

[Continued.]

60,450. In so far that it might happen that the system which is in America called the "Spoils System," produces either in America, Great Britain, or anywhere else, a body of political adventurers who feel that their services would be most useful to their party when their party is most in the wrong, it would have a bad ultimate effect upon the political life of a place?—All I can say is that I have never known on either side—and I have been as keen a party man as anyone—any case, so far as the officials we are now considering are considered, where I could say that party bias had any effect at all.

60,451. I am thinking not of the effect on their administrative work, but the effect on their whole political life?—These offices are not big enough to affect the political life of any one of them.

60,452. It was said in Scotland the other day that things in that respect are going rather worse; that in the old days a man was appointed by his political opinions; now he is appointed for having done, actually day by day, paid political organising work. You have had a long experience; would you agree with that?—I do not know that I would agree just as you have put it. I think he may be much more often appointed because he has done non-paid political work—gratuitous work.

60,453. We were told this morning that the last three appointments that have been made from outside the Service, either to Sheriff Clerk or Procurator Fiscal, were given to paid political agents?—I am not personally acquainted with the cases, but I should think that is quite possible.

60,454. And it may be becoming more and more common that it is the small, active, paid politicians rather than the men of political opinion but not necessarily organising politicians, who are getting the posts?—I should think anything of that sort is really, so far as regards the efficiency of the Service, or the public feeling, practically negligible.

60,455. What is, in your judgment, the opinion of the profession in regard to this system of political appointments?—I think the profession takes it quite as a matter of course. We have all been brought up to it, and we get our turn on each side, as it is said, and no great harm is done, and no harm is done to the public service.

60,456. So I was told; but I want to submit to you certain sentences from the evidence, and to ask whether they do not indicate in the profession at the present moment a somewhat different point of view. We had Mr. J. H. Jameson before us. He was appointed by the Writers to the Signet to give evidence on behalf of his society. He said, speaking of this principle of political appointments: "I think the public do not get the best service." He was asked: "The system that you deprecate is the political element which you tell us exists too much," and he answered, "Yes," and he proposed that the patronage should be taken away from the Lord Advocate in consequence and given to a committee appointed by the Lord President. Then Mr. David Murray gave evidence on behalf of, and as representative of, the Faculty of Procurators, in which he said: "The view that because a man has been a political agent of some important person he should therefore be appointed to an office in the Register House is entirely out of date, and I do not think any body would be found to uphold it now. I think the legal profession in Scotland is all against it." Then Mr. Boyd Anderson, on behalf of the Incorporated Society of Law Agents in Scotland, said: "The general opinion of the profession is against political appointments to administrative posts." Mr. Walter James Lewis gave evidence on behalf of the Society of Solicitors in the Supreme Court in Scotland against political appointments, saying, "That system should be absolutely done away with so far as possible"—and he himself proposed a Standing Committee to obviate it. You, of course, know those bodies better than I do?—I know all the gentlemen and all the bodies.

60,457. They do represent a not unimportant and a respectable body of professional opinion?—I agree; and I do not say that in the abstract I would differ from that view. I think if you could eliminate politics from the appointments it would be an advantage.

60,458. I find it very difficult to understand you when you use the words "in the abstract." The abstract must exist in space and time, and if you include sufficiently large space and sufficiently long time the abstract and the concrete seem to me to be the same?—But you have to get your appointing body or person. That is the trouble about it.

60,459. Would you agree with Lord Salvesen when he said, "I do not like political appointments if you can substitute something better than the system we have at present"?—I absolutely agree with that.

60,460. Besides these political appointments we have inquired into a sort of appointment which you might call a personal appointment; namely, the personal claims of the old clerk upon his employer when that employer is fortunate enough to become Lord Advocate. Do you feel the same thing, that if somehow you could get rid of that arrangement and that tradition it would be a good thing?—Yes. I do not think the fact that there is a personal bond is necessarily a testimonial to fitness for an office.

60,461. Of course at present the Lord Advocate is responsible to Parliament for his use of patronage. Would not you agree that Parliament brings him responsibility in that way in a rather violent, accidental, and sometimes unjust way; it either takes no notice of it or is apt to get stampeded on the subject?—I think a Lord Advocate, judging from my own views, and also from, I am sure, the views of those I have known, would be very slow to appoint a man to an office merely because he was personally attached to him in the way you suggest, or because he had the same views in politics, unless he was satisfied that he was fit to discharge the duties of the office. My view about it is that I do not see that you can get an individual, or a body of individuals, who would have the same sense of responsibility and be equally able to be called to account if they failed in discharging their responsibility, as you have under the present system where the Lord Advocate does it.

60,462. But they seem to me entirely different things—the personal power and responsibility of the Lord Advocate on the one hand and the principles and traditions within which he works on the other. I think you have indicated that it might fairly be proposed that both sides should say: "Let us change in this respect; let us give up these party appointments of paid agents; let us give up appointments from the age of 67 downwards of personal clerks, and so on, and try to appoint the best men without reference to political opinions"?—Yes; but just give me your practical way of working out the plan, and what it is to be.

60,463. If we were in a religious assembly I might say that one method might be a method of conversion—a new heart. That you think impossible?—My view is, taking political appointments, that so far as the offices we are considering are concerned there are plenty of good men on both sides, and it only comes to be a question of whether the good man on this side is to get the place or the good man on the other side is to get it. In my experience I have not known any case—or I cannot recall any case; there may have been one—where an unfit man was appointed merely because he was on the one side of politics or the other.

60,464. It seems to me we are a little at cross purposes. There are two points of view; either on the whole the system works pretty well, and therefore it ought not to be changed; or it would be a good thing, but very difficult, to change it, and you would be prepared to sympathise with any proposal that would produce a change. I thought we were on the hypothesis that you were sympathising with the proposal to make a change in tradition in this respect?—No, my position is that I think the system has worked; but I have never seen suggested any system that would practically work as well, still less that would work better.

60,465. Changes in that respect have come in some of the Colonies, and the spoils system has been largely modified?—I have not had Colonial experience.

60,466. The universal spoils system which ran throughout the whole of the English Civil Service up to 1855 has been largely modified?—That is quite true. Of course the Civil Service here is on entirely different lines.

24 June 1915.]

The Right Hon. CHARLES SCOTT-DICKSON, K.C., M.P.

[Continued.]

60,467. It has been modified partly by doubling the political head of a department by a permanent head who need not be of the same side of politics and who represents a view of administrative efficiency which is not coloured by political traditions. Do you think it would be a bad thing if the Lord Advocate had as his legal secretary a permanent official accustomed to serve both sides?—I would not have that on any terms. I would want to have a man of my own colour. I am quite clear about that. I have no sympathy with that suggestion. I may say that in my experience as Lord Advocate at Dover House I never knew what the politics of some of the principal officials were and I do not know yet.

60,468. (Sir Donald MacAlister.) They were under the Civil Service?—Yes, I agree; and so far as the offices we are now considering are concerned, I do not know in the least with regard to many of them what their politics are.

60,469. (Mr. Graham Wallas.) But if the appointment was made at Dover House after consultation with a high Civil servant whose politics you did not know, is it not really the case that it would be less likely that a paid agent of a political party would be appointed?—I agree entirely with that; but the officials we are now considering, or rather the candidates for the offices, would not in many cases be known personally at all to the officials in Dover House.

ONE HUNDRED AND FORTY-THIRD DAY.

Wednesday, 30th June 1915.

PRESENT:

SIR HENRY BABINGTON SMITH, K.C.B., C.S.I. (Chairman).

Sir JOHN PRESCOTT HEWETT, G.C.S.I., C.I.E.

Sir JOHN ARROW KEMPE, K.C.B.

Mr. ARTHUR BOUTWOOD.

Mr. CECIL COWARD.

Mr. PERCY EWING MATHESON.

Mr. ARTHUR EVERETT SHIPLEY, F.R.S.

Mr. GRAHAM WALLAS.

Mr. E. W. H. MILLAR (Secretary).

Sir THOMAS LITTLE HEATH, K.C.B., F.R.S. (one of the Joint Permanent Secretaries to H.M. Treasury), called and examined.

60,470. (Chairman.) You are one of the Joint Permanent Secretaries to the Treasury?—Yes.

60,471. You have been in the Treasury for a number of years?—Thirty years.

60,472. The Commission have had evidence as to the nature of the joint control over the legal departments exercised by the Lord Chancellor and the Treasury. Is that control adequate from the Treasury point of view?—On the whole, yes. You are aware that there is a special arrangement by which, when there is a vacancy in one of the offices of the Supreme Court, notice has to be given to the Lord Chancellor and to the Treasury that the appointment is vacant, and it cannot be filled up for the space of a month after that notice. That, of course, gives the Lord Chancellor or the Treasury the opportunity of suggesting that the appointment should be dispensed with; beyond that, I think we must rely upon the heads of the departments themselves, out of their sense of duty to the public, to call attention to any case in which they are overstaffed and where economies would be possible.

60,473. The Treasury control applies, I suppose, to these two points—the salaries paid and the number of officers employed?—Yes.

60,474. Is that control exercised principally when applications are made for some increase of staff or of salary?—Generally, yes.

60,475. In cases where the work has decreased, or, for other reasons, there may be ground for thinking that the staff is in excess of the requirements, what means has the Treasury of ascertaining that there is a case for the reduction of staff?—We are dependent, I think, first upon the Lord Chancellor's Permanent Secretary, who has greater inside knowledge than we have, but beyond that I think we only have common knowledge; if, however, any suggestion is made to us that there is room for economies we welcome either a suggestion for economies or a suggestion for an inquiry into the office.

60,476. Supposing some ground were shown for thinking that a reduction was possible in a particular department, what would be the usual method of dealing with the position?—I think we should consult the Lord Chancellor as to whether he would consent to have the matter inquired into, probably by a committee.

60,477. In practice your communications upon matters of that kind are with the Permanent Secretary to the Lord Chancellor?—Yes, with the Permanent Secretary.

60,478. The Permanent Secretary, we have heard, has at present practically nothing in the way of assistants or an office to help in the performance of his duties?—I believe not.

60,479. If the duties of the Lord Chancellor in connection with the legal departments, and therefore the duties of his Permanent Secretary, were increased; if, for instance, as has been suggested, a larger number of legal appointments were concentrated in the hands of the Lord Chancellor, do you think his Permanent Secretary should be given any further assistance than he has at present for dealing with the questions that arise about the legal departments?—I think that might certainly be desirable, especially as there has recently been a change in the holder of the office.

60,480. A new holder will not be so familiar with the whole system as the retiring Permanent Secretary, and for that reason he might stand in greater need of some strengthening of his staff?—Yes, I think very probably.

60,481. In the case of the Scottish legal departments the Treasury exercises a similar control over the staff and the remuneration?—Yes.

60,482. What is the method of exercising its powers in Scotland?—We have the advantage in Scotland of the assistance of the King's and Lord Treasurer's Remembrancer, who lives in Edinburgh, who is the accounting officer for the Votes for Law Charges and Courts of Law, Scotland, and for the Register House, Edinburgh, and who is therefore in a position to advise us, after enquiry upon the spot, as to whether a certain proposal is justified or not.

60,483. You rely largely on his advice?—Yes.

60,484. The communications with regard to the Scottish legal departments take place with the Secretary for Scotland?—Yes.

60,485. All matters concerning the number of officers and their pay are discussed with him?—Yes.

60,486. Do you consider, from the Treasury point of view, that that system works satisfactorily, and that

30 June 1915.]

SIR THOMAS LITTLE HEATH, K.C.B., F.R.S.

[Continued.]

the Treasury has adequate powers and means of control in Scotland also?—Yes, I think so.

60,487. The question has been raised whether the method of internal control in each department is satisfactory, and it has been suggested that it might be advantageous to have a more definite head of each legal department than there is, in some cases at any rate, at present, and also that that head might with advantage be assisted by an officer similar to the 'chief clerk' in some of the civil departments for the purpose of dealing with the details of discipline, distribution of work, leave, and so forth. Will you give us your opinion on that suggestion?—As regards the head, I think that in principle it would certainly be desirable to have one head who should be perhaps primus inter pares, but with as much control as possible over the others; but whether that would be possible in practice I am really not in a position to say. The organisation of the offices is somewhat peculiar; I believe they are to a large extent in almost watertight compartments, and therefore how far a change of that kind would be practicable I am not able to say. If it were practicable I think it would be a good thing. As regards a chief clerkship, in a similar way I think the services of a chief clerk would probably be very useful in co-ordinating the staffs and seeing that the offices were run on the same lines; but whether in practice there would be a sufficient amount of that work for him to do, again I am not in a position to say.

60,488. He need not necessarily be employed exclusively in that work, but might combine it with other official work if the chief clerk's work was not sufficient to employ his full time?—Yes.

60,489. Is it not the case that in some departments, where there is a chief clerk, the chief clerk does other official work as well as the chief clerk's work proper?—Yes, that is so.

60,490. Are you acquainted with the system under which appointments are at present made to the legal departments?—Yes, generally.

60,491. The greater number of appointments, as you are aware, are in the hands of the Lord Chancellor; in the case of appointments in the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division, the President of the Division has the power of appointment; in the Central Office appointments are made in rotation by the Lord Chancellor, the Master of the Rolls, and the Lord Chief Justice; and in a small number of cases, such as the Clerks of Assize and their own personal clerks, the judges have the power of appointment?—Yes.

60,492. Has that system created any inconvenience from the Treasury point of view?—I think I may say that it has, and that the Treasury would welcome a concentration of the patronage in the hands of one officer, as, for instance, the Lord Chancellor.

60,493. It has been strongly represented to us by some witnesses that the power of appointment ought to be in the hands of a Minister responsible to Parliament. Do you concur in that view?—Yes.

60,494. The application of that principle in the case of the English legal departments would appear to lead to the conclusion that the power of appointment ought to be placed in the hands of the Lord Chancellor?—Yes.

60,495. It has also been suggested both by an ex-Lord Chancellor and by the retiring Permanent Secretary to the Lord Chancellor, that a standing committee should be created for the purpose of making recommendations to the Lord Chancellor regarding the candidates for appointments. The kind of committee suggested is one consisting of a Civil Service Commissioner, the Permanent Secretary to the Lord Chancellor, the head of the department concerned, and an outside solicitor of eminence. The actual responsibility for the appointment would rest with the Lord Chancellor who is responsible to Parliament, but he would make the appointment after considering the recommendations of such a committee. What is your opinion as to that suggestion?—I think that the Royal Commission have already made a similar recommendation in one of their earlier reports with regard to appointments to various professional and technical offices, and if the Lord Chancellor, with the probable increased amount of patronage which, under the new system, he might have to administer, desired the assistance of an advisory committee of that kind, I myself see no objection.

60,496. If such a committee were created, would there be any advantage in the Treasury being represented upon it?—I think not.

60,497. A similar question has been raised as regards Scotland. As you are aware, the Scottish legal appointments are made chiefly on the nomination of the Lord Advocate. The suggestion has been made that the Lord Advocate might be assisted by a similar committee, but the evidence of the Scottish witnesses has, on the whole, not been in favour of a committee of recommendation. Are you prepared to express any opinion upon the question as applying specially to Scotland?—I think the same principle would apply, except, I take it, that the amount of patronage in Scotland is much smaller, and therefore the question is not quite on the same scale.

60,498. The question is on a much smaller scale, and therefore it has been represented that the Lord Advocate has full opportunity for knowing the merit of candidates, without a committee of recommendation. On the other hand, in Scotland the political system of appointment has been in force in a way that is unknown in England, and the committee was suggested rather as a means of eliminating the political element in appointments. Have you any opinion upon the suggestion from that point of view?—I have not a very definite opinion except that I think in principle the ordinary method of admission to the Civil Service by Civil Service certificate should be followed, and the usual course of promotion in a similar way.

60,499. We have been told that the higher appointments in the Pay Office of the Supreme Court are made by the Treasury. Do you consider that that system should be maintained, and if so, do you consider that the functions of a committee of recommendation of the kind I have described should extend to that case?—I think that the appointment by the Treasury is the best method of appointment, having regard to the special character of the office. Whether an advisory committee should be appointed depends much on the same considerations as I have mentioned before. If the First Lord of the Treasury felt that a committee would be of assistance to him in making a selection of candidates I should see no objection. On the other hand, of course, the permanent staff of the Treasury is an expert body which is always at hand to give advice as to the qualifications possessed by candidates, and therefore the machinery is already there.

60,500. The work of that office is of a technical accounting character?—Yes.

60,501. The qualifications required would be experience in accounting and in the management of a considerable staff?—Yes.

60,502. Have the persons appointed to the headship of that office on recent occasions been in possession of those qualifications before their appointment?—I think that the First Lord of the Treasury must have satisfied himself of their qualifications for the post, and they were, of course, certified to by the Civil Service Commissioners in the usual way.

60,503. A Civil Service certificate is required in their case?—Yes.

60,504. In the Civil Service generally the conditions of service are determined by Orders in Council?—Yes.

60,505. Do those Orders in Council apply to the legal departments, speaking generally?—Technically they do not, I believe.

60,506. But in certain particulars similar rules are applied, are they not?—Yes.

60,507. For instance, in the English legal departments a Civil Service certificate is required for the greater number of the posts?—Yes.

60,508. What are the exceptions in which Civil Service certificates are not required?—Appointments by the Crown, of course, are one exception; and the other exception is that of persons appointed under what is known as the Professional Section.

60,509. That includes, for instance, all the masters and registrars?—Yes.

30 June 1915.]

Sir THOMAS LITTLE HEATH, K.C.B., F.R.S.

[Continued.]

60,510. Practically all the higher posts are so dealt with?—Yes, the higher posts.

60,511. In Scotland we have been told that the number of Crown appointments is large in proportion to the whole staff, and extends to comparatively humble posts. It follows from that, that in a considerable number of cases in Scotland the requirement of a Civil Service certificate does not exist. Do you consider it desirable that in all cases except the highest posts the appointment should be such as to require a Civil Service certificate?—Yes.

60,512. In other respects do you consider that the Orders in Council which govern the Civil Service ought to be substantially applied to the legal departments?—Yes, I think that would be desirable. I am strongly of that opinion.

60,513. One point which is regulated by Order in Council is the age for retirement. What should be the condition in that respect in the legal departments?—I think undoubtedly that all the ordinary members of the establishment of the Supreme Court should be required to retire at 65, on exactly the same footing as Civil servants generally.

60,514. You would apply that to Scotland also, I suppose?—Yes, to Scotland also.

60,515. When you say the ordinary members, you contemplate certain exceptions. What would they be?—I believe it is suggested that there are certain high officials, such as the masters, whose posts are very largely judicial in character, and that there is not the same necessity to fix the compulsory age for retirement at 65. I should be guided very much by the opinion of the Lord Chancellor upon a matter of that kind.

60,516. Would you be prepared to contemplate a higher age being fixed in the case of posts of a judicial or semi-judicial character?—Yes.

60,517. Have you considered what age would be suitable?—I think the natural age to suggest is 70.

60,518. I suppose in that case, as in the case of the Civil Service generally, you would admit of extensions under proper safeguards in exceptional cases?—I should think there ought to be less necessity for extension in those cases.

60,519. Other points which are regulated by Order in Council are leave, sick leave, and hours of attendance. Taking the question of leave first, we find that in some of the departments where the work falls off largely in the legal vacations, there may be some difficulty in finding employment for the whole staff during the whole year. What is your view as to the question of vacation and leave for the legal departments?—I think the existence of the long legal vacation makes a difference, but, so far as circumstances admit, I should like to see the ordinary rules as regards length of leave apply to the legal departments.

60,520. That is to say, the persons employed in the legal departments should be under obligation to give their services with holidays not exceeding the Civil Service holidays, and that system should be applied as far as practicable?—Exactly.

60,521. What do you say as regards hours of attendance?—I think that is very much on the same footing. I should like, if it were practicable, to see the usual seven-hour day established with a staff in numbers corresponding to that length of day.

60,522. When the seven hours' day was established in the Civil Service generally, was any compensation given to officers who had hitherto been serving only six hours a day?—Only to certain lower classes of officers. I believe I am right in saying that no one in the Higher Division, as it is called, received any consideration, but only other persons below the salary of 500*l.* a year.

60,523. Such compensation as was given was merged when those persons were promoted to a higher class?—Yes.

60,524. Are there any other points regulated by Orders in Council which would be applicable to the legal departments?—Apart from leave, sick-leave, attendance-books, and rules as to the grant of increments, nothing further occurs to me except that which prohibits a Civil servant from taking part in the management of any society or business of any description outside his public duties.

60,525. Is the Civil Service rule as absolute as you state it?—It is absolute, so far as it regards work which would necessitate a man being absent from his office during the ordinary office hours.

60,526. Is there any prohibition preventing a Civil servant from taking part in the management of a business if it can be done by attendance outside his official hours?—Not by Order in Council if it does not interfere with the discharge of his normal duties, that is to say, if it takes place in the evening, and is not inconsistent with the discharge of his public duties. But many departmental regulations go further.

60,527. Are there any other matters regulated by Orders in Council?—There are rules about probation and the rules about the granting of increments being contingent on a certificate that a man's conduct has been such as to justify the grant of an increment.

60,528. It would be reasonable, you think, that the same rules should apply in the legal departments?—Certainly.

60,529. The Commission has received evidence from persons employed in various branches of the legal offices, asking that they should be made pensionable. Before asking your opinion on some of the particular points which have been raised before the Commission, I should like to have some information as to the principles which have guided Parliament and the Treasury in determining what officers should be pensionable and what officers should not be pensionable. Can you give us a general statement of the principles upon which the pension system is based?—As you are aware, there are two main classes of public servants—one is the pensionable class who are eligible for pensions under the Acts of 1859 and 1909 or corresponding enactments; and the second is the class of what I may call gratuitable employees who may receive compassionate gratuities under an Act of 1887. I should say that the principle upon which the distinction was made between those two classes is this: there are certain classes of persons whom it is important in the public interest to retain throughout the years of their active life, on the ground that their duties are such as require long training and experience, so that their services become more valuable from year to year as time goes on. On the other hand, as regards the gratuitable or unpensionable class, these considerations do not operate; they are mainly posts which are not permanent or which could be filled, on a vacancy occurring, quite easily by equally qualified persons from the outside at market rates of wages. That I should think was the general principle upon which the distinction was made which has been embodied in those Acts of Parliament.

60,530. Are all persons in the employment of the State either pensionable or gratuitable, or is there a third category which is neither one nor the other?—There is a third category of persons paid out of a lump sum allowance given to a particular officer to enable him to provide himself with the necessary assistance.

60,531. You mentioned, as the ground for giving pensions, the importance of having a method of retaining for the service of the State persons who have been trained for particular work and whose services it is therefore important to retain. Has not another consideration entered into the question, namely, the importance in the interest of efficiency of requiring the retirement of servants of the State at a suitable age before they begin to be incapable of performing their duties efficiently, and the scandal that would result if those servants of the State were compelled to retire without any means of maintenance at all?—I have no doubt that one consideration in the minds of the framers of the Act was that the system of pensions would enable the State to dispense with the services of persons who were past their work; but I think the main consideration was, as I have said, the interest of the State in getting the best service in return for the salaries paid together with the prospect of a pension.

60,532. In your view, it is that consideration which has mainly determined the point at which the line was drawn between pensionable and non-pensionable service?—That is my belief.

60,533. Will you tell us how that is applied in practice? What are the actual qualifications which are necessary in order to make an employee pensionable?—First, of course, his work must be permanent; secondly, he must (save in excepted cases) be appointed in the regular and prescribed way by means of a Civil Service certificate, a qualification which involves not only the ordinary qualifications for his duties, but also the question of health and character. The third condition is, that it must be a whole-time appointment.

30 June 1915.]

Sir THOMAS LITTLE HEATH, K.C.B., F.R.S.

[Continued.]

60,534. Taking first the condition of admission, you have told us that, in the case of Crown appointments and in the case of professional appointments under Section IV. of the Act of 1859 or Section 17 of the Supreme Court of Judicature (Officers) Act, 1879, a Civil Service certificate is not required?—Yes.

60,535. In those cases are any steps taken to ascertain that the health of the person appointed is satisfactory?—I think in a number of departments a medical certificate is required in the case of professional appointments, and the Treasury is of opinion that it ought to be required.

60,536. Is it ever required in the case of Crown appointments?—I cannot speak positively. I am not aware that it has ever been required.

60,537. It is not a condition laid down either by the Treasury or by Order in Council that it should be required?—No; if in any case it is required, it must rest on the decision of the Minister who is responsible for the appointment.

60,538. You say it is your opinion that a medical certificate should be required in all cases?—I think it is very desirable that it should be required.

60,539. Then you say that whole-time service is another requirement?—Yes.

60,540. Is that statutory?—That is not statutory so far as the Acts of 1859 and 1909 are concerned. It is a matter of established Treasury practice since the date of those Acts, and it has received a sort of Parliamentary sanction by its application to the gratuitable class by the Act of 1887. Compassionate gratuities can only be granted to persons whose employment is whole-time.

60,541. (Mr. Boutwood.) Is that universally true? I remember a case where a charwoman did not get a gratuity because she had not fulfilled some condition, but she was gratuitable?—Charwomen, I believe, are understood to give whole-time; that is to say, they are understood to work some five or six hours in a day—presumably not the same hours that a clerk works, but an equal number of hours.

60,542. (Chairman.) You have spoken hitherto only of those pensionable under the general Acts?—Yes.

60,543. There are also certain special Acts making particular classes pensionable?—Yes; the legal departments, indeed, get their pensions under special Acts.

60,544. Is it the case that under certain of those special Acts officers who do not give their whole time are pensionable. For instance, in the case of the Sheriffs in Scotland is that the case?—I have heard of that case. I was not aware of it before. I believe that is so.

60,545. Do you know of any other cases of that kind?—I do not know of any other case.

60,546. So that, speaking generally, with some few possible exceptions of that kind, the requirement of whole-time service is applied as a criterion of pensionability?—Yes.

60,547. In your opinion that ought to be maintained?—Yes.

60,548. Are there any other criteria?—Another requirement is that the salary must be payable out of moneys voted by Parliament. Then there are the other qualifications about a minimum length of service, and so on, which I need not go into.

60,549. The payment out of moneys voted by Parliament is held to exclude persons paid out of a lump sum granted for the purpose?—On the ground that such persons are not in the direct employment of the State; that lump sum is a lump sum payment to a certain officer for providing himself with assistance.

60,550. In such cases the employee is appointed by the officer to whom the lump sum is entrusted?—

Exactly; he is appointed by him and he is dismissed by him.

60,551. In some cases the actual salaries paid to individuals out of the lump sum are fixed by the Treasury, are they not?—In the case of certain registrars' offices I believe that is the case.

60,552. But, even though that is done, is it still held that the fact that the lump sum is given to the head of the office to administer excludes the person employed from pension?—Yes.

60,553. Is the real ground for that exclusion the fact that they are appointed by the officer, and not by a central authority?—That is the understanding upon which the whole system rests—that they are to be the servants of the person to whom the allowance is made, and that he is responsible for them; he appoints them and he dismisses them, and they have no direct relation to the State.

60,554. That has been the rule which has hitherto applied to the staff of solicitors in public departments, for instance?—Exactly.

60,555. Also to the various local staffs of the County Courts, the District Probate Registries, and, in Scotland, to the Sheriff Courts, the Procurators Fiscal, and so forth?—Yes.

60,556. Apart from the direct system of State pensions which you have described, does the State in any cases give assistance to pension schemes for persons less directly in State employment?—There are two quite exceptional cases of that kind, namely, national school teachers in Ireland and elementary school teachers in England, who are under special Acts.

60,557. Will you tell us generally the nature of the arrangements in those two cases?—In the case of Ireland there is a National School Teachers' Fund, out of which pensions and gratuities are given, and which is fed by deductions from the salaries of the teachers, by interest on an endowment fund, and by an annual direct vote put on the Estimates.

60,558. In that case, does the State guarantee a certain scale of pension?—Subject to this, that if it proves to be the fact that the benefits are too great, it is open to them to make new rules to increase the deductions or decrease the benefits.

60,559. Is the fund administered by the State?—Yes.

60,560. What in practice has been the working? Has it worked satisfactorily?—I am afraid it has been rather unfortunate, because that particular fund has been in a state of what I may call chronic insolvency, and the State has had to come to its assistance by making larger votes.

60,561. Is that because the actuarial calculations on which it was based were too sanguine?—It is, I think, because undoubtedly teachers, like Civil servants, appear to be a selected class of life, with chances of life considerably above the average, and sufficient allowance, presumably, has not been made for that fact by the actuaries in calculating the benefits.

60,562. The scheme is entirely a pension scheme, and not a life assurance scheme?—It is a pension scheme subject to this: that there are certain cases in which under the earlier rules premiums may be repaid in case of disablement.

60,563. You mentioned also the scheme for elementary school teachers in England?—That is on a different system. The State there gives a very small pension which may either be a superannuation allowance at the age of 65, or a disablement allowance from an earlier age, the rate of calculation being at so much per year of service—quite small, 1*l.* or 3*s.* That is all that the State does. In addition to that there is an annuity fund, to which the teachers themselves contribute by deductions from their salaries; and they receive in accordance with tables certain annuities from the age of 65 in return for those payments.

60,564. By whom is that fund administered?—That fund is administered by the Education Office, with the help, as regards finance, of the National Debt Commissioners.

60,565. The fund is invested in Government securities?—It is invested in Government securities.

30 June 1915.]

Sir THOMAS LITTLE HEATH, K.C.B., F.R.S.

[Continued.]

60,566. Is any particular scale of pension guaranteed?—Yes, the annuities are payable in accordance with certain tables from the age of 65.

60,567. So that the State takes the risk of the actuarial calculations on which those tables are based?—Yes, unless fresh tables were constructed under the powers of Section 4 (2) of the Act of 1898.

60,568. How long has that scheme been in force?—Since the year 1899.

60,569. So that there has hardly been time to tell how it works out?—There have, as a matter of fact, been two actuarial enquiries into the fund. One was seven years after the initiation of the scheme, and the other is now proceeding. The experience of that fund, too, may, I think, prove not very satisfactory. On the occasion of the first actuarial report there was very grave reason to believe that there was a large deficiency, but it was felt that the time during which it had been in force was too short to enable a sound opinion to be formed, and it was decided to wait for the next report. That report will, I believe, soon be ready; but it is not ready at the present time.

60,570. Has a similar question been considered in relation to secondary school teachers?—Yes; there was a Committee appointed by the Board of Education to consider whether a system of that kind with any modifications which might appear suitable in the case of secondary and technical school teachers should be started for such teachers.

60,571. Were you a member of that Committee?—I was.

60,572. Will you tell us, briefly, what that Committee recommended?—So far as regards the State contribution the recommendation was that precisely the same scale of pensions—the small pensions which I have referred to—should be given as are given in the case of elementary school teachers, and that anything beyond that should be provided by the teachers themselves and the employing authorities.

60,573. The employing authorities being the different education authorities?—The local education authorities. We did not recommend that an annuity fund should be started such as had been established for the elementary school teachers, partly because the number of teachers was not large enough to justify the establishment of such a fund, but also because of the dissatisfaction which has always been felt among the teachers with the working of that annuity fund. It is inevitable with a fund administered by Government that it should be restricted to a certain small area of investment, so that the return on the amount contributed is much smaller than if the fund were not under Government control. Consequently the teachers have always been discontented with the benefits which they have received from the contributions made to the annuity fund. Accordingly the Committee on Pensions for Secondary and Technical School Teachers recommended that the system should be quite different, a system not controlled by Government, but that in view of the comparatively small number of teachers it should be worked through insurance companies, the teachers making arrangements by certain deductions from their salaries to secure benefits at the ages of 60 or 65, which might be of varying kinds. There might be the endowment assurance, or the annuity payable from a certain age, and so on. The result of that would be that the work would be spread over several insurance companies. There was an idea that the selection of those insurance companies might be governed by a committee containing representatives of the teachers with a representative from the Board of Education, and that it should be worked in that way without any intervention from Government.

60,574. The Committee were of opinion that such a scheme was perfectly practicable?—Yes.

60,575. Did that Committee examine exhaustively the great variety of schemes which are in force for pensions to teachers employed under different authorities?—Yes; a great many details will be found in that report of schemes that have been established by various authorities or bodies of persons.

60,576. Without going into details as regards those schemes, would it be correct to say generally that in a very large number of cases schemes are actually in force and working, under which benefits, determined or undetermined in amount, are secured by means of contributions from the salaries of the teachers aided by contributions from the employing authority?—Yes, in a good number of cases.

60,577. Are you acquainted with the system of pensions which is in force in the case of the Poor Law services?—I am aware of the system which was established by the Poor Law Officers Superannuation Act.

60,578. Is that also a system of contribution by the person employed aided by the employer?—I believe that that is the system under which, while the officers contribute a certain amount by deduction from their salaries, the employing authority is responsible for the payment of a certain rate of pension; that is to say, the balance which the contributions fail to produce will be payable out of the rates.

60,579. In that case the employing authority takes an undetermined responsibility, the amount of which, as compared with the expectation, will depend upon the accuracy or inaccuracy of the actuarial calculations?—Yes.

60,580. In the Committee on Secondary School Teachers' Pensions, did you examine any of the schemes in force in the case of other private employment—the case of railway companies or other large employers?—I think we did not examine them in detail. We were aware of the existence of such schemes.

60,581. There are a large number of schemes in force which are based on that principle of contribution by the employee, aided by a contribution in some form or a guarantee of benefits by the employer?—Yes. We were also informed that in a good many cases those funds, too, had proved to be insolvent; that is to say, these large private companies were not exempt from the same fate which had befallen other schemes of the kind.

60,582. That is to say, where the employer had undertaken to guarantee a certain scale of benefits, the burden had turned out in many cases greater than was expected?—Yes.

60,583. Turning now to the particular cases in which representations have been made to the Commission on the subject of pension, we have, in the first place, certain cases in the central legal offices both in England and in Scotland. The staff of the Official Solicitor ask to be made pensionable. Can you tell us on what ground they have not been hitherto considered to be eligible for pension?—The ground, I think, is the same as in the case of the solicitors' departments to which reference has been made. The Official Solicitor is granted a certain allowance for clerks, and he is responsible for the appointment and dismissal of the clerks; and he also, in this particular case, is financially responsible for the funds which he administers.

60,584. We were told that the staff of the Official Solicitor is, for all practical purposes, permanent, and that, as in the case of departmental solicitors, the expectation that there would be an interchange between the departmental staff and the staff in private offices in the general profession has not, in fact, been realised. On that and other grounds the Commission has made certain recommendations with regard to the staff of the departmental solicitors which would result in a different method of appointment and the grant of pensions. Are there any circumstances which differentiate the staff of the Official Solicitor from those other staffs, and would make the recommendation of the Commission inapplicable to the Official Solicitor's staff?—There is the difference that they would have to be pensionable under the Supreme Court of Judicature Acts, and therefore they would have to be made officers of the Supreme Court in the same sense as the pensionable officers under those Acts. There is the further fact that the Official Solicitor himself is not a pensionable official, and I think that will constitute a difficulty in making his staff pensionable.

60,585. Why?—It would, of course, require a different method of appointment, that is admitted; but I think if the financial responsibility of the Official Solicitor remained as it is it would be difficult to

30 June 1915.]

Sir THOMAS LITTLE HEATH, K.C.B., F.R.S.

[Continued.]

maintain it with a system by which he was not responsible for the appointment of the clerks.

60,586. The financial responsibility difficulty could be got over by requiring fidelity guarantees or insurance from the employees?—No doubt.

60,587. Apart from that, does the fact that the Official Solicitor himself is not pensionable make it impossible that his staff should be pensionable?—I think that difficulty could probably be got over, but I have understood that the Official Solicitor himself has said that he would wish to have a veto on the appointment of clerks to his establishment. That, of course, would be quite impossible under a system of Civil Service certificates.

60,588. Would that necessarily be incompatible with the granting of a Civil Service certificate?—I think that if that requirement were withdrawn the difficulty could be got over. I think the method of appointment would have to be changed; I think persons would have to be appointed by the Lord Chancellor, subject to one of the recognised methods for entry into the Civil Service.

60,589. If the staff were appointed by the Lord Chancellor, and if the system were adopted of a committee of recommendation, the Official Solicitor would, no doubt, be a member of that committee for the purpose of appointments to his own staff?—No doubt.

60,590. In that way he would have a voice in the appointment?—Yes.

60,591. Another case was that of the mapping staff in the Land Registry. That staff, as you are aware, was originally taken from the Ordnance Survey, and they represented their claims to pension on various grounds, among others that the corresponding employees in the Ordnance Survey had, since they had quitted that department, been admitted to pension. Can you tell us why they have been considered not to be pensionable?—I think the only difficulty in that case was that it was uncertain how far the existing number of men would be permanently required in the Land Registry. There was also the question as to whether it might be amalgamated with some other department, either with the Ordnance Survey or with the Land Valuation Department of the Inland Revenue. That doubt, so far as I know, is the only obstacle to their being made pensionable on similar lines to the Ordnance Survey assistants.

60,592. The corresponding staff in the Ordnance Survey were admitted to pensions some years ago?—Yes, after a certain number of years of unpensionable service—15 years, I think.

60,593. Can you tell us on what terms they were made pensionable?—The terms were that they should submit to a deduction from their salaries as a set-off against the pension charge. This deduction was graduated on a scale between 5 and 10 per cent., according to the number of years' service which a man had. Then, on ultimate retirement, they were allowed to count half their adult unestablished service for pension in addition to their established service.

60,594. Have there been many other cases in which an unestablished staff has been established?—I can recall to mind two cases; one is that of a few hundreds of men belonging to the class known as clerks to surveyors of taxes. Those officers were originally all in the personal employment of the surveyors and therefore unestablished, but, during the last few years, they have been divided into four classes, the two upper classes being made pensionable and the two lower classes being still unpensionable. Appointments to fill vacancies in the established classes are made by selection from the unestablished classes.

60,595. The established classes are filled by promotion from the unestablished?—Yes, by selection from the unestablished classes.

60,596. In that case was a deduction made from the salaries of the persons admitted to pension?—I am inclined to think that no deductions were made, because definite scales of salary were adopted for the established classes, and they were put on those scales.

60,597. What was done in that case about counting previous unestablished service?—The same principle was followed, that they should count towards pension half their adult unestablished service in the direct employment of the Board of Inland Revenue, but not their previous service in the personal employment of the surveyors.

60,598. You mentioned a second case?—That is the case of certain draughtsmen in the Office of Works and in the War Office. Those persons were considered to be doing work superior to the class of ordinary draughtsmen, and it was thought that their work was so valuable that they came within the cases where it is desirable to retain people in a pensionable capacity. Consequently a system was started by which a certain number of them were established on much the same lines, namely, that of the unestablished service so much could be counted as had been spent on the superior work, but not exceeding half the total years of unestablished service.

60,599. Is there any other large body of clerical workers in the service of the State who are still unpensionable?—Yes, there are quite a number of persons. From a rough return which I had made the other day, I think the clerical persons under that category number something like 4,500 or 5,000, not including the Post Office. There are clerks to certain inspectors of factories and others; there are a large number of hired writers and clerks in the War Office and Admiralty, and a few other classes of that kind, the total being something like 4,500 on pre-war figures.

60,600. Have many of those persons the opportunity of promotion or appointment to pensionable classes?—As regards the writers and clerks in the War Office and Admiralty there is a class above them of established writers, and I presume that they have the chance of selection for those posts. So far as I know there is no particular outlet for the other classes.

60,601. Apart from those, would the greater number of unpensionable employees of the State be of the artisan class?—Of the artisan class or labourers.

60,602. The case of the scribes in the Central Office of the Supreme Court and in the Principal Probate Registry has also been represented to us. On what ground have they been considered unpensionable?—In that case there is a statutory obstacle, namely, that they are paid by piecework.

60,603. What statute does that depend on?—On Section 2 of the Act of 1859. Under that section they must be paid salaries or wages.

60,604. That has been held to exclude men paid by piece-work?—Yes.

60,605. Then are no officers paid by piece-work pensionable?—I am not aware of any clerks at the present time. I dare say there may be workmen in dockyards who are paid by piece-work.*

60,606. Are the dockyard men paid by piece-work pensionable under the Act of 1859 or under any special Act?—The established dockyard men are mostly pensionable under the Act of 1859 or 1909.

60,607. In spite of the fact that they are paid by piece-work?—They are presumably pensioned on time rates. I am afraid I am not acquainted with the details of their wages.

60,608. The words of Section 2 of the Act of 1859 are: "Persons who shall have served in an established capacity in the permanent Civil Service of the State, whether their remuneration be computed by day-pay, weekly wages, or annual salary"—those are the words which are held to exclude payment by piece-work?—Yes. No doubt in the Admiralty the men are normally paid by day-work, but there may be certain particular duties for which the rate of pay is changed.

60,609. These scribes are gratifiable?—Yes.

60,610. Their case has, I think, on various occasions been represented to the Treasury?—I think there was a proposal made for the establishment of some kind of contributory system.

* I understand that in fact there are no cases in which established dockyard workmen are now employed on piece-work. The rule is that no officers are pensionable who are not paid salary or wages. But piece-work earnings, in the rare cases where established officers are partly employed on piece-work, may be taken into account under Section 2 of the Act of 1859 as emoluments.—T. L. H.

30 June 1915.]

Sir THOMAS LITTLE HEATH, K.C.B., F.R.S.

[Continued.]

60,611. A suggestion was made that a contributory scheme should be started. Before dealing further with the nature of a possible contributory scheme, it may be convenient perhaps to mention the other cases in which claims have been made to pension. A similar case to the scriveners in the English legal offices is the case of the engrossers in the Sasines Office and in some other offices in Scotland. The considerations which apply to them are I presume the same as those which apply to the scriveners in the English legal offices?—Yes.

60,612. We have also received representations from the staff of the local offices—the County Courts and District Probate Registries in England; the Sheriff Courts and Procurators Fiscal in Scotland. From what you have said I gather that the reason why they are not pensionable is, that they are appointed by a local officer and paid out of a lump sum allotted to him for the purpose?—That is so.

60,613. Under existing legislation, would it be possible to make them pensionable?—To which class do you refer?

60,614. I am speaking now of the staff employed in the offices of County Courts, District Probate Registries, Sheriff Courts, and Procurators Fiscal?—I will take the District Probate Registries first. I think that legislation would be necessary in that case. We have been advised that the clerks to registrars in the local probate registries are not officers of the Supreme Court within the meaning of the Judicature Acts, and therefore, if they were to be made officers of the Supreme Court and appointed with a Civil Service certificate, I think there ought to be legislation.

60,615. We have been told that the legal opinions given with regard to the position of the clerks in district probate registries have not been always identical in tenor?—There have been two opinions, the second opinion agreeing with that which the Treasury has held all along.

60,616. And it was diametrically opposite to the first opinion?—It was opposite to the first opinion.

60,617. You told us that the ground of that opinion was that these clerks are not officers of the Supreme Court within the meaning of the Supreme Court Officers Act?—Yes; I think legislation would undoubtedly be necessary to make them so. In the case of the County Court clerks, I think to pension them would be quite incompatible with the system established by the County Court Acts.

60,618. The method of the appointment of the clerks in district probate registries is that at present they are appointed by the district probate registrars with the approval of the President of the Probate Division?—Yes.

60,619. Do you consider that that method of appointment is compatible with making them pensionable?—No; I think it would have to be changed.

60,620. You think it would have to be appointment by a central authority and not merely with the approval of a central authority?—Yes, I think so.

60,621. As regards the district probate registrars themselves, we were told that those who had formerly been clerks in the Principal Probate Registry, that is to say, 26 out of the total number of 40, are pensionable because they entered the Service originally with a Civil Service certificate. As regards the remaining 14, the evidence was, I think, not quite explicit, but, generally speaking, the remaining 14 are not pensionable?—I believe that is so.

60,622. Do you say that they cannot be pensionable unless they are admitted by a Civil Service certificate?—Unless they are made officers of the Court with a Civil Service certificate or exempted from the necessity of obtaining a certificate by an order of the Lord Chancellor.

60,623. They are presumably officers of the Court, as 26 out of the 40 are pensionable?—Those particular officers are, I understand, officers of the Court.

60,624. That is to say, the post of probate registrar in itself is, or at any rate can be, that of an officer of the Supreme Court?—Yes, subject to the method of appointment being such as is prescribed.

60,625. The method of appointment is in all cases at present appointment by the President of the Division?—Yes.

60,626. So that in that case the question of the Civil Service certificate is the determining point?—Yes, I think so.

60,627. Turning now to the County Courts, the County Court judges themselves are outside the reference to this Commission, and we need not, therefore, speak of them. The registrars are appointed by the County Court judge, and the staff of the offices is appointed by the registrar?—Yes.

60,628. What do you say as to their position regarding pension?—I think, as I have said, it would be impossible to make them pensionable except by legislation.

60,629. Taking the registrars first, some of them are part-time officers, and would be excluded, I suppose, on that ground?—Yes.

60,630. Taking those who are whole-time officers, what is it that excludes them?—There are a certain number, as you are aware, who are whole-time officers because they are debarred from private practice by an order of the Lord Chancellor. There are, I think, 14 of those in 12 courts.

60,631. Are those registrars pensionable?—Yes. Then there are, I think, some others with whom there is an understanding that they give their whole time to the work, but they are not under a definite obligation.

60,632. They are not pensionable?—No.

60,633. There might be a claim on their part to be made pensionable on the ground that in fact, although not in form, their position is similar to that of the pensionable registrars?—A claim, which, of course, has no basis on the Act. It could only be put forward as an equitable claim.

60,634. In order to bring them within the Act, it would be necessary that the Lord Chancellor should make an order excluding them from private practice?—Yes.

60,635. The staff are excluded, I suppose you will say, because they are appointed by the registrar, and not by any central authority?—Yes.

60,636. Even where they give their whole time to the post?—Even where they give their whole time.

60,637. It has been pointed out to the Commission that very considerable inconvenience arises in practice from the absence of a pension system, because when a clerk gets old and past his work a registrar naturally hesitates to turn him away without any provision at all, and the result is that the men are sometimes kept on, doing such work as they can do, long after they are past their work. That consideration is one which appears to tell in favour of the creation of a pension system of some kind. Given that there are difficulties in placing a staff of this kind upon a State pension system, do you consider that any form of contributory pension scheme would be applicable to them?—I think it is unlikely that any Government would be prepared to initiate a scheme involving State contributions to the pensions, because, for one reason, it is understood that these clerks are paid the full market rate. But provided that a sound scheme of benefits, depending upon contributions from the salaries of the men themselves, were established, I think that the Treasury would be quite prepared to agree to such a scheme, and to give any advice and facilities in their power, such as facilities for the deduction of the premiums from salaries.

60,638. You have told us that in certain cases the State has assisted pension schemes of persons not directly in the employment of the central authority—in particular, in the case of elementary school teachers?—Yes, in the very special case of elementary school teachers in England.

60,639. In what respects do you consider that the case of the elementary school teachers, that you speak of as a very special case, differs from the case of the staff of the County Court?—I am not quite prepared to say what were the reasons for the establishment of the systems in the cases of the elementary school teachers, but I call them special, because they were each of them started after definite inquiries, and by special Acts, which do not apply to anyone else.

30 June 1915.]

Sir THOMAS LITTLE HEATH, K.C.B., F.R.S.

[Continued.]

60,640. A special Act, no doubt, would be necessary if any scheme with State assistance were to be started for County Court employees?—Undoubtedly.

60,641. You told us that in the large variety of schemes, both of local authorities and private employers, which were examined, there was in all cases some contribution on the part of the employer to assist the contribution on the part of the employed?—I think that, no doubt, is the general rule; but I pointed out that, as regards the elementary school teachers in England, the annuity fund part depends entirely upon the contributions made by the teachers.

60,642. In the case of the secondary school teachers, the recommendation of your Committee was that that contribution on the part of the employee should be met by a contribution on the part of the employer, and also by a separate annuity on the part of the State?—By a separate small pension paid by the State, which was to have no connection with the other system to which the employer and teacher contributed.

60,643. Except this connection, that it would add to the amount that the person employed would receive?—Exactly—that they were paid to the same persons.

60,644. In that case there was to be a contribution from the direct employer—the education authority—and also this separate assistance to the individual from the State?—Yes.

60,645. Do not the considerations which in cases such as that, and in all the numerous schemes which are in force, make it desirable that the employer should contribute something, apply to such a service as that of the County Courts?—I think that to establish a scheme for County Court employees as Civil servants with a State contribution, would be introducing a new element into the superannuation system of this country which would require a very great deal of consideration, and would probably have the effect of upsetting that system as it now exists. It could not, of course, be confined to the staff of County Court registrars; it would have to be applied, sooner or later, presumably to all officers now gratuable under the Act of 1887, such as those writers in the War Office and Admiralty, clerks, and others of the same kind. I think that any Government would hesitate before it introduced an entirely new principle into the superannuation system of the country.

60,646. In introducing any contributory pension scheme in the case of an existing staff, is there always a considerable difficulty as regards persons who have been in the Service for a long time, and are approaching their age for retirement?—Very great difficulty. That is always one of the greatest difficulties in establishing such a fund.

60,647. Supposing it was considered desirable, on general grounds, that some form of pension scheme should be instituted, would there not be some force in a request for assistance from the State in that respect—a request, I mean, for contribution in some form that would help out the scheme as regards existing employees?—I know of no precedent for such a concession, and I do not think, as regards persons paid at the market rate, as are the staffs of registrars of County Courts, that that suggestion would be entertained any more than the other.

60,648. I am speaking, not only of the registrars of the County Courts, but of the whole of their clerical staff?—Yes, I was referring to the whole of their clerical staff.

60,649. Was it not the case that the teachers were paid the market rates?—They are the servants of the local education authorities, and I am really not in a position to say. I do not know what their salaries were.

60,650. They were employed before the existence of this system, and were paid such rates as would command their services?—No doubt.

60,651. Is there any reason to think that the County Court employees are paid at a better market rate than the teachers were?—I am afraid I am not able to compare the two.

60,652. In saying that the County Court employees are paid at the market rate, have you made any comparison with the rates of pay of clerks in outside employment?—The comparison there I take to be with the rates paid to clerks in solicitors' offices and the like and

I understand that the rates paid by the registrars compare favourably with those rates.

60,653. Have you made a comparison of that nature?—I am taking that rather on the basis of the evidence which I understand has already been given.

60,654. Supposing Parliament were willing to give some assistance to a contributory scheme, have you considered at all what the general principles of such a scheme should be. In the first place, schemes for a contributory pension system aided by the employer can be broadly divided into two classes—those in which the employer guarantees a fixed scale of benefits, and those in which the employer makes a contribution determined in some way but does not guarantee a fixed scale of benefits. If any scheme were adopted, into which of those two classes in your opinion ought it to fall?—Subject to what I have said about the unlikelihood, as I think, of a State contribution, I think the objections to a State scheme are those which I have mentioned—that the benefits could not be such as the contributing officers expected, because of the narrow range of Government investments.

60,655. You would, therefore, prefer a scheme which would not be directly managed by the Government?—Exactly.

60,656. In which the persons concerned might make their own arrangements for investment?—Yes.

60,657. Or their own arrangements with an insurance company or a group of insurance companies?—Yes.

60,658. The recommendation which your Committee made in the case of secondary school teachers was of that nature?—Yes.

60,659. And you would apply that same principle in the case of any contributory scheme for the persons we are considering now?—Yes, I think that would be the safest principle to adopt.

60,660. In the case of the secondary school teachers your recommendation was that the State assistance should be in the form of a determined contribution—in that case of certain annuities—but not in the form of any guaranteed benefits?—Yes.

60,661. That principle would also apply in this case?—Yes, if any State assistance were given.

60,662. The other cases I have mentioned are those of Scottish local legal staffs. Broadly speaking, would the same considerations apply there as those we have been discussing in the case of County Courts?—I think exactly the same.

60,663. You have no special observations to make with regard to those Scottish staffs?—No, I am not aware of any substantial differences.

60,664. (Mr. Boutwood.) When the change was made in the hours of attendance in the Civil Service from six hours to seven, was there any general reduction of the staff or postponement of enlargement, do you think?—Yes, I think there was. So far as a reduction could be made vacancies were left unfilled. I could not say that the reduction was proportional to the increase of hours, but some reduction was made.

60,665. There was a tendency in that direction—may I put it in that way?—Yes.

60,666. It was put before us that the case of a pension is really, apart from anything in a statute, one of general considerations, and applies equally whether a man gives his whole time or part time, and there is no more difficulty in giving a man a proportionate pension on a part-time salary than there is in giving him a pension on a whole-time salary. I think we were told that in some of the local services, under some of the Poor Law authorities, that did take place and that part-time officers got pensions?—Yes, I think I can explain what is meant. In the early days of the Imperial Superannuation Acts there was a possibility of giving pensions to persons who did not give their whole time, as, for instance, I believe I am right in saying, certain prison officers who were transferred to the State in, I think, the year 1878. It was not possible to refuse pensions to those persons, because presumably they gave the bulk of their time to the State, but what was done was, that one quarter was subtracted from the full amount of pension. That arrangement, of course, is long since dead so far as the Government service is concerned, but there are a number of local cases which come to us on appeal where an officer of a local authority appeals against the award which has been made by the authority and the Treasury has to decide on that appeal. In certain cases these officers are part-timers, and generally the local authority makes that 25 per cent. deduction. If the local authority does not make it the Treasury does.

30 June 1915.]

Sir THOMAS LITTLE HEATH, K.C.B., F.R.S.

[Continued.]

60,667. (Chairman.) Is it the case that the officials who come under the Poor Law Service Pension Act are in many cases part-timers?—I am afraid I could not say; I do not know.

60,668. Is it under that Act that appeals come to the Treasury?—No, under the provisions of the Local Government Act of 1888 and the Local Government (Ireland) Act, 1898, as applied by subsequent statutes.

60,669. (Mr. Boutwood.) When you spoke of certain pension schemes as being insolvent or in danger of insolvency, what precisely did you mean? What I have in my mind is this: I know one very large pension scheme which was reported to be insolvent, but it merely meant that if the maximum number came on for the maximum benefits at the same time the fund could not stand it. That is a very severe test. Did you mean something less than that?—The question, of course, is an actuarial one. The actuary, I take it, reckons up the liabilities that will accrue according to the ordinary chances of life in respect of the staff then employed; he finds that the contributions are amounting to a certain sum annually, but that if those liabilities mature, which he has arrived at on the tables of life, ultimately the benefits will not be secured; that is to say, there will be a deficiency.

60,670. It means a more moderate test than the one I mentioned. There is another point which perhaps you can explain. How is it that in some of those lump sum cases the Treasury approve the salaries that are paid to the clerks employed and in other cases apparently the Treasury do not, but leave the whole thing to the discretion of the man who receives the lump sum? Procurators Fiscal, I understand, have their lump sum and they do with it precisely what they like; the Treasury does not approve the division between themselves and their clerks, much less the division between the several clerks?—Yes, that is the general rule.

60,671. Why is that difference made?—I am afraid I am not in a position to say how it arose. I think it is mostly in cases where the officer himself, who is entrusted with this money, is anxious to have some sort of guidance as to how he shall distribute it and what salaries would be proper to be paid. I think it is a matter of arrangement in the particular case as to whether he wants any assistance to enable him to decide the question.

60,672. I suppose the Procurators Fiscal feel quite satisfied. We heard of a case where five clerks was the normal establishment of a Procurator Fiscal, but three of them went to the war, so he was left with two, and presently he got a third. What happened to his lump sum? Did he return the unused part to the Treasury, or would he still be master of the financial situation?—I think those men who went to the war would be under the general rule with regard to Civil servants who go to the war, namely, that they retain the balance of salary which remains to them; that is to say, a clerk, for example, in any public department who goes to the war receives in addition to his military pay any balance of his civil salary which exceeds that military pay. So probably the balance of the sum paid to this Procurator Fiscal would still go to the clerks, and so far as regards the rest of it to the substitutes.

60,673. You think they come under the Civil Service rule?—I think so.

60,674. (Mr. Graham Wallas.) At present there are a number of statutory regulations settling the powers of patronage in the legal service. For instance, the fact that the Lord Chancellor, the Master of the Rolls, and the Lord Chief Justice take it in turn to appoint clerks in the Central Office is a matter of statute, is it not?—Yes.

60,675. There are a number of other statutes regulating the minutiae of patronage in that way, are there not?—Yes, no doubt.

60,676. Do you think it would be an advantage to the public service if all those statutory regulations with regard to patronage were swept away and Orders in Council, which could be altered in accordance with experience, were substituted for them?—I see no objection, with the concurrence of the authorities concerned.

60,677. At present the responsibility of the Lord Chancellor for the various offices varies a good deal. His responsibility, for instance, in the Probate Office is much less than his responsibility in other offices, is it not?—Yes, I think that would be so.

60,678. Do you think it would be an advantage to the public service if his responsibility were made general and uniform over all the legal departments?—I think it would be more convenient, certainly.

60,679. By statute there is in most of the legal offices a senior officer—a senior registrar or senior master—who receives a higher salary and has some sort of general responsibility in the office. At present, I understand, he holds his office by pure seniority, because he is the man who has been there longest. That is not in accordance with the custom in other departments, is it?—Speaking generally, I think not.

60,680. Do you think that, from the point of view of the experience of the Treasury, it would be an advantage that the direct head of an office should be appointed for some other reason than seniority?—I think, probably, it would be a good thing.

60,681. During the nineteenth century there has been a considerable transfer of administrative work from the Courts to Government departments. For instance, the administration of charities, bankruptcy, and to a certain smaller degree the dealing with lunatics, have been transferred from the Courts to Government departments?—Yes.

60,682. So far as you know, has that transfer resulted in advantage to the public service?—So far as I know, yes.

60,683. Do you think that that transference could be carried further, and, in particular, a good deal of the administrative work in the Probate Registry at Somerset House could be transferred to the Inland Revenue Department?—I do not think that would be an advantage to the public service. I doubt even whether it would be practicable.

60,684. At present the greater quantity of administrative work which arises on the passing of property by will is done in the Estates Duty Office?—No, I think not. Their business is solely the collection of revenue; they have nothing to do with administration whatever. Their sole business is to ascertain the amount of duty payable.

60,685. But that is a longer business and requires more careful examination of the will than the work done in the Probate Office in ordinary cases?—I understand that that is done on what is called an Inland Revenue affidavit, and that is just the one point of contact between the work done in the Probate Registry and the work done in the Inland Revenue Department. All that is done in common, practically, is that the registry uses its machinery to transmit the Inland Revenue affidavit to the Inland Revenue Department with a view to payment of duty before administration is granted, but there is no overlapping of functions, and the functions of the two departments are entirely distinct.

60,686. You do not think there is any work done in the Probate Registry of a purely administrative type involving no judicial decisions which might become part of the ordinary work of a department of the Government service?—No; I do not think there is any case for a transfer.

60,687. In a number of other Government offices there is a considerable amount of professional work which is done with the assistance of ordinary administrative officials. Take the Medical Department of the Local Government Board; you have a large body of professional men there, and they work with the assistance of ordinary Civil servants?—Yes.

60,688. And it is not there held to be desirable that those Civil servants, because they are working under or in connection with professional men, should have had

30 June 1915.]

Sir THOMAS LITTLE HEATH, K.C.B., F.R.S.

[Continued.]

quasi professional experience?—I am afraid I do not know enough of the details of the work which is done for these medical officers to express an opinion.

60,689. But if it were claimed that all clerical posts in the Medical Department of the Local Government Board should be filled by persons who had had a certain amount of experience as messenger boys to a doctor and in sticking labels on pill boxes and so on, that claim would be rejected by the Treasury, would it not?—So far as I know, assistance of a technical kind should not be necessary.

60,690. And unless the technical requirements of the post are quite serious, it should not be made a professional post?—I think not, unless it is quite necessary that it should be.

60,691. Have you ever thought that that would apply to the existing system by which not only are there definitely professional posts in the legal departments, but the ordinary clerical work is done, not by people having definite professional qualifications, but by people who have spent some little time in a purely subordinate position in a legal office?—I am not quite sure that I follow the question.

60,692. Have you considered whether it is desirable that the existing system should continue, by which it is required that those who do clerical work in some of the legal offices should have, not professional qualifications, but a certain amount of experience of subordinate work in a professional office?—I think that would be mainly a question for the head of the department. I am afraid I do not know enough about the details to say whether a subordinate clerk need have any legal knowledge or not. I should doubt it myself, but my opinion is not of any great value in comparison with that of the persons responsible for working the offices.

60,693. Finally, I want to get from you certain facts as to the appointments in the Supreme Court Pay Office. Is it true—and perhaps you will check it, if you have not the facts before you—that the last two appointments of Assistant Paymaster-General have been Mr. Rowe on 1st October 1900, and Mr. Paulton on 23rd December 1909; that in 1900 Parliament was dissolved on the 25th September, Mr. Rowe's predecessor resigned on the 30th September, and Mr. Rowe (who had been an official in the Central Conservative office) was appointed on the 1st October; that in 1909 Mr. Rowe resigned on the 14th October, Parliament was prorogued on the 3rd December, and Mr. Paulton (who had been for many years a member of the then retiring Parliament) was appointed on the 23rd December?—I am afraid I have not the details, but I will take them from you.

60,694. Perhaps if they are found to be wrong you might check them in a footnote to your evidence?—Yes, I will.

60,695. As to the Deputy Assistant-Paymaster, Mr. Sharp resigned on the 4th December 1905, on the next day the Government resigned, and upon that same day Mr. Longley was appointed—on the 5th December?—No doubt you are right, but I will certainly look it up.

60,696. (Mr. Coward.) The Chairman commenced this morning by asking you a question on the present organisation of the Judicial Offices, and I gather you said that if there were any means that could be suggested for the more economical working of the offices the suggestion would be made to you?—I should hope that that would be the case. Any suggestion of that kind would be welcomed.

60,697. Have you ever had such a suggestion made. Can you remember any such case?—I am afraid I cannot say off-hand.

60,698. You cannot remember any case?—I have not been responsible for that particular part of the office long enough to say for certain.

60,699. Would not it have come before you?—There were considerable changes made in my early days in the Treasury, round about 1890, or so. There were a great number of committees, as a result of which changes were made.

60,700. Changes were made in consequence of inquiries by committees, but I am speaking of recommendations from those whom you would consider responsible for the working of the offices?—No doubt there have been recommendations from Sir Kenneth Muir Mackenzie.

60,701. Yes, but I am speaking of the heads of departments. You will see that at the Central Office there are 76 people in the office; in the Chancery Division 69, and in the Probate Registry 125. That makes altogether 270. So that it is a very large office, and the three branches together employ a large number of people. I want to know whether anybody in the Treasury has ever had a recommendation from an official in command of those offices with regard to their more economical working?—I certainly do not remember any. I could not say that there have not been any, because that would require a considerable amount of research.

60,702. I think probably you would have heard it, had there been any?—That would depend upon whether I was doing the work for the time being.

60,703. It may be that there have not been, and I should rather assume that there have not been any such recommendations. If not, that might arise from one of two causes; either because the offices were so efficiently worked that there had been no reason for any recommendation, or because there was nobody in authority who ever took the trouble to do it?—That is possible, no doubt.

60,704. I may say, personally, I have been trying to ascertain, while we have been sitting here a great many days, who is in authority at any one of those offices who would take control and ascertain what was going on in the office and see whether it could be more economically worked, but I have not been able to get an answer. Therefore, I think, somebody suggested that there should be a committee whose duty it should be to attend to appointments and to supervise offices of this kind?—I should see no objection to a committee for such a purpose, or to the staff of the Permanent Secretary of the Lord Chancellor being strengthened in order to enable him to deal with it.

60,705. Do not you think it would be a great advantage?—So far as the Treasury is concerned, I think we should be glad to see any further means of control provided.

60,706. Taking, for instance, the Probate Registry, there are 125 people in that office, most of them receiving very substantial salaries. The question is whether those people are properly employed. If you found that, instead of 125, the work could be perfectly well done by 80, it would make a very great deal of difference to the amount of money the Government would have to pay. That is clear, is it not?—Certainly.

60,707. Therefore, you would say that some means of testing the sufficiency of a staff, and so on, would be very advantageous?—It would be very welcome to the Treasury, I can assure you.

60,708. (Sir John Kempe.) With reference to the question of Treasury control, the Treasury control depends very considerably upon their control of the Estimates under the Act of Parliament which gives them such control?—Yes, mostly it depends on the control over the Estimates.

60,709. That is to say, it can enforce anything it wants done, because it has behind it the power to diminish the Estimates?—Yes, in theory at least.

60,710. In the case of a disagreement between the head of a department and the Treasury, how is it settled?—It depends upon the particular case. There are cases which can only be settled by a decision of the Cabinet. In many other cases it can be settled by inquiry of some kind which is agreed between the head of the department and the Treasury. In the case of ultimate disagreement there is no tribunal so far as I know except the Cabinet.

60,711. In that case, is the head of the department or the Treasury responsible to Parliament for the staff?—The Treasury is responsible for presenting the Estimates to Parliament, but I think under the usual practice the head of the department itself is responsible to Parliament for what is in that Estimate so far as the administration of the department is concerned.

60,712. That is to say the power of Parliament is to put on the screw by a motion to reduce the salary?—

30 June 1915.]

SIR THOMAS LITTLE HEATH, K.C.B., F.R.S.

[Continued.]

By a question in the House or a motion to reduce the salary.

60,713. At present there is no direct representation in Parliament of the legal departments, and all the Lord Chancellor has to do with the Estimates is the Vote of his salary as Speaker of the House of Lords. His legal salary is on the Consolidated Fund?—Yes.

60,714. That is to say, all the pressure that can be put on the Lord Chancellor is through the Vote to him as Speaker of the House of Lords?—And through the responsibility put upon him by the Judicature Acts.

60,715. That is to say the ordinary responsibility of an Act of Parliament?—Yes.

60,716. It does not depend on the Votes in that case?—So far as the salaries on the Consolidated Fund are concerned, of course not.

60,717. I suppose you would not be in favour of more direct representation of the legal departments in Parliament. It has been suggested that there should be some Minister responsible for the legal departments?—The practice, I think, is for the law officers of the Crown to answer questions and deal with matters relating to the legal establishments.

60,718. But there is no direct responsibility; they get their subjects up and answer questions, but there is no direct responsibility?—It is an understanding—a convention. I do not know the origin of it, but it is the practice.

60,719. Would the Treasury think it a good thing to have a direct representative in Parliament of the legal departments?—I doubt very much if it would be practicable. If it were practicable, no doubt concentration of responsibility would be a good thing.

60,720. It has not been considered by the Treasury?—I do not remember it having been brought forward.

60,721. How would the recommendations of a committee be enforced? You appoint a committee; you may accept their recommendations or not, as the Treasury feel inclined; there is no one to back it up and to enforce responsibility as to accepting the recommendations of a committee?—No, it is within the discretion of the Government for the time being to adopt the recommendations of a committee or not.

60,722. That is to say the general arrangement of the legal departments is in rather a fluid state compared with other departments; there is not the same responsibility and there is less power of control in the legal departments than in other civil departments?—I think, practically, there is control through the Permanent Secretary to the Lord Chancellor, but I admit it could probably be improved.

60,723. With regard to the age limits, you are inclined to think that the limit of 65 might be applied to the legal departments, but not to the higher offices. I suppose one reason for that distinction would be that there is no question of promotion which comes in. The age of 65 is imposed, I suppose, partly in order to improve the flow of promotion?—Undoubtedly that is one element.

60,724. And probably if not for that you might have had a higher age for the Civil Service generally?—I think the general opinion would be that 65 was long enough really, after a length of service which must be, in ordinary cases, 40 years. I think probably there would be no general suggestion that the age should be extended beyond 65.

60,725. You spoke of the experience of an officer in a legal department being valuable, but you would not consider experience in a legal department more valuable than experience in a civil department?—Not except in the case of actual judicial work.

60,726. The higher officers, in fact?—Yes.

60,727. With regard to the contributory scheme for pensions which you were speaking of, if a contributory scheme were settled your view is that it should be carried out by an outside body and not by the Treasury. The Treasury would not make a scheme even if it was entirely contributory; they would not run the scheme?—There are very strong objections to that, in my opinion.

60,728. You said that all the Treasury would do would be to facilitate the collection of the contributions through the salaries paid and give advice?—Exactly.

60,729. Those two things only?—I am not aware of any other way in which they could assist; but if there was any other way which did not involve the expenditure of money no doubt it would be considered.

60,730. The Treasury help the Civil Service Insurance Society by deducting all the premiums from salaries?—Yes.

60,731. Would you do the same sort of thing for a contributory scheme of pensions?—Yes.

60,732. Would you be inclined to favour the Civil Service Insurance Society by recommending any department which wished to have a contributory scheme to go to the Civil Service Insurance Society?—I think it is rather difficult for the Treasury, or the Government, to recommend one particular society, because I think questions of favouritism are quite certain to be raised. The Civil Service Insurance Society works, I understand, through the North British and Mercantile Insurance Company, which means, in practice, one company, and I think the Government would scarcely undertake to recommend one company. For one reason it would be a kind of guarantee that that company would be solvent.

60,733. There is a separate body to administer the Civil Service Insurance Society. It is true they work through the North British and Mercantile, though there is a strong representation of the Civil Service; but you would not consider that sufficient to warrant you in treating them separately?—No, I think not.

60,734. (Mr. Matheson.) I want just to be clear with regard to one point as to part-time employés. I understand from you that it is the practice of the Treasury not to grant pensions in the case of part-time employés?—Yes.

60,735. But I was not quite clear whether you thought it would be impossible to apply a pension system, as far as the working of it went, to part-time employés?—I think it would be, in practice, impossible, and very undesirable.

60,736. Would not grants in proportion to salary be possible?—In what way?

60,737. A pension proportionate to the salary would practically correspond to the services rendered, would it not? You have a man earning a part salary for a part service. Is it impossible to adjust a pension scheme to that?—I do not say it is impossible, but I think it is not desirable that a part-timer should be included in any scheme of regular pensions. I am not prepared to say that in the case such as has been mentioned, of a system worked through insurance offices, those part-timers might not contribute out of their salaries if they thought fit, but I do not think the State could suggest anything in the shape of a pension scheme for part-time persons.

60,738. Your objection is really more that it is undesirable than that it is impracticable?—I think that so far as State pensions are concerned it is really impracticable; but for other systems, not State systems, I think, perhaps, it is quite possible. I might add, perhaps, that the Committee on the Secondary School Teachers, to which the Chairman referred, thought that scheme should be confined to whole-timers. That is the latest experience I have of that particular case coming up.

The Right Hon. SIR SAMUEL THOMAS EVANS, P.C., K.C. (President of the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division), called and examined.

60,739. (Chairman.) You are the President of the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division?—Yes.

60,740. The first point on which the Commission would wish to know your views is the question of appointments in your division. At present, all appointments, both in the Principal Registry and in the local registries are made by the President of the Division?—Yes. The clerks in the district registries are appointed by the registrars themselves subject to my approval, otherwise the appointments are all in my hands.

30 June 1915.]

The Right Hon. SIR SAMUEL THOMAS EVANS, P.C., K.C.

[Continued.]

60,741. The suggestion has been made by witnesses of weight, that it is desirable that all legal patronage should be in the hands of a Minister responsible to Parliament. They have suggested, therefore, that appointments in the Probate Division should be transferred to the Lord Chancellor. A further suggestion was made that the Lord Chancellor should be assisted in making his appointments by a committee, who should make recommendations with regard to the candidates, and that the Lord Chancellor should appoint after considering the recommendations of the committee. In the first place, will you give us your opinion as to the suggestion that the patronage should be transferred to the Lord Chancellor?—Well, he would have to act, of course, upon the knowledge imparted to him by other people or upon the recommendations of the committee you have mentioned, because he could not possibly have any personal knowledge of the various applicants for these many offices. So far as my division is concerned I do not see any reason for a change, and I do not think the change would be for the better. The head of my division, whoever he may be for the time being, is responsible, and it is a division compact by itself, and he is able to control the appointments so as to have the men most fitted to do the work in the division. I do my very best—and my predecessors did before me, no doubt, and my successors will after me—to get the right man. I see no advantage in a change myself. Upon the question of the appointment by a Minister ultimately responsible to Parliament, that is a very big question. I was in Parliament for many years, and it would be a very sorry thing, I think, that a Minister should be catechised, as he might be catechised, upon every appointment to every single office in the legal service.

60,742. The Lord Chancellor is at present in that position as regards the large number of appointments which he makes?—Yes, and is it suggested that he should always be the Minister responsible, because they do not ask so many questions in the House of Lords as in the House of Commons?

60,743. The suggestion was that he should be the Minister responsible for all appointments in the legal departments?—But was not it suggested that somebody should be also answerable in the House of Commons?

60,744. That was a further suggestion?—I do not see that the work would be done better if the Lord Chancellor were ultimately responsible instead of the President of the Division. In many respects I should like to be relieved of all patronage; it is difficult, and sometimes very disagreeable, but looking at it from the point of view of the efficiency of the office, I do not think the change suggested would be for the better.

60,745. Looking at it from the point of view of the control which the President exercises over the offices of his division, do you see any serious drawbacks to a change?—No, I see no serious drawbacks. I should assume that the Lord Chancellor in such a case would deem it desirable to consult the President of the Division.

60,746. If the further suggestion of a committee to examine the merits of the candidates were carried out, it was proposed that in the case of each department the head of the department should be a member of the committee, or should be represented on the committee, so that the department would in that way have a voice in the appointment?—Do you mean the head of the division—the person in my position, for instance—or the head of a department in the division? I, of course, have the three branches—Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty. The Admiralty is quite distinct. The Probate and Divorce work is carried on in Somerset House, and, so far as the probate work is concerned, in the District Registries too; but the same officials attend to the divorce part of the work in Somerset House as attend to the probate part of the work.

60,747. I think the idea was that the representative on the committee would be the head of the department and not the head of the division; that is to say, in the case of Probate appointments, I presume, it would be the senior registrar?—Yes; and in the case of the Admiralty the senior registrar. Yes, I think it would be very advisable, if there was such a committee, that a representative of the department should be on it.

60,748. In that case the representative of the department would naturally represent the views of the President of the Division?—Yes, he would.

60,749. In the case of vacancies for clerks in the Principal Probate Registry, is it your practice to publish or notify vacancies in any way?—No. It is hardly necessary, because the applicants are very numerous. Whether there are vacancies or not I have constant applications from people who think they are fit and competent, and from other people who are interested in the younger men, who say: "Will you kindly remember So-and-so as a candidate for an appointment when it falls vacant?" In all cases I keep a list of such people, and where I think there is a possibility of finding a suitable man I communicate with him when a vacancy arises. I ask for recommendations from various people; candidates themselves have a certain number of questions which they have to answer, and they have to send testimonials. In some cases I have known the people myself, and then, of course, that would not be necessary. I always have an ample list from which to choose when a vacancy occurs. The applicants, as you know quite well, are much more numerous than the vacancies.

60,750. Does anybody interview the candidates personally on your behalf?—Sometimes, indeed, very often I see them myself, unless I am absolutely satisfied with the people who send testimonials, not merely satisfied that they know the candidates, but satisfied myself with the people who give the testimonials. If they are personally known to me I might appoint a man without seeing him, but in most cases I should see him. My secretary sees him first and I see him afterwards.

60,751. Have you considered whether open competition would be a suitable method of recruiting clerks for the Principal Probate Registry?—Followed by appointment of the one who is first in the competition?

60,752. Yes?—I do not know that I have considered it particularly. That is the rule in the Civil Service generally, I think. I have no objection to it.

60,753. That system of recruitment applies to far the greater part of the general Civil Service?—Yes; to a certain extent I act upon that principle in this way: supposing there is a vacancy, I almost always nominate two, sometimes three, and then when nominated they go up for examination, and in each case I give the appointment to the one who is highest. To that extent, therefore, I act upon that principle.

60,754. Is that a Civil Service examination?—Yes, the ordinary Civil Service examination they have to pass.

60,755. In fact, a form of limited competition?—Yes, that is a limited competition. I suppose the other method would involve examinations at stated times of all the applicants whose claims, or whose applications, might be considered. I have no objection to it in principle; but, again, I do not think it would effect very much improvement, if any. Would you suggest in that case that the candidates for offices in my Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division should form a class by themselves to be examined, or that they should form part of a much more numerous class for the Civil Service generally?

60,756. If competition were adopted for, say, the Central Office, and some of the other offices of the Supreme Court as well, then probably the convenient way would be to have a single examination, and a specified number of vacancies would be open for competition in each of the divisions or departments. There would be no impossibility in filling vacancies in the Central Office and in the Principal Probate Registry from the same examination, and the larger the number of vacancies it was possible to offer at one examination, probably the better the field of competition that would be secured?—Then it would be one big class for all the legal offices.

60,757. Yes; or for such of them as were included in a scheme of competition; it would not necessarily apply to all?—I have no objection to it in principle at all, but I think there is a good deal to be said for the opinion held and expressed before the Commission by my registrar, Mr. Musgrave. You may know a very deserving case, a case of a man who is quite efficient for the work, and whom you might like to appoint, but who might not be very good at an examination. There are some people who are better in an examination room than outside; there are numbers of others who are very much better outside than in an examination room. It would limit the choice in that respect. I think a certain amount of freedom might be left to the person responsible for the appointment ultimately.

30 June 1915.]

The Right Hon. SIR SAMUEL THOMAS EVANS, P.C., K.C.

[Continued.]

60,758. (Mr. Coward.) A man who is good at both is the better man of the two?—Good in the examination and good outside—yes; there would be no difficulty at all.

60,759. He is the better man, you would agree?—Yes, I think so, prima facie, certainly. I am not against examinations; on the contrary, I am in favour of them as tests.

60,760. (Chairman.) We have been told by several witnesses, I think Mr. Musgrave was amongst them, that professional knowledge is not necessary before entry into the Principal Probate Registry?—No, I do not think it is. They acquire the professional knowledge very quickly; they only get in at the bottom. I am not talking about the registrarships, but about the clerkships. They come in at about the age of 20, 21, or 22, and if they are generally efficient they learn very quickly.

60,761. So that there would be no objection from that point of view to a system of competition in subjects of general education?—No; the people whom I have appointed have, hardly any of them, I think, had any professional experience. They have not been solicitors' clerks so far as I remember. I have a list of them here.

60,762. (Mr. Coward.) You are speaking of the Probate Registry more especially?—Yes, the Probate and Divorce up to now. I understand you do not ask questions about the Admiralty because it has been fully laid before you by Mr. Roscoe who knows it very well, and I am assuming that the questions put to me now are about the Probate and Divorce Divisions.

60,763. I thought so, but it was not so stated?—That is so.

60,764. (Chairman.) Turning to the District Probate Registrars, we have been told that the majority of them have previously been clerks in the Principal Probate Registry—I think 26 out of 40 were the numbers given. Is it your view that, speaking generally, the clerks from the Principal Probate Registry are the most suitable persons to appoint to be District Probate Registrars?—I do not quite take the view that they do in Somerset House about that. I have appointed several from Somerset House, but I think also solicitors in the locality have a right to expect these appointments sometimes. I have appointed to places, for instance, like Birmingham, a solicitor on two occasions. I made it a necessary condition of their appointment that they should devote the whole of their time to the work, because in a place like that I think they ought to, and in both cases they submitted to that condition. One was Mr. Moore-Bayley and the other was Mr. Grainger. I was asked to do so by the branch of the Incorporated Law Society, or such local law society as exists in Birmingham, and I was thanked by them by a resolution for appointing a solicitor—not for appointing the particular man. The man in Somerset House, no doubt, knows the work thoroughly well and is competent, but I do not regard it as any right of his to expect to be appointed in every case to a local registry. I think many of those cases ought to go to local men. The argument which they adduce is this: "Promotion is very slow in the registry, and if you do not appoint always from the registry we do not get any advance or improvement," and so on. That is being put forward from time to time and I do consider it, and I think in several cases recently I have promoted men from the registry to some of the very biggest districts. The last one I appointed was my registrar, Mr. Registrar Hardy, who was appointed to Exeter, where the work is not very hard, but where the salary is very considerable.

60,765. I suppose that in all cases where district registrars are appointed from the Principal Registry they are restricted from carrying on other business?—Yes, they are.

60,766. What is the position when a local solicitor is appointed? Is he restricted?—In every case in which I have appointed local solicitors or barristers I have required them to give up their practice entirely, either as solicitors or at the Bar. I appointed a barrister to one place, I think, shortly after I was appointed myself, and he asked whether he could practise or sit at Quarter Sessions, and I said, "No; you must give the whole of your time to this work."

60,767. Are a certain number of cases still left where private practice is allowed?—I should think so; but I really do not know. I have not inquired. I should think it is so in a considerable number of cases. When vacancies occur, a man very often says: "My father was the registrar here for very many years," and sometimes, "My grandfather was also registrar here," and I should like to continue it in the family," and I have looked in the Law List and found that they were clerks to magistrates and to County Councils, and positions of that kind. I should think that is so in most cases where the registrar is a solicitor.

60,768. Is it your view that there should be a restriction on private business in all cases?—That is my view, if it is possible. Some of the registries are very small however.

60,769. In some of the very small registries a man would have very little to do if not allowed to do anything else?—Very little.

60,770. It would be hardly practicable or desirable to restrict him to the work of the registry?—No. In such cases I should probably come to the conclusion that it would be better to appoint somebody from Somerset House on that ground. I very likely could not get a solicitor to take it. I think in most cases, as a principle, I should like the work of the Probate registries in the districts to be performed by people who devote the whole of their time to the work. The question of small registries raises the larger question of redistribution.

60,771. Is it your view that a redistribution of registries would be advantageous?—I think so, if it is one complete scheme. There have been occasionally applications for the extension of a district where there has been an extension of boundaries. For instance, in Birmingham, not very long ago, they extended the boundary of the city, and in a part of the Bill there were provisions for extending the area of the Probate jurisdiction. That, of course, raised questions on the part of those from whom those areas were to be taken, and they pressed me very hard to say that they ought not to be interfered with; but I said: "The only thing you ought to consider is the public interest—that is all." And, I think, if, in the public interest the area of a particular city is extended, there ought also to be a re-arrangement of area of the Probate Registry. But, except in such case where there is local legislation of that kind by a special Act of Parliament for the district, it cannot be done when a particular vacancy occurs, but it must be a scheme as a whole; I am satisfied of that.

60,772. At present the situations of some of the registries certainly do not coincide with the centres of population?—No; because, of course, they were the old diocesan towns. That is the reason for that. For instance, the Llandaff Registry, which I know very well, is in the City of Llandaff. Whether it has been incorporated by Cardiff now I am not quite sure; Cardiff tried to get it several times, and Llandaff said: "No, we are a city, and you only a town." Cardiff has become a city since then, but the registry is at Llandaff. It does not matter much to Cardiff, as it is quite near—within a mile or two; but the registry is far away from Swansea and populous places in the Rhondda Valley and other parts of Glamorganshire, and from Merthyr.

60,773. Then you would be in favour of a comprehensive scheme of re-arrangement?—I should.

30 June 1915.]

The Right Hon. SIR SAMUEL THOMAS EVANS, P.C., K.C.

[Continued.]

60,774. It was suggested by one witness that the territorial limits of the areas of the local registries should be abolished altogether, and that everybody should be at liberty to prove wills wherever he liked?—There is no difference in connection with work of a similar kind. Your County Court registries are restricted in area and your High Court district registries are restricted too. I should prefer, I think, that there should be delimitation of area for a particular registry, but not necessarily confined to counties, because two counties might be combined very well and other counties might be divided up.

60,775. It was pointed out that in many cases the territorial limits worked very inconveniently. An instance given was of a man who works in Manchester or Liverpool, and whose business is there, but who lives in Cheshire. If his will is to be proved in the district registry his executors have to go to Chester, whereas it was suggested that it would be a convenience to men of business if the work could be done at Liverpool or Manchester?—I should think inconvenience of that kind might be rectified by coming up to Somerset House to the Principal Probate Registry.

60,776. Would there be any serious objection to the abolition of the territorial limits?—I suppose it would work out all right in practice. Nobody from Newcastle would go down to Lancashire to prove a will; but I do not think there is any inconvenience in having a particular area for a particular registry.

60,777. But would not the result of abolishing the limits be that everybody would take a will to be proved wherever it was most convenient to do so?—That may be. I see no great objection to it myself, but I suppose you have to pay some attention to local feeling in regard to those matters.

60,778. (Mr. Coward.) That is the trouble?—It always is a trouble. If you want to remove an assize from a very inconvenient place you always have these old historical sentiments arising and giving trouble.

60,779. I have been told by the law officers of the Crown that it would be impracticable. We had all this matter very seriously discussed on the Commission on Legal Delays, and when the circuit system or the case of the assizes was gone into very fully, the law officers thought it would be impossible to make a change?—Yes. That requires careful consideration. I have not thought of it very much. I have rather assumed, I expect, that there would be a definite area for a particular registry. I really do not see much inconvenience in it myself, and I do not see very great advantage in allowing them to be open to anybody.

60,780. (Chairman.) Another question which has been raised is, whether it would be advantageous to combine, in more places than at present, the Probate registry and the High Court registry?—That is difficult, too. I am aware of the recommendation of an old Committee or Commission, some time ago, which is brought to my attention every time there is a vacancy, when they say, "Cannot you appoint the registrar of the County Court to do this work, too?" In many places the work of the Probate registry is very heavy, and in those places the work is very heavy also in the County Court registry and the High Court registry. I see no reason why they should be combined. There are various difficulties in the way. Intimately connected with that is the question of salary. If the work could be combined with the other work in the registry, unless you reduce the salary in respect of one or other or all the offices, all you do is to accumulate a large salary into the pocket of one man. There is also the difficulty of appointment. In such a case, supposing the County Court registrar is also to be the district registrar of the Probate Court, the appointment would go from the President of the Probate Division, and would practically be in the hands of the County Court judge, because he is the person who really appoints, although it requires the concurrence of the Lord Chancellor to appoint the registrar. There is only one case in which they have been combined, if I remember rightly, and that is in Manchester. There are two joint registrars there. What happened there was, they combined the two offices. I do not know how they divide the work between them, but you have the man who used to be the County Court registrar, and the other man who used to be the Probate registrar, as joint registrars of the joint registry.

60,781. (Mr. Coward.) Yes; one does the common law work and the registry work and the other the Chancery work?—I do not know how they divide the work amongst themselves.

60,782. Mr. Mais is one of the joint registrars?—Yes, I think he has been here as a witness.

60,783. (Chairman.) Any change in that direction would be facilitated if the suggested transfer of patronage to the Lord Chancellor were carried out?—I think any change of that kind ought to be part of a big rearrangement of the registries generally. The Lord Chancellor has nothing to do with the appointment of a County Court registrar except to sign his name. That is all it practically comes to. He trusts the County Court judge. The County Court judge comes into personal communication with his own registrar, and knows the capability of the man and that he is the kind of man he would like to appoint; and he says: "I would like to appoint this man subject to your concurrence." I had a great deal to do with County Courts at one time, and I do not know of a single case where the County Court judge's appointment has not been approved by the Lord Chancellor.

60,784. It has been suggested (and I think a clause to the effect was actually put into a Bill which was introduced into Parliament) that where the County Court and the High Court registries are combined, the appointment should be in the hands of the Lord Chancellor, and not in the hands of the County Court judge. If that change were effected it would solve a great deal of difficulty?—I think myself that that would be rather hard on the County Court judge. The Lord Chancellor never sees the registrar. The County Court judge has got to work with him; he is under him the whole day when he sits. If I were a County Court judge I confess I should like to be able to appoint my own registrar.

60,785. Another question which has been raised in connection with the district probate registries is the matter of what is termed "agency business," and the fees which are charged for that. You are acquainted with the system to which I refer?—Yes.

60,786. Are you prepared to express an opinion with regard to that system?—Yes, I am. I do not like the system at all. It originated, I think, many years ago when the change was first made. People who were then in office said: "We have been charging certain fees," and it was thought hard to deprive them of those fees. My own impression is that it was never the intention to continue that system beyond the life of those who were then in enjoyment of the fees earned. There is no list of fees; I have no reason to suppose that they vary very much in one registry from those charged in another, but there is nothing that binds them at all, and I should like to see the system put an end to if it could be.

60,787. (Mr. Boutwood.) Does that mean that each local registrar charges what fees he likes?—Yes. So far as I am aware I do not think he is controlled by anybody. They have a District Registrars' Association, and I daresay in practice they practically charge similar fees or the same fees; but I do not think there is anything at all to bind them. In many cases—indeed, in most, I think—there is some sort of private arrangement between the registrar himself and his chief clerk by which the registrar takes a certain percentage—two-thirds, or whatever it may be, and gives one-third to his clerk. Now I do not see any advantage at all to the public in that. The public ought to know exactly what fees can properly be charged by law against them when they proceed to prove their wills.

60,788. (Mr. Coward.) The fact is, if you walk into the registry and ask a question you have it answered for nothing, but if you write a line and ask the same question you pay 3s. 6d., or whatever it is?—Quite so. There are cases where the agency fees exceed in amount the salary of the office. I have been thinking myself of sending to all the registries to require them to make a return to me of the agency fees which have been received in the registries for the last five years. In some cases I have asked—but that is for a particular appointment when I have to appoint to a particular registry—"The salary is so-and-so; please let me know the fees you have received under this agency business in the last five years," and often I have ascertained that the fees exceed the amount of the salary. I do not think the system is a good one. I am against it.

30 June 1915.]

The Right Hon. SIR SAMUEL THOMAS EVANS, P.C., K.C.

[Continued.]

60,789. (Chairman.) If the system were abolished, in the sense of prohibiting the charging of fees, would the business still be transacted by post for the public as it is now?—I think it might very well be. I do not see why it should not. Of course, you could not abolish the fees in the case of the present registrars, I suppose. I am not suggesting that for a moment. If a man whose salary is 400*l.* has been having another 450*l.* in fees you could not take the 450*l.* from him and leave him with his 400*l.*; it would not be fair. I am assuming that the present people who enjoy the benefit of the system would have to be arranged with in some way.

60,790. But assuming that due regard is paid to the interests of the present holders, you would still, for the convenience of the public, require the registrar to do business by post in the way he does now but without fees?—I should. These fees are very often charged in cases where solicitors are acting for the parties. If a solicitor, for instance, at Neath, corresponds with the office at Llandaff for his client, fees are charged in such a case. That, I think, is disadvantageous to the public. I am told that the agitation, if I may so call it, for the abolition of that system comes from solicitors. I do not want to abolish the system in order to allow solicitors to make further charges against their clients. What I want to do is to abolish the fee system in the interests of the public.

60,791. (Mr. Coward.) I do not think the solicitor would make any more. The solicitor situated away from the registrar's office writes to the registrar and asks him to tell him his business—I should think that is what it is. You mean to say that the solicitor who is practising would charge a fee for that letter?—I am not at all sure that he does not.

60,792. I should be sorry to say that he did not. I should think it is likely?—I do not know. I have done some of this work myself, only it is so long ago that I do not remember, and I cannot give the details.

60,793. I have not done any such work, and I do not know about it?—I do not mean at all that they do it knowing that they ought not to be doing it; they may think it is part and parcel of their work if they do it; instead of running up by train and spending a day, they may say: "We will charge a letter instead." They may think it a proper thing to do.

60,794. If a proper question to ask, it would be a right thing to charge for the letter, but if he is asking to be told a thing he ought to know himself he ought not to charge for it?—I only say that I am against the system, because I think it ought to be put an end to in the interests of the public.

60,795. (Chairman.) In the Principal Probate Registry no business is transacted by post at all?—I believe practically none.

(Mr. Coward.) No; they will not answer a letter.

60,796. (Chairman.) Would it be advantageous that the public and the profession should be able to transact business by post?—I do not see why they should not.

60,797. It might, in some cases, be a considerable convenience?—Yes, I think so. I have spoken to one of my registrars, a very experienced man there, in favour of the correspondence system with the District Registries, and he told me that the system in London was very different, and in London it need not be by correspondence, because London is one homogeneous place; I pointed out to him that parts of London were much further away from Somerset House than some parts of the country are away from a District Registry where they transact their business by correspondence. That is obvious.

60,798. And also there is provincial business which comes to the Principal Registry?—Yes.

60,799. (Mr. Coward.) At Lewes there is a District Registry, and there is none between Lewes and here?—Yes, quite likely; and the amount of work at Lewes is not very great. I see no reason at all why there should not be facilities rendered for carrying on the business by correspondence. There may be disadvantages; it may create delay, and, of course, information in letters may be incomplete; whereas if there is an attendance at the registry at Somerset House, a question of the official in charge, particularly in the case of a personal application, might at once procure the necessary information and the thing is done. Correspondence might cause delay, but where there are competent people dealing with the matter, either through solicitors or people acting for themselves, I do not see why there should not be facilities rendered for correspondence work.

60,800. (Chairman.) A question, which applies to the legal departments in general, has been raised, and that is the question of a fixed age for retirement. Do you think it would be an advantage to have in the departments under your control a fixed age for retirement?—That is a big general question, is it not? The clerks in the District Registries are not Civil servants; the clerks in Somerset House are. There would have to be a distinction, I assume, therefore, between those two classes of clerks. Whatever the rules in the other parts of the Civil Service are, I do not see any objection to their being applicable there to the clerks at Somerset House. Sixty-five, I believe, is the age for retirement generally?

60,801. Yes, 65 for the Civil Service.—It seems rather early. I think, in the case of clerks, such a limit, whether 65 or 70, might be a good thing, because very often if people remain long enough to become really incompetent, the person responsible does not feel inclined to be very harsh, and say: "Now you must go," though it might be very advantageous to the public service that it should be so. I suppose I ought to be hard-hearted and say to anybody who has been there long enough: "In my opinion you had better clear out," but you know quite well one pauses before one does that. On the other hand, with regard to the chief officials, the registrars, I think considerable latitude ought to be left to the people responsible to extend the time. I can quite understand that I should be very sorry to lose from the registry—either Somerset House or elsewhere—an official merely because he was 65. Mr. Musgrave is perilously near 65—I think he is 62—and I think it would be very hard to compel me to separate from him and to lose his services, which are very valuable, merely because he attains the age of 65.

60,802. In the Civil Service generally there is power, where retirement at 65 would be to the injury of the public service, to prolong the service to the age of 70?—Yes; but I should prefer a greater latitude than that. How can you say that it is in the interests of the public service? I dare say another man whom you might appoint would do equally well, but this man is doing well enough, and you know his ways, and he is there, and you think him an efficient public servant.

60,803. (Mr. Coward.) It is a very difficult question?—Yes; I think latitude ought to be given to the person responsible. In other words, I ought not to lose a man's services when he attains the age of 65. I ought to be competent to say that this man has rendered good service and ought to continue.

60,804. (Chairman.) You would put the onus of decision in the other direction. At present, if a man is not competent, you have to decide that he is to go?—I forget the words. I think they say they may continue if it is to the benefit of the public service.

60,805. In special cases the Treasury may, at the instance of the head of a department, extend an officer's employment for a further period not exceeding five years "on being satisfied that such officer's retirement at 65 would be detrimental to the interest of the public service"?—How can you say that the retirement of a man at 65 is detrimental to the public interests if he is still capable of doing his work? I should say: "Unless the head of the department for good reasons would like to continue his services."

30 June 1915.]

The Right Hon. SIR SAMUEL THOMAS EVANS, P.C., K.C.

[Continued.]

60,806. Would you be content to have an ultimate limit of 70 in all cases?—Yes. I think three score years and ten, perhaps, are enough.

60,807. What exactly is the position as regards the control of the numbers and salaries of the departments of your division?—I believe in my division—I do not pronounce upon it—it depends upon the Lord Chancellor himself.

60,808. Is that regulated by Section 84 of the Supreme Court of Judicature Act, 1873?—I am not quite sure whether it is under that Act or under the Act constituting my division. There has been no change in my time. Practically, the Lord Chancellor does nothing except to acquiesce in an appointment by me of a registrar either at Somerset House or in a district after a certain vacancy. I cannot appoint a probate registrar in the country within a month of the decease or retirement of the last one without the concurrence of the Lord Chancellor and the Treasury. That is very often inconvenient, but I am bound to say that when I have asked that an appointment should be made at once they have been good enough to say: "Yes, we are willing." After a month, curiously enough, if nothing comes from the Lord Chancellor or the Treasury, I can appoint without reference to either of them.

60,809. That is for the purpose of giving the Lord Chancellor and the Treasury the opportunity of considering whether the post is necessary?—I assume so.

60,810. But supposing any change is required, say, in the number of clerks employed in the Probate Registry?—Yes, or in the classification.

60,811. Yes, or in the salaries, what is the procedure then?—I think it rests with the Lord Chancellor, the Treasury, and myself.

60,812. The Lord Chancellor and you in concurrence regulate it with the sanction of the Treasury?—Yes; because the Treasury come in on the question of salaries.

60,813. There appears to be a provision in Section 84 of the Act to which I referred requiring "the concurrence of the Presidents of the Divisions of the High Court or the major part of them, of which majority the Lord Chief Justice shall be one," and also the sanction of the Treasury. That would seem to require the concurrence of all three presidents, or, if there is a difference of opinion between them, a majority including the Lord Chief Justice?—I am not quite sure if the Master of the Rolls is reckoned as the head of the Court of Appeal, or is it the Lord Chancellor?

60,814. I think the Lord Chancellor is the head. Is that provision ever applied in practice in your experience?—Never, so far as I know, and I should be very sorry to see it applied. I see no reason for allowing the Lord Chief Justice to put a veto upon some change which was agreed to by every other member of the committee. I think it does read that he must be not merely one of the body to consider the matter, but that he must constitute one of the majority. Supposing the body were four, it means if the other three agreed he might say: "Oh no, you shall not." It seems to me, may I say, stupid.

60,815. In practice you settle the matter with the Lord Chancellor?—Absolutely.

60,816. And it goes no further?—No; I do not know of any case in my time, nor before my time either, where there has been any communication at all with the Lord Chief Justice upon any such point. The only time when I communicate as President of my Division with the Lord Chief Justice in connection with the work of the division, is when I want assistance from his judges, when he very kindly sometimes gives me an additional judge—invariably he does, I am glad to say.

60,817. In a case where dismissal is required, the Lord Chancellor has in that case to concur with your decision?—I think he has. I am not positive about it. I have never looked into the matter and I have never dismissed up to now. I have suggested that people might go, but I have never dismissed.

60,818. Short of dismissal you have complete disciplinary powers in your division?—Yes, I think so.

60,819. (Mr. Matheson.) In the Principal Registry a large number of clerks are employed, and most of them appear to enter in the third class and then get promoted?—Yes, that is so in Somerset House. They are always appointed first to the third class.

60,820. Some of us, I think, have rather got the impression that in the lower part of the work that is done there the kind of men who come in with the hope of being promoted to the second and first classes are rather too good for the work that they have to do. Have you any opinion as to whether it would be desirable at all to divide the work between two different classes of people, of which the lower should do the more elementary and even mechanical work without having promotion except in cases of special fitness?—I think the practice there has been to cause all those who come into the office as ordinary clerks—I am not talking about registrars—to become acquainted with any part of the work, so that when promotion comes they may be promoted to any particular department in Somerset House—either the Scrivenery Department, the Search Department, the Seats Department, and so forth.

60,821. The question I wanted to raise was whether some of the work in the office was so elementary that it is a waste of money to pay for that work a class of people who are good enough to go on ultimately to the top?—That means that you would reduce the salaries; otherwise it is not wasting money. It may be wasting the energies of people who are fitted to do the work of the second class. Unless you do something as to the salaries it does not matter so far as money is concerned.

60,822. Except for the moral effect that it may have in an office; if you keep a good man too long on elementary work you may be destroying or injuring his capacity for higher work?—It might be well if I had the power to put a person at once in the second class, but there would be a great outcry in Somerset House, I am afraid, if I did that.

60,823. You have no strong opinion on the point?—No; I do not think it is a bad thing to let them begin at the beginning. In the case of promotion, the President is not bound to promote the next man. He can appoint a man to jump over the heads of some if there is good reason for doing it.

60,824. Our evidence seems to show that seniority is a very strong element?—Yes, it is. I suppose as a rule it works well enough, and conduces to good feeling, I dare say, in the office; but there is nothing to prevent my taking a clerk from very nearly the bottom of the third class, if I think him very competent, and putting him into the second class.

60,825. (Sir John Kempe.) I understand your view to be that you do not think technical legal qualifications are necessary for the clerical part of the establishment?—I do not think they are. I think it well that they should sometimes have it, but I do not think it necessary.

60,826. A man can be trained and learn his work in the office?—Yes. It is like an articled clerk in a solicitor's office: he has a general education before he goes there—the more the better—but he does not know any solicitor's work until he goes to the office, and then he begins to learn it.

60,827. Would you go further than that and be willing to accept men, as in the rest of the Civil Service, from some general list of men who have passed the examination, whether of the first or second grade, or whatever it may be; that is to say, not to have a nomination list for your own office specially, but to take men generally from the Civil Service list?—That matter has already been discussed between myself and the Chairman. There is no objection to it so far as I can see.

60,828. I understood the question discussed with the Chairman to be nearly as between open competition and nomination. There is a general list every year; would you be quite content to take men from that list?—Yes, certainly.

60,829. You do not want a class competition of your own?—There is no particular class of man at all. Applicants come and are placed on my list from all parts of the country, and from all sorts and conditions.

60,830. (Mr. Coward.) I should like to ask a question with regard to the necessity of registrars sitting in court. Is not there some waste of power there?—I think the registrar ought to be there. He does not waste time; he draws up orders there and then.

30 June 1915.]

The Right Hon. SIR SAMUEL THOMAS EVANS, P.C., K.C.

[Continued.]

60,831. You mean, he works while he is sitting there?—He works. People come to see him; he sometimes abstracts the motions which are coming on the following Monday, and so forth. I do not think he wastes time there. I do not know whether, if I put my head over the bench oftener than I do, I should see him reading a more interesting document.

60,832. If I might give evidence, I do not think you do put your head over the bench often?—I sometimes have to say, "What is the practice about so and so"? I think a registrar, or a competent clerk of a registrar—each registrar has a clerk—ought to be in court. Besides, I think in the High Court there ought always to be a registrar under the judge.

60,833. It is a costly thing to have unless it is advantageous?—I think it is sufficiently advantageous to be a recompense for the cost. Besides, the Court is constituted in a certain form, and I think a registrar ought to be there with his wig on his head just as the judge is.

60,834. I see—he looks rather well?—I am not advocating their retention there simply because they are ornamental, but because, as I have told you, they are useful. For instance, let me say that in Admiralty matters it is very useful for me to have the assistance of Mr. Roscoe.

60,835. I think that is right, because the practice in Admiralty is very peculiar?—It is a special practice, and so it is in Probate and Divorce. I hope the Commission will not suggest any change in that direction.

60,836. In the Probate Registry, including Somerset House, there are 125 people. That is a large staff, is it not?—It is.

60,837. One would deem it necessary, if it were a private office with a large staff, to see that it was properly kept up and properly controlled, that there should be somebody who really saw what was requisite in the way of its upkeep?—Yes.

60,838. It does not seem to me that there is in this office, because, of course, it is not to be supposed that you can know anything about it?—No, I have only been to Somerset House once.

60,839. And when you did go you did not see very much?—I went all over it.

60,840. But you would not know very much of the inner working of the place?—No.

60,841. One wonders whether some scheme could not be devised by which there should be somebody to see that it was properly controlled. I feel myself there is very great difficulty about it, and I am not at all sure that it is possible?—You think there are too many there for the work, and that they do not work hard enough?

60,842. Yes?—That may be. I do not know. The senior registrar ought to have general control of the clerks and, of course, of the department itself in Somerset House. I believe they have a system there by which they can check the time when people come to the office and when they are absent, and so forth.

60,843. We have seen one or two of the clerks here, and the evidence of one I have before me. I asked him to give an account of what his day was, and you would be surprised to know how difficult he found it to give an account of what he did in the day?—You mean it would not necessarily produce brain-fag.

60,844. With the result that in the end I asked him whether any intelligent person of 25 could not learn all that he told us he did in 24 hours, and he said, "Yes, he could"; he quite agreed—and you know these people get very substantial salaries?—They do, but that is not peculiar to Somerset House. You will find it in lots of the Government offices, I should imagine.

60,845. One of these people was asked what they did, and he said, "Well, we help one another"?—That is a very nice feeling, but you think it too costly?

60,846. I do not know that I can get much assistance in my difficulty from you?—No, unless on proper investigation you thought that fewer men ought to be able to do the work by fairly constant attendance.

60,847. It is rather difficult to tell?—It is very difficult. I suppose somebody who looked into the matter must have settled the classification and the number of people in each class. If the work were getting smaller there would be a reason for changing it. Please do not think that I have any objection at all to any investigation of that kind. I believe in people doing an honest day's work for their pay.

60,848. (Chairman.) Who is primarily responsible to you for the internal arrangements of the office?—The registrar.

60,849. The senior registrar?—Yes.

60,850. At present does the senior registrar in fact control the internal arrangements of the office, or is that duty relegated to Mr. Registrar Musgrave?—Dr. Pritchard, as you know, is very old; he does not attend the court at all. He is always in Somerset House. He has never been in court in my time; the registrars under him take it in turn. He is over 80. The more active spirit there is the registrar next to him, and that is Mr. Musgrave.

60,851. (Mr. Coward.) We have had Mr. Musgrave before us?—And a very good official he is.

60,852. (Chairman.) It is through Mr. Musgrave you would act if there was any question of regulating things?—I always act through him. If I have any inquiries to make I send for him.

60,853. And it would be Mr. Musgrave's duty to bring it to your notice whenever any reduction of staff was practicable?—Yes. When I say his duty, it would be through him that it would be done. He is the senior active registrar.

60,854. (Mr. Graham Wallas.) How old is Mr. Pritchard?—He is over 80, but I have no further information.

60,855. You say that Mr. Pritchard is always in Somerset House?—What I meant by that was, that he does not attend the Court as one of the registrars; it is not part of his duty. The senior registrar ceases to be one of the registrars attending the Court. That is what I meant.

60,856. Some of the evidence rather suggested that Mr. Pritchard did not spend much time in Somerset House, but that his work was done by his clerk going down to him in his own home?—I do not know that. I have seen him, but not very recently.

60,857. Supposing it should happen that Mr. Pritchard ceased to be fully capable of performing the office of senior registrar, for which he is paid 1,600*l.* a year, how would you find that out?—I could easily find out if he does not do his work properly. His work constantly comes before me. There are appeals from orders which he makes on various interlocutory applications which come before me.

60,858. But there is certain work as senior registrar for which he receives an extra salary?—I do not think so. He happens to be the senior registrar, and therefore gets the higher salary, but there is no difference between his position in any other respect and the position of the other registrars. There is nothing that he is bound to do that the others cannot do. His work is exactly the same; he attends to summonses and taxes costs.

60,859. Has the senior registrar no responsibility for the general organisation of the office on general questions?—Yes, I think he has, as senior registrar.

60,860. Mr. Musgrave told us that he was more or less acting senior registrar. Do you happen to know whether that is the case?—I have explained that when I have particular inquiries to make I make the inquiries through Mr. Musgrave. If I ask him to come and see me, if he does not happen to be in attendance at the Court at that particular time, I send word to Somerset House for him to come at the rising of the Court and discuss with me various things; I consult him about the district registries and their work, complaints coming from solicitors about various matters, and suggestions for improvements. The person in the office with whom I discuss those things, if at all, is Mr. Musgrave. That is what is meant.

60,861. On the other hand, when we asked the clerks to whom they took the attendance-book, they said they took it to the senior registrar's clerk, that is, to Mr. Pritchard's clerk?—Yes, who sits in the room with him.

60,862. Does that suggest to you that there may be a certain confusion of responsibility as between Mr. Musgrave, who is more or less acting senior registrar,

30 June 1915.]

The Right Hon. SIR SAMUEL THOMAS EVANS, P.C., K.C.

[Continued.]

and the senior registrar's clerk who is acting in another way for the senior registrar?—I do not think so. Mr. Musgrave is acting more or less as senior registrar, because, as I explained, he is more active in the work at present outside Somerset House than Dr. Pritchard is.

60,863. Mr. Musgrave told us that there is at present a rule in the office against answering letters. Do you know whether that is a rule in writing on the authority of the President of the Court?—I think what he meant was that there was no business done by correspondence; but letters pass from Somerset House constantly to all sorts of people.

60,864. Yes, but he said there is a rule. Do you know the character of the rule—whether it is in writing or anything about it?—No, I do not. I think it only means that no work is done by correspondence; but they do correspond constantly with people.

60,865. If you gave orders, letters from the general public could at once be answered?—I have no reason to suppose that letters from the general public are not answered.

60,866. We had a definite answer on that point. The question asked was: "I was told that the principle in your department is, that work should not be done by correspondence but by personal application?"—and the answer Mr. Musgrave gave was: "There is a rule to that effect. It is one of the rules that the business applications shall not be made by correspondence."—Yes.

60,867. There is either a rule or there is not, and if there is a rule it is not by statute but on the authority of the President of the Division?—I should think one of the earlier Presidents made the rule.

60,868. And you could, by giving a simple order, alter that rule?—I should think so.

60,869. And you have said that you do not see why such an order should not be given?—What I have said is, that I do not see why business should not be transacted in Somerset House by correspondence.

60,870. But is there any one else whose duty it would be, in any sense, to issue that rule except yourself, I mean to issue a new rule on the subject?—I do not know. I do not know exactly what the rule is. I will inquire if the Commission wishes it. I have not been asked to change the practice by any member of the public, or any professional man. The practice has gone on as it existed when I went there.

60,871. If, in your judgment, any change were desirable, would you yourself propose to make that change?—If I have the power, yes. I have made several rules from time to time.

60,872. We found, on the evidence from the clerks, a great difference of custom as to the signing of the time-book. In one of the legal offices we were told that if you were there by 20 minutes past 11 you signed the time-table as being there at 11. In your office Mr. Collins told us: "If we are there at 10 minutes past 10 we sign as 10 o'clock." In the Central Office we were told that the suggestion that anything of the kind could be done was an insult. A certain uniformity of practice is rather desirable in that respect, is it not?—The practice ought to accord with the truth. If a man is there at 10 he ought to put down 10; if there at 10.20 he ought to put down 10.20.

60,873. Supposing the practice is as Mr. Collins told us: "If we are up to 10.10 a.m. we sign as 10"?—It is too lax.

60,874. Who is responsible ultimately, except Mr. Collins himself?—I suppose I should be in this sense, that if that came to my knowledge, or was brought to my knowledge, I should probably cause a letter to be written to that gentleman to say that he must put down the exact time or else he would hear of something to his disadvantage.

60,875. Who is responsible for bringing it to your knowledge?—I suppose any registrar from Somerset House could tell me that if he wished.

60,876. Have you ever considered the possibility of using, for the sort of work that is done in the Somerset House Registry, the services of women clerks?—I think there are two women typists there. That is part of a very big general question. A good deal of the work, calendar work, copying and typing work, and so forth, no doubt might be done by women. Solicitors' clerks come there to make inquiries and to examine documents, and so on, which are handed to them by the other clerks. As I say, it is part of a big general question.

60,877. Do you understand whose duty it is to consider such big general questions in regard to the office?—I suppose I could appoint female clerks to the third class and the second class, and even a female registrar. I do not know if there is an Act of Parliament which prevents it.

60,878. Turning for the moment to the local registries—the district probate registries—Mr. Simpson is Probate Registrar at York?—I appointed Mr. Simpson in January 1914 and transferred Mr. Thompson from York to Wakefield, which is the bigger office.

60,879. Mr. Simpson said: "Now at York my two senior clerks (the oldest of whom is 78 and very deaf, and the second one has lost the sight of one eye and is a very nervous man) do not pull their weight in the boat." Then he said: "I really employ a junior clerk—a fourth clerk—to nurse them through their work as it were. If a solicitor comes in and speaks to a man who is stone deaf I have to have the other clerk there to help him through." That is not a wholly satisfactory office, is it?—No. It is time to suggest to those clerks that they should give way to somebody else.

60,880. Whose duty is it to do that?—The registrar's.

60,881. Whose duty is it to see that the registrar does it?—The registrar can complain; he can give those men notice to quit. They are not Civil servants. All he has to do is to put his foot down and to say: "I will not engage you any longer."

60,882. You said that you were against the business of agency fees; that is to say, charging fees to the public for answering letters?—Yes I am against the system.

60,883. But you think, in the case of the present holders, it could not be abolished without full compensation?—I do not think so. It might be necessary to regulate certain fees for correspondence work—that would have to be carefully gone into; but I am against the fee system as at present carried out, which has lasted longer than was intended, which is not governed by any rules, and which is, I think, not satisfactory. That does not mean that if the correspondence work goes on the Treasury might not find it necessary to make a rule allowing certain fixed fees to be taken.

60,884. Would you agree that the Treasury ought to be extremely careful in giving full compensation for fees which have, in fact, been fixed without a rule at the sweet will of the registrar?—That is a matter for the Treasury.

60,885. For instance, we had a number of registrars' clerks before us, and every clerk told us that it was his habit to do, in official hours, agency work. That is clearly against the principle on which the allowance for these clerks is paid?—They are not paid to give the whole of their time to the district registries. They are not Civil servants; they may be solicitors' clerks.

60,886. But is not the registry office, in fact, kept separate from the solicitor's ordinary office, and is he not bound only to employ the registry clerks on registry business?—I do not think so. I dare say, as a matter of practice, he does so; but I do not think he is bound to.

60,887. But if it were so, and if there were irregular giving of official time to the earning of these fees, it would be against the public interest to pay full compensation for them, would it not?—That must be left for other people to determine. It may be that the clerks would not be entitled to any compensation at all. When I referred to compensation, I was referring to the registrar who was appointed upon the understanding that the salary was £x, and that the fees were about £y, and that therefore the salary would be £x plus £y. The clerks have their own wages, except that I believe there is a private arrangement in most cases between the registrar and his senior clerk, for some reason or other, to divide these agency fees in certain proportions.

30 June 1915.]

The Right Hon. SIR SAMUEL THOMAS EVANS, P.C., K.C.

[Continued.]

60,888. But if, in fact, he is also given an allowance for clerk hire, on the understanding that he is only to use that allowance for official work, and that allowance is used to pay for this agency business, surely it would be against the public interest to compensate him twice over?—It may be.

60,889. Mr. Shadwell, of Bodmin, when he was asked about improving the work in the office by using typewriting, said: "I have considered the use of typewriting. I mentioned the subject at the probate registry, and was told that formal application would not be entertained." He was asked: "Do you understand on what ground?" and he said: "I do not." Do you happen to know anything about that incident?—No; I do not know how they regulate what shall be typed and what shall be written.

60,890. But if there was formal refusal to allow typewriting, and a statement that it would not be entertained, it would be you who would not entertain it. It must be a statement of your intention?—I suppose so. They find it convenient to type lots of things. I believe other things they still write.

60,891. You told us that you appointed a gentleman at Exeter, where the work was not very hard and the salary was rather considerable—Mr. Hardy. Do you happen to remember his age on appointment?—I could not tell you. He was a barrister, I think, on the Northern Circuit. One of my predecessors appointed him registrar straight off in Somerset House, but his health was not very good; he was doing his work quite well, and so on, but he wanted a little more rest and less anxious work, and he asked to be transferred to Exeter from Somerset House. In Exeter the number of grants in 1913 was 1,151, and the registrar's salary, without fees, is 1,000*l.* That bears out what I say, that the work is not hard and the salary is very considerable. Perhaps it is as well to put on record that he was also entitled to pension after a certain number of years' service at Somerset House, and the pension, the fees, and the salary exceeded the salary which he was getting as third registrar in Somerset House, so I made it a condition when I appointed him that he was not to receive more than 1,500*l.* a year, and that he must give the balance of the money back to the Treasury; whether he liked to give it back out of the salary or the fees did not matter to me.

60,892. Do you happen to remember his age?—It is a mere guess from his appearance, but I should think it is 58 or 60, or something like that.

60,893. (Chairman.) Was he pensionable in his post as registrar, and also in his post as district registrar?—He would be pensionable as district registrar, too, I assume; but he asked me to help him to get his pension, notwithstanding the fact that he was leaving his present office before a certain age, and I said, "Yes, by all means; if you are entitled to a particular pension I will ask them to give it, notwithstanding you are being transferred elsewhere; but you must not have more than your 1,500*l.*"—and he acceded at once.

60,894. (Mr. Graham Wallas.) Under Civil Service rules, if he retired from Somerset House under the age of 60, he must have retired through ill-health?—He did not retire; I transferred him from a registrarship at Somerset House to a district registrarship.

60,895. Was not he getting a pension at Somerset House?—Assuming he was retiring from Somerset House, he would be entitled to a certain pension, and he said, "If I do not retire, but merely go down to Exeter and have a smaller salary, it is rather hard upon me to lose my pension. Do you object if the Treasury give me my pension, notwithstanding I am still doing work in Exeter." I said, "I do not object at all, but I will not allow you to receive more than 1,500*l.* a year; you must return to the Treasury any balance." I did that because I knew that the salary, plus the fees, plus the pension, exceeded the 1,500*l.* a year. I see, by the Law List, Mr. Hardy was called to the Bar in 1880, so I should think he is about 58 to 60 years of age.

60,896. (Sir John Kempe.) You do not know whether his pension is in abeyance simply. They could hardly give him a pension, but might say, "Your future service will count if it is public service"?—I think the arrangement was made that he should be entitled to pension.

60,897. Although he was not yet 60, and not in ill-health?—I do not know what the terms were, but I understood that the Treasury were willing to give him a certain pension, and that he was entitled to receive it.

60,898. Probably it is in abeyance?—I do not know that.

ONE HUNDRED AND FORTY-FOURTH DAY.

Thursday, 8th July 1915.

PRESENT:

SIR HENRY BABINGTON SMITH, K.C.B., C.S.I. (Chairman.)

Sir DONALD MACALISTER, K.C.B.
Sir JOHN ARROW KEMPE, K.C.B.
Sir GEORGE MORISON PAUL.
Mr. ARTHUR BOUTWOOD.
Mr. CECIL COWARD.

Mr. PERCY EWING MATHESON.
Mr. ARTHUR EVERETT SHIPLEY, F.R.S.
Mr. GRAHAM WALLAS.
Miss HALDANE.
Mrs. DEANE STREATFEILD.
Mr. E. W. H. MILLAR (Secretary.)

The Right Hon. VISCOUNT HALDANE of Cloan, K.T., O.M., called and examined.

60,899. (Chairman.) My Lord, you held the post of Lord Chancellor for some years?—Yes.

60,900. The questions with which the Commission have been dealing in connection with the legal departments must have been constantly present to your mind in that office. The first of those questions to which we would ask you to direct your attention is that of the method of appointment which is in use in the legal departments in England?—I presume you exclude all the judicial appointments and the higher appointments?

60,901. Yes, judicial appointments, which have been interpreted to mean all appointments where the salaries are paid out of the Consolidated Fund, have been considered to be outside the Commission's reference, but the reference includes semi-judicial posts, such as the masterships, and all the lower posts. The first question which has been raised, on which we should be glad to have your opinion, is whether that part of the legal patronage which is at present in the hands of the judges should remain in their hands, or whether there would be an advantage in concentrating the whole of it in the hands of the Lord Chancellor?—I have a strong opinion that all patronage in regard to appointments which have their salaries defrayed out of public funds should be in the hands of a Minister responsible to Parliament, and who could be made accountable there.

8 July 1915.]

The Right Hon. VISCOUNT HALDANE, K.T., O.M.

[Continued.]

60,902. You attach great importance to the responsibility to Parliament?—Great importance. It is not so much that Parliament interferes largely—it does not—but the sense that a Minister is a trustee who may be called to account is most salutary.

60,903. That change would involve the transfer of certain appointments in the Central Office of the Supreme Court, and the whole of the appointments in the Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Division from the judges, who exercise the patronage at present, to the Lord Chancellor?—No doubt.

60,904. It has been suggested by Sir Kenneth Muir Mackenzie and others that it would be an advantage if the Lord Chancellor in exercising that patronage were assisted by a permanent committee which would examine the qualifications of the candidates and to report to him, the ultimate responsibility for the appointment remaining with the Lord Chancellor. The same suggestion was made, but in a somewhat different form, by Lord Loreburn. Lord Loreburn suggested that a committee of the kind should be created, but he preferred that the actual responsibility for the appointments should rest with the committee subject to an appeal to the Lord Chancellor in cases where the Committee was not unanimous. Will you give us your opinion on those suggestions?—I think it follows, from what I have already said, that the first suggestion is the one that commends itself to me. The Lord Chancellor must be responsible, and, if so, he must have the power of choice. His committee, in other words, must be advisory to him, and he must have the power of departing from its recommendations, though whether he would is another question; but if he is to be responsible he must have the power of making his own choice.

60,905. He would have to be prepared to defend his action if he acted otherwise than in accordance with the recommendation of the committee?—Yes.

60,906. A minor point has been raised in that connection, namely, whether the recommendations of the committee should be publicly known. If they were not published in any way, then there could be no question of the Lord Chancellor having to justify his action in departing from a recommendation?—There is something to be said on both sides; but on the whole, speaking apart from further consideration, I should be against their being publicly known. I think the committee would recommend more freely, and the relations between them and the Lord Chancellor would be confidential. The choice would be his, but it would be known that the committee was there, and then, if he had to answer questions on the subject, he could say whether or not he had agreed with the advice of the committee.

60,907. Then I gather that, subject to the condition that the final responsibility for appointments should rest with the Lord Chancellor, you are in favour of a committee of that kind?—I am in favour of that committee, but I wish to add something. A committee of this kind is not the end of wisdom; it is only the beginning. I am now going to refer to what I think goes beyond the scope of your reference; but I cannot make clear my point without saying something that goes beyond the scope of your reference. In the middle of the last century, and from time to time in the latter part of the century, it has been felt that the office of Lord Chancellor has been an impossible one for its occupant to discharge efficiently. Lord Herschell said, I think, before a committee, that it was two men's work, and I do not believe that if the Lord Chancellor did his work properly two Lord Chancellors could get through the work which devolves upon one. He has his judicial work and his judgments to prepare, and, if he fulfils his functions as head of the supreme tribunals of the Empire, that of itself is enough to occupy him. In the second place he is Speaker of the House of Lords, which sometimes takes up a great deal of time and cuts into the opportunities which he should have for other things. In the third place he has more ecclesiastical patronage than the two archbishops put together—I think three times as much—and to that he ought to be able to give very close attention. He has to appoint the magistrates, and he has a great deal of general political work, all of which, if he does his duty, he must cover. It is perfectly obvious that if that is so it is impossible for him to be a proper head of a great administrative department. Moreover, there is another difficulty: With the functions he has to perform he must be at the House of Lords, and that must be the place where his office is; that is remote from the courts and remote from the departments which he is administering, and my experience is that you cannot administer a great department unless you are on the spot. I had between six and seven years' experience of administering the War Office, where one has seen the analogy to what we are considering in full play. Unless the head of the department is on the spot he cannot keep in contact with the heads of the sub-departments concerned, which contact is necessary in order to enable him to control the business. Therefore I do not think you will solve the problem before you until something like this is done—until the Lord Chancellor's functions are recognised as exclusively judicial functions, as head of the great tribunals of the Empire. Possibly by that time the House of Lords will have been reconstituted and have a separate Speaker of its own, as it probably will have if it is changed. Then there will be to be dealt with all the Lord Chancellor's judicial and other patronage—all his administrative patronage and his ecclesiastical patronage—and to be considered in connection with that there will be the very considerable judicial patronage of the Home Secretary—in the appointment of stipendiary magistrates, recorders, and so on. Then there is the judicial patronage in the office of the Duchy of Lancaster. I am myself satisfied that you will never solve the great problem that you have until you set up a Minister of Justice who will absorb, in addition to the administrative work of the Lord Chancellor, much of the legal patronage and functions of the Home Secretary, and much of those of the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster; but what other changes that will entail I am not going into here. That Minister of Justice will sit probably in the House of Commons and be responsible to it; he would be at the head of the department where he could get into contact with all these people of whom I have been speaking. A committee is, therefore, a very valuable palliative, but merely a palliative.

60,908. You attach, I gather, special importance to the committee as assisting the Lord Chancellor in the exercise of his judicial patronage under present conditions which render it impossible for him to give full individual attention to the matter?—That is so.

60,909. If changes such as you have indicated were carried out, the committee in your view would have less importance?—Less importance. It might still be important, but not so important. As soon as the relation and contact of the Minister with the heads of the sub-departments is established, the committee becomes less important.

60,910. The constitution of the committee would probably be something of this kind—a representative of the Civil Service Commission; the Permanent Secretary to the Lord Chancellor; the head of the particular department concerned, and some eminent solicitor selected by the Lord Chancellor. Does that constitution commend itself to your judgment?—Yes. I think that would be a very useful committee.

60,911. The question also arises of how far it would be possible or desirable to substitute appointment by competition, either open or limited, for the present method which is entirely nomination?—Competition by competitive examination?

60,912. Yes, by competitive examination. You have already given the Commission—when you gave evidence before—the benefit of your views on the general question of competitive examination. Do the views you expressed then require any qualification or amplification with special reference to the legal departments?—No

8 July 1915.]

The Right Hon. VISCOUNT HALDANE, K.T., O.M.

[Continued.]

qualification, but I should like to add this: that the more I see the more I am convinced that the examinations of the Civil Service Commission, of the kind we are describing, are a very poor substitute for examinations based on record. I should like to see the higher leaving certificate of a secondary school made an indispensable condition of anybody entering the legal departments of which we are speaking; and if you had the assurance that he had a mind which had been trained and a record which was satisfactory, then I should not trouble myself about his legal knowledge or about anything else, because my experience is that when you get a man who is capable he will pick up things very quickly. After all, there is no mystery about the law; you very soon learn it. There is no mystery about anything; it is only a question of getting above it and grasping the principles which are embodied in its details, and a trained mind will work into it very quickly—certainly sufficiently for what is required in the departments we are discussing.

60,913. You would make the possession of the certificate of having passed a leaving examination (which gives, I suppose, evidence of having been a certain period at a secondary school) obligatory?—Yes, subject to this, that unfortunately in England our schools are very badly organised. There are too few of them, and it is not easy to get an adequate certificate. The matter has been a long time under the consideration of the Board of Education, which has taken steps towards it, and it is a subject of review in the report of Mr. Acland's Committee. In Scotland the system is fully developed, and works admirably and without any difficulty.

60,914. But given that you had a considerable number of candidates who possessed that certificate, what would be your method of selection among them?—Then I think I would select from them with a rather limited examination, into which I would bring the possession of legal knowledge so as to pick out the young man who had shown that he cared about law, and had taken the trouble to learn something about it. I do not say that I should confine myself solely to law, but that would certainly be an element in a selective examination out of the class.

60,915. The evidence which we have had appears to point to this, that the legal offices may be classed in two categories: First, those where the work is not of a specially technical character and where previous legal experience is not necessary, and a man of good education coming in can perfectly well learn the work after he has entered the office. Then there is the second category, in particular the Chancery offices, where the work is of a more technical character. For these the great majority of witnesses have expressed the opinion that previous experience, in a solicitor's office especially, is of great value, and some witnesses have even expressed the opinion that it is indispensable. That appears to point to recruitment for the former class of offices by open competition, either in its present form or in some modified form as you have suggested, and for the second class of offices to appointment at a somewhat later age by nomination of candidates who have had experience in a legal office. Does that division into two categories commend itself to your judgment?—Yes. I was speaking in what I said of the class of general clerks—those who belong to the Central Office, for instance, and places of that kind—and I do not leave out of account that in any office a competent man will learn all that has to be known. It is only a question of a little time, and I would certainly rather have an ignorant competent man to start with than a learned incompetent man—and such people exist. I think you must, when you come to certain offices in certain stages, distinguish. I will take one office that I know something of—the Land Registry. It is absolutely necessary there that you should have a good conveyancer with a good conveyancer's mind. You get in the ranks, the too numerous ranks, of unemployed barristers and unemployed solicitors' young men who are very glad to discount the future by taking a certainty at an early stage, and sometimes you will get extremely able people there. I think that is the very best class out of which you could recruit the higher officers of the Land Registry, and I do not think any other class would suit your purpose. I do not think open competition would suit your purpose there. There is an intermediate stage; there are a certain number of people in the Law Courts who require technical knowledge and use it, but who, I think, have acquired most of what they possess in the office. No doubt it is quite good that they should come in with the training of a solicitor's office, but one may overdo that. I certainly should not shut that out, and when I was responsible for appointments as Lord Chancellor, I used to lay great stress, for instance, with regard to the appointments in the Taxing Office, on trying to get an experienced solicitor's clerk who had gone through the mill and who knew the things in a way that one cannot know them unless one has done them from the bottom. He has got something that is more an instinct than an abstract principle which he applies in scanning the details of a bill of costs, for instance. The same thing is true when you get to the work connected with administering estates. Therefore, I think you must have that class to look to—the class of those who have been specially trained; but on the other hand I should be very sorry to shut out from all chances of promotion to a higher class connected with the work those who had developed great competency in legal work in the other class of which we have been speaking.

60,916. That would seem to point to recruitment for what one may call the general offices, such as the Central Office and the Principal Probate Registry, by some form of competition not specially legal, and to the recruitment for such offices as the Taxing Office and the Chancery Offices by selection at a somewhat higher age from among solicitors' clerks?—Yes, but not necessarily exclusively.

60,917. Would you allow transfer where desirable between those offices?—Yes.

60,918. You would not shut them up into separate compartments with no possibility of access from one to the other?—I am all against either vertical compartments or horizontal compartments. I do not like to see a man find himself in Class 3, with the consciousness of great talents, and feel that he cannot possibly rise into Class 2. I think that is very wrong. I think he ought to have his chance, and if fit he ought to be able to get into Class 2 and up to Class 1 if necessary.

60,919. In offices recruited in that way from solicitors' clerks there would always, I suppose, be a certain amount of work of a purely routine and minor clerical character—keeping lists, filing papers, and so forth. It would seem that it is unnecessary to have persons of legal experience for that kind of work, and that would appear to point to having a class below the solicitors' clerks—a class more of the nature of the assistant clerks—for doing routine work. From what you say I gather that if a class of that kind were employed you would be anxious not to shut the door entirely to the possibility of promotion if a man showed exceptional talent?—That is my view.

60,920. But you would recognise the necessity of employing a class of clerks of that kind if you had a class with professional qualifications for the main work of the department?—Yes.

60,921. If free transfer between the different offices were recognised, as you suggest, that would make it all the more important that the system of promotion should be carefully worked?—Very important.

60,922. Have you had the opportunity of judging how far in the past promotion has been made by seniority and how far by merit?—Not in my legal experience as Lord Chancellor, but I had very large experience of it at the War Office, where, paradoxical as it may seem, I came to the conclusion that the seniority principle was one that could not be disregarded. When I went to the War Office the general principle was selection for promotion by merit. It sounded perfectly admirable, and was admirable upon paper, but everything turned on who selected. The selection was done by what was then called, and is still called, a Selection Board.

60,923. Are you speaking of promotions among the Civil staff of the office or the Military staff?—I am talking of military promotion, but it illustrates very much what I am dealing with. It would have been admirable if the Selection Board had been an ideal Board, but the members of it came to me and said: "You know we are not ideal; everybody knows about some particular man, but does not know about other men, and there is not enough knowledge to make it work. There are great complaints in the Army of what is called leap-frogging, which they say is the only principle of selection by merit." We discussed it, and what we substituted was seniority tempered by selection. But "tempered by selection" is a very real phrase. It meant that when there was a vacancy the first name you considered was the man who was the next in seniority, but you were quite ready to see whether he had disqualifications which made it inexpedient to pass him on, and that was so well known and they were of so miscellaneous a kind that it was not the bitter disappointment that it would have been if he had been passed over in a system of pure seniority. The result was that we came to think that that was the best way to work. I am far from sure that it is so under all circumstances or everywhere, but I am pretty sure that it is when you are dealing with a body which does not come in frequent personal contact with the persons who are to be selected and does not know them by head.

8 July 1915.]

The Right Hon. VISCOUNT HALDANE, K.T., O.M.

[Continued.]

60,924. That objection would be of less force as the field over which your promotion was to extend diminished in size?—Much less force.

60,925. And would therefore come more within the view of one man?—Provided always the committee, and not merely one man on it, knew the men and could see something of the men. I have always thought myself that a committee ought always to see a candidate. I never liked making an appointment, if I could avoid it, without seeing what the candidate looked like.

60,926. In legal offices of the kind with which we are dealing, no one of which contains more than 200 persons, there would be nothing impracticable in the head of the department, in consultation with the heads of branches or sections, arriving at a real personal knowledge of the merits of the men?—No, I think he might do that, and if it was made certain that he did consult with his subordinates, then his advice, coming perhaps as the advice of an informal congregation of himself and his subordinates, would be of great importance to the little committee of selection which had to report to the Minister.

60,927. Do you consider that the committee suggested for advising the Lord Chancellor about appointments should also advise about promotions?—I think so. It is perfectly impossible for the Lord Chancellor himself to determine who should be promoted, and the only alternative to leaving it to the committee is to leave it to the head of the department, and that is not always safe; he means well, and some men will do it unerringly, but other men will do it very badly. Therefore, I should like to check that by bringing in a committee. How far they intervene, of course, will be a question very much for their own judgment. In small appointments naturally the voice of the head of the department would carry very great weight, but to the higher appointments within the department I think the promotion should have at least the sanction of the committee.

60,928. The head of the department would be one of the members of the committee and would have the opportunity of having his voice heard in that way?—Yes, I understand that.

60,929. With a system of that kind the considerations that you were explaining in favour of seniority as a strong element in promotion would not have so much force?—That is so. When I say seniority tempered by selection I mean a real selection subject to this: when a man is senior prima facie he goes up, but he may be a little too old, or he may be deaf, or he may in some way not be just exactly fitted, in which case it should be the duty of the committee to say: "No; we are here to get the best man for the public service, and, while there is a presumption in your favour, it is a presumption which, unfortunately, in view of the circumstances, we rebut."

60,930. Where the field is small enough for the recommending or promoting body to have adequate knowledge of the candidates, would you still say that the right system is seniority tempered by selection, or would it not rather in that case be selection tempered by seniority?—I think to some extent it depends upon the appointment. The higher you go with the appointments the more you can know about the man, and the lower down you go the less you can know. Therefore, the lower down the appointment is the more the seniority element is applicable; but when you get to the higher appointments then, I think, you get practically to the necessity for selection—but I am now talking of an appointment fairly high up.

60,931. In the offices we have to deal with, you have the masters and registrars as a class by themselves above, appointed almost always from outside and not by promotion from below?—Yes.

60,932. Then you have several classes below rising to a maximum of 600*l.* a year, or in some few cases to 800*l.* a year; so that the question of promotion to the higher appointments in the strict sense hardly arises in those departments?—Much less.

60,933. Your observations as to the relative weight to be given to seniority and merit would apply within those somewhat narrow limits from 100*l.* up to 600*l.* or 800*l.*?—Yes. Of course, when you come to appointing a master, you do not select from a class but you select from the world. That must be selection. While, of course, no question of seniority comes in there, I think the question of the committee and what it should consider comes in very much.

60,934. Do you consider that the clerical staff should be eligible in any case for promotion to the higher posts—to masterships and registrarships?—I would shut out no man, but they should be only eligible on account of very exceptional abilities.

60,935. At present in the legal departments the organisation in most cases is that there are a number of co-ordinate officers at the head of each department—a number of masters for instance—who are equal in all respects, except that the senior of them has certain functions as senior master. It has been suggested that it would be an advantage from the point of view of organisation if the senior master were selected because he was most suited for the post, and not merely because he had held the office longest, and that he should be given more definite functions of control over the department, especially over the clerical staff of the department?—I certainly think that the person who is to be senior master, and who has to advise the permanent secretary and the Lord Chancellor himself at times, should be selected, not on the ground of seniority at all, but on the ground of fitness. There my principle of bringing in the element of seniority does not apply any more than it does to the appointments of the masters themselves. You want an exceptional man; he might be the youngest of the whole of them. What functions you would entrust to him is, of course, a matter you must consider in relation to the general reforms which you are contemplating.

60,936. Would it be an advantage to transfer to him the duties which at present are performed by the committee of control in the Central Office?—I do not know enough of that to feel that I can give you an opinion which is of any value. It is one of the worst features about the office of Lord Chancellor that he knows less of his staff than any other Minister does, for the simple reason that he does not and cannot see them.

60,937. It has also been suggested that it would assist the senior master or committee of control, or whoever is entrusted with the control of the department, if he had a chief clerk who would be his executive officer for dealing, under him, with all the details of discipline, distribution of work, and so forth?—I think it would be very valuable, if he got the right man.

60,938. Another question is as to the fixing of an age for retirement. The suggestion has been made by many witnesses that in the legal offices in general the ordinary Civil Service rule should apply, which means retirement at 65, in all ordinary cases; but it has generally been suggested that a higher age would be appropriate in the case of some of the judicial offices—

8 July 1915.]

The Right Hon. VISCOUNT HALDANE, K.T., O.M.

[Continued.]

masterships and registrarships. What is your opinion on that matter?—I think that as regards the latter class you might go up to the age of 70. I gave evidence before the Royal Commission which sat upon the question of the appointment of King's Bench judges, to the effect that 72 should be the age at which judges should retire unless specially requested to stay on. Sometimes they are extraordinarily good at 72. It is possible that you might have, in the case of a chief clerk, a man of exceptional vigour and exceptional power, and it would be to the public advantage that he should be asked to stay on; but I should fence that round and make it a most exceptional thing, because otherwise everybody would press to be treated differentially from the rule. With judges I think it is essential that there should be such a power, or else you might lose some of the finest talent we have in this country, and in judicial matters I am glad to say that as people get older they sometimes get younger, that is to say they get more efficient. At any rate I have seen it happen very often.

60,939. Would you give a similar power of extension in the case of masters?—Yes, but it should be much more guarded. You would have to devise something. I can conceive a man who might be priceless as a master, to lose whom automatically at 70 would be a great loss to the State; but on the other hand the reasons for asking him to stay on should be tremendously fenced in.

60,940. For the staff below the masters would you agree that the ordinary Civil Service rule should apply?—Yes, I see no reason why it should not.

60,941. We should like to know your opinion, if you are prepared to give it, on a more detailed question of organisation. At present, as you are aware, the Chancery Chambers and the Registrars Office are entirely separate. After a case has been dealt with in court or in chambers in many cases it goes to the Registrars Office for the order to be drawn up. The suggestion has frequently been made that those two offices should be combined, and that there should be one class of high officers combining the duties of masters and registrars, and a combined office beneath them. Do you consider that an amalgamation of that kind would be advantageous?—I do not want to express a very confident opinion about it, but the whole of my inclination of opinion is that there should be one office. Of course the registrar has to sit, or ought to sit, in court a great deal. He has to take notes of what is going on with a view to the drawing up of the order or judgment which is pronounced; but that can be got over, as it is much less important than it used to be. When I went to the Bar first, and still more a few years earlier, the whole genius of the Chancery system was entirely different from that of the common law divisions, which were then the Queen's Bench, the Common Pleas, and the Exchequer. The business was largely administrative. Instead of isolated questions which arose in the course of the administration of an estate being determined, if you wanted one question determined the whole estate was administered. There was first a long complicated judgment directing inquiries. That had to be framed very carefully, and the registrar did it, and sometimes he had to have the assistance of counsel; but he had to be more or less of a specialist. You could not have thrown that work at the head of a chief clerk to do in those days. Then the judgment went into chambers and the inquiries were worked out, and then it came back into court, and there was what was called a further consideration, which was a most complex and complicated thing; and it took the registrar and the junior counsel between them in an important case to get the details of the order right. In those days I think there was a great deal to be said for the registrar being a separate person devoting himself to this very highly complicated and technical work; but all that has been swept away by the more recent rules, and the questions that are now decided are isolated questions. When there is an ambiguity about somebody's will, instead of the whole estate being thrown into Chancery to be worked out in an administration action with all the processes which I have described, a specific question is now raised by summons which very often is not heard in court, but can be adjourned into court if it is important—a question whether upon the construction of five or six words in a will the property goes to A or B, the order on which is "yes" or "no," or something that is short. That work so enormously preponderates over the work which called the registrars into existence, and keeps them in existence, that I think the time has come when it is probably true that you could very well have one class of officials. I do not wish, as I have said, to express a confident opinion about what I do not know enough of at first hand to be able to say; but this change has taken place which I have mentioned.

60,942. If such a change took place it would probably lead to considerable economy of force, because much of the work which is now done twice over would only be done once?—I think so. I think there is a great deal of room for economy in administrative time in the legal branches.

60,943. Another question which has come before us is, how far there is room for the extension of the employment of women in the legal offices. The Commission have, I think, come to the opinion that at any rate it would be desirable to substitute typewriting as far as possible for engrossing, and, if that were done, it certainly would be desirable to employ women on that work. Do you concur in that view?—I not only concur in it, but I think it does not go nearly far enough. There is a very large amount of the work there which women would do just as well as men, provided they were properly trained for it. I should not limit it to typewriting, or those things for which women are quite as well fitted as men, but I should throw open to them everything except what, for special reasons, they cannot do. At present public opinion would not let you put them on the Bench, nor let you call them to the Bar, nor make them solicitors, and therefore it would not let them be chief clerks, masters, or registrars; but wherever they are, so to speak, out of sight, and the prejudices of the British public, or that section of it which is susceptible, are not outraged, they are being more and more employed—and very good they are, as far as I have seen. I certainly desire to see, as a very important public reform, as many offices thrown open to women as can be thrown open, and if my views had any effect there would be very few offices indeed from which they would be debarred.

60,944. The questions with which we have been dealing hitherto refer to the English offices. Similar questions arise with regard to the legal offices in Scotland, and in particular the question of patronage. That question, as you are aware, presents itself in a somewhat different form in Scotland, owing to the prevalence of the political method of appointment. Are you prepared to express any opinion in the first place as to the political system of appointment in Scotland; and, in the second place, supposing that your opinion was in favour of eliminating the political element, as to what means would be available for doing so; and, in particular, whether the appointment of a committee to assist the Lord Advocate in his patronage would be advantageous?—If I looked only to considerations of prudence, I should abstain from making any comments on my fellow countrymen, but I am a Scotsman, and it is in my blood and my bones, and I feel I ought to say what a Scotsman, who has seen things on both sides of the Border, thinks. My view is—and it is founded on a good deal of contact with the subject—that there is great room for reform in Scotland in these things. I am not sure that there is not considerably greater room for it than there is in England. I think that the extent to which politics comes into the making of appointments in Scotland would shock the public south of the Border if they in the least realised what it meant. I have seen a great deal of it. I was 25 years in the House of Commons sitting for a Scottish constituency, and had my full share of observing what happened in the case of some of the offices in Scotland, and the extent to which they are filled by somebody who was assistant election agent, or something else, to some influential Liberal or Unionist Member, according to which party happened to be in power at the time.

8 July 1915.]

The Right Hon. VISCOUNT HALDANE, K.T., O.M.

[Continued.]

It extends right through—whether it be the macers of the Court of Session, or whoever it may be. You find a great deal of that kind of thing, and there is no Scottish Member of Parliament of any experience but knows how, when any legal appointment is going in Scotland, he gets five letters for every one that he would get if it were in England. That shows that the pruning knife of the reformer could be used with good effect upon the tree north of the Tweed as well as south of it. How far you are to carry that out in detail I will not presume to say. It may be that the genius of Scotland is to make appointments upon political grounds to such an extent that, as things work fairly well, owing to the genius of the people, they do not want it very much changed. But I can only speak looking at it from my experience of public affairs, and I certainly think that the introduction of a committee would be a great relief to the unfortunate Minister in Scotland, who would at least have a “Jorkins” to whom he could appeal. How far you are to work that out in detail I do not know. For instance, there is the sacred office of Lord Advocate; his patronage is a thing which has dated from the days of the great families who ruled the destinies of Scotland, and it is very difficult to uproot a tradition. For all I know he administers it very well. I think he does administer it very well. He knows everybody; it is a small place, and he knows all the men; but, at the same time, there is such a thing as a principle in the world.

60,945. Many of the Scottish witnesses who have appeared before us have expressed the opinion that it would be impracticable to secure in Scotland a committee of the kind contemplated which would act upon impartial principles?—Well, do not allow them to impose upon you by any such statement. You would get an admirable committee from my country.

60,946. Can you suggest any other means than that of endeavouring to eliminate the political element in appointments?—I am afraid it would be a slow business and a difficult business; the more so because, as I say, everybody knows everybody in Scotland and about everything. I should not because I know it well, but many people here would be very much astonished if they knew how things go on in Scotland.

60,947. (Mr. Boutwood.) With reference to the question of responsibility to Parliament, I am not a politician, and I do not quite know how it works out, but I have always understood that judges are almost intangible, and the Lord Chancellor is the greatest of the judges. Can you call so august a person to book over his appointment at 100*l.* a year of “A” rather than “B”?—You ought to be able to do so. He ought to be as much called to account as any other Minister. I think part of his salary is on the Estimates, the greater part being on the Consolidated Fund; as I said before, the office of Lord Chancellor is such an extraordinary one that he is more difficult to get at, but that does not mean that he ought not to be got at.

60,948. I forget which list it is in, but in one of the lists of masters practically every name is obviously the name of some close connection of a judge. That may be perfectly legitimate, but it points to the existence of a strong sort of tradition. There is no need to describe that tradition, but it is reasonable to think that it limits the field of choice—I will put it that way?—I think that is true. Of course, you must remember that in England, as in Scotland and elsewhere, there have been great legal families with a talent that way, and very often it happens that a judge's nephew or cousin has got the real thing in him and it is known, and he is apt to get an appointment because it is there and it is known. There may be as good men who would not be known. Therefore, you must not, I think, press that too much; but it is no doubt true, as you say, that promotion has run in families.

60,949. I was not going to press it at all, but I was going to put a hypothetical question to you. Supposing you accept the view that the tradition is a limiting one, and supposing for some quite general reason you thought the limitation undesirable, what would you do to get rid of it?—I should vest all the appointments in the Lord Chancellor, aided by a committee; and, in order to get quite rid of it, I should vest them all in a Minister of Justice with a seat in the House of Commons aided by a proper staff.

60,950. (Mr. Graham Wallas.) I have here a list of the Lord Chancellor's officers. There are ten of them, and they constitute the administrative department through which the Lord Chancellor exercises his general control over the legal offices?—Yes.

60,951. They consist of the Permanent Secretary, the Secretary of the Commissioners of the Peace, the Secretary of Ecclesiastical Patronage, with a Purse-Bearer, a Junior Clerk of the Chamber, a Third Class Clerk, a Private Secretary, a Second Class Clerk, a Messenger of the Great Seal, and a Messenger of the Crown Office. That looks like a department which has not been deliberately contrived, but which has come together somewhat accidentally. Is that your impression?—It has grown up in course of time. In order to understand it you must remember that the office of the Lord Chancellor of to-day is an extraordinarily reformed office, compared to what the office of the Lord Chancellor was 60 or 70 years ago. In those days the Lord Chancellor lived in his house; he still wore, during most of the day, robes and a wig, because it was de rigueur. He drove down to the House of Lords in the afternoon to preside on the Woolsack, and to the Court of Chancery in the morning, where he heard causes on most days; but his business was done in his house. A great deal of it consisted in the use of the Great Seal, and in various other things which called these people—and there were more of them in those days—whose names you see into existence. They came into existence because the Lord Chancellor was an isolated figure who had certain physical functions to perform. He had to go along the corridors of the House of Lords with a train, and consequently he had a train-bearer. He had a purse which used to hold the Great Seal (it does not do so nowadays), which is a very heavy instrument, and he had a purse-bearer for that. His functions were so centred in himself that he did not want much more; it grew up in that fashion.

60,952. If it were desired that the Lord Chancellor or some future Minister of Justice should seriously undertake the administration of these great departments, do not you think that a more scientific organisation of his administrative office would be desirable?—A Minister of Justice would have the organisation of an ordinary department; he would not have any of those things I have mentioned. What the Lord Chancellor as Head of the Judiciary of the Empire might have is another question; he might possibly have something.

60,953. He might have a small office, but if he is really to do the administrative duties he is supposed to do, he wants a much more scientific and thoroughly organised office?—Far more.

60,954. The impression left on my mind was that the administrative office had worked admirably well owing to the personal qualities of Lord Muir Mackenzie, and it is very difficult to be sure you could get a second one?—He has been a most valuable element in it, and the Lord Chancellors who have come there are, after all, people who have had considerable experience of putting through a very large amount of business, and putting it through quickly. They know whom they can trust and whom they cannot; they are generally more or less judges of men, and if you have that and two or three competent people, it is wonderful what you can get done.

60,955. Pending the redistribution of the work of the Lord Chancellor and the appointment of a Minister of Justice—if for the moment that should be impossible—do you think there would be any advantage in creating another political officer sitting possibly in the House of Commons to help in the administration of the department?—I have heard of that suggestion, and I cannot say that I think it would come to very much, for this reason: nobody would very much care to represent the Lord Chancellor in the House of Commons, where he would have very little to do, and the position would go down in the distribution of political offices to somebody whose claims were more slender than those of men you would like to have, and the result would be that the Lord Chancellor would find himself put off with somebody who would have no influence at all. It is no use

8 July 1915.]

The Right Hon. VISCOUNT HALDANE, K.T., O.M.

[Continued.]

having a representative in the House of Commons unless that representative in the House of Commons can insist on having his way. I discussed these matters with Lord Muir Mackenzie, and I have seen the print of his evidence, and I think I agree with almost everything he said about other things; but about what goes on in the House of Commons, there I speak more as an expert than he, and I am quite sure that the kind of representative of whom he spoke would be practically useless. I think the best thing the Lord Chancellor can do at the present time is to get some powerful Minister like the Attorney-General, or even the Secretary to the Treasury, who is an important Minister, to represent him, and to establish (what does not exist at the present time) close contact between his department and that of the Minister. The relations between the Law Officers and the Lord Chancellor at the present time are very attenuated, simply for physical reasons; they do not come together. The result is that the Lord Chancellor has nobody who takes an interest in him in the House of Commons.

60,956. You would say that it is very desirable there should be a Minister responsible in the House of Commons?—Yes.

60,957. But that he must be a really responsible person with real power?—Yes; and as for appointing anybody as a representative (such as the representatives of the Charity Commission are to-day) without salary and without the weight which a well-known position gives, it would be no help to the Lord Chancellor.

60,958. Besides the Lord Chancellor's large responsibility for appointments in the London legal offices, he has a number of appointments scattered up and down the country, from those of justices of the peace down to clerks in registrars' offices and in the offices of County Courts, in the provinces, for which he is more or less responsible?—The appointment of justices of the peace used to be an enormous business, but now, as you know, under the Report of the Royal Commission, he has an advisory committee of his own in each county, which advise him and the Lord Lieutenant.

60,959. That is what I was going to lead to. He has divested himself of some of his burden, and at the same time probably very largely increased the efficiency of his action by having a local advisory committee in regard to these things?—Yes, I think it has worked very well. I am sure with the political pressure there used to be at one time about magistrates, that the committee has become established as tabula in naufragio, and a wise Chancellor will leave it alone. The advisory committee is the barrier.

60,960. Do you think an advisory committee or any committee could be set up which would help the Lord Chancellor in exercising his other local patronage?—I do not think a committee of that kind would be of any use. It is a different kind of thing you are dealing with. I should far rather have the committee we are discussing.

60,961. You think when dealing with County Court judges or the registrars, or other officers of the County Courts, or the local registrars of the High Court, you would rather it be done by the responsible committee in London with proper local advice and knowledge than by a local committee?—Yes, I would, much.

60,962. On the question of the appointment of women, you know that some of the more liberal universities throw open their legal studies and legal examinations—though not always the legal degrees—to women. Do you think that (subject to your condition that they must be withdrawn from public view and therefore from public prejudice) in such offices as the Land Registry, the Probate Office, and so on, women who had passed with great distinction a legal examination might be used for administrative work which requires legal knowledge, though not necessarily judicial decision?—I think so; but you must remember that the law is not a thing you can ever learn from books. Probably you can learn a great deal from books—that is the foundation of excellence in practice—but you must live in it. The law is a very jealous mistress, and you must take to it all the time in a way that you cannot in a library; it is nearly all practice really.

60,963. Is that the case even as regards such work as goes on in the Probate Registry?—There, I think, the business instinct of a good Civil servant is quite enough, with a little legal knowledge added. I think that might well be open to women. I mean, if you are going to put women into the sort of work that is required in the Land Registry, nothing short of the experience which men get just now will justify it.

60,964. (Mrs. Deane Streetfeild.) Mr. Graham Wallas has asked pretty much the question I wanted to ask; but if women were given the opportunity of service in these offices, apart from the legal posts, I suppose you would agree that there should be some definite and proper method of introducing them—some definite way of choosing them?—Certainly.

60,965. Such as in the proper Civil Service now?—Yes. It should be done, of course, in a systematic and regular way.

60,966. (Mr. Coward.) I was much struck with your view about a Minister of Justice. It is the first time we have heard that suggestion, I think. One of the things he would have in his hands would be the complete organisation of the legal offices?—Yes.

60,967. One of the complaints to-day, in my view, is that there is no organisation; that there is nobody who has any control over any particular offices. In theory the Lord Chancellor may have control, but practically, of course, he cannot do it?—Practically he has no control; and, secondly, if he had, you could not see him. He is such a busy person that he is not to be got at.

60,968. Take, for instance, a master: I should suppose that a master comes down in the morning to his room and he finds that his clerk has made for him a précis of his work to be done in the day—the summonses he is to have, and so on. He hears those summonses, and away he goes. He has nothing to do with the office, except, perhaps, seeing one or two of his clerks. He knows nothing about the great number of clerks who are there, and, as far as I have been able to ascertain, there is nobody who does know. I should suppose that your Minister of Justice would be able to so arrange the order of work in the office that it should be done with regularity, and somebody would know how it was organised?—He certainly would. He would have in his office, wherever it was, a member of his staff whose business it was to visit, inspect, and report to him on what was going on. If he heard that somebody's time was not occupied, or the business was put into a watertight compartment, that would be one of the things that would be dealt with by the Minister himself.

60,969. There is another thing which has been suggested to us when we criticised somewhat the length of the vacation, the hours of work, holidays, and so on—that it was idle for them to stop there till half-past 3 or 4 in the day, because there was nothing to be done; and that in the vacation you must have your watertight bulkhead that came down and shut off every bit of work from the 1st August until the 10th October. Perhaps we might, with the appointment of a Minister of Justice and the organisation that would arise from it, get some scheme by which some work could be done by those officials who were placed there?—You certainly would, and, if he was slow about it, you would on the vote of his salary, be able to move for a reduction of 100L., instead of having to do with people who are on the Consolidated Fund and who cannot be got at.

60,970. (Sir John Kempe.) Your lordship has spoken of a scheme for recruiting the legal offices by the system of selection which you described, and you said you preferred the system of selection to open competition by examination. I do not quite understand on what system the selection would be made. I suppose you would have applications sent in first of all, with certificates, and so on, and it would be so far an open competitive examination. Applications would be sent in and they would be examined by the committee?—What I should contemplate would be this: Laying down a rule that no one need apply unless he had the higher leaving certificate of a secondary school. That is the ideal system; I am not saying that you could carry it out all at once. Then you get your class, and you have perhaps three vacancies with ten men. Then you want somebody who has an aptitude for law and a little knowledge of it. In that selection I think probably your best course would be to have an examination which brought in law and which also gave marks for training in a solicitor's office. Just as the universities give marks for certain things and just as marks are given in the Civil Service examinations for certain things, so I should give marks for proper training in a solicitor's office—perhaps a good many marks—and thereby have a more competitive examination on the basis of the record ascertained by the certificate together with the legal requirements of which we have spoken.

8 July 1915.]

The Right Hon. VISCOUNT HALDANE, K.T., O.M.

[Continued.]

60,971. Could not that be done by the Civil Service Commission and so make the system a part of the Civil Service system?—The Civil Service Commission might possibly carry out this process. The Civil Service Commission would see to it that the candidate was qualified by possession of the leaving certificate. Then they would have to find out what was the value of the candidate's experience in a legal office. They might have an office boy, for instance, who did not know anything about law, and that experience should count for very little, or they might have somebody who had assisted in drafting or preparing bills of costs, and so on, and had very useful training; but whether the Civil Service Commission could form a good judgment of those things I really do not know enough to say. They probably could get such assistance as would enable them to do this. I think there is a good deal to be said for the Civil Service Commission being primarily responsible for the appointment of the class of which we have been speaking, but they may have to get some assistance.

60,972. You could put the initial step in the hands of the Civil Service Commission and afterwards have the candidates examined by a committee to get a final selection for a particular post?—Yes, or at any rate give some assistance to the Civil Service Commission to consider what was necessary to be allowed for experience.

60,973. (Sir Donald MacAlister.) The Commission have been much exercised over this question of political appointments in Scotland, and a good many devices have been suggested for overcoming it. You spoke of a committee to assist the Secretary of Scotland. Do we infer from that that you would put all the appointments, which are now practically all made by the Lord Advocate, into the hands of the Secretary for Scotland?—No. I think the Lord Advocate's legal appointments are very valuable. The Lord Advocate has a large experience of life both at the Bar and in administrative affairs in Scotland, and I should say that, on the whole, from what I have seen, the Lord Advocate's appointments are very well made. They are political to a very great degree, and I should like to temper that very much, and for that purpose, I think, he might very well have a committee. Nobody likes to make political appointments when he has to explain to a committee that they are political. But as to transferring them to the Secretary for Scotland, I say, certainly not; I think the Secretary for Scotland has quite enough to do. I should like to see him have a committee.

60,974. At present the Lord Advocate is known to nominate, but the formal appointment is not necessarily made by him?—Very often.

60,975. Would it not be desirable to recognise facts and put the formal appointment in the hands of the Lord Advocate?—I do not think that very much matters, and I am all for leaving these things alone when they are working smoothly, because if you stir them up it very often results in appointments being taken out of the hands of the right man because nominally they belong to some other man.

60,976. Assuming that you recognised the fact that the Lord Advocate did effectively nominate, the kind of committee that might assist him ought to be one which included those who would know what he is supposed to know—the qualified, likely, and promising members of the legal profession, from among whom these appointments are made?—When you come to that kind of appointment by the Lord Advocate, I am not sure that a committee is of great assistance. I was talking of such appointments by the Lord Advocate as are of a rather lower order. When you come to advocates depute, and so on, after all, just as you must trust the Lord Chancellor to select the judges and nobody else can really help him, probably the Lord Advocate knows better than anybody else and better than any committee what a man's qualifications are. The great point is, that for the lower appointments the committee would be an excellent mode of staving off very disagreeable pressure. I think we all of us have felt that. I have had a vast amount of patronage in my time to deal with in two departments, and I should have been thankful to have got rid of it altogether. The burden of it and the sense that you cannot overtake the work and make the best selection satisfactorily has almost made me feel that I should like, at any rate, to have somebody with whom to share the burden and responsibility.

60,977. I am thinking of appointments, say, under the rank of Principal Clerk of Session?—Then I think a committee would be a perfectly admirable institution for dealing with it.

60,978. In answer to the Chairman you indicated your general approval of the composition of a committee to assist the Lord Chancellor?—Yes.

60,979. Have you any idea of the composition of a similar committee that might assist the Lord Advocate, with a view to avoiding the particular danger in Scotland of the political element?—No, I am not enough in Edinburgh to be able to say. If I were much in Edinburgh I think I could conjecture.

60,980. Might I put this question: Would it be desirable to have the outside legal opinion and knowledge of a representative, say, of the Dean of the Faculty of Advocates on a committee to advise the Lord Advocate?—I doubt whether that would help very much. Are you talking of the subordinate appointments?

60,981. Yes?—Well, I am not sure. I think I should really prefer to let the Lord Advocate have the responsibility of selecting his own committee. I think it must vary from time to time; the Dean of the Faculty of Advocates might not be in the least a useful person. It depends entirely on whom he was; he might be a good man or he might not.

60,982. I am thinking of the question from the point of view of the knowledge of the available professional element which he would have?—If I were set to do it, even far away as I am from the centre of things in Scotland, I could choose at once men who would be perfectly admirable members of a committee of that kind—men I know about of the very greatest character, and who really would give the Lord Advocate the help he wanted; but I do not know that in the case of the higher legal appointments—and I am not sure that you are speaking of those at all—it would be desirable to bring in even those men. The Lord Advocate after all must have the responsibility.

60,983. I want to make this clear. Unless there is some ex-officio element on this committee, to leave it to the Lord Advocate to choose would be merely removing the political temptation one degree; he might nominate the whole committee of one complexion, and you would be no better off so far as public confidence was concerned?—I quite see your point there. All I mean is that if you take somebody ex-officio, you are apt to get somebody who is not very well suited for that difficult and delicate work. I do not see why the Civil Service Commission should not be represented upon that committee, and I do not see why from other public sources another representative might not be got. What I mean is that in a country where there are fewer people and fewer appointments to deal with, more depends on the individual, and you must leave considerably more latitude as regards your choice of individuals.

60,984. We might well have a representative of the Civil Service Commission on the committee as a permanent member?—Quite so.

60,985. He would be, I may say, non-political and ex-officio?—Yes, and that would apply to the Scottish Secretary's appointments as well as to the Lord Advocate's appointments.

8 July 1915.]

The Right Hon. VISCOUNT HALDANE, K.T., O.M.

[Continued.]

60,986. I am speaking only of the Lord Advocate's appointments at present. Can you suggest—because that is what we are desirous of discovering—other members of the committee who would not necessarily be also political nominees, as the Lord Advocate is?—Besides the Civil Service Commission representative? No doubt it would be very easy to devise a plan of that kind, but I should be anxious to get a committee which would work with the Lord Advocate. Lord Advocates are men of very high character and position, and they want to do what is right for the public, and you want to give them all the help you can give them and not be a hindrance. Speaking from my own point of view, if I were Lord Advocate, I should be thankful to have such a committee to be a barrier for me against the pressure that is notoriously put on.

60,987. I am assuming that the Lord Advocate will be grateful for such a committee?—Yes, we must assume that as the basis of it.

60,988. Yes; and we are trying to devise a committee which would have two qualities; one the containing of an ex-officio element not politically of one colour; and, secondly, that it should not change with the Lord Advocate, but be the repository of the knowledge of the staff—for it would have to serve for promotion as well as appointment—and knowledge of the material throughout Scotland likely to be valuable?—I think that is very good so long as you do not get on to the committee a permanent element so rigid that the Lord Advocate's life became a burden to him in working with that committee. That is a danger which you must bear in mind.

60,989. That might be helped by limiting the tenure of the members?—That might help.

60,990. But I think you see it is desirable that if the committee is to serve the purpose of somewhat changing the tradition of political appointments, the committee itself should not be open to the risk of being political?—Certainly, that is so. The difficulty is how to adjust it.

60,991. Secondly, it should not change with the Lord Advocate, or else it loses all continuity of information and influence?—I think a good deal could be done, but it would require study of the circumstances.

60,992. The number of high permanent officials who are not themselves political is not very great, from which one has to make a choice?—No, they are very few, unfortunately, and that is your difficulty in starting it. I am not sure whether you might not have to bring an Englishman from across the border.

60,993. The President of the Society of Writers to the Signet would have the same disability from your point of view as the Dean of the Faculty of Advocates?—It depends entirely on who he was. I have known such a man to be quite admirable. I think I would rather have him in some ways than the Dean of the Faculty of Advocates, because that would be rather the same thing over again, whereas the President of the Society of Writers to the Signet would be a business man.

60,994. Your outside member of the committee might conceivably be discovered there?—Yes, possibly.

60,995. In regard to the appointments that the Secretary for Scotland makes directly and upon his own initiative, would you also have a committee of a similar character?—Yes. You cannot do that with the higher appointments of a Minister, but all the minor appointments certainly I think should go to some organisation. If the Scottish Secretary sat at the head of an office and had all his staff by him, I should not think it necessary; but he sits in Dover House and has a certain number of people in Boards like the Local Government Board in Edinburgh. He is quite away from things, and therefore it seems to me he would be grateful for the barrier which such a committee would afford him.

60,996. That was covered by our previous reference on the general administrative Civil Service. The Secretary for Scotland has no special responsibility except through the Lord Advocate for the legal appointments?—Yes, the judges.

60,997. (Chairman.) The judges are outside our reference, but there are some appointments in the Register House for which he is responsible without the Lord Advocate's assistance?—Yes, and there is sometimes a little rivalry as to who has the appointment.

60,998. (Sir Donald MacAlister.) But wherever he has appointments such as we are considering now, without the Lord Advocate, it is desirable that he should have a similar committee to assist him?—Yes, I think what is true of one is true of the other.

60,999. (Mr. Matheson.) Mr. Shipley, who had to go away early, requested me to ask you this question: Whether, in view of the many duties of the Lord Chancellor, it is desirable to relieve him of his ecclesiastical patronage?—There you have raised a very interesting question. I do not know whether this Royal Commission wants to pursue it. The difficulty is this: there is an enormous mass of small livings—they are not all small, but there are over 600 of them, and the bulk of them are small. Who else is to administer them? It is not only a question of who will administer them best, but who will administer them least badly? It is a most difficult thing to administer that enormous mass of livings. If you throw them into the hands of the Archbishop of Canterbury you make him a Pope; you give him an enormous authority beyond what he has. That may be a good thing, but you are altering the position of the Archbishop. If you look about the Government to see what other Minister could take his duty, I do not know. On the whole, I think they are less unsafe in the hands of the Lord Chancellor than in the hands of any other Minister. He is detached, and may be supposed to approach the matter without twist towards the High Church or bias towards the Low. He is not easily got at, and he may have a really good and experienced secretary. It is not an ideal system, but there is something to be said for it. There may be a way of devising a system under which the ecclesiastical patronage could be more scientifically and thoroughly administered, but it is by no means obvious how it could be done.

61,000. For myself, I want to ask you this question: The general impression I got from your answer about recruiting the legal departments is that you think the primary condition of the efficiency of the departments is that those who enter the Service should have a really good secondary education, and that ought to be guaranteed?—Yes.

61,001. (Miss Haldane.) I do not think you were asked what your opinion was as to appointing a Woman Visitor in Lunacy. Have you any views about that?—I have had a very considerable experience—by letter only, I am glad to say—of lady lunatics, of whom there are a great many, both under the charge of the Lunacy Department—nominally of the Lord Chancellor, and it used to be really so—and the department of the Board of Control. The one thing that remains in the functions of the Lord Chancellor in relation to lunatics is that they are entitled to write to him, and at his private address, too. It is by statute an offence to prevent them sending the letters, so I have had a very large opportunity of seeing what sort of people write, and the bulk of my letters came from people of your sex. So that I gathered there was a very large field, and often there were cases where I should have liked to make investigation. My duty was to read those letters and satisfy myself that they were not merely the ordinary ravings of a person whose mind was disordered but whether there was something that needed inquiry, and I used very often to send down direct a special visitor. In the case of women, there is a great deal to be said, I am certain, for a woman visitor being available.

61,002. Would you appoint an extra one, or would you do away with the legal qualification and allow her to be put in place of the legal visitor?—I am not sure about doing away with the legal visitor. There are a good many questions which arise which are not medical at all in connection with these lunatics, and I think it is well to have somebody in reserve to send; it is very useful. I think I should prefer to have one of the two medical visitors a woman. I am talking now of the

8 July 1915.]

The Right Hon. VISCOUNT HALDANE, K.T., O.M.

[Continued.]

administration in Chancery by the Masters in Lunacy. There are two jurisdictions: The Lord Chancellor looks after the lunatics who have got property, and his jurisdiction comes entirely through their property. Their property is administered in lunacy by the Board of Lunacy, and the committee of the person is appointed only incidentally. The other jurisdiction is the jurisdiction over lunatics as such without reference to whether they have any property at all, and that has come to the Lord Chancellor by statute and in various ways, but it is quite apart from his position as head of the Court of Chancery. It comes to him as representing the Sovereign, who is parens patriae. So he has two bodies of lunatics to deal with. The Board of Control have very largely taken the second class over, but theoretically all questions affecting the liberty of the subject are left to the Lord Chancellor, and he is entitled therefore to send a visitor whenever he wishes. I think for both those classes it is desirable that there should be a woman visitor, and whether you could have an arrangement under which one lady did for both, or whether you took one of the existing lunacy medical visitors and appointed a woman there, is a question which would have to be considered in detail; but I am certainly in favour of having a woman visitor.

61,003. The appointment of women to certain offices in the legal departments, which you think would be desirable, would be very much simplified, of course, by the opening of the legal professions of solicitors and barristers to women. Would you agree with Lord Loreburn that that would be desirable?—Yes. I received a deputation on the subject when I was Lord Chancellor and gave great dissatisfaction to both branches of my profession by my answer.

61,004. But your personal view was very clear?—Very strong; I should throw both of those professions open. It has been done in other countries in the world, and I do not see why it should not be done here. It will be done before very long.

61,005. (Mr. Graham Wallas.) I understood you to say with regard to the political appointments to administrative posts that at present there is no strong feeling against the system in Scotland, to which Scotsmen have become largely accustomed?—No; they do not look upon it in the same way. It is habit with them. You must remember that for a very long time the whole of the government of Scotland—the whole of the patronage—was in the hands of the Lord Advocates in the marvellous days before the Reform Act. Scotland is accustomed to that, and it is only slowly growing away from it; but still the process is going on;

you must not, however, expect to see these things regarded with the enthusiasm on the other side of the Border that they are looked at elsewhere.

61,006. That is what I expected; but I want to put to you certain evidence given by apparently very responsible persons, whose position you would be able to estimate better than I could, indicating a contrary feeling. Mr. Walter James Lewis gave evidence on behalf of the Society of Solicitors in the Supreme Court, and said: "The system of political appointments should be absolutely done away with so far as possible." Then Mr. Boyd Anderson gave evidence on behalf of the Incorporated Society of Law Agents, and he said that the general opinion of the profession is against political appointments to administrative posts. Dr. David Murray, who gave evidence upon behalf of the Faculty of Procurators in Glasgow, said: "The view that because a man has been a political agent of some important person he shall therefore be appointed to an office in the Register House is entirely out of date, and I do not think anybody would be found to uphold it now. I think the legal profession in Scotland is all against it." Mr. J. H. Jameson said he was appointed by the Writers to the Signet to give evidence upon behalf of his Society, and in answer to a summing-up question, "The system which you describe is the political element which you tell us exists too much?" he said, "Yes." All those men were delegated to represent bodies which in your judgment are important bodies of legal professional opinion?—Yes, and no doubt they are expressing a very strong feeling of people about the thing, but Scotland is a very remarkable place. It is not given to that kind of enthusiasm. What I think is meant by people saying that things go slowly is that these appointments have never been regarded in Scotland as the burning and crying grievance that they would be if they were made in England.

61,007. But that evidence does represent that responsible professional organisations are now beginning to desire that this system should be changed, does it not?—Yes; these bodies would not express themselves in favour of political appointments. Some of their members, however, will still say: "The thing does not work as badly as you imagine," or "It works well," and you would find a great deal of scepticism about the Lord Advocate's committee and about other things; but that does not affect the case that there is a growth of opinion in Scotland in the direction which you indicate; and a growth of opinion of which, I have no doubt, this Royal Commission will take cognisance.

APPENDICES.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

	PAGE
APPENDIX XCI. :—
Report of the Committee appointed to inquire into the Office of the Masters in Lunacy - - -	661
APPENDIX XCII. :—
Report of the Chancery Registrars Committee - - - - - - - - -	662
APPENDIX XCIII. :—
Memorandum prepared by Sir Kenneth Muir Mackenzie, G.C.B., K.C., for the Chancery Registrars Committee in 1907 - - - - - - - - -	666
APPENDIX XCIV. :—
Draft Regulations for Legal Departments prepared in connection with the Judicature Bill, 1893 -	667
APPENDIX XCV. :—
Statement as to the work of the Principal Probate Registry and the District Probate Registries -	668
APPENDIX XCVI. :—
Statement as to the work of the Chancery Chambers - - - - - - - -	669
APPENDIX XCVII. :—
Particulars as to Candidates Nominated to Clerkships in the Supreme Court of Judicature and Land Registry - - - - - - - - -	672
APPENDIX XCVIII. :—
County Courts. Whole-time Registrars on Pensionable Salaries - - - - - -	684
APPENDIX XCIX. :—
County Courts in which the Plaints have at some time exceeded 6,000, or in which Registrars have fixed salaries - - - - - - - - -	685
APPENDIX C. :—
The District Probate Registrars Association. Summary of the Statistical Returns of the District Probate Registries for the year ended 31st December 1914 - - - - -	686
APPENDIX CI. :—
Scrivenery Department, Royal Courts of Justice. Retiring Gratuity - - - - -	688
APPENDIX CII. :—
Particulars relating to the Staff of the Land Registry, April 1915 - - - - -	688
APPENDIX CIII. :—
Table showing the Proportion Successful of the Candidates at the Open Competitions for Clerkships in the Register House Departments, Edinburgh, held in Ten Years (1905–14) - - -	690
APPENDIX CIV. :—
Particulars as to Candidates Successful in Open Competitive Examinations for Clerkships in Departments of the General Register House, Edinburgh, in the Ten Years, 1905–14 - - -	690

APPENDIX XCI.

(Handed in by Sir Kenneth Muir Mackenzie, G.C.B., K.C.)

Vide Q. 43,957.

REPORT of the COMMITTEE appointed to inquire into the OFFICE of the MASTERS in LUNACY.

TO THE RIGHT HONOURABLE THE LORD
CHANCELLOR.

MY LORD,

In reference to your Lordship's letter dated the 15th June 1909, requesting us as a Committee to inquire whether the transfer of the business of the Masters in Lunacy (other than the holding of inquisitions) to the Chambers of the Chancery Judges (as recommended by the recent Royal Commission) is practicable, both as to effectual working in the interest of the lunatics and as to substantial economy, and, in the event of a transfer, whether any and what additional staff will be required in Chambers, and how far the existing Masters and their staff should be utilised, we have the honour to report as follows :—

The following attended and gave information on the matter before us, viz. :—

The Hon. Mr. JUSTICE JOYCE.
Master FISCHER	} Lunacy Masters.
Master THEOBALD
Master BAKER, Taxing Master.
Master BURNEY	} Masters in the Chan-
Master LIONEL CLARKE
Master FOX
Mr. BEAL	} Registrars in the Chancery Divi-
Mr. FARMER
Mr. METHOLD, Barrister-at-Law.	sion.
Mr. W. H. WINTERBOTHAM, Official Solicitor and President of the Law Society.
Mr. ROGER GREGORY	} Solicitors.
Mr. EMERY
Mr. CORLEY, Taxing Department of the office of the Masters in Lunacy.
Mr. KEELY, Chief Clerk in the office of the Masters in Lunacy.
Mr. STRINGER, Central Office.
Mr. SARTORIS, Superintendent, Royal Courts of Justice.
Mr. MILLS, Office of the Masters in Lunacy.

1. Your Committee are of opinion that although the transfer of the business of the Masters in Lunacy, other than the holding of inquisitions, as recommended by the Royal Commission, might be practicable, it is not expedient, either as to effectual working in the interest of the lunatics or as to substantial economy.

The work of the Masters in Lunacy and their staff is seldom contentious and, to a large extent, is purely ministerial. Even their administrative acts are constantly preceded by correspondence, or by personal interviews with committees or receivers or relations of lunatics or solicitors acting for them, and in very many cases it is only when a course of action has been decided upon as the result of such correspondence or interviews, that application is made to the Master to give judicial sanction thereto, either by order or mere approval given without order.

As many as 2,000 letters on an average are annually written in the Lunacy Office giving advice as to lunatics' estates, and interviews must be at least as numerous. A large part of the work is ex parte, and anything wrong in an application or in the general management of a lunatic's affairs has often to be detected by the officials, and any criticism must come from them. In order effectually to carry out this work it is desirable that the whole information as to a lunatic's life, his property, and his family, should be constantly before one person as far as possible, and that all documents should be available for reference by the office at all times while the lunacy continues, and this usually extends during lifetime. The analogy, which seems to have influenced the Royal Commission in making their report, between the administration of the estates of lunatics and of infants is only partially true. The Chancery Division has no separate record of its wards, and does not move until set in motion by the relations or others taking an interest in the ward. In the case of lunatics a far wider discretion has to be exercised as it becomes necessary to take up the administration of the estate of an absolute owner which has suddenly been interrupted by that owner's incapacity and to continue it for his lifetime, initiating action when occasion arises. This requires a procedure differing from that which the conditions of the Chancery Chambers readily afford.

The information obtained by your Committee, including that given by solicitors of large experience in the conduct of lunacy business, has satisfied your Committee that the Lunacy Department affords assistance and facilities for the dispatch of business of this character in an inexpensive and expeditious manner, which it would be difficult, if not impossible, to obtain in the Chancery Division.

Another advantage of retaining the Lunacy Department will be that, while full effect can be given to the recommendation made by the Royal Commission as to the holding of opposed inquiries into the sanity of an alleged lunatic by a judge of the High Court, unopposed inquiries will continue to be held as at present by a Master in Lunacy instead of by a Lunacy Commissioner as suggested by the Royal Commission. This practice would not only avoid giving additional work to the Lunacy Commissioners, but would also continue to give to the officer who ultimately has to deal with questions of property and maintenance the very valuable opportunity of seeing the lunatic and his surroundings.

The lunacy jurisdiction now exercised by the judges of the Court of Appeal would still be retained, except in respect of the trustee business referred to below.

2. Your Committee, while giving this general answer to the main question submitted to them, are of opinion that in the matters hereafter mentioned the judges and Masters in Lunacy might be relieved with advantage of part of the work now done by them.

Cases in which an appointment of a new trustee or a vesting order as to trust property is required in consequence of a trustee being of unsound mind should, in the opinion of your Committee, be dealt with by the Chancery Division, which at present deals with appointments of trustees and vesting orders in other cases in which the necessity for the court's assistance arises from some disability other than lunacy.

In order to give the Chancery Division complete jurisdiction to deal with all applications for appointments of trustees and vesting orders, it seems to us that it will be necessary to amend the Trustee Act, 1893, by the addition to the pertinent sections in the group headed "Appointment of new Trustees and Vesting Orders" of appropriate words extending those sections to the case of a trustee who is incapable of acting in the trust whether found of unsound mind by inquisition or not. It may also be desirable that this amending Act should repeal such parts of the Lunacy Act, 1890, as give to the Judge in Lunacy the jurisdiction which is transferred. It should also be considered whether it is advisable to add to the Rules of the Supreme Court a rule ensuring that applications for vesting orders, whether consequential upon the appointment of a new trustee or not, may in cases of incapacity be made in the Chancery Division as they now are in Lunacy, by summons and not by petition.

The business of making vesting orders affecting the lunatic's own property, or where the lunatic is a mortgagee in his own right, or where a committee of the estate, on behalf of the lunatic, exercises a power of appointing new trustees, which by the present practice under the Lunacy Act, 1891, is done by the Masters in Lunacy should be continued as lunacy business and not transferred.

In cases where the lunatic is out of the jurisdiction, and property in this country has to be vested in a curator or similar person managing his affairs abroad, a vesting order should continue to be made by the Judge in Lunacy as at present, and the jurisdiction should not be transferred.

The transfer of what may be described as trustee business to the Chancery Division will afford considerable relief to the Lunacy Department, and will not involve any increase in the staff of the Chancery Division, and is quite practicable both as to effectual working in the interest of the lunatics and as to substantial economy.

3. We are of opinion that the Taxing Department of the Office of the Masters in Lunacy should be transferred to the Supreme Court Taxing Office, as recommended by the Departmental Committee in 1901, in like manner as if the same had been immediately transferred by Rule 3 of the Rules of the Supreme Court, January 1902. We think, however—

(a) That the Masters in Lunacy should be at liberty, unless the parties object, to assess the costs of passing committees', receivers', and other accounts, and of minor applications, and of all proceedings in cases of small estates where fees and percentage are remitted, and also, by request, to refer any costs (whether in an account or not) for taxation in like manner as if the same had been the subject of an order;

(b) That the Masters in Lunacy should also be at liberty to give a certificate of allowances for the attendance of counsel and solicitors attending before them as provided by Order 65, Rule 27, Regulation 16, and Appendix N., No. 152.

4. Your Committee would point out that in the Lunacy Department in 1908 the certificates and allocators for costs numbered 1,121, the amount of costs certified being 69,029*l.* 8*s.*, the fees payable being 982*l.*, or 1*l.* on the certificates, no fee being taken on allocators, or where, having regard to the smallness of the estate, no fees were taken. The volume of the bills of costs is large, having regard to the amount certified, as compared with bills for a like amount as at present taxed in the Supreme Court Taxing Office. The certificate for costs in the Supreme Court Taxing Office has an impressed stamp of 10*s.* and ad valorem stamps at the rate of 2½ per cent. on the amount so certified.

Having regard to the percentage at present payable out of lunatics' estates, which produces a considerable surplus over the expenses of the Lunacy Office, your Committee are of opinion that the transfer of taxations to the Supreme Court Taxing Office ought to be so arranged as not to increase the aggregate charge upon a lunatic's estate. We therefore recommend that when the Taxing Office percentage of 2½ per cent. on the certified amount of costs, together with the fee of 10*s.* charged upon the certificates, exceeds the sum of 1*l.* now payable in the Lunacy Office, the excess should either not be charged, or if charged in the first instance for the sake of uniformity of practice, should be remitted to the lunatic's estate.

A rule may be required to provide for an appeal from a Taxing Master's decision in a lunacy matter.

5. If the transfer of the taxing business of the office of the Masters in Lunacy takes place it will be for your Lordship to consider whether the costs to be transferred should be referred to one or more of the Taxing Masters pursuant to Order 65, Rule 18, and whether this will necessitate the appointment of an additional Taxing Master with a clerical staff.

6. The transfer which we have recommended to the Chancery Division of the trustee business and to the Supreme Court Taxing Office of the taxing business will substantially lighten the work of the Lunacy Office, and we recommend that it should be considered as opportunities arise whether some reductions could not be made in the number of officers dealing with lunacy business.

7. Your Committee desire to acknowledge the services of their Secretary, Mr. Bayly.

Dated 3rd day of March 1910.

HERBERT H. COZENS-HARDY, M.R.

CHRISTOPHER JAMES.

J. W. CAWSTON.

EDWARD SHEARME.

W. ARTHUR SHARPE.

F. T. VILLIERS BAYLY,
Secretary.

APPENDIX XCII.

(Handed in by Sir Kenneth Muir Mackenzie, G.C.B., K.C.)

Vide Q. 43,957.

CHANCERY REGISTRARS COMMITTEE.

REPORT.

TO THE RIGHT HONOURABLE THE LORD
CHANCELLOR.

MY LORD,

IN December last you requested us to act as a Committee to inquire into the Office of the Chancery Registrars with a view to enabling you, in conjunction with the Treasury, to determine whether the establishment should be continued on the existing basis or ought to be modified in the direction of efficiency as well as economy. We have held many meetings, and have devoted much time and attention to the subject of the inquiry. We have had before us written statements by many persons qualified to give information and make suggestions, including Judges, Counsel, Solicitors' Clerks, Registrars, and Masters, and some of them have from time to time attended our meetings and expressed and explained their views orally. The minutes of our meetings, including notes of oral evidence and copies of the several written statements above referred to, will be handed to your Lordship by our Secretary, Mr. F. T. Villiers Bayly, who has discharged his duties efficiently and pleasantly.

This Report is the result of our best consideration of the above materials, aided by the knowledge and experience which we have respectively been able to bring to bear on the subject.

Some members of the Committee desired that the Registrars' Office should cease to exist as a separate department, a sufficient staff being permanently attached to the Chambers of each pair of Judges of the Chancery Division to draw up all orders made by those Judges or by their Masters, whether in Court or in Chambers, thus carrying out, so far as the drawing up of orders is concerned, the recommendations of Lord Esher's Committee made in 1885 and approved by the Council of Judges in 1892. The majority of the Committee, supported in this by all the Chancery Judges of to-day and those members of the Court of Appeal who were formerly Chancery Judges, took a different view, and at one of our early meetings the following resolutions were passed:—

- (1) That the Registrars' Office ought to be maintained as a separate department for the purpose of drawing up orders and attendance in Court.
- (2) That all orders which can be drawn up in common form ought to be made and drawn up in chambers.
- (3) That all other orders ought to be drawn up in the Registrars' Office.

Our deliberations have therefore proceeded on this footing.

The duties of the Registrars consist of—

- (1) Attendance in Court.
- (2) Drawing up orders.

According to the practice which has hitherto prevailed a Registrar attends each Judge sitting in Court and also the Court of Appeal taking Chancery Cases. This means that with the exception of Monday, when three Chancery Judges sit in Chambers and are attended by Masters, seven Registrars are in Court daily, and making allowance for the absence from illness or other cause the staff of twelve Registrars is not more than sufficient to supply the demand and to leave a proper number to do the other work. That other work, which is styled drawing up orders, really consists in revising and finally settling the draft orders which have been prepared by their clerks from notes taken by the Registrars in Court or transmitted by a Master from Chambers with the assistance of the endorsements on counsels' briefs, and in some cases of minutes prepared by counsel. The time occupied in this work varies considerably, some orders being long and of a complex character, and others being quite simple. Some part of the work is done without the attendance of parties, but for other parts the solicitors attend with or without formal appointment.

The number of orders passing through the Registrars' hands has largely decreased of recent years, and without going into statistics it may be said that the number at the present day is not more than half what it was 20 years ago. The decrease is largely in orders of a simple character, which never gave much trouble or separately occupied much time, including many which, according to the present practice, are not drawn up at all, but there can be no doubt that regarded as a whole the decrease in the number of orders and the simplification of their character have been such as to make it wholly unnecessary to maintain the present staff of 12 Registrars. Reduction of the staff presents a difficulty which can only be solved by making some arrangement under which the daily attendance of seven Registrars in Court would not be required. Notwithstanding some objections to dispensing with their attendance we have come to the conclusion that as regards the Court of Appeal and the three Judges, who, according to the present system, are engaged in trying actions with witnesses, the attendance of a competent clerk in Court would be sufficient. Some members of the Committee were disposed to think that the attendance of a clerk on the Judges taking non-witness business would also suffice, but the Judges consider the attendance of a Registrar as regards this class of business essential, and the Committee came to the conclusion that the number of the staff should be fixed on this basis, which will necessitate three Registrars being in Court daily, except on Mondays.

According to this arrangement, one of the duties hitherto performed by the Registrars themselves—namely, attendance in Court—will be largely performed by clerks, and it will be seen below that we propose also to give to their clerks additional duties in drawing up orders. Under these circumstances there cannot be any large reduction in the number of those clerks who belong really to the same class as the Registrars, though in different grades; but there can be in the number of junior clerks, which is certainly in excess of the requirements of the office.

It will be seen that as regards both Registrars and Clerks we propose such salaries as will effect a substantial diminution of the charges of the office, and this, combined with the reduction of the staff, will secure the economy which was one of the objects to which our inquiries were directed.

We recommend that the staff of the office shall consist of six Registrars, eight Principal Clerks, three Clerks, and three Assistant Clerks, and that this staff shall be divided into three groups, each of which will consist of two Registrars and Clerks adequate to dispose of the orders made whether in Court or in Chambers by one of the three pairs of Judges among whom the business of the Chancery Division is, according to the system now prevailing, divided. We further recommend that one group shall be attached to each of the three pairs, not permanently, but for regular periods of not less than one sittings, so that at the end of each period each group shall be attached to a different pair of Judges for the ensuing period. We have added as an appendix to this Report a table showing how this grouping would be carried out.

As regards the salaries of these officers, we recommend that the salary of the Chief Registrar, whose duties will be specified below, and who will be the Senior Registrar in one group, be 1,600*l.*, that the salary of each of the other two Senior Registrars shall be 1,500*l.*, and that the salaries of the remaining three Registrars shall be 1,200*l.*, rising by annual increments of 50*l.* to 1,400*l.* As regards the salaries of the clerks, we recommend as follows: that the salary of each Principal Clerk be 600*l.*, rising by annual increments of 25*l.* to 800*l.*; that the salary of a Clerk be 250*l.*, rising by annual increments of 15*l.* to 400*l.*; that the salary of an Assistant Clerk be 100*l.*, rising by annual increments of 10*l.* to 200*l.*

The existing arrangements with regard to pensions seem capable of being adapted to the new staff, on the footing that the Principal Clerks recommended by this Report take the place of the present Clerks to the Registrars.

The qualification to be required of Registrars and clerks is a matter for serious consideration, and the Committee are not all of one opinion on the question whether these offices should be thrown open to members of the Bar as well as to solicitors. The result of our discussions is expressed in the following resolutions:—

1. That the qualifications necessary for appointment as an Assistant Clerk be those required for an appointment as a Third Class Clerk of the Supreme Court.
2. That to be qualified for the appointment of Clerk, a candidate shall have been called to the Bar or admitted a solicitor.
3. That to be qualified for the appointment of Principal Clerk a candidate shall have had three years' experience in the office as a Clerk, or be a practising barrister of five years' standing, or an admitted solicitor of five years' standing.
4. That Registrars shall be appointed from among the Principal Clerks of three years' standing, but that in the event of there being no such Principal Clerk competent to perform the duties of Registrar, a vacancy may be filled by a practising barrister of 10 years' standing or a practising solicitor of 10 years' standing.
5. That on a vacancy occurring in the office of Senior Registrar of a group or of Chief Registrar, it shall be filled by the promotion of any one of the other Registrars.

In connection with this part of our subject we further recommend that appointments and promotions be made by selection and not by seniority, and that power be taken to remove any officer for sufficient cause shown.

The staff which we recommend is that which in our opinion ought to be sufficient for all the duties of the office when remodelled according to our proposals. Obviously the plan can come into operation only by degrees, and cannot be in perfect operation until the number of Registrars has been reduced to that which we suggest as ultimately sufficient. In the meantime the office must work more or less on the present lines and in particular Registrars must attend the Court of Appeal, and the Judges taking witness actions, but as the number falls below what is required for this purpose clerks will take their place. It may be possible at once to carry into effect the system of attaching Registrars and staffs to pairs of linked Judges by appropriating to some of the Registrars duties which under that system will ultimately be performed by Principal Clerks.

Until the whole scheme comes into operation it will be difficult to say that the staff of clerks recommended will be sufficient and no more than sufficient to discharge the duties attached to them. We believe that this will be the case, but some redistribution of work will from time to time and eventually be necessary, and our recommendation as regards the number of clerks must be taken with a reserve that some modification may be required.

Certain clerks now attached to the Registrars' Office, and treated as part of that office, perform duties which are distinct from those above described. These are:—

- (a) The petition clerk, who receives and enters all petitions, whether petitions of course or special petitions—draws up the simpler orders of course, and refers petitions to be heard in Court to the proper Judge.
- (b) The entry clerks, who copy all orders when settled and file the originals by way of record.
- (c) The cause clerks, whose duty it is to keep the lists of all causes and matters in the Chancery Division—a duty which involves recording all directions given respecting the order of business, and to arrange the Daily Cause List for all the Chancery Judges.

The work of the petition and entry clerks will be very largely reduced if Orders of Course are made and drawn up in Chambers, and all orders are printed as suggested in this Report; and apart from this, we see no reason to doubt that the duties of these clerks may be assigned to some of the staff, according to our scheme.

The Cause Clerks, however, must work separately, and cannot be conveniently included in the grouping arrangement. It may, therefore, be necessary to have for this purpose one Clerk, or possibly two Clerks, independent of the rest of the staff, but under the supervision of the Chief Registrar.

There is one blot in the existing system which we wish to see removed under the new arrangements. The present Senior Registrar has certain duties imposed on him, being mainly those of attending to the correspondence of the office and answering inquiries whether by Judges or others respecting the practice, but in other respects he is on an equality with his brethren, and is in no wise responsible for them or for the management of the office. In truth each Registrar is a separate head of his own department. To meet the obvious objections to this state of things we propose:—

1. That the Senior Registrar of each group be responsible for the work and staff of that group.
2. That the Chief Registrar shall have the following duties in addition to those imposed on him as the Senior Registrar of a group, namely:
 - (a) To conduct the official correspondence of the office.
 - (b) To arrange with the other Senior Registrars any matter which affects the grouping.
 - (c) To control any officers not attached to a particular group—e.g., the Cause Clerks.
 - (d) To control the Principal Clerks attending the Court of Appeal and to exercise general supervision over the other Registrars, but not over their clerks.
 - (e) When required by any Judge, to assist such Judge by inquiring into and reporting upon points of doubt relating to practice, and when any such point of doubt has been decided, to see that the decision is communicated to all the groups.

(f) To entertain any question arising in the office respecting discipline or otherwise which may be referred to him by the other Senior Registrars.

We have obtained much information respecting the manner in which the business of the Registrars Office is at present conducted. The ultimate results may be satisfactory, but there is much unnecessary delay in drawing up orders, and it is needless to say that delay in many cases involves injury to the suitors, which ought as far as possible to be avoided. In considering this subject we have informed ourselves of the steps taken towards drawing up orders whether made in Court or in Chambers, but we have not deemed it convenient to report on this in detail. We hope that when the staff of Registrars and clerks has been reduced to proper limits, and under the arrangements above proposed the work has been distributed as recommended and efficient control has been established, many occasions of delay will be removed or will be checked by that control. But we make the following recommendations of a detailed character, because effect might be given to them under the present system, and, if adopted, they would, in our opinion, largely conduce to the efficiency of the office.

At present the Principal Clerks draft orders from notes made by Registrars in Court or notes transmitted by the Masters from Chambers. On these drafts they make such observations in the nature of queries as their experience suggests, but, notwithstanding that the same experience would enable them to dispose of the queries if they had the opportunity of doing so, this is not done because all questions on the draft orders are reserved for the Registrars. We think that the clerks drafting orders should be empowered to give appointments to solicitors and to settle all formal matters arising on orders, submitting only the final settlement to the Registrar. The Registrar should, we think, require the attendance of the parties or not as he thinks fit, but he should in all cases be responsible for the order. This additional duty of the clerk should be limited by a provision that any solicitor attending him shall be at liberty to adjourn to the Registrar any question on which he desires the Registrar's decision.

At present when an order has been drafted by the clerk no notice that it is ready is given to the solicitor having the carriage of the order, but the solicitor having ascertained that the draft is ready makes an appointment for settling it with the other solicitors concerned. This is a fruitful cause of delay, and we think that when a draft order has been prepared notice thereof should be sent immediately from the office to each of the solicitors concerned, together with a copy of the draft order, and also notice of the appointment to settle fixed by the officer by whom the appointment is made.

At present the Master's note of an order made in Chambers is called for by the solicitor having the carriage of the order and taken by him to the Registrars Office. We think that it ought to be sent direct, and as soon as possible, from the office of the Master to the Registrars Office, where the rule proposed in our last recommendation should likewise be followed.

We further think that it would facilitate the work of the office if, subject to exception for special cause, all orders, instead of only those of a certain class, as at present, were printed, provided adequate arrangements are made for avoiding delay.

The use of shorthand writing facilitates despatch in all departments of business, and we venture to suggest, as a matter for consideration, whether it would not be well to promote it at least among the assistant clerks.

Some members of the Committee have expressed their own opinions on certain points about which we are not altogether agreed in memoranda which will be found appended hereto, and their concurrence in this Report must be taken to be subject to these expressions of opinion.

This result of our labours we respectfully submit to your Lordship's consideration, and

We have, &c.,

ARTHUR KEKEWICH, Chairman.
CHRISTOPHER JAMES.
WM. H. WINTERBOTHAM.
J. P. CROWLY.
J. ROGER B. GREGORY.
CHARLES S. STEWART.

F. T. VILLIERS BAYLY,
Secretary.

27th June 1907.

APPENDIX.

Registrars.	Principal Clerks.	Clerks.	Assistant Clerks.
GROUP I.
Chief Registrar - -	} Four	One	One
2nd Registrar - -
GROUP II.
1st Registrar - -	} Two	One	One
2nd Registrar - -
GROUP III.
1st Registrar - -	} Two	One	One
2nd Registrar - -

MEMORANDUM by Mr. JUSTICE KEKEWICH.

So much of the Report of the Committee as recommends the grouping of the Registrars and their staff, that is the attachment of two Registrars and their staff to each pair of linked Judges is, in my opinion, objectionable, on the following grounds :—

- (1) I regard it as a step towards the amalgamation of the Registrars' Office with the Judges' Chambers, which is to be deprecated.
- (2) The constant circulation of the Registrars among the different Judges is valuable in assisting to secure uniformity of practice. The attachment of Registrars to certain Judges is adverse to this. The ill effect is intended to be obviated, but is not, I think, removed by the rotation recommended in the Report.
- (3) By attaching Registrars and their staff to particular Courts it is intended to put them more directly under the control of the Judges than at present. I do not believe that this result will or can be thus attained, and it is mischievous to raise illusory hopes.
- (4) The great blot on the present system is, to my thinking, the absence of a superior officer controlling the entire staff and responsible for the business of the department. The proposed plan fails to secure this. I cannot believe that making one of the two Registrars in each group superior to the other would be any efficient improvement on the present system.

ARTHUR KEKEWICH.

MEMORANDUM by Mr. JAMES.

I have signed the Report, but I desire to state that I do not approve of the proposal to divide the Registrars and their staff into three groups. Such a division is not necessary for carrying out the other recommendations contained in the Report, which are equally applicable, whether the division be made or not. The materials which were before the Committee did not satisfy me that any benefit would result from the proposed division, while on the other hand to keep the office as one department (with the addition of a Chief Registrar having control over the whole) would, in my opinion, better secure uniformity in practice and also afford greater facilities for organisation, and for dealing with extra work caused by illness or other cases of emergency. I cannot find that any one of the Judges or officials who assisted the Committee with their views expressed an opinion in favour of the proposed division into groups, and some of them certainly were opposed to it.

CHRISTOPHER JAMES.

MEMORANDUM by Mr. STEWART, Mr. WINTERBOTHAM, and Mr. GREGORY.

In recommending that the staff of the Registrars Office be divided into three groups, each adequate to deal with the orders made by one pair of Judges and their Masters, we recognise that if this proposal be carried out it will be easy, if thought desirable, at any future time to carry out in its entirety the recommendations of Lord Esher's Committee, referred to in our Report, with which we are in accord.

The evidence given before us shows that in the Lunacy Department and in the Companies' Winding-up Department the orders are drawn up by Principal Clerks who are members of the staffs of these departments, and who attend in Court when necessary. These orders are numerous, and are often long and complicated, but the work appears to be done in a satisfactory manner, and we see no reason why the same arrangement should fail to work satisfactorily in the Chancery Division.

We are of opinion that the existence of well-known books of precedents which are in daily use in the office, and the constant opportunities of conference between the Registrars of the three groups which would be possible where officials occupy one set of offices, would sufficiently secure uniformity of practice without the necessity for moving the Registrars and their staffs in the way suggested in the Report.

Having regard, however, to the views expressed by the Judges on this point, and as to the desirability of continuing the Registrars' Office as a separate department, we do not feel justified in urging our individual views further.

WM. H. WINTERBOTHAM.
J. ROGER B. GREGORY.
CHARLES S. STEWART.

MEMORANDUM by Mr. WINTERBOTHAM and Mr. GREGORY.

We see no reason for altering the present statutory qualifications under which a Registrar or a clerk to a Registrar must be a qualified solicitor.

The only reason suggested for the change is that it will widen the area of selection, but the same reason would justify the appointment of solicitors to County Court Judgeships, or to any other of the higher judicial offices now open only to the Bar.

It cannot be seriously contended that there is any lack of solicitors competent to perform the duties of drawing up the orders made by the Judges and Masters in the Chancery Division. The duties of the Registrars, including the control of a staff of clerks, can, we submit, be best performed by men trained as solicitors, and to admit members of the Bar to these less important legal posts, while excluding solicitors altogether from the higher offices is, we think, unreasonable.

We cannot overlook the fact that appointments which are open to both branches of the profession tend to be monopolised by the Bar, as in the case of Masters of the King's Bench Division, who are now all barristers. Even the posts of solicitors to the great public departments (which, but for special legislation, could only be filled by solicitors) are largely held by members of the Bar, and if the change suggested by the majority of the Committee is made, we feel sure that a strong (and in our judgment a reasonable) protest will be made by solicitors.

WM. H. WINTERBOTHAM.
J. ROGER B. GREGORY.

APPENDIX XCIII.

(Handed in by Sir Kenneth Muir Mackenzie, G.C.B., K.C.)Vide Q. 44,137.

MEMORANDUM PREPARED BY SIR KENNETH MUIR MACKENZIE, G.C.B., K.C., FOR THE CHANCERY REGISTRARS' COMMITTEE in 1907.

If the existing system of separate departments in the Chancery Division is to remain, the question is how far it should be modified. It is not too much to say that the Registrars' Department (in spite of considerable recent reductions) is established on a scale quite unknown in any other part of the public service, and even in the other divisions of the High Court itself, officers are usually graduated like a pyramid, here the pyramid stands on its apex. If such an office were being constituted afresh, it would probably be in some such form as this:—

One Head, then 6 Registrars, then 6 Assistants, and beneath these 12 to 18 clerks in three grades.

If the existing system is to remain substantially unaltered, the numbers specified below would be sufficient staff for the department, but it seems to require consideration whether the recommendations of the Chancery Committee of 1885 (whose report will, no doubt, be before the committee) have been thoroughly and uniformly acted upon as to the drawing of orders in Chambers. It is said that, in some of the Chambers at least, the business has been lighter than it need be, and this may arise partly from a difference of practice as to sending over orders to the Registrar. If all the Chambers carry out the drawing of orders to the full extent contemplated in 1885, the reduction in the Registrars' Department might perhaps be considerable. The attachment of two full Registrars to every Court is magnificent but it is not business, and it is in relation to that part of the system where the most important reduction can probably be made. The present practice involves the assumption that no Principal Clerk, however able, and however long his service, is qualified to sit in Court, but on the day when he succeeds to a Registrarship, he instantly becomes endowed with that capacity.

The following is the staff suggested:—

- (1) A Senior Registrar, for general supervision of the office and for attending the Court of Appeal, at a salary of 1,600*l.* a year.
- (2) Six Registrars, one for each Court, at 1,500*l.* a year.
- (3) Six Assistant Registrars, one for each Court, at 1,000*l.* a year.
- (4) Six Principal Clerks—
2 at 800*l.* a year.
2 „ 600*l.* „
2 „ 400*l.* „
- (5) Six Junior Clerks at the ordinary salaries of Second Class Clerks in the Supreme Court.
- (6) Six Third Class Clerks at normal salaries.

As regards qualification a Registrar should be appointed from amongst Solicitors of ten years' standing or from amongst the Assistants of ten years' standing. The Assistants should be appointed from amongst Solicitors of five years' standing, or from amongst the Principal Clerks of ten years' standing. There should be no right of succession.

The Principal Clerks should have professional qualifications either as Barristers or Solicitors, and should be eligible for appointment as Assistants. The other clerks should have the usual qualifications for offices of the Supreme Court.

The transition of the present staff to the standard above mentioned has been rendered comparatively easy by the nature of the appointments made during the last 20 years.

There is at this moment only one of the Principal Clerks with the statutory right of succession to a Registrarship; five others have been appointed with notice that they have no vested right of succession; three others have been appointed simply as Second Class Clerks in the Supreme Court, and have no better rights than any other clerks in the Chancery Division, except the advantage and opportunity which any of them has of showing himself to be a desirable man to retain and promote in the department.

The committee will no doubt consider carefully the Act of 5 Vict. c. 5. relating to the Registrars' Office. It has never been specifically repealed by any of the Statute Law Revision Acts, which have removed from the Statute Book all the various enactments superseded by the Judicature Acts. The only reason for this has probably been that the clerks to the Registrars were supposed to be anxious that their statutory right of succession should not disappear from amongst the Acts of Parliament, though the savings in the Judicature Act did, in fact, absolutely preserve all their rights. The powers under the Judicature Acts for regulating, from time to time, the numbers, duties, and salaries of the officers in the different departments are very full, and undoubtedly enable any reconstruction of the Registrars' Office to be made which may be desirable.

The foregoing remarks and suggestions are intended to apply only in the event of the committee considering it expedient that the office should remain a separate department, but this inquiry raises at once the question whether it should so continue. This question was dealt with to some extent by the Chancery Committee in 1885. It is to be observed that there is no separation of this kind in any other part of the legal system; not in any other division of the High Court itself; not in the Counties Palatine; not in the district registries; not in the county courts. The foundation of it probably is to be found in the principle of the division of labour where there is a concentration of important and complicated administrations, which applies to the Chancery Division more than to any of the other courts referred to. There has been a very considerable change in that respect since 1883, when the use of the originating summons greatly reduced the number of prolonged administration actions. The office may be required for some of the larger class of Chancery cases, if it be thought that the existing system is altogether the best for dealing with them. It must not, however, be forgotten that in these larger cases it is now the practice to do a great deal by minutes drawn by counsel and submitted to the Judge. But it is certainly open to doubt whether the Master, who has seen the case from the beginning, who is acquainted with its details, and the manner in which it has been conducted, is not the best person to carry out and give effect to the determination of the Judge at the hearing. Even in respect of qualification the Master might well be considered the better man. He is selected from amongst practising solicitors of ability and experience; it is his business to draw the orders in a numerous class of cases, and if it were part of his work also to be responsible for the larger orders there can be no doubt as to his ability to do them. The Registrar, on the other hand, under the existing system has no professional experience except to the extent of having served his articles before appointment as a clerk, and from the time of his appointment as a clerk until he succeeds to a Registrarship the field of his duties is strictly circumscribed, and though he becomes a specialist it is undoubtedly one of those cases where special knowledge really means limited knowledge.

If it were determined to consolidate the Chancery offices, the plan would probably be to add two Masters to each of the three branches of the Chancery Chambers and to divide the cases amongst the six Masters of each branch, the Master carrying out the whole business of any case assigned to him except the taxation. The amount of business coming before the Judges themselves would not be affected. The Judge would see a larger number of Masters, but each Master would bring before him a smaller number of cases.

The difficulty of the transition from the old to the proposed state of things would not be so difficult as appears at first sight. For a certain period the transferred officers might devote their attention in Chambers to that part of the work which they have been specialised, but there, at any rate, who are men of ability would before long be able to take their full share of the Chamber business, just as, on the other hand, the existing Masters would soon be familiar with the drawing of orders, however important. There might be cases of officers whom it might not be thought desirable to attempt to employ under the new arrangement. If these could not be employed on any analogous duties they would no doubt have to be compensated if they lost their offices.

APPENDIX XCIV.

(Handed in by Sir Kenneth Muir Mackenzie, G.C.B., K.C.)

Vide Q. 44,160.

DRAFT REGULATIONS for LEGAL DEPARTMENT prepared in connection with the JUDICATURE BILL, 1893.

This Order shall apply to all officers of the Supreme Court being for the purposes of salary and pension Permanent Civil Servants of the State. In this Order "Master" shall include any officer having the rank of Master, Assistant Master, Registrar, or Assistant Registrar, Taxing Master, or Chief Clerk in any of the Legal Departments; and "Clerk" shall include any officer classified as a principal, or first, second, or third-class clerk in any of those departments, or in the Lunacy Offices.

1. Every clerk hereafter certificated by the Civil Service Commissioners for appointment to the Legal Departments shall be subject to a strict probation for a period of not less than one year, during which his conduct and capacity in the transaction of business shall be subjected to such tests as may, with the approval of the president of the division and the concurrence of the Lord Chancellor, be determined by the senior master of the department to which he is attached, and he shall not be finally appointed to the Public Service unless his period of probation shall furnish to the president of the division, with the concurrence of the Lord Chancellor, satisfactory proof of his fitness to be permanently employed in that department.

2. All officers appointed after the date of this Order, and all existing officers who shall, after the date of this Order, by promotion or otherwise, rise to any office or class carrying increase of salary, immediate or prospective, shall be liable to give an attendance of not less than seven hours a day and four hours on Saturday, without any addition to the rates of salary in force at the date of this Order for a daily attendance of six hours: Provided that no person promoted to a higher post shall in any case suffer immediate pecuniary loss by such promotion.

3. Where clerks are promoted from one class to another, the selection shall be strictly according to merit, and subject to the following conditions:—

- (1) That there is a vacancy in the higher class which, under the arrangements sanctioned for the time being by the Lord Chancellor and the Commissioners of the Treasury, it is desirable to fill up by promotion;
- (2) That the clerk proposed for promotion has been reported by the senior master of the division or department in which he is serving fit to discharge the duties of the higher office.

4. The ordinary annual holidays allowed to clerks shall not exceed 36 week days during each of their first 10 years of service, and 48 week days thereafter, exclusive in both cases of Christmas Day, Good Friday, the Queen's Birthday, and (subject to the convenience of the Public Service) other days when the Courts and offices are closed: Provided that nothing in this clause shall affect the rights of existing officers who, under the regulations of the respective departments in which they are serving, are entitled to holidays in excess of those herein prescribed.

5. Sick-leave may be granted by the senior master of a department for any period not exceeding one month to any clerk serving in such department, subject to the following conditions, viz.:—

- (1) After four days' continuous absence a certificate by a duly qualified medical practitioner shall be required.
- (2) If the number of days during which any clerk in any year is absent without such medical certificate shall exceed seven in the aggregate, the number of days by which such aggregate period of absence exceeds seven may be deducted from the amount of ordinary annual holidays which may be allowed under clause 4 of this Order.

6.—(1) Continuous sick-leave on full salary may be granted to any officer by the president of the division, with the concurrence of the Lord Chancellor, for any period not exceeding six months; and at the expiration of such six months the president of the division, with the concurrence of the Lord Chancellor, may at his discretion grant further leave, with salary at half the ordinary rate, for any period not exceeding six months.

(2) After 12 months' continuous sick-leave no officer shall be paid any salary except on the recommendation of the Lord Chancellor, with the consent of the Commissioners of the Treasury, who may at their discretion, in special circumstances, allow payment of salary during any further period of sick-leave at a rate not exceeding the amount of pension (if any) for which at the expiration of 12 months' sick-leave the officer would have been qualified.

(3) Cases of repeated but not continuous sick-leave amounting in the aggregate to upwards of 12 months during any period of 18 months shall be reported to the Commissioners of the Treasury, who shall, with the concurrence of the Lord Chancellor, decide the payments in respect of salary to be made during such sick-leave.

(4) In the absence of any officer such arrangements may be made for the performance of his duties by the other officers of the department, or by additional assistance, or by deputy as the president of the division, with the concurrence of the Lord Chancellor, may approve; and if it is necessary to obtain additional assistance or to appoint a deputy, such payment of the assistant or deputy shall be made (except where the absent officer has arranged to pay him) by the Treasury, as the Treasury may, with the concurrence of the Lord Chancellor, under the circumstances direct.

7. An attendance book shall be kept in every department for the purpose of recording times of arrival and departure of the clerks.

8.—(1) It shall be competent for the Lord Chancellor to call upon any master to retire at the age of 70, on such pension as by the length of his service he is qualified to receive; but the Lord Chancellor may, by order to be laid before Parliament, extend any master's employment for a further period in no case exceeding five years, on being satisfied that such master's retirement at 70 would be detrimental to the interests of the public service.

(2) It shall be competent for the Lord Chancellor to call upon any clerk to retire at the age of 60, on such pension as by the length of his service he is qualified to receive; and retirement shall be compulsory for every clerk on attaining 65 years of age, except in any case where the Lord Chancellor shall extend the clerk's employment for a further period in no case exceeding five years, on being satisfied that such clerk's retirement at 65 would be detrimental to the interests of the public service.

(3) Any existing officer who shall be called upon to retire under the provisions of this Order, and who by virtue of his tenure of office would not otherwise have been liable to such retirement, shall receive the highest pension attached to that office.

(4) Provided also, that nothing in this Order shall prevent any officer from resigning his office on attaining the age of 60, and obtaining, without medical certificate, the pension to which he is then entitled.

(5) This rule shall not come into operation until the first of April 1894.

9. No officer shall be allowed to accept any part in the management of any society, or any trading, commercial, or financial company of whatever description, which would require the attendance of such officer at any time between the hours of 10 a.m. and 6 p.m.

10. This Order, so far as it applies to masters, shall extend to the masters and Visitors in Lunacy and the Official Referees, and to the Admiralty Marshal.

11.—(1.) At the beginning of each legal year the Lord Chancellor shall nominate four masters of different departments to serve on a consultative committee to report upon questions of staff, salary, and organisation for the year then beginning. In addition to such four members the Permanent Secretary and a person selected by the Commissioners of the Treasury shall serve on the committee.

(2) If the particular department concerned in the inquiry be not represented on such committee, there shall be added to it for the particular occasion a representative of such department.

(3) If the department concerned in the inquiry be represented on such committee, there shall be added for each occasion one other temporary member, being a master in some other department.

APPENDIX XCV.

(Handed in by Mr. Alfred Musgrave.)

Vide Q. 44,513.

STATEMENT as to the WORK of the PRINCIPAL PROBATE REGISTRY and the DISTRICT PROBATE REGISTRIES.

WORK.

The work of the Principal Probate Registry consists of probate contentious and non-contentious business as defined in the rules, and business in connection with divorce and other matrimonial causes.

Distribution among Registrars.

The work of the Registrars is now divided as follows:—

One Registrar is in attendance at the Courts of Justice on the hearing of probate actions and matrimonial causes, and also in the Appeal Court on the hearing of appeals from this division. The Registrar draws up decrees and orders of the Court, and takes notes which may be of use on taxation of costs, and makes abstracts for the Judge of motion papers, and attends the Judge in chambers, where summonses are heard, some of which are on appeal from orders made in the Registry. There are frequently two Courts sitting to hear probate and divorce causes, when the Registrar and his clerk are fully occupied.

One other Registrar is fully employed with taxing bills of costs and dealing with references as to alimony, maintenance, variation of settlements, access to children, and questions of ownership of property under section 17 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, &c. This work has increased very much of late, and assistance is from time to time required from the other two Registrars to prevent arrears.

The other two Registrars deal with all questions arising in the Registry as to the applications both in the Principal and District Probate Registries for grants of probate and administration (the number of grants in the Principal Registry in 1913 being 37,578, and in the District Registries 34,489) and approve and sign the grants of the Principal Registry and various orders—such as alterations of grants, revocations, &c., and conduct the necessary correspondence with the District Registrars, and hear summonses, and deal with applications for certificates as to the pleadings in matrimonial causes being in order, and applications under the new poor persons' rules. One of them is always accessible to the public. The work in connection with the control of the staff, correspondence with public departments, and other duties of the Senior Registrar also occupy a good deal of time.

Clerical Work.

By far the larger part of the clerical work in the Principal Registry is in connection with the applications for grants and the subsequent recording and filing of wills and other documents.

DEPARTMENTS.

Receiver's Department.

Papers to lead the grant when applied for by a solicitor are taken to the Receiver's Department, which consists of the Receiver and two assistants. His duties are to see that the estate duty (if any payable) has been paid, to assess the court fees, and to give a receipt for the papers.

The applications for administration are then forwarded direct to the seats, and the papers for probate or administration with will to the Scrivenery Department, for examination of the will with the engrossment. He also acts as stamp distributor.

Seats.

There are six seats. In each a principal clerk of seat with four assistants, of whom two are generally in the second class.

The principal clerk and his first assistant examine critically all papers brought in to lead grants, and satisfy themselves as to validity of wills and due execution of the same, and titles to grants, and settle draft oaths to lead special or limited grants, and deal with alterations in wills and questions of incorporation and domicile. They have also to check the notices of applications for grants received from the District Probate Registries.

It is necessary that the clerk of the seat should have a thorough knowledge of the practice of the Court and be well acquainted with the laws respecting wills and administrations.

When all queries are removed the junior assistants prepare the grants, records, and calendar slips, and search caveat books, and enter and check calendars, and the grants when initialled by the clerk of the seat, and sent forward to the Registrar for signature.

Personal Application Department.

In this department applications for grants can be made by persons without the intervention of a solicitor.

The staff consists of a chief clerk in the first class and seven assistant clerks, of whom two are now in the second class. The clerks have to prepare the papers to lead the grant and the Inland Revenue affidavits and to do more or less solicitors' work. The papers when completed are proceeded with at the seat in the same way as solicitors' cases.

Papers received through Inland Revenue officers are also dealt with. A number of the applicants are very ignorant, and great care is required in taking down their instructions. The work in this department has much increased, and before long more accommodation will be required.

Calendar and Searching Department.

This department consists of a chief clerk in the first class and nine assistants, of whom three are now in the second class. The searches in every case before a grant is issued are made by the staff as well as the lexicographical annual printed calendar of grants in the Principal and District Registries.

Sealer.

The sealer, a second class clerk and two assistants, when the grants are signed by the Registrar, separate the papers from the grants, enter the fees, seal the grants, index and place in order to be given out to the solicitors.

Notation Department.

Chief clerk, second class, and two assistants, deal with applications after a grant has issued for orders for notation of domicile, for filing renunciation of executor to whom power has been reserved, alteration or revocation of grants and for impounding grants, certificates of sufficiency of security when an estate has been sworn to be of an increased value. Preparing the orders or certificates and making the consequent notations on the records.

Audit Department and Inland Revenue Room.

Chief clerk, first class, and six assistants, of whom two are now in the second class, audit all fees taken in the Principal and District Probate Registries and in divorce, and prepare returns for the Home Office. Two of the clerks act as accountants in paying typists after checking the amount of folios copied and paying those receiving a weekly wage, and have a good deal of trouble in consequence of the Insurance Act, which affects clerks in District Registries as well as those paid by weekly wage. Three clerks are employed in supplying the Estates Duty Department with the recently proved wills and bonds in their custody, and such as may be required from the strong room.

Literary Department.

The superintendent, a second class clerk, and three assistants, arrange and look after the ancient records in the strong room, subject to the requirements of the record keeper, who is responsible for their custody, attend on the literary searchers who have permission to make use of the department, and when possible make calendars of ancient records where new calendars are needed or none are in existence.

Record Keeper's Department.

All original wills proved in the Principal Registry, copies of wills proved in the District Registries, records of grants, oaths to lead grants, bonds, &c., are in the record keeper's custody under the control of the Registrars. Copies of wills are supplied to the public on personal application or by correspondence with persons residing outside the London Postal District. In the year 1913 the number of searches for wills was 80,219.

The record keeper is a first class clerk and has 20 assistants, of whom three are in the second class.

Contentious Department.

This department, consisting of a chief clerk in the first class, with six assistants, of whom two are in the second class, deals with all the Probate and Divorce Court and contentious business. All papers in causes and for motions are filed here and summonses issued. Minutes are kept in which the proceedings in Probate and Divorce causes are entered. Appearances are entered here, except to writs of summons. The cause list for each sitting is prepared, involving the investigation of the papers, and, in probate actions, the ensuring the production in Court at the hearing of the script in dispute.

In 1910 the number of petitions in matrimonial causes filed was 930, in 1914 it was 1,369.

Registrars' Clerks.

One of the Registrars' clerks in attendance on the Senior Registrar, and assisting in the duties of control and correspondence with public departments is in the second class. The other four Registrars' clerks are in the third class.

These clerks have to acquire a general knowledge of all the work in the Registry and to assist the Registrar both in Court and at the Registry.

District Registries.

In the District Registries the work consists of dealing with applications for grants when the deceased had a fixed place of abode within the district. In 1913, 34,489 grants were made in the District Probate Registries. The District Registrars have also the custody of ancient wills and documents transferred from the Ecclesiastical Courts.

APPENDIX XCVI.

(Handed in by Senior Master T. A. Romer.)

Vide Q. 44,746.

STATEMENT as to the work of the CHANCERY CHAMBERS.

I.—THE WORK OF THE MASTERS IS AS FOLLOWS:—

The Masters of the Supreme Court, Chancery Division, sometimes called Chancery Masters, are the successors of the Chief Clerks to the Chancery Judges appointed under the Act 15 & 16 Vict. c. 80 and hold office during good behaviour. By an Order of the Lord Chancellor dated 10th February 1897, made with the concurrence of the Lord Chief Justice and the consent of the Treasury, "the Chief Clerks in the "Chambers of the Chancery Division shall have the "style and title of Masters of the Supreme Court;" but the change is one of title only and the Masters perform the same duties and bear the same relation to their respective Judges as their predecessors the Chief Clerks. Every Order made by a Chancery Master is the Order of the Judge.

As defined by Order 55, Rule 15 (Rules of the Supreme Court, 1883) the duties of the Chancery Masters are to hear and investigate such matters as the Judges shall, subject to the Rules, direct. As a fact, all applications in the Chambers of a Chancery Judge come before the Master in the first instance. He deals with, and disposes of, all the cases that come before him except those which by the Rules or by the special direction of the Judge can only be disposed of by the Judge in person, and these he adjourns to the Judge. When the Master has disposed of a case, it is open to any party who is dissatisfied with his decision to take the Judge's opinion; and, further, the Master in his discretion can adjourn to the Judge any case which he thinks ought to be so dealt with. These three classes of cases are adjourned to the Judge who sits on Monday to hear them, the Master also being present. The Chancery Master is in fact a judicial officer exercising all the powers of the Judge in Chambers except those which, as stated above, he is precluded from exercising. In eight classes of cases a Master is precluded from making an Order by the Rules of Court; in about nine classes he is precluded by special direction of the Judge but this number varies slightly in the different Chambers. In every case adjourned to the Judge, including those which the Master has no jurisdiction to dispose of, he reads the papers, prepares a note of the facts and directs the Judge's attention to any points that seem to be material. It is estimated that at least half an hour is required for the preparation of a note for the Judge. Besides his duties as the mouthpiece of the Judge the Master makes certificates stating the result of accounts and inquiries taken by him under orders of the Court or a Judge.

The cases that come before a Master are entered in a daily list and he sits until they are all disposed of. The shorter cases are taken as a rule between 11 and 1.30. From 2 to 4, or later if necessary, the Master takes cases lasting from one to two hours. These hours do not represent the whole of the work. There are clerks to be seen and documents to be signed, verbal inquiries to be answered, papers to be read and, occasionally, private interviews with solicitors and parties. In the course of a week the Master disposes of from 50 to 60 cases on an average. More than nine-tenths of all the applications that come before the Master are disposed of by him without reference to the Judge.

Amongst the orders that are made by the Master, without referring the cases to the Judge unless at the request of a dissatisfied party, are the following:—

- (a) Orders that a pleading be struck out or for leave to amend a Writ or pleading, for leave to deliver Interrogatories, to compel the delivery of particulars, upon applications to consider the sufficiency of an affidavit of documents, for attachment of debts, charging orders (nisi and absolute), interpleader.
- (b) Orders for foreclosure nisi and orders under Order 15 for accounts in partnership actions and other actions in which accounts and enquiries not relating to the estate of a deceased person are claimed. (An Order under this head is, in effect, the judgment in the action.)
- (c) Orders for payment out of Court of funds, without restriction as to amount, where there has been an Order declaring the rights or where the title depends upon proofs of the identity or the birth, marriage, or death of any person; and Orders free from these conditions where the fund does not exceed 1,000*l.* A case where the fund does not exceed 1,000*l.* may obviously be as difficult and complicated as one where the fund is larger, and the case must therefore be dealt with by the Judge in Court on a petition.
- (d) Orders for the payment of the income of any Fund in Court, without restriction as to amount.
- (e) Orders dealing with funds paid into Court under the Parliamentary Deposits Act, without restriction as to amount.
- (f) Orders dealing with funds paid into Court under the Lands Clauses Act, without restriction as to amount, except payment out to persons absolutely entitled, in which case the limit is 1,000*l.*
- (g) Orders appointing guardians and for the maintenance and education of infants, and orders approving a settlement on the marriage of an infant.
- (h) Orders relating to the management of property of deceased persons, debenture holders, or infants, or in any case where a receiver has been appointed.
- (i) Orders for taxation of costs and charging orders under the Solicitors Acts.
- (j) Orders on further consideration for the distribution of an insolvent estate or of a fund amongst debenture holders, and in some other cases where the further consideration of an action is reserved to be heard in Chambers.
- (k) Orders in certain cases under statutory jurisdiction, such as the Settled Land Acts, the Trustee Act, Lunacy Acts, the Railway Companies Act, 1867, the Tramways Act, 1870, and the Judicial Trustees Act, 1896, Conveyancing Act, Guardianship of Infants Act, Married Women's Property Acts, Assurance Act, 1896, Courts (Emergency Powers) Act, 1914, Trading with the Enemy Amendment Act, Poor Persons Rules, the Parliamentary Deposits Act, and the Lands Clauses Act.

A considerable portion of the Chancery Master's time is occupied, with the assistance of his staff, in answering accounts and inquiries, which includes the decision of questions of principle, the investigation of the title to land in partition actions and on investment (by purchase or mortgage) of trust funds and under the Lands Clauses Acts, the verification of pedigrees, the adjudication of creditors' claims and of next-of-kin in respect of the estate of a deceased person. As instances I may mention two or three other matters we have to deal with under "Inquiries," viz., inquiries as to damages, inquiries involving presumption of death, and also the settlement of deeds. This work often involves the determination of questions both of law and fact, and the result is stated by the Master in the form of a certificate. The adjudication of a disputed creditor's claim is frequently, in effect, the trial of a common-law action.

II.—THE WORK OF THE STAFF CONSISTS OF THE FOLLOWING:—

A. That of the First Class Clerks.

Hearing Summonses to proceed under certain orders.

Hearing Summonses for time.

Hearing Summonses for discovery.

Hearing Summonses for unopposed Stop Orders and discharge of same.

Drawing and settling Certificates in accordance with the Master's notes in answer to accounts and inquiries directed by orders of the Judges in actions for Administration, Debenture Holders' Actions, Partition Actions, Actions for Damages, Reduction of Capital and to ascertain heir-at-law and next-of-kin and other special inquiries. This work is of a responsible nature, requiring care and accuracy, Vouching Receiver's Accounts, Executors' and Administrators' Accounts, Trustees' Accounts, Guardians' Accounts, Mortgagees' Accounts, Checking List of Claims in Administration Actions, preparing memoranda of orders made in Chambers to be drawn up by the Registrars, involving checking the evidence and parties, and settling Pay Office schedules when annexed, and, in certain cases, settling the minutes of such orders, examining all Debentures with the Debenture Register, and examining all transfers of such debentures subject to Judgment, assessing costs, settling Lodgment Schedules for payments into Court of purchase money and Receivers' and Guardians' Balances, checking particulars and conditions of sale, and recitals in deeds and marriage settlements.

B. Second Class Clerks' Duties.

Settling Bonds and Recognizances to be given by way of security by Receivers, Guardians, Controllers, Auctioneers, &c., and checking the completed documents before approval by Master.

Preparing and settling Certificates of completion of Security where necessary, and endorsing note of completion on Orders where security under 500l.

Where vacation of security is subject to any conditions, seeing that conditions complied with, and endorsing note for signature by Master.

Drawing up Chamber Orders, such as confirmation of contracts, particulars, discovery, interrogatories, carrying on proceedings, interpleader, Garnishee, and under Courts (Emergency Powers) Act, &c.

Preparing references to Taxing Masters and Conveyancing Counsel.

Settling the advertisements directed by the Master for heirs-at-law, next-of-kin, &c.

Preparing sale papers.

Assisting in Summons Room.

C. Third Class Clerks' Duties.

Issuing summonses and giving appointments before the Masters.

Preparing the daily list for the printer of matters coming before the Masters and Junior Clerks.

Preparing the notes of all matters coming before the Master each day, and subsequently going through such notes, noting orders made, adjournments, &c.

Preparing Certificates of Attendances.

Keeping Summons Book.

Keeping Masters' Notes, indexing papers, &c.

Preparing fiats for amendment of pleadings, &c.

In order to make clearer the above statement I should like to explain in some detail what work is involved in, say, four matters of daily occurrence in Chambers.

For this purpose I have selected—

- (1) Administration actions;
- (2) Debenture Holders' actions;
- (3) Foreclosure Proceedings; and
- (4) Pedigree cases.

Creditors' Actions for the Administration of the Estate of a Deceased.

These cases are generally commenced by originating summons, which comes before the Master, who examines the evidence, and, when all is in order, adjourns to the Judge.

In due course the Judge makes an Order that the Executor's Accounts are to be taken in Chambers, and directing inquiries as to the amount due to the Creditors and the property of which the deceased died possessed.

The accounts are brought into Chambers and submitted to the Master, who, in due course, refers them to one of his Principal Clerks for examination and vouching in the presence of the parties. Any disputed or difficult questions are referred back to the Master for determination and in the end the total of the receipts and payments are ascertained and the balance struck.

Then the claims have to be dealt with. The Master gives directions that the ordinary advertisement is to be inserted in certain named newspapers. A list of all persons claiming to rank as creditors is subsequently brought into Chambers and each claim is separately dealt with sometimes involving a long investigation.

Then the assets have to be realised on occasions, Real Estate has to be sold, and all the details appertaining to Sales by the Court have to be supervised in Chambers.

The Certificate in due course is prepared which reports to the Judge the result of the Account, Investigations, Sales and Inquiries which he directed.

Finally, if the Estate is insolvent, or is that of an Intestate, the Master makes the Order for distribution of the money amongst the Creditors and parties entitled. In a word the whole of the working out of the Judge's Order is done in Chambers by the Master and his staff.

Debenture Holders' Actions.

These are very common indeed. The usual routine is that an Order is obtained from the Court appointing a Receiver of the property charged with or without a Manager of the Company's business. This Order is brought into Chambers where the amount of security to be given by the Receiver is fixed. Shortly afterwards, the Court directs an inquiry as to who are the Debenture Holders, what is due to each, and what property has been charged.

All these matters are investigated in Chambers where the Debentures are produced and examined by one of the Principal Clerks—the Debentures not infrequently run into hundreds. In the case of Bearer securities, advertisements are issued to ascertain the holders.

After these inquiries have been answered in a Certificate, the assets have to be realised, and finally an Order is made for the distribution of the money amongst the Debenture Holders.

Generally, the Court does not hear of these actions after the judgment for accounts, the whole of the investigation, sales, and distribution being carried out in Chambers subject, however, to the right of any party to refer any question which arises in the course of the proceedings to the Judge for decision.

Foreclosure Proceedings.

These proceedings are commenced, carried on, and concluded in Chambers subject to the right of any party to take the Judge's personal directions upon any question that arises.

The proceedings are commenced by Originating Summons which comes before the Master, and when supported by proper evidence he makes the Order directing an account to be taken of what is due under the Mortgage.

The account is brought into Chambers and referred to one of the Principal Clerks to examine in the presence of the parties.

Then a Certificate is prepared which gives the amount due, and names a place where and a day when the Mortgagor is to attend and pay. The money is seldom paid, and upon proof that default has been made in payment on the day named the Mortgagee is entitled to an Order absolutely foreclosing any right which up to that time the Mortgagor had to redeem his security.

Pedigree Cases.

It often happens that one of the next-of-kin of a deceased went abroad and cannot be found, which places Trustees and Executors having money to distribute in a difficult position. In such cases, upon proper application being made, the Court directs an inquiry for the purpose of ascertaining who are the next-of-kin of the deceased.

In such cases the Order is brought into Chambers, where the investigation takes place. Advertisements are issued for the missing individual, and the evidence of all persons who come in and make claims is examined. The Pedigree is brought into Chambers and proved before the Master by production of Certificates verified by Affidavits.

In due course the next-of-kin are ascertained and the result is certified. This work is often very heavy, involving the examination of a large number of Certificates and other evidence.

APPENDIX XCVII.

(Handed in by Mr. Stanley Leathes, C.B.)

Q. 48,847.

PARTICULARS AS TO CANDIDATES NOMINATED TO CLERKSHIPS IN THE SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE AND LAND REGISTRY.

Note.—It has not been possible in many cases to obtain particulars of a candidate's University career, and the fact that no mention of a degree is made in many cases of University candidates is not intended to imply that no degree was obtained.

Only nominations which resulted in the issue of a certificate of qualification for appointment are shown.

(1) SECOND CLASS CLERKS, SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE, since 1900.

(All exempted from examination under Clause VII. of the Order in Council.)

Number.	Age.	Father's Profession.	School, and Age on Leaving.	University and Degree (if any).	Barrister.	Solicitor.	Legal Experience.	Occupation at time of Nomination.
Z. 31,553	32	Solicitor	Not stated	1902. —	—	Solicitor	10 years, solicitor.	Temporary clerk in Taxing Office.
Z. 35,362	25	Metropolitan police magistrate.	Shrewsbury, 18	1904. —	—	Solicitor	11 years, solicitor.	Solicitor.
Z. 38,308	26	Civil servant (India Office).	Not stated	1906. Oxford, B.A.	—	Solicitor	Managing clerk to solicitor.	Solicitor's managing clerk.
Z. 51,355	25	Civil servant (Supreme Court).	Mercers' School	1913. —	—	Solicitor	5 years' articles	Temporary clerk in Crown Office.

(2) SECOND CLASS CLERKS, LAND REGISTRY, since 1900.

(All exempted from examination under Clause VII. of the Order in Council.)

Z. 28,133	37	Clerk in Holy Orders.	Winchester, 18½	Cambridge, B.A.	Barrister	—	(12 years) Equity draughtsman and conveyancer.	Barrister.
Z. 28,134	35	Official Assignee in Bankruptcy.	Marlborough, 17	Oxford, B.A.	Barrister	—	Equity draughtsman and Conveyancer.	Barrister.
Z. 28,311	30	County Court Registrar.	Repton, 17	Oxford, B.A.	Barrister	—	Barrister	Barrister.
Z. 28,621	34	Barrister	Winchester, 18	Oxford, —	Barrister	—	(9 years) barrister.	Barrister.
Z. 29,658	40	Wharfinger	Not stated, 17	Oxford, M.A.	Barrister	—	(14 years) barrister and legal author.	Barrister.
Z. 29,657	33	Clerk in Holy Orders.	Rugby, 19	Nomination in 1901. Oxford, B.A.	Barrister	—	Barrister	Barrister.
Z. 32,462	43	J.P.	Harrow, 18	Nominations in 1902. Cambridge, LL.B.	Barrister	—	(20 years) barrister.	Barrister.
Z. 32,463	27	Barrister	Cheltenham, 18	—	Barrister	—	(6 years) barrister.	Barrister.
*Z. 35,493	31	Clerk in Holy Orders.	Radley, 19	Nomination in 1904. Oxford, —	Barrister	—	(4 years) barrister.	Barrister.
Z. 40,664	36	Wool merchant.	Rugby, 18	Nomination in 1907. Oxford, B.A.	Barrister	Solicitor	8 years, solicitor; 1 year, barrister.	Temporary clerk in Land Registry.
Z. 42,386 (Promotion).	38	Principal clerk, Supreme Court.	Private, 16	Nomination in 1909. —	—	—	Clerk to Official Receiver in Bankruptcy.	Third class clerk, Land Registry.
Z. 44,337	38	Clerk in Holy Orders.	Trinity College, Stratford, 19	Nomination in 1910. —	—	Solicitor	18 years clerk, managing clerk, own practice.	Temporary clerk in Land Registry.
Z. 47,747 (Promotion on transfer.)	38	Civil engineer.	Private, 17	Nomination in 1912. —	—	—	—	Third class clerk in Supreme Court

* Partial exemption only was allowed.

(3) THIRD CLASS CLERKS, SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE, from 1899-1913.

Note.—Nominations to Third Class Clerkships in the Land Registry, the Probate Registry, and the Admiralty Registry are included.

The Land Registry cases are distinguished by an asterisk.

Cases in which candidates have been exempted from examination under the provisions of Clause VII. of the Order in Council of 10th January 1910 are distinguished by the printing of the candidate's file number in italics. Cases in which the ordinary rules as to age have been dispensed with under the same Clause are similarly distinguished.

Nominations in 1899.

Number.	Age.	Father's Profession.	School, and Age on Leaving.	University and Degree (if any).	Barrister.	Solicitor.	Legal Experience.	Occupation at time of Nomination.
*Z. 26,533	31	Civil engineer	Rugby, 19	Melbourne and Oxford, B.A.	—	Yes	3 years as articled clerk, and 6 years as managing clerk to various solicitors' firms.	Managing clerk to solicitor.
Z. 26,639	21	Managing clerk to firm of solicitors.	Dame Alice Owen's Grammar School, 15.	—	—	—	6 months as solicitor's clerk at age of 17. Had also read law with a firm of solicitors for (probably) about a year.	Clerk to life assurance company.
Z. 27,340	26	Clerk in Land Registry.	Private schools, 15.	—	—	—	About a year in Land Registry.	Clerk in Land Registry.
Z. 26,536	24	"Esquire"	Charterhouse, 18	—	—	Probably	5 years as articled clerk, 1 year as managing clerk to solicitor.	Managing clerk to solicitor.
Z. 26,604	22	Private hotel keeper.	Holborn Estate Grammar School, King's College (Strand School), 17.	—	—	—	—	Bank clerk.
Z. 26,885	26	"Esquire"	Private schools, 17.	—	—	—	—	Bank clerk.
Z. 26,636	25	District probate registrar.	St. Peter's, York, and private tuition, 16.	—	—	—	—	Clerical and literary work. Had held no situation.
Z. 26,945	24	Admiral	Winchester, 17	Cambridge, B.A.	—	—	—	Travelling on the Continent.
Z. 26,900	20	Surgeon	Marlborough, 17½.	—	—	—	—	Had held no situation.
Z. 27,000	20	Clergyman	Bath College, 17	—	—	—	—	Clerk to shipping and insurance agency.
Z. 27,040	21	Lecturer and author.	St. Paul's, 19	Oxford (two terms).	—	—	—	Helping his father and acting as private tutor.
Z. 27,111	21	Clergyman	Private schools. Remained at school till 21, taking private tuition for London Matric., which he passed.	—	—	—	—	Had held no situation.
Z. 27,353	21	Methodist minister.	National Schools in Ireland, 15.	—	—	—	—	Studying for C.S. Examinations. Formerly an assistant to firm of druggists and grocers.
Z. 27,376	27	M.P.	Eton, 17½.	—	—	—	—	At home and private tuition.
Z. 27,713	28	District probate registrar.	Cholomely Grammar School, 16½.	—	—	—	4 years experience as clerk at District Probate Registry in two different periods.	This candidate had been in District Probate Registry, then an officer in the Militia, then a private in the Regular Army, then ranching in U.S.A., and was again in District Probate Registry at time of nomination.
Z. 27,904	20	Army officer	Private Schools, 18.	—	—	—	—	Attending Civil Service classes.
Z. 27,354	26	Schoolmaster	S. Creak School, 14.	—	—	—	—	Telegraphist in G.P.O.
Z. 27,997	28	Licensed victualler.	Archbishop Tenison's School, 15½.	—	—	—	9 years as solicitor's clerk.	Solicitor's clerk.
Z. 26,600	21	Tobacco manufacturer.	Private and elementary schools, 16.	—	—	—	6 months as solicitor's clerk.	Solicitor's clerk.

Number.	Age.	Father's Profession.	School, and Age on Leaving.	University and Degree (if any).	Barrister.	Solicitor.	Legal Experience.	Occupation at time of Nomination.
Z. 26,622	23	Clergyman	Kelly College, Tavistock (left at 15, then a year with private tutor).	—	—	—	—	Actor.
Z. 27,871	57	Builder	Private and elementary schools, 15.	—	—	—	1 year as clerk to Mr. Justice Lush ; 15 years as 2nd clerk to Master of the Rolls.	2nd clerk to Master of the Rolls.
Z. 26,652	28	Auctioneer	Portsmouth Grammar School.	—	—	Yes	5 years as articulated clerk to solicitor's firm, and about 3 years as clerk to various firms.	Barrister's clerk
Z. 26,539	20	Artist	Whitgift Middle School, 15.	—	—	—	About 5 years as copyist and book shower in Royal Courts of Justice.	Employed in Royal Courts of Justice.
Z. 26,957	23	Admiral	Eton, 19	Oxford	—	—	—	Had held no situation.
Z. 26,976	22	Salesman	Private schools, 17.	—	—	—	A few months as temporary clerk in Supreme Court.	Temporary clerk in Supreme Court, formerly a sorter in P.O. Bank clerk.
Z. 27,203	21	Not shown	Christ's Hospital and King's College (London).	—	—	—	—	—
Z. 27,654	21	Doctor	Charterhouse, 15.	—	—	—	—	Improver to brewery company.
Z. 27,654	20	Master of Supreme Court.	Harrow, 19	—	—	—	—	Schoolmaster.
Z. 27,848	22	Bank clerk (cashier).	Magdalen College School, 17½.	Oxford (2nd class Honours in School of Jurisprudence).	—	—	No experience shown (see degree).	Had held no situation.
Z. 27,872	24	Clergyman	Haileybury and Wimborne, 19.	—	—	—	—	No situation at time of nomination. Had been a bank clerk.
Nominations in 1900.
*Z. 28,135	28	Licensed victualler.	National school and Clark's College, 16.	—	—	—	Over 12 years as "general clerk" in solicitors' offices.	General clerk in a solicitor's office.
Z. 28,794	29	Principal clerk, Royal Courts of Justice (Chancery Taxing Office).	Stoke Newington Collegiate School, 15.	—	—	—	About 9 years in solicitors' offices as general clerk and assistant Chancery clerk.	Assistant Chancery clerk in a solicitor's office.
*Z. 28,915	22	Bishop.	Winchester, 18.	Oxford	—	—	A few months in Land Registry Office.	Living at home until a few months before nomination, when he entered the Land Registry Office.
*Z. 29,217	28	Retired grocer	Elementary schools, 14.	—	—	—	14 years in a solicitor's office as shorthand and conveyancing clerk.	Solicitor's office, shorthand and conveyancing clerk.
*Z. 29,238	27	Schoolmaster (Board schools).	Elementary schools (under his father), 18.	—	—	—	9 years with solicitor and County Court Registrars as general clerk, clerk in charge and cashier.	Cashier in the office of the County Court Registrar, Wandsworth.
*Z. 29,245	20	Solicitor and land agent.	Bath College, 19.	—	—	—	—	Studying under a private tutor.
Z. 28,331	25	Colonel (retired).	Private schools, 18.	—	—	—	—	Private study.
Z. 28,332	22	Advertising agent.	Private schools, 15.	—	—	—	About four months in Land Registry and Royal Courts of Justice.	Employed in Royal Courts of Justice.
Z. 28,361	20	Railway superintendent.	Guildford Grammar School and Skerry's College, 17½.	—	—	—	Two years in a solicitor's office (training).	Solicitor's office.
Z. 28,425	21	Clergyman	Westminster, 16½.	Oxford, B.A.	—	—	—	No situation ; nominated three months after leaving Oxford.

Number.	Age.	Father's Profession.	School, and Age on Leaving.	University and Degree (if any).	Barrister.	Solicitor.	Legal Experience.	Occupation at time of Nomination.
Z. 28,555	21	Clerk to Mr. Justice Kekewich.	Dulwich College, 17.	—	—	—	Over three years in solicitor's office, first as junior clerk and then as general clerk.	Clerk in chartered accountants' office.
Z. 28,576	24	Engineer	Rich's Grammar School, 14.	—	—	—	10 years as clerk in solicitors' offices, and 7 months in Land Registry as writer.	Writer in Land Registry.
Z. 28,911	22	Bootmaker	National school 13½.	—	—	—	8½ years as clerk in a solicitor's office.	Clerk in a solicitor's office.
Z. 29,496	21	Provision agent.	Private schools, 17.	—	—	—	Under 6 months in Supreme Court.	Clerk in Supreme Court. Formerly with firm of engineers. Had held no situation.
Z. 28,383	21	Army	Private schools in England and public school in Germany for 18 months, 18.	—	—	—	—
Z. 28,493	25	Barrister	Queen's Service Academy, 17.	—	—	—	—	Tutor and private study. Had held no situation.
Z. 28,675	22	None	Allhallows School, Honiton, 19.	—	—	—	—
Z. 28,736	21	Solicitor	St. Paul's, 18	—	—	—	—	Clerk in insurance company.
Z. 29,155	23	Army	Winchester, and private tuition in Paris, 16.	Cambridge, B.A.	—	—	—	"Work and country pursuits."
Z. 29,156	20	Clergyman	Merchant Taylors, 18.	—	—	—	—	Employed by Steam Navigation Company. Studying.
Z. 29,161	26	Clergyman	Private schools, 18.	—	—	—	6 months with a solicitor.
Z. 29,643	23	Judge in India	Shrewsbury, 18	Oxford (3 years and a term).	—	—	—	Nil. Had just failed for I.C.S.
*Z. 29,644	23	Army (in the ranks).	Elementary schools, 13½.	—	—	—	1 month as barrister's clerk.	Clerk to entertainment agent.
Z. 28,230	20	Conveyancing clerk.	Hornsey Grammar School, 15.	—	—	—	1 year in solicitor's office (at age of 15).	Clerk to land company.
Z. 28,833	20	Clerk in Supreme Court.	H.M.S. "Britannia," Dartmouth.	—	—	—	—	Clerk to underwriter.
Nominations in 1901.
*Z. 29,929	23	Judge's clerk.	United Westminster School, 17.	—	—	—	Clerk in Land Registry for 18 months before nomination.	Clerk in Land Registry.
Z. 30,462	40	Copying clerk in Royal Courts of Justice.	Elementary and private schools, 16.	—	—	—	Copyist and examiner in Scrivenery Department of Royal Courts of Justice for nearly 20 years before nomination.	Employed Royal Courts of Justice.
Z. 30,313	23	Accountant	Private school, 16.	—	—	—	4½ years as solicitor's clerk.	Solicitor's clerk.
Z. 31,182	28	Clerk in Supreme Court.	(Not shown), 16	—	—	—	Over 10 years as solicitor's clerk.	Solicitor's clerk.
Z. 30,217	21	Clerk in Supreme Court.	Dulwich, 16	—	—	—	—	Clerk to firm of shippers.
Z. 30,187	22	Clergyman	Eton, 17	Oxford (2nd Cl Hons. in Modern History).	—	—	—	Had held no situation.
Z. 30,196	26	Solicitor	(Not shown), 16	—	—	Yes	5 years as articled clerk ; 5 years as solicitor's clerk (admitted) ; about 1 year practising as solicitor.	Practising solicitor.
Z. 30,466	25	"Gentleman"	(Not shown), 19	Oxford (2nd Cl. Classical Mods., 4th Cl. Lit. Hum.)	—	—	—	Schoolmaster.
Z. 30,456	27	Clergyman	Lancing, 18	Oxford, B.A.	—	—	—	Private tutor.
Z. 31,120	25	Doctor	(Not shown), 14	—	—	—	—	Employed by firm of engineers.
Z. 31,067	21	Admiralty marshal (retired).	City of London, 18	Cambridge (3 yrs.).	—	—	—	Just left Cambridge.

Number.	Age.	Father's Profession.	School, and Age on Leaving.	University and Degree (if any).	Barrister.	Solicitor.	Legal Experience.	Occupation at time of Nomination.
Nominations in 1902.
*Z. 31,588	23	Clerk in Supreme Court.	Elementary and private schools, 15½.	—	—	—	6½ years as solicitor's clerk, starting at 15½ years.	Solicitor's clerk.
Z. 31,554	28	Builder	National school, 12½.	—	—	—	18 months as barrister's clerk at age of 13; about 14 years as solicitor's clerk, starting at age of 14½.	Solicitor's clerk.
Z. 31,654	24	Church keeper.	Kensington British Schools, 14.	—	—	—	5 years as solicitor's clerk.	Solicitor's clerk.
Z. 31,676	24	Solicitor's clerk.	Elementary schools, 14.	—	—	—	About 10 years as clerk to various firms of solicitors.	Solicitor's clerk.
Z. 32,098	25	Civil servant	Clapham High School, 18.	—	—	Yes	5 years as articled clerk, and about 18 months as solicitor's (admitted) clerk.	Solicitor's clerk.
Z. 32,611	23	Chief cashier, Law Society.	Elementary schools, 15½.	—	—	—	Nearly 2 years as solicitor's clerk (boy earning 15s.-20s. a week); later about 6 months as solicitor's clerk and 18 months as temporary clerk in Royal Courts of Justice.	Temporary clerk in Royal Courts of Justice.
Z. 32,686	21	Barrister	Private schools, 15.	—	—	—	—	Commercial clerk.
Z. 31,506	29	Cabinetmaker	Elementary schools, 14.	—	—	—	About 14 years as solicitor's clerk.	Solicitor's clerk.
Z. 31,771	24	Church organist.	New College School, Oxford, 19.	Oxford, B.A.	—	—	About 9 months as clerk in Land Registry.	Clerk in Land Registry.
Z. 32,024	24	Clerk of works.	Elementary schools, 13.	—	—	—	7 years as temporary clerk in Royal Courts of Justice.	Temporary clerk in Royal Courts of Justice.
Z. 32,103	23	Commercial traveller.	Grammar School, Taplow, 19.	—	—	—	—	Clerk to firm of engineers.
Z. 32,499	28	Relieving officer.	Birkbeck College School, 16.	—	—	—	2 years as solicitor's clerk.	Solicitor's clerk.
Z. 31,943	23	Tea-planter	Clifton, 17½	—	—	—	—	Public Works Department of Indian Native State.
Z. 32,626	49	"Gentleman"	Private school Wesleyan Training College, 13.	—	—	—	8 years as solicitor's clerk; 28 years in Probate Registry.	Employed in Probate Registry.
Z. 32,627	50	"Gentleman"	National school, 14.	—	—	—	26 years in Probate Registry.	Copying clerk in Probate Registry.
Z. 32,629	25	Director of company.	Haileybury, 19	—	—	—	—	Working under his father.
Z. 32,697	21	Barrister and M.P.	Harrow, 16	—	—	—	—	Studying.
Z. 32,749	20	Chief constable, Metropolitan Police.	Dulwich, 17¾	—	—	—	—	Militia officer; had served in South African War.
Nominations in 1903.
Z. 33,422	25	Goldsmith	Elementary schools, 15.	—	—	—	About 9 years as solicitor's clerk, starting at age of 15, and 1 year in Supreme Court.	Employed in Supreme Court.
*Z. 34,855	22	Coachman (ex Army).	Elementary schools, 13.	—	—	—	3 years as temporary clerk in Land Registry.	Temporary clerk in Land Registry.
Z. 33,464	27	"Gentleman"	Dean Close School, Cheltenham, 18.	—	—	Yes	5 years as articled clerk; 4½ years as solicitor's (admitted) clerk.	Solicitor's clerk.

Number.	Age.	Father's Profession.	School, and Age on Leaving.	University and Degree (if any).	Barrister.	Solicitor.	Legal Experience.	Occupation at time of Nomination.
Z. 33,790	24	Barrister and registrar in Principal Probate Registry.	Private schools	Oxford, B.A. Hons.	?	—	—	Had spent one year since Oxford in reading for solicitor's intermediate and barrister examinations and in travel. Clerk to official solicitor.
Z. 33,796	27	Salesman	Elementary schools, 12½.	—	—	—	About 15 years as clerk to official solicitor (starting at 13). About 14½ years service as clerk to various firms of solicitors.	Solicitor's clerk.
Z. 34,666	29	Law stationer	Wesleyan Methodist School, Chislehurst, 14.	—	—	—	5 years as articulated clerk ; not clear whether he has practised.	Solicitor.
Z. 34,550	23	Clergyman	Winchester, 18.	—	—	Yes	8 years as solicitor's clerk, starting at age of 14.	Solicitor's clerk.
Z. 53,975	22	Builder	Private and elementary school, 14.	—	—	—	About 11 years as judge's clerk.	Judge's clerk.
Z. 32,849	23	Builder	Elementary schools, 13.	—	—	—	About 14 years as clerk to various firms of solicitors, starting at age of 14.	Solicitor's clerk.
Z. 34,102	28	Book-keeper and cashier.	Elementary school, 13.	—	—	—	8 years as barrister's clerk, 1 year as judge's clerk.	Private study.
Z. 34,590	22	Resident Magistrate in Ireland.	St. Columba's College, Dublin, 17.	—	—	—	—	Clerk to publisher and picture dealer.
Z. 34,626	33	Housekeeper	Elementary schools, 14.	—	—	—	—	Judge's clerk.
Z. 32,863	20	Librarian at the Foreign Office.	Harrow and private tuition in London and abroad ; left Harrow at 17.	—	—	—	—	Private study.
Z. 33,536	20	Clerk, Principal Probate Registry.	Strand School and King's College ; left at 18 ; did not matriculate in London University.	—	—	—	—	Private study.
Z. 33,540	20	Brewer	Private school, 16.	—	—	—	—	Bank clerk.
Z. 34,388	20	Staff Paymaster, R.N.	St. Ann's School, Redhill, 15½.	—	—	—	—	Clerk to insurance broker
Z. 34,394	24	None	Victoria College, Jersey, 18.	—	—	—	—	Bank clerk.
Z. 34,485	21	Clerk, Probate Registry.	Highgate School, 20.	—	—	—	—	Travel and private study.
Z. 33,669	20	Civil servant	St. Paul's, 17.	—	—	—	—	Clerk to firm of stockbrokers.
Z. 33,861	20	Civil servant	Highgate School, 17.	—	—	—	—	Private study.
Z. 34,245	22	Hop merchant	King William's College, Isle of Man, 16.	—	—	—	—	Clerk in insurance company.
				Nominations in 1904.
Z. 34,677	29	Club steward	(Not shown), 11	—	—	—	15 years as clerk to various barristers.	Barrister's clerk.
Z. 34,855	23	Army and coachman.	St. Faith's National School, Maidstone, 12½.	—	—	—	3½ years as writer and third class clerk in Land Registry.	Third class clerk, Land Registry (ex-footman).
Z. 35,423	20	Clerk, Courts of Justice.	King's College School, 19.	London, King's College, 1 year.	—	—	—	Private study.
Z. 35,466	22	Sheep manager	Durness Public School, 17.	—	—	—	—	Studying and assisting on farm.
Z. 35,877	25	Railway employee.	St. Thomas, Charterhouse, Goswell Road, 13.	—	—	—	10 years' service with firm of solicitors.	Solicitor's clerk
Z. 34,785	27	Druggist	Moreland Street School, 14.	—	—	—	7 years as clerk to various barristers, and 7 years as clerk to Mr. Justice Walton	Barrister's clerk.

Number.	Age.	Father's Profession.	School, and Age on Leaving.	University and Degree (if any).	Barrister.	Solicitor.	Legal Experience.	Occupation at time of Nomination.
Z. 35,930	20	Clergyman	Fettes College, 18½.	—	—	—	—	Passed for Sandhurst, did not enter; failed for Indian Police then waited for nomination.
Z. 36,010	24	Clergyman	Westminster School, 18.	Oxford, B.A. (subjects not shown) and London, King's College.	—	—	—	Since Oxford, classes at King's College, and took temporary clerkship, Supreme Court shortly before nomination. Assisting his father.
Z. 35,762	26	Merchant assessor, Admiralty Registry.	Westminster School, 18½.	—	—	—	—	Assisting his father.
Z. 34,718	23	Director-General, Medical Department, R.N.	Merchant Taylors School, 18½.	Oxford, B.A. Subjects not shown.	—	—	—	Nil since Oxford.
Z. 34,720	22	Army officer (retired).	St. Patrick's, Newbridge, 17.	—	—	—	—	Ex-boy copyist. Apparently in no situation, and studying for 3 years before nomination. Commercial clerk.
Z. 34,723	26	Army officer	Bedford Grammar School, 18.	—	—	—	—	Commercial clerk.
*Z. 35,040	29	Solicitor	Rugby School, 18½.	Oxford, M.A. Subjects not shown.	Not stated; he had read in barrister's chambers.	—	Had read in barrister's chambers (time not stated).	Temporary clerk, Land Registry.
*Z. 35,002	25	Indian Civil servant.	Harrow School, 18½.	Oxford (4th Class Final Honours, School of Jurisprudence).	—	—	Read for the Bar after leaving Oxford (about 8 months).	Temporary clerk Land Registry.
Z. 34,877	20	Doctor	Tonbridge School, 18.	—	—	—	—	Studied for London Matriculation since leaving school; had just passed it.
*Z. 35,331	25	Civil servant	Sedbergh School, 18.	—	—	—	4 years in Land Registry.	Temporary clerk, Land Registry.
Z. 35,447	60	Clergyman	Cheltenham College, 17.	—	—	—	Over 30 years in Probate Registry.	Employed in Probate Registry.
Z. 35,448	51	"Gentleman"	Continental schools (Belgium and Italy), 17.	—	—	—	28 years in Probate Registry.	Employed in Probate Registry.
*Z. 35,525	26	Clergyman and school-master.	Eton College, 17½.	—	—	—	7½ years as articled clerk and junior clerk (paid) to a solicitor; does not say whether he qualified.	Travelling abroad for 1 year before nomination.
Z. 35,513	21	Barrister, chief clerk, Supreme Court.	St. Peter's College, Westminster, 18½.	Oxford (six terms) Honour Mods. (Classical).	—	—	—	Schoolmaster
*Z. 35,526	23	Not shown	Harper Trust Boys' School, Bedford, 15½.	—	—	—	3 years as solicitor's clerk; 5 years as assistant clerk in Land Registry.	Assistant clerk, Land Registry.
Z. 35,853	26	Clergyman	Radley College, 19.	Oxford (1 year)	—	—	Bar student; no practical legal experience.	Bar student
Z. 35,430	26	Civil servant	Elementary school, 14.	—	—	—	12 years as clerk to various firms of solicitors.	Solicitor's clerk.
*Z. 35,952	27	Solicitor	Radley College, 19.	Cambridge (5 years). Degree not stated.	—	—	Bar student and six months in Land Registry.	Temporary clerk, Land Registry.
					Nominations in 1905.
Z. 36,286	25	Controller of Stationery Office.	Eton College (two terms, then private tuition).	Cambridge, B.A.	—	—	—	Travelling.

Number.	Age.	Father's Profession.	School, and Age on Leaving.	University and Degree (if any).	Barrister.	Solicitor.	Legal Experience.	Occupation at time of Nomination.
Z. 37,411	20	Barrister (Q.C.) and Recorder of Reading.	Christ's Hospital, 15 $\frac{1}{2}$.	—	—	—	3 years as clerk to various solicitors.	Took temporary clerkship in Supreme Court just before nomination.
Z. 37,237	20	Barrister	Fettes College, 18.	—	—	—	18 months as solicitor's clerk.	Solicitor's clerk
Z. 37,266	22	Secretary at Trinity House	Westminster School, 18 $\frac{1}{2}$.	Cambridge, (B.A. History Trip., Part I., Class III.).	—	—	—	Not stated; had spent some time in Germany in the year since leaving Cambridge.
Z. 36,314	22	Assistant King's Prosecutor, Treasury.	Battersea Grammar School and Private school, 18.	—	—	—	About 2 years (not continuous) as solicitor's clerk.	Preparing for examination for third class clerkship.
Z. 36,864	50	Wine and spirit merchant.	Private schools, 14.	—	—	—	32 years in Probate Registry as copying clerk.	Copying clerk, Probate Registry.
Z. 37,246	20	County court judge.	Stonyhurst College, 17.	—	—	—	"Studying law" with a solicitor.	? Articled clerk.
Z. 37,265	45	Messenger, Probate Registry.	Elementary and private schools, 14.	—	—	—	26 years as copying clerk and examiner in Probate Registry.	Examiner, Probate Registry.
Z. 37,313	28	Civil servant (Assistant Collector of Customs).	Not shown	Oxford (Hons. Mod. History).	—	—	—	Assistant master in private school.
Z. 37,397	26	Bishop of Croydon.	Marlborough College, 18.	Oxford, B.A.	Yes	—	Called to the Bar 2 $\frac{1}{2}$ years before nomination; had apparently read in chambers for six months, and spent 2 years devilling, &c.	Barrister.
Z. 37,269	27	I.C.S.	Private school and private tutors.	—	Yes	—	Called to the Bar; had read in chambers for six months, and since spent nearly 2 years assisting a barrister in his ordinary work and in the compilation of a legal treatise.	Barrister.
Nominations in 1906.
Z. 37,754	21	Officer (Indian Army).	St. Paul's School and private tutors, 15 $\frac{1}{2}$.	—	—	—	—	Private study; had qualified at Army Entrance examination.
Z. 38,273	24	Wine merchant	Hurstpierpoint College, 18 $\frac{6}{12}$.	—	—	—	—	Assistant master in private school.
Z. 38,229	24	Law stationer	Elementary schools, 14.	—	—	—	Two years with firm of solicitors; (age 14 16 at time).	Assistant clerk in Civil Service.
Z. 37,706	21	Barrister	Blundell's School, Tiverton, 18.	—	—	—	—	Studying; had acted as assistant master at private school and as private tutor.
Z. 38,401	44	Civil servant	North-west London Collegiate School and private school, 13.	—	—	—	1 year as writing clerk in Probate Division and 19 years as copying clerk in Supreme Court.	Copying clerk in Supreme Court.
Z. 38,558	21	Company director.	St. Paul's School, 17 $\frac{3}{12}$.	—	—	—	—	Special reserve officer (intended to enter Army).
Nominations in 1907.
Z. 39,766	29	Bank manager	Private schools, 18.	—	—	—	—	Commercial clerk.
Z. 40,528	23	Manager (in drapery trade).	Private and elementary schools, 14 $\frac{4}{12}$.	—	—	—	Clerk to official solicitor to Supreme Court for 9 years.	Solicitor's clerk.

Number.	Age.	Father's Profession.	School, and Age on Leaving.	University and Degree (if any).	Barrister.	Solicitor.	Legal Experience.	Occupation at time of Nomination.
Z. 38,796	24	Civil engineer	Dulwich College, 18 $\frac{1}{2}$.	—	—	—	—	Assisting his father.
Z. 40,496	23	Clerk in High Court.	Owen's School, Islington, 16 $\frac{1}{2}$.	—	—	—	—	Clerk in insurance company.
Z. 39,722	38	Assistant record keeper in Probate Registry.	Elementary schools, 16.	—	—	—	20 years as copying clerk. Probate Registry.	Copying clerk, Probate Registry.
Z. 40,611	21	Shipper	Loretto School, 16.	London (University College) for six months ; did not matriculate.	—	—	—	Assistant master at coaching establishment.
Nominations in 1908.
Z. 42,268	24	—	St. Paul's School, 16.	—	—	—	Over 2 years' service, first as articled clerk and then as salaried clerk to solicitors.	Assistant school-master and secretary to head master
Z. 40,851	28	Solicitor	Westminster School, 18.	Cambridge (B.A.)	—	—	Two years as articled clerk ; had passed final examination ; not clear whether he was admitted.	Articled clerk to solicitor.
Z. 41,153	26	Gold cutter	Elementary schools, 14.	—	—	—	Six years in department of Treasury Solicitor as boy messenger and clerk and 7 years as clerk to firm of solicitors.	Solicitor's clerk.
Z. 41,154	20	Fishmonger and poulterer	Elementary schools, 13 $\frac{3}{4}$.	—	—	—	5 $\frac{1}{2}$ years as clerk to Mr. Justice Pickford.	Judge's clerk.
Z. 41,540	22	Manager of company.	Eton College, 19 $\frac{3}{4}$.	—	—	—	2 months in office of Public Trustee.	Temporary clerkship in office of Public Trustee.
Z. 42,103	22	Inspector for insurance company.	Plymouth and Mannameread College, 14 $\frac{7}{8}$.	—	—	—	7 $\frac{1}{2}$ years as county court clerk.	County court clerk.
Z. 42,242	21	Cellarman	Elementary school, 14.	—	—	—	6 years as barrister's clerk.	Barrister's clerk.
Z. 42,243	20	Registrar in Chancery.	Haileybury College, 19.	—	—	—	1 year as clerk to firm of solicitors.	Solicitor's clerk.
Z. 42,235	20	Clerk in Supreme Court.	Bedford Modern School, 18.	London (University College), 18 months.	—	—	1 year as clerk to firm of solicitors.	Solicitor's clerk.
Z. 41,664	20	Railway employee.	Westminster City School, 15.	—	—	—	Temporary clerk in Supreme Court for about 18 months.	Temporary clerk, Supreme Court.
Z. 40,880	28	Clergyman	(Not shown), 17 $\frac{3}{4}$.	—	—	—	—	In employ of Norwich Corporation Electricity Department ; had worked with a private tutor and tried insurance and poultry farming. Studying.
Z. 41,157	26	Barrister	Eton College, 18	London (University College), Engineering Course, 2 years.	—	—	—	—
Z. 41,211	25	Clerk in Supreme Court.	Dulwich College, 16.	—	—	—	5 years as articled clerk to firm of solicitors.	Studying engineering.
Z. 42,366	23	Author	Westminster School, 18.	—	—	—	—	Clerk to firm of stockbrokers.
Nominations in 1909.
Z. 43,360	20	County court judge.	Wimbledon College, 17.	—	—	—	Temporary clerk, Supreme Court, for a few months.	Temporary clerk Supreme Court.
Z. 43,615	29	Builder's foreman.	Elementary schools, 13.	—	—	—	7 years as writer in Land Registry.	Writer in Land Registry.
Z. 42,481	27	Barrister	King Edward VI. Grammar School, Louth, 17 $\frac{1}{4}$.	—	—	—	7 $\frac{1}{2}$ years as clerk to firm of solicitors.	Temporary clerk, Supreme Court.

Number.	Age.	Father's Profession.	School, and Age on Leaving.	University and Degree (if any).	Barrister.	Solicitor.	Legal Experience.	Occupation at Time of Nomination.
Z. 43,438	22	Farmer	Elementary schools, 16½.	—	—	—	—	Assistant clerk in Civil Service until just before nomination when he took temporary clerkship in Supreme Court. Clerk in Land Registry.
Z. 43,484	25	Civil servant	County High School, Isleworth, 15 ⁸ / ₁₂ .	—	—	—	1 month with firm of solicitors and 9 years as clerk in Land Registry.	Clerk in Land Registry.
Z. 42,583	24	Army officer	St. Paul's School, 18.	2 years at St. George's Hospital Medical School.	—	—	—	Studying.
Z. 42,684	20	District Probate Registrar.	Charterhouse School, 18 ² / ₁₂ .	—	—	—	2 years in District Registry at Carlisle.	Assisting his father.
Z. 42,843	43	Builder (employed by Watney's distillery).	Elementary schools, 14.	—	—	—	A good many years as clerk to various solicitors' firms (details not clear) 3½ years as clerk to President of Probate, &c. Division.	Clerk to Right Honourable Sir Gorell Barnes.
Z. 42,984	44	Civil servant	Private school, 16½.	—	—	—	About 18 months as clerk to firm of solicitors and 23 years as copying and writing clerk, Probate Registry.	Writing clerk, Probate Registry.
Z. 43,010	20	Clerk to judge	Elementary and private school, 16½.	—	—	—	18 months with firm of solicitors, (age 16½-18).	Clerk in insurance company.
Z. 43,407	23	Schoolmaster	St. Peter's College Westminster, 18½.	Oxford (4 years)	—	—	—	Employed on a newspaper.
Z. 43,408	20	Civil servant	St. Paul's School 18 ¹¹ / ₁₂ .	—	—	—	—	Clerk in insurance company.
Z. 43,409	20	Journalist	St. Peter's College Westminster, 18 ³ / ₁₂ .	—	—	—	—	Assistant on a newspaper.
Z. 42,872	28	Watchmaker and jeweller.	Elementary school, 15.	—	—	—	4 years as barrister's clerk.	Temporary clerk, Supreme Court.
Z. 42,942	22	Baker.	Elementary schools, 13.	—	—	—	Clerk in office of Public Trustee for over a year.	Temporary clerk, Supreme Court.
Z. 43,085	29	Usher.	Elementary schools, 14½.	—	—	—	15 years in the office of the Official Receiver.	In office of Official Receiver.
Z. 43,155	27	Civil servant.	Castle Hill School, West Ealing, 18.	—	—	—	9 years as boy clerk and writer in Land Registry.	Writer in Land Registry.
Nominations in 1910.
*Z. 44,290	34	"Royal Navy"	King Edward VI. Grammar School, Southampton, 17.	—	—	—	9 years as solicitor's clerk; 7½ years third class clerk in Land Registry.	Third class clerk in Land Registry.
Z. 44,560	23	House steward	Worcester Cathedral King's School, 16 ⁸ / ₁₂ .	—	—	—	Writer in Land Registry for a few months before nomination.	Writer in Land Registry.
Z. 43,701	23	Chef	Elementary school, 14.	—	—	—	8½ years as barrister's clerk.	Barrister's clerk.
Z. 43,920	24	Schoolmaster	Repton School, 16.	—	—	Yes	About 7 years as articled clerk and solicitor's clerk.	Solicitor's clerk.
Z. 44,092	22	Clerk (municipal).	Elementary school, 16.	Read Law at University College, Nottingham (evening classes).	—	—	6½ years as solicitor's clerk.	Solicitor's clerk.
Z. 44,847	28	Solicitor	University College School, 18.	—	—	—	8½ years as clerk to various firms of solicitors.	Solicitor's clerk.
Z. 43,937	23	Admiralty registrar.	Bedford Grammar School, 17.	—	—	—	—	Clerk in insurance company.
Z. 43,745	41	Foreman farmer.	Elementary school, 14.	—	—	—	Over 15 years in Probate Registry.	Employed in Probate Registry.
Z. 44,780	28	—	Foundling Hospital, 15.	—	—	—	13 years as solicitor's clerk.	Solicitor's clerk.

Number.	Age.	Father's Profession.	School, and Age on Leaving.	University and Degree (if any).	Barrister.	Solicitor.	Legal Experience.	Occupation at time of Nomination.
Nominations in 1911.
Z. 45,590	28	Clergyman	Rugby School, 17½.	—	—	—	—	Commercial clerk.
Z. 46,040	26	Civil servant	Hillmartin College, Camden Town, 16.	—	—	—	—	Clerk in insurance company.
Z. 45,004	21	Accountant	Westminster School, 17.	—	—	—	—	Commercial clerk.
Z. 45,735	26	Official stationer.	Westbourne (Independent) School, 14.	—	—	—	1 year as clerk to firm of solicitors and 3½ years' employment in the Scrivenery Department of Royal Courts of Justice.	Scrivenery Department, Royal Courts of Justice.
Z. 46,123	22	Auctioneer	Manchester Grammar School, 18.	—	—	—	Nearly 3 years as articled clerk to solicitor.	Clerk to his father (auctioneer).
Z. 45,180	26	Barrister	Eton College, 17½.	Oxford, B.A., (Honours in Jurisprudence).	Yes	—	Practising barrister for 3 years.	Barrister.
Z. 45,439	27	Wine merchant.	Westminster School, 18.	—	—	Yes	Articled to a firm of solicitors for 5 years and employed by them for 3 years after admission.	Solicitor's clerk.
Z. 45,449	23	Army officer	Bishop's Stortford School, 18½.	—	—	—	—	Second Division clerk in Civil Service.
Z. 45,790	22	Civil servant	St. Paul's School, 17½.	—	—	—	—	Assistant master in private school.
Z. 45,907	20	Mining engineer.	Marlborough College, 18.	—	—	—	—	Had held several secretarial and clerical posts ; left the last one shortly before nomination and went to study at Skerry's College.
Z. 45,908	23	Hotel keeper	County School, Llandyssil, 18.	—	—	—	—	Secretary to Portcullis Pursuivant of Arms.
Nominations in 1912.
Z. 48,171	22	Assistant superintendent, Royal Courts of Justice.	Elementary, 15	—	—	—	7 years as clerk to various solicitors.	Solicitor's clerk.
Z. 48,305	26	Dairyman and greengrocer.	Lady Boswell's School, Sevenoaks, 13.	—	—	—	13 years as clerk to various solicitors, starting at the age of 13.	Solicitor's clerk.
Z. 48,528	22	Not shown	Radley College, 17½.	—	—	—	About 3½ years as solicitor's clerk (unpaid).	Solicitor's clerk.
Z. 48,530	23	Engineer	Elementary, 14½	—	—	—	—	Clerk under L.C.C.
Z. 46,969	24	Solicitor's clerk.	Elementary, 14½	—	—	—	About 5½ years (not continuous) as clerk to various solicitors.	Solicitor's clerk.
Z. 48,531	55	Cabinetmaker	Elementary, 15	—	—	—	About 20 years as solicitor's clerk, and 20 years unestablished service in Supreme Court.	Employed in Supreme Court.
Z. 46,273	38	Civil servant	Royal St. Anne's Society Schools, Redhill, 15.	—	—	—	6 months as solicitor's clerk ; 18 years as typist in Probate Registry	Typist in Probate Registry.
Z. 46,563	22	Schoolmaster	County School, Neath, 18.	—	—	—	—	Assistant teacher under Glamorgan County Education Committee.
Z. 46,616	21	Electrician	Elementary, 14	—	—	—	8 years as clerk to barrister who became a judge during this period.	Secretary to Rt. Hon. Lord Robson.
Z. 46,764	21	Accounts clerk, New Scotland Yard.	Dover College, 19.	—	—	—	—	Clerk, Bank of England.
Z. 48,303	29	Master poulterer	Elementary, 13½	—	—	—	15 years as solicitor's clerk.	Solicitor's clerk.
Z. 48,538	22	Farmer	St. Michael's College, Listowel, 19.	—	—	—	—	Clerk under L.C.C.

Number.	Age.	Father's Profession.	School, and Age on Leaving.	University and Degree (if any).	Barrister.	Solicitor.	Legal Experience.	Occupation at time of Nomination.
Nominations in 1913.
*Z. 49,325	37	Engineer	Elementary ?	—	Yes	—	10 years in Land Registry.	Employed in Land Registry.
Z. 49,707	27	Clerk, House of Commons.	Westminster School, 17.	Oxford, B.A.	—	—	—	Temporary clerk, House of Commons.
Z. 51,348	22	Butler	St. Mark's College, Fulham, 15½.	—	—	—	Employed for 6 years as assistant cashier to official solicitor to Supreme Court.	Assistant cashier to official solicitor.
Z. 50,142	28	Compositor	Elementary, 14	—	—	—	13 years as temporary clerk and assistant clerk (abstractor) in Land Registry.	Assistant clerk.
Z. 50,451	29	Permanent Under Secretary of State for War.	Dulwich College, 19.	—	—	—	Spent 2 years as articled clerk to solicitor.	Had been learning singing for 6 years.
Z. 50,069	22	Civil servant	Whitgift Grammar School and Bishop Vesey's Grammar School, 17.	—	—	—	—	Assistant clerk under Land Values Reference Committee.
Z. 50,774	23	Clerk to Education Authority.	Newport Grammar School, 17.	—	—	—	—	Learner in Post Office.
Z. 51,553	21	Barrister's clerk.	Richmond County School, 15.	—	—	—	About 6 years as solicitor's clerk.	Helping his father.
Z. 49,195	54	Solicitor's clerk.	Elementary and private schools, 14.	—	—	—	2 or 3 months as barrister's clerk ; about 11 years as solicitor's clerk ; 21 years as writer in Scrivenery Department of Law Courts.	Writer, Scrivenery Department.
Z. 51,259	26	Confectioner	Elementary (Church) school, 14½.	—	—	—	9 years as solicitor's clerk.	Clerk under Road Board.
Z. 48,930	20	Principal clerk, Probate Registry.	Uppingham School, 17½.	—	—	—	About 1 year in Public Trustee's Office.	Clerk under Public Trustee.
Z. 52,136	21	Barrister	Rugby School, 17½.	—	—	—	—	Had resigned commission in the Army 3 months before nomination ; no occupation since.
Z. 50,070	24	Shorthand writer and reporter.	Elementary schools, 15.	—	—	—	About 6 years as writer in Admiralty Registry.	Writer in Admiralty Registry.
Nominations in 1914.
Z. 51,890	29	Corn merchant	Tonbridge, 18	—	—	Yes	Five years as articled clerk, 4 years as admitted clerk.	Private work (legal).
Z. 52,199	25	Civil engineer	Tonbridge, 18	—	—	Yes	5½ years as articled clerk. About 6 months as managing clerk.	None for about nine months before nomination.
Z. 52,807	29	Solicitor's managing clerk.	Haberdashers' Aske's School, Hoxton, 15.	—	—	—	14 years as solicitor's clerk.	Solicitor's clerk.
Z. 53,673	22	Clerk, Supreme Court.	Whitgift Middle School, 18.	—	—	—	—	Employed by German commercial firm at Stuttgart.
Z. 51,794	20	Tailor	Saltcoats Public School, 14.	—	—	—	One year as solicitor's clerk at age of 16—17.	Lower Grade Clerk at Board of Trade (Labour Exchange).
Z. 52,525	21	Civil servant	Private schools, 17.	—	—	—	—	Clerk in insurance company.
Z. 52,549	24	Superintendent's Staff, Royal Courts of Justice.	National school, 15.	—	—	—	Nine years as solicitor's clerk, starting at age of 15.	Solicitor's clerk.
Z. 51,994	21	Foreman packer.	Elementary school, 14.	—	—	—	Seven years as solicitor's clerk, starting at age of 14 ; and a few months in Supreme Court.	Employed in Supreme Court.

Number.	Age.	Father's Profession.	School, and Age on Leaving.	University and Degree if any).	Barrister.	Solicitor.	Legal Experience.	Occupation at time of Nomination.
Z. 52,149	24	Sign glass and facia writer.	Elementary school and private tuition, 15.	—	—	—	Nine years as solicitor's clerk, starting at age of 15, and a few months in Supreme Court.	Employed in Supreme Court.
Z. 52,420	28	Rubber merchant.	Liverpool College, 19.	Oxford (4 years)	Yes	—	Practising barrister for 3 years.	Barrister.
Z. 51,931	29	Schoolmaster	Private tuition and King's College (Strand School), 15.	—	—	—	—	Telegraphist in Post Office.
Z. 51,968	21	Wesleyan minister.	Leight Grammar School, 19.	—	—	—	—	Schoolmaster.
Z. 52,523	22	Solicitor	King William's College, Isle of Man, 18.	—	—	—	—	Secretary to International Development Company.
Z. 53,143	20	Estate agent	St. Bees School, 15.	—	—	—	—	Clerk under London County Council.
Z. 54,419	26	Civil servant	Dulwich, 18½	King's College, London.	—	—	4 years as unpaid clerk to solicitor.	Clerk to solicitor.
Z. 53,971	25	Railway goods manager.	Kendrick School. Reading, 17.	—	—	—	—	Clerk under railway company.

APPENDIX XCVIII.

(Handed in by Mr. B. J. Bridgeman.)

Vide Q. 51,578.

COUNTY COURTS.

WHOLE-TIME REGISTRARS ON PENSIONABLE SALARIES.

Court.	Name.	Salary.
Birmingham -	Whitelock, W. H.	750 l. County Court, 650 l. District Registry = 1,400 l.
" - - -	Lowe, A. L. -	650 l. County Court, 550 l. District Registry = 1,200 l.
Brentford - -	Sills, F. C. -	900 l. County Court.
Exeter - - -	Daw, J. E. -	685 l. County Court, 125 l. District Registry = 810 l.
Leeds - - -	Greenhow, W. H.	770 l. County Court, 330 l. District Registry = 1,100 l.
" - - -	Gillespie, F. W.	630 l. County Court, 270 l. District Registry = 900 l.
Manchester - -	Atkinson, A. H.	1,400 l. County Court.
Newcastle-on-Tyne	Dendy, F. W. -	900 l. County Court, 300 l. District Registry = 1,200 l.
Nottingham - -	Beaumont, R. H.	1,000 l. County Court, 200 l. District Registry = 1,200 l.
Plymouth - -	McCrea, F. B. -	950 l. County Court, 150 l. District Registry = 1,100 l.
Salford - - -	Addie, R. F. -	800 l. County Court.
Wakefield - -	Mason, F. -	710 l. County Court, 90 l. District Registry = 800 l.
West Bromwich -	Walker, G. W. -	860 l. County Court, 80 l. District Registry = 940 l.
Wolverhampton -	Cope, G. B. -	900 l. County Court, 150 l. District Registry = 1,050 l.

APPENDIX XCIX.

(Handed in by Mr. B. J. Bridgeman.)Vide Q. 51,607.

COUNTY COURTS.

1915.

COURTS IN WHICH THE PLAINTS HAVE AT SOME TIME EXCEEDED 6,000, OR IN WHICH REGISTRARS HAVE FIXED SALARIES.

County Court.	Allowances for		County Court.	Allowances for
	Clerk Hire.	Service and execution of Process.		Clerk Hire.	Service and execution of Process.
	£	£		£	£
Aberdare, &c. - - -	550	610	Manchester - - -	2,220	1,600
Ashton-under-Lyne, &c. - - -	450	450	Mansfield - - -	448	550
Barnsley - - -	700	775	Marylebone - - -	1,200	1,058
Birkenhead - - -	888	800	Merthyr Tydfil - - -	600	665
Birmingham - - -	6,500	2,716	Middlesbrough - - -	950	856
Blackburn, &c. - - -	459	470	Neath and Aberavon - - -	680	780
Bloomsbury - - -	1,660	925	Newcastle-under-Lyme - - -	380	420
Bolton - - -	900	1,150	Newcastle-upon-Tyne - - -	955	717
Bow - - -	1,900	1,910	Nottingham - - -	2,150	2,365
Bradford (Yorks) - - -	950	1,000	Oldham - - -	900	800
Brentford - - -	560	641	Plymouth - - -	900	754
Bridgend - - -	600	665	Pontefract - - -	666	830
Brighton - - -	800	870	Pontypridd, &c. - - -	1,700	1,598
Bristol - - -	2,300	2,337	Portsmouth - - -	440	470
Burnley - - -	450	480	Rochester - - -	675	690
Burslem - - -	395	300	Rotherham - - -	1,087	1,020
Burton-on-Trent - - -	450	330	St. Helens and Widnes - - -	515	590
Bury - - -	436	500	Salford - - -	1,640	1,515
Cardiff - - -	825	862	Sheffield - - -	2,450	1,605
Chesterfield - - -	570	635	Shoreditch - - -	1,650	898
Clerkenwell - - -	1,700	1,938	South Shields, &c. - - -	587	425
Coventry - - -	575	300	Southwark - - -	1,465	1,044
Croydon - - -	350	550	Stockton-on-Tees - - -	550	700
Derby, &c. - - -	1,200	945	Stoke-on-Trent, &c. - - -	585	450
Dewsbury - - -	640	752	Sunderland - - -	750	600
Doncaster - - -	700	680	Swansea - - -	850	1,050
Dudley - - -	505	580	Tredeggar - - -	425	470
Exeter - - -	390	300	Wakefield - - -	640	650
Great Grimsby - - -	900	1,050	Walsall - - -	1,000	750
Greenwich and Woolwich - - -	760	726	Wandsworth - - -	1,240	850
Halifax - - -	628	742	West Bromwich - - -	863	730
Hanley - - -	545	650	West Hartlepool - - -	374	400
Huddersfield - - -	505	485	West London - - -	1,150	1,077
Kingston-on-Hull - - -	1,400	1,270	Westminster - - -	2,450	1,218
Lambeth - - -	1,200	1,404	Whitechapel - - -	1,360	1,004
Leeds - - -	2,980	2,290	Wigan - - -	850	880
Leicester - - -	1,400	1,072	Wolverhampton - - -	1,200	890
Liverpool - - -	2,750	1,866

APPENDIX C.

(Handed in by Mr. Gordon Simpson.)

THE DISTRICT PROBATE REGISTRARS ASSOCIATION.

SUMMARY OF THE STATISTICAL RETURNS OF THE DISTRICT PROBATE REGISTRIES FOR THE YEAR ENDED 31ST DECEMBER 1914.

District Registry.	Registrars. Barristers. † Solicitors.	Total Number of Grants, 1913.	Total Number of Grants, 1914.	Number of Grants extracted.					Fees. £ s. d.	Registrar's Salary. £	Clerks' Salaries.	Extra Payments for Copying. £ s. d.
				On Personal Application.		By Solicitors.
				At Registry.	Through Inland Revenue.	Through County Court.	At Registry.	Through Inland Revenue.
Bangor	-	526	532	298	5	8	311	-	946	7 6	330	Nil
Birmingham	-	1,208	1,272	292	92	1	887	-	2,958	7 9	800	85 11 2
Blandford	-	337	344	75	57	-	212	-	705	13 0	250	Nil
Bodmin	-	753	732	75	123	2	532	-	1,350	3 3	510	24 17 2
Bristol	-	892	791*	215	48	-	528	-	1,882	2 6	600	107 14 3
Bury St. Edmunds	-	168	193	39	9	-	145	-	386	4 3	240	Nil
Canterbury	-	333	322	136	59	3	124	-	592	12 6	350	Nil
Carlisle	-	872	767	56	33	8	670	-	1,584	8 3	530	Nil
Carmarthen	-	530	543	181	165	-	197	-	846	17 6	330	46 0 9
Chester	-	1,042	1,114	180	238	6	674	16	2,543	19 6	800	103 0 1
Chichester	-	217	220	40	21	2	156	1	422	19 6	200	240
Derby	-	717	741	240	91	1	405	4	1,477	11 3	600	530
Durham	-	1,742	1,713	287	121	10	1,295	-	2,993	0 6	500	1,140
Exeter	-	1,151	1,116	148	241	5	720	2	2,376	8 3	1,000	830
Gloucester	-	760	743	120	47	-	576	-	1,552	2 6	600	400
Hereford	-	457	443	88	58	3	294	-	844	12 11	400	330
Ipswich	-	567	641	126	99	3	412	1	1,304	16 6	450	330
Lancaster	-	1,525	1,597	185	258	5	1,146	3	3,062	13 3	700	1,030
Leicester	-	713	766	187	23	-	556	-	1,619	18 0	500	385
Lewes	-	700	634	72	109	-	445	8	1,623	5 0	350	390
Lichfield	-	1,226	1,208	101	272	3	826	6	2,146	19 0	800	960
Lincoln	-	632	591*	63	81	1	438	8	1,090	19 3	500	330
Liverpool	-	2,075	2,173	666	116	5	1,375	11	5,104	1 3	750+	208 0 5
Llandaff	-	1,274	1,280	385	138	10	747	-	2,412	11 0	350	83 16 6
Manchester	-	2,304	2,379	909	377	12	1,058	23	4,741	5 1	800+	208 5 1

See Notes on page 166

SUMMARY OF THE STATISTICAL RETURNS OF THE DISTRICT PROBATE REGISTRIES FOR THE YEAR ENDED 31ST DECEMBER 1914—continued.

District Registry	Registrars. Barristers. † Solicitors.	Total Number of Grants, 1913.	Total Number of Grants, 1914.	Number of Grants extracted.						Fees. £ s. d.	Registrar's Salary.	Clerks' Salaries.	Extra Payments for Copying
				On Personal Application.			By Solicitors.
				At Registry.	Through Inland Revenue.	Through County Court.	At Registry.	Through Inland Revenue.
Newcastle-on-Tyne	-	1,068	1,099	221	31	1	846	—	£ 2,365	£ 500	£	Nil	d.
Northampton	-	369	380	72	37	2	269	—	651	250	625	Nil
Norwich	-	753	713	140	32	1	540	—	1,437	700	250	59	5 7
Nottingham	-	906	937	304	50	—	583	—	1,994	400	420	83	14 8
Oxford	-	696*	938	103	178	3	650	4	1,886	500	524	5	17 2
Peterborough	-	517	494	80	53	—	360	1	857	330	595$	Nil
Saint Asaph	-	571	508	116	92	1	299	—	729	350	330	Nil
Salisbury	-	354	329	49	100	—	180	—	568	320	320	Nil
Shrewsbury	-	411	428	102	74	3	249	—	772	350	330	Nil
Taunton	-	272	257	65	25	2	165	—	465	350	310	Nil
Wakefield	-	3,370*	3,491	349	876	19	2,187	60	6,765	1,200	1,610	291	17 8
Wells	-	307	326	33	33	—	260	—	698	320	Nil	32	5 3
Winchester	-	504*	583	84	340	—	154	5	919	500	330	63	0 3
Worcester	-	625	600	105	81	2	412	—	1,404	500	385	102	7 4
York	-	1,045*	1,027*	75	176	3	719	54	2,157	1,000	880	2,099	2 0
TOTALS	- - -	—	34,965	6,972	5,059	125	22,602	207	70,245	21,250	22,379	2,077	7 4½
TOTALS in 1913	- - -	34,489	—	6,762	4,955	136	22,436	200	70,415	21,250	22,175	2,077	7 4½

* In 1914 during the vacancies at York, Lincoln, Bristol and Carlisle, 58, 68, 94, and 38 cases respectively were transmitted to London; and in 1913 during the vacancies at Oxford, Wakefield, Winchester and York, 153, 118, 37, and 50 cases respectively. These figures are not included in the above returns.

† 250% at Liverpool and 200% at Manchester, additional, as Joint District Registrars of the High Court.

NOTE.—In the Principal Registry there were 37,578 grants in 1913 and 37,481 in 1914.

§ 65L temporary clerk.

GORDON L. SIMPSON, Hon. Secretary, York.

APPENDIX CI.

(Handed in by Mr. F. A. Stringer.)

Vide Q. 53,853.

SCRIVENERY DEPARTMENT, ROYAL COURTS OF JUSTICE.

RETIRING GRATUITY.

Comparison of amount of earnings calculated on average of last three years of service, with the amount calculated on average of entire length of service since the formation of the Scrivenery Department in 1891.

These are the only retirements we have had during the last five years.

J. C. RUCK retired in February 1911 :—

	£	s.	d.
Average for last 3 years -	134	3	8
" " " 19 " -	166	18	6

W. FORREST retired January 1913 :—

Average for last 3 years -	174	18	6
" " " 21 " -	214	13	0

C. A. TOMKINS retired February 1913 :—

Average for last 3 years -	93	19	0
" " " 21 " -	94	5	9

In each of the above cases the amount of gratuity granted was the one above shown as the average of the last three years.

FRANCIS A. STRINGER,
1st May 1915.

APPENDIX CII.

(Handed in by Mr. J. S. Stewart-Wallace.)

Vide Q. 54,693.

PARTICULARS RELATING TO THE STAFF OF THE LAND REGISTRY, APRIL 1915.

Name.	Qualifications.	Age on Appointment.	Date and Rank of First Appointment.	Subsequent Career.	Present Salary.
FIRST CLASS CLERKS.					£
T. W. Whitmore-Jones	Marlborough ; St. John's Coll., Oxon ; B.A., 1886 ; Bar, July 1889.	36	9 Jan. 1900, 2nd Cl. Clerk.	Sec. to the Regr., 1 Apl. 1900. Additional salary, 50l. Chief Assistant, 19 Aug. 1902. Salary, 375l. to 400l. Maximum increased to 460l. 1 Apl. 1909. 1st Cl. Clerk, Dec. 1911, dating from 1 May 1911. Salary commencing at 520l.	580
A. R. G. Jennings	Harrow ; Trinity Coll., Camb. ; LL.B., 1881 ; Bar, May 1884.	42	22 Feb. 1901, Temp. Clerk, salary 240l.	2nd Cl. Clerk, 11 Nov. 1902. Chief Asst., 1 Apl. 1904. Salary, 350l.-400l. Maximum increased to 460l. 1 Apl. 1909. 1st Cl. Clerk, Dec. 1911, dating from 1 May 1911. Salary commencing at 520l.	580
R. J. M. Borough	Repton ; Pemb. Coll., Oxon ; B.A. 1890 ; M.A. 1894 ; Bar, Jan. 1893.	30	4 Dec. 1899, 2nd Cl. Clerk.	Chief Asst., Dec. 1911. 1st Cl. Clerk (dated back to) 1 May 1911. Salary commencing at 460l.	520
J. S. Stewart-Wallace	Royal Univ. Ireland ; Heidelberg Univ. ; Lincoln Coll., Oxon ; B.A., 1899 ; Vinerian Scholar, 1900 ; Bar, May 1900 ; M.A., 1903.	26	13 Aug. 1900, 2nd Cl. Clerk.	1st Cl. Clerk, Dec. 1911, dating from 1 May 1911.	510
G. A. H. Rendall	Rugby ; C.C.C., Oxon ; B.A., 1890 ; Bar, April 1894.	33	10 Dec. 1900, 2nd Cl. Clerk.	1st Cl. Clerk, Dec. 1911, dating from 1 May 1911.	510
C. A. L. Lewis	Radley ; B.N.C., Oxon ; B.A., 1895 ; Bar, June 1900.	30	7 June 1904, Temp. Clerk, salary 240l.	2nd Cl. Clerk, 23 Dec. 1904. 1st Cl. Clerk, Dec. 1911, dating from 1 Nov. 1911.	510
S. Lowenthal	Rugby ; C.C.C., Oxon ; B.A., 1894 ; Solicitor, 1898 ; Bar, Jan. 1906.	31	1 Dec. 1902, Temp. Clerk, salary 180l.	Salary increased to 240l. 1 Dec. 1905. 2nd Cl. Clerk, 2 Nov. 1907. 1st Cl. Clerk, Dec. 1911, dating from 1 Nov. 1911.	510

PARTICULARS RELATING TO THE STAFF OF THE LAND REGISTRY, APRIL 1915—continued.

Name.	Qualifications.	Age on Appointment.	Date and Rank of First Appointment.	Subsequent Career.	Present Salary.
SECOND CLASS CLERKS.
G. I. Holt - -	Solicitor, 1882 - - -	31	1 April 1892, Solicitor Clerk, salary 250 l. —400 l.	- - - -	£ 400
G. W. Falkner - -	Bar, Nov. 1903 - - -	23	9 April 1894, 3rd Cl. Clerk.	2nd Cl. Clerk, 21 July 1908 -	340
A. J. Sturton - -	Trinity Coll., Stratford-on-Avon; Solicitor, 1897.	28	11 June 1900, Temp. Clerk, salary 180 l.	Salary increased to 240 l. 19 Aug. 1902. Salary increased to 300 l. 8 July 1908. 2nd Cl. Clerk, 27 Jan. 1910.	375
C. W. Heneage - -	Eton; Univ. Coll., Oxon; B.A., 1896; Bar, 1902.	23	12 Dec. 1898, 3rd Cl. Clerk.	Asst. Sec., Aug. 1902. Additional salary 30 l. Secretary to the Regr., 1 Sept. 1907. Additional salary 70 l. 2nd Cl. Clerk, 4 May 1910.	340
D. H. Little - -	King's Coll., London; Private Sec. to Perm. Sec. to Lord Chancellor.	25	1 Oct. 1899, 3rd Cl. Clerk.	Clerk of Accounts, March 1904. Additional salary 30 l. 2nd Cl. Clerk and Secretary to Regr., 4 May 1910.	310
J. P. Purcell - -	Colonial Audit Office, 1895–7; Bar, Nov. 1900.	21	19 July 1897, 3rd Cl. Clerk.	2nd Cl. Clerk, 1 Nov. 1911 -	295
H. M. Rowland - -	Charterhouse - - -	22	20 Nov. 1899, 3rd Cl. Clerk.	Asst. Sec., 1 Sept. 1907. Additional salary 30 l. 2nd Cl. Clerk, 1 Nov. 1911.	295
G. W. H. Tupper - -	Harrow; B.N.C., Oxon; B.A., 1901; Bar, June 1903.	24	10 March 1902, Temp. Clerk, salary 104 l.	3rd Cl. Clerk, 26 April 1904. 2nd Cl. Clerk, 6 Dec. 1911.	295
C. C. Deans - -	Sedbergh; Bar, Jan. 1908 -	21	7 June 1900, Temp. Clerk, salary 52 l.	Salary increased to 100 l. 1 Jan. 1902. 3rd Cl. Clerk, 13 June 1904. 2nd Cl. Clerk, 13 Dec. 1911.	295
C. W. Farwell - -	Bath College; Bar, July 1905	20	13 Aug. 1900, 3rd Cl. Clerk.	2nd Cl. Clerk, 2 Jan. 1913 -	280
P. Lee - - -	Rugby; Oriel Coll., Oxon; B.A., 1899; M.A., 1900; Bar, June 1906.	26	1 Oct. 1901, Temp. Clerk, salary 104 l.	3rd Cl. Clerk, 13 April 1904. Asst. Sec. and Asst. Clerk of Accounts, 1 Nov. 1911. Additional salary 50 l. 2nd Cl. Clerk, 5 Feb. 1914.	265
W. E. Munday - -	Solicitor's Clerk - - -	28	1 Jan. 1903, Temp. Clerk, salary 104 l.	Salary increased to 130 l. 1 July 1908. 3rd Cl. Clerk, 4 May 1910. 2nd Cl. Clerk, 5 Feb. 1914.	265
THIRD CLASS CLERKS.
W. L. Robinson - -	Solicitor's Clerk, nearly 14 years.	28	22 Jan. 1900, 3rd Cl. Clerk.	- - - -	200
E. A. Weaire - -	Solicitor's Clerk; Clerk in Charge, Chertsey County Court; Cashier, Wandsworth County Court, 5 years.	27	2 Sept. 1900, 3rd Cl. Clerk.	- - - -	200
F. H. Robinson - -	- - - - -	23	31 Dec. 1900, 3rd Cl. Clerk.	- - - -	200
A. F. Assig - - -	- - - - -	—	6 Nov. 1899, Temp. Clerk, salary 52 l.	Salary increased to 100 l. 16 July 1900. 3rd Cl. Clerk and Asst. Superintendent in *Scrivenery Dept., 1 April 1901.	200
E. O. Byers - - -	Stockwell Coll.; Peckham Higher Grade School; Solicitor's Clerk for 8 years, including 2 years as Asst. Man. Clerk.	23	11 March 1902, 3rd Cl. Clerk.	- - - -	200
H. S. Wasbrough - -	Radley; Trin. Hall, Camb.; B.A., 1903; 2 years in Solicitor's Office.	26	11 April 1904, 3rd Cl. Clerk.	- - - -	200
A. H. Coates - - -	Bedford; 3 years in Office of Town Clerk of Bedford; 18 months as Committee Clerk.	19	19 Sept. 1899, Clerk in Map Dept.	3rd Cl. Clerk, 1 Sept. 1904 -	200

* The post of Asst. Sup. of the Scrivenery Dept. in the Royal Courts of Justice is held by a 2nd Cl. Clerk, the present holder of the office having received his training as a writer in this Department under the immediate supervision of Mr. Assig.

APPENDIX CIII.

(Handed in by Mr. Stanley Leathes, C.B.).

TABLE showing the PROPORTION successful of the CANDIDATES at the OPEN COMPETITIONS for Clerkships in the Register House Departments, Edinburgh, held in Ten Years (1905-14).

Date of Competition.	Number of Candidates examined.	Number ultimately Successful	Per-centage.
1905, August - - -	5	1	20·0
1906, March - - -	8	1	12·5
1907, January - - -	4	3	75·0
1907, December - - -	5	2	40·0
1909, March - - -	7	2	28·6
1910, March - - -	8	3	37·5
1911, September - - -	8	5	62·5
1912, June - - -	11	3	27·3
1913, April - - -	7	5	71·4
Total - - -	63	25	39·7
Average - - -	7	2·8	—

APPENDIX CIV.

(Handed in by Mr. Stanley Leathes, C.B.).

PARTICULARS as to CANDIDATES Successful in OPEN COMPETITIVE EXAMINATIONS for Clerkships in Departments of the General Register House, Edinburgh, in the Ten Years 1905 to 1914.

Number.	Age.	Father's Occupation.	School and Age on Leaving. University and Degree, if any.	Legal Experience (or other previous Qualifying Employment).	Occupation at Time of Examination.
OPEN COMPETITION OF AUGUST 1905.
E. 84511	22	Minister (United Free Church).	St. Mungo's College, Glasgow, 20.	Apprentice to Solicitor, 5 years.	Solicitor's Appren- tice.
OPEN COMPETITION OF MARCH 1906.
E. 85321	22	Church Furnisher	Royal High School, Edinburgh, 15.	Apprentice to Law Agent, 3 years. Clerk to Law Agent, 3½ years.	Law Agent's Clerk.
OPEN COMPETITION OF JANUARY 1907.
E. 86604	21	Bank Agent -	High School, Glasgow. 17 Glasgow University.	Apprentice to Solicitor, 4 years.	Law Clerk.
E. 86603	24	Crofter -	Sharp's Institution, Perth, 16.	General Clerk to Solicitor, 2 years. Engrossing Clerk (Sa- sines), 4 years.	Engrossing Clerk to the Keeper of General Register of Sasines.
E. 86602	21	Builder and Con- tractor.	Secondary Burgh School, Dalkeith, 15.	Boy Clerk, Register House, 4 years.	Register House Clerk.
E. 88264	20	Publisher's Travel- ler.	Sciennes Public School, Edinburgh, 14.	Junior Clerk to Solicitor, 5 years.	Conveyancing Clerk.
E. 88262	24	Shoemaker -	Polmadie Public School, 12.	Conveyancing Clerk, 1 year Junior Clerk and Appren- tice to Notary Public, 11 years.	Clerk to Notary Public.

Number.	Age.	Father's Occupation.	School and Age on leaving. University and Degree, if any.	Legal Experience (or other previous Qualifying employment).	Occupation at time of Examination.
OPEN COMPETITION OF MARCH 1909.
E. 90478	22	Farmer - -	Kelso High School, 15 -	Clerk to Solicitor, 6 years Conveyancing Clerk, 1 year	Conveyancing Clerk.
E. 90480	21	Assistant Keeper of General Register of Sasines.	Daniel Stewart's College, 17.	"In Solicitor's Office," 4 years.	Cashier in Solici- tor's Office.
OPEN COMPETITION OF MARCH 1910.
E. 92586	21	Printer's Composi- tor.	Daniel Stewart's College, 15.	Clerk to Writers to the Signet, 6½ years.	Clerk to Writers to the Signet.
E. 92585	20	Ordnance Surveyor	Daniel Stewart's College, 16.	Boy Clerk in Sasines Office, 3 years.	Temporary Clerk in Sasines Office.
E. 92591	21	Stationer - -	Thomson's Academy, Dundee, 16.	Boy Clerk in Sasines Office, 2½ years.	Abstractor in P.O. Engineers' Office.
OPEN COMPETITION OF SEPTEMBER 1911.
E. 98678	23	Hone Sawyer -	Ayr Secondary Academy, 15.	Engrossing Clerk to Solici- tor, 5 years. Assistant Conveyancer, 3 years.	Assistant Convey- ancer.
E. 98679	22	Schoolmaster -	George Heriot's School, 15.	General Clerk to Solicitor, 7 years.	Solicitor's Clerk.
E. 98683	20	Joiner and Builder	Linlithgow Academy, 16	Temporary Boy Clerk, 3 years. Temporary Clerk in Sasines Office.	Assistant Clerk in Prison Com- mission.
E. 98682	21	Draughtsman -	Allan Glen's School, 15 -	Apprentice to Solicitor, 6 years.	Solicitor's Appren- tice.
E. 98676	21	Book-keeper -	George Heriot's School, 16.	Clerk to Law Agents, 5 years.	—
OPEN COMPETITION OF JUNE 1912.
E. 99941	24	- - - -	Parsons Green Board School, 14.	Parliament House Clerk to Writers to the Signet, 11 years.	Clerk to Writers to the Signet.
E. 99940	20	Coal Contractor -	Lasswade Higher Grade School, 17.	Apprentice to Law Agents, 3 years.	Law Apprentice.
E. 99946	22	Clothier - -	George Watson's College, 15.	Conveyancing Clerk to Writers to the Signet, 5 years.	Conveyancing Clerk.
OPEN COMPETITION OF APRIL 1913.
E.102421	23	Stationer - -	Allan Glen's School, 14. Glasgow University (B.L.)	Junior Clerk, Conveyanc- ing Clerk and Head Clerk to Writer to the Signet, 8 years.	—
E.102426	21	Marine Engineer -	Ayr Grammar School, 14	Clerk to Solicitor, 5 years. Conveyancing Clerk, 3 years.	Conveyancing Clerk.
E.102423	21	Joiner - - -	Aberlour Higher Grade School, 15.	General Law Clerk, 6 years	General Law Clerk.
E.102422	21	Stationer - -	Bell-Baxter School, Cupar, 16.	Boy Clerk in the Sasines Office, 4 years.	Clerk to Keeper of General Register of Sasines.
E.102424	21	Traveller in fancy goods.	Boroughmuir Higher Grade School, 14.	Court Clerk to Law Agent, 6 years.	Court Clerk to Law Agent.

INDEX.

ADAM, EDWIN, K.C., Principal Clerk of Session :
55,922-56,260

APPOINTMENT :

Committee to advise Lord Advocate :
no Advantage would be gained - 56,036-8 Nomination by Lord Advocate preferred and reasons - 56,114-22, 56,150-1, 56,162-9 Competition, same type of man would not be obtained and work would not be as well done 56,124

Crown :

Abolition, would be advantageous as regards organisation and question of transfer and promotion - 56,016-7
Limit of 70 years of age put in warrants by arrangement with Treasury but no statutory warrant for - 56,014-5
Retention, no reason known for, and disadvantage of system - 56,012-3
System of, and fees payable - 56,010-1

Political considerations :

not Approved, but Committee not necessarily a safeguard against - 56,019, 56,189-91
Question of - 56,186-8, 56,198-203, 56,213-6

BILL CHAMBER :

Clerks, recommendations of Committee of 1911
re salaries of, carried out - 56,197
Disciplinary control - 56,055
Hours, extension to 5 p.m. under consideration but work all done by 4 - 56,097
Supervision by Principal Clerk, extent of 55,963
Vacation judge - 56,258-9
Work of - 55,959-62

Committee of 1911, recommendations in report and evidence, question of carrying out of, &c.
56,177-88, 56,193-7

COURT OF JUSTICIARY :

Clerks, transfer between civil work and, question of, and suitability would depend on individual 56,080-1

Inclusion in general organisation, question as to possibility - 56,080-3, 56,238-53

COURT OF SESSION :

Appointment :

Committee, would be less satisfactory than present system of nomination by Lord Advocate - 56,114-22

by Competition :

Right class of man might not be obtained and retention of personal nomination system would be preferred - 56,021-35 same Type of man would not be obtained and work would not be as well done - 56,124

Crown :

Retention, no reason known for, and disadvantage of system - 56,012-3
System of, and fees payable - 56,010-1

to Higher posts :

from Outside, and question as to possibility of appointment from office - 56,000-6 by Promotion, preferable as general rule 56,006, 56,008-9

on Lord Advocate's nomination, results satisfactory and approval of - 56,020, 56,221-6
Method, and opinion re 55,998-6,006, 56,124-6

Auditor :

Official salary - 56,145
Position and duties, &c. - 56,964-70 private Taxing work allowed, and advantage of system - 55,967-8, 56,139-49
Books of Sederunt - 55,925-9
Box office - 56,064
Civil Service basis, no larger number of applicants would be obtained - 56,113

ADAM, EDWIN, K.C.—continued.

COURT OF SESSION—continued.

Clerks :

Appointment :

at all Ages - 56,112
Field limited - 56,109
previous Legal experience important 56,028-9
Method - 56,217-20
Satisfactory results of system - 56,124-6

Appointment of Lord Advocate's clerk as

56,162-73, 56,223-6

Assignment to particular court and no power of transfer - 56,041-8

Delegation of more routine work to junior clerks, no steps taken re - 56,183

Duties - 55,952-5

Legal knowledge, extent to which necessary

56,116-8

Pensionable, with exception of one part-timer

55,990-4

Qualifications on entering - 56,111

Routine work, absence of - 56,127-32 over 65, cases of - 56,087-95, 56,137, 56,162-3

Whole-timers, employment not laid down, but the practice since 1906 - 55,994-6

Women, employment would not be objected to 56,160-1

Control, evolution of system - 56,077

Hours - 56,096-7

Judges' clerks :

Appointment by judge - 55,974

Control by judges not by Principal Clerk

55,984-5

Duties - 55,971-3

Emoluments other than salary - 55,980-3

Number - 55,975

Pension system - 55,976-9

Keeper of the Minute Book's Department, disciplinary control - 56,057-8

Macers :

Applications, number received on vacancy

56,152

Appointment, method - 55,987, 56,227-36

Class of men - 56,153-6, 56,235

Disciplinary control - 56,059

Duties - 56,153

Emoluments other than salary - 55,988-9

Employment of, from Court of Justiciary in times of pressure - 55,986

Nominee of Marquess of Bute, not pensionable, but should be - 56,235

Minute-book - 55,930-3, 55,952-4

Officers, whole-timers and making of, Civil Servants as far as pension concerned, approved 56,007

Pensions, list of pensionable and not pensionable officers - 55,990, 55,997

Pooling of clerical, registry, and record work, no steps taken re - 56,182

Principal Clerk :

Abolition of second, 1912 - 56,206-12

Attendance in Court, and abolition of right of, not desired - 55,950-1, 56,104

Clerk desired - 56,104, 56,174-6

Control and supervision :

Dismissal, power re, and final control by Lord

President approved - 56,178-81

Extent of - 56,039-63, 56,076, 56,085

under Lord President - 56,078-9

Power re - 56,049-63

Punitive power, recommendation of Committee of 1911 re increase not carried out 56,177

Duties - 55,925, 55,950-1

Keeping of own records by - 56,104-5

ADAM, EDWIN, K.C.—*continued.*COURT OF SESSION—*continued.*Principal Clerk—continued.

- Salary, and increase advocated if responsibilities increased - - - 56,106-8, 56,212
 Six, former system of - - - 56,077
 Processes, explanation, custody of, &c. 55,934-42
 Retirement:
 Age limit of 70 in Commissions 56,014-5, 56,086 ordinary Civil Service rule, would be approved if extension beyond 65 possible in exceptional cases - - - 56,087, 56,133-7
 Single service for, on Civil Service basis, under direct supervision and control of single head, possibility of, and question of inclusion of Court of Judiciary and Teinds Office in general organisation - - - 56,077-85, 56,038-57
 Typewriting largely used by judges' clerks 56,158-9
 Vacations, particulars - - 56,098-102, 56,258 one Woman attendant - - - 56,157
 Crown Office, combination with office of Court of Sessions, objections to proposal 56,192, 56,254-5
 EXTRACTOR'S DEPARTMENT:
 Clerks, payment:
 by Piecework, effect on length of extracts 56,193-6
 by Salary now - - - 56,196
 Disciplinary control - - - 56,056-7
 Duties, and legal knowledge required - 55,943-9
 Formation, reason for - - - 56,077
 Relations of Principal Clerk of Session to 56,060-3

REGISTER HOUSE:

- Clerks of court, recommendations of Committee of 1911 re hours carried out - - 56,197
 Office, under same roof as Court would be advantageous - - - 56,071-5
 Transfer of papers between Court and, system and inconvenience of - - - 56,066-71

TEINDS OFFICE:

- Inclusion in general organisation, question as to possibility - - - 56,084-5, 56,257
 Position of - - - 55,956-8
 under Supervision of Clerk of Session in theory 56,085
 Women, admission to legal profession would not be objected to - - - 56,161

Admiralty Registry:

CLERKS:

Appointment:

- Ages, and lowering of, not advocated, Roscoe, 49,448, 49,483-6 previous Legal experience not necessary, Roscoe 49,448-51

Method, Roscoe - - - 49,439-46

- by Open competition, no reason known against, Roscoe - - - 49,459-61
 Recommendation of candidates, system, Roscoe 49,534-7

Sitting again in case of failure to pass examinations, Roscoe - - - 49,481-2not Eligible to be registrars, and not advocated, Roscoe - - - 49,488-901Holidays, Roscoe - - - 49,464-5Number of different classes, Roscoe - 49,445Promotion, system, Roscoe - 49,446-7, 49,487

Retirement:

- Fixed age desirable, Aspinall - - 50,850
 Ordinary Civil Service rule would be approved, Roscoe - - - 49,475-7

Temporary, Roscoe - - - 49,498-500

Third class:

- Examination at end of 12 or 18 months in procedure, suggestion, Roscoe - - 49,451-6
 Suitable men appointed, Roscoe - - 49,455 no Work of, could be done by cheaper type of official, Roscoe - - - 49,533

Work:

- Arrangement of, Roscoe - - - 49,480
 Beyond hours owing to war, but not in normal times, Roscoe - - - 49,467-70
 Nature of, Roscoe - - - 49,457-8

Connection with Probate and Divorce Courts, explanation, Roscoe - - - 49,433-6

s (5)30320

Admiralty Registry—continued.

- Excellence of registrar and merchants as tribunal, Aspinall - - - 50,858-62
 Filing of letters and letter book, Roscoe - 49,523-4
 Hours in office, Roscoe - - - 49,462, 49,466
 Marshal's Office practically the same, Roscoe 49,497
 Organisation, Roscoe - - - 49,400
 Organisation satisfactory and work well done, Roscoe 49,501-2, 49,513-9, 49,479-80

Present form dates from 1873, Roscoe - 49,398-9

PRIZE REGISTRY:

Accountant's department, Roscoe - - 49,424-31Work of, Roscoe - - - 49,416-23Referring of cases to arbitration instead of, Roscoe, 40,502-12, 49,518; Aspinall, 50,868-75

REGISTRAR:

Appointment, method, and statutory qualification, Roscoe, 49,437-8; Aspinall, 50,834-40Assistance by two merchants, Aspinall - 50,818-25

Assistant:

Appointment, method, and statutory qualification Roscoe, 49,441-4; Aspinall, 50,834-5Barristers most qualified as a whole, Aspinall 50,841, 50,863-7Attendance in Court, need for, Evans - 60,830-5Barristers most qualified as a whole, Aspinall 50,841, 50,863-7Duties, Roscoe - - - 49,406-32

Retirement, fixed age:

Desirable, Aspinall - - - 50,850-1Seventy suggested, Roscoe - - - 49,475-8Solicitor as (Mr. Rothery), and ability of, Aspinall 50,837-9Shipkeepers under marshal, and posts should not be filled up on vacancy, Roscoe - - 49,538Shorthand typist employed by the week, and question of ordinary assistant clerk, Roscoe - 49,525-32Slave trade bounties believed not to be settled in, Aspinall - - - 50,876-7Taxation by assistant registrar or registrar, Roscoe 49,471Taxation work, transfer of, to Taxing Office not advocated, and reasons, Baker, 45,802-3; Roscoe, 49,472-4; Aspinall, 50,853-7Typewriting, use of, Roscoe - - - 49,529little Vacation work, Roscoe - - - 49,463Vacations, no complaints heard of undue length of, Aspinall - - - 50,844-9Witnesses often heard, Aspinall - - 50,838

WORK:

Admirably done, Aspinall - - 50,816, 50,832-3Nature of, Roscoe, 49,401-5; Aspinall 50,817-31Admiralty work in provinces, arrangements, Roscoe 49,539-45Admission of notaries, clerk to, functions, Dodds 55,546

Advocates Depute:

Appointed by Lord Advocate, Dodds - 55,605Appointments technically fall when Lord Advocate vacates office, but reappointment general by successor of same politics, R. Munro, 60,105, 60,217, 60,222-3Change with change of Government, approval of system, Dunedin - - - 58,485-90Clerks, holding of three posts by one person, probable explanation, R. Munro - - - 60,338-9Extra-Advocate Depute, explanation, salary, &c., R. Munro - - - 60,100, 60,220Number, duties, salaries, &c., R. Munro 60,100-1, 60,219Private practice allowed, R. Munro - - 60,102Sheriff Court Depute, R. Munro - 60,100, 60,220

ALMS, EDWARD; SHADWELL, W. H. L., and SIMPSON, GORDON, District Probate Registrars 52,732-53,074

DISTRICT PROBATE REGISTRIES:

Amalgamation with other registries:

County Court, question of - - - 52,927

High Court, possibility of carrying out work by one person, question of - 53,034-9, 53,040-5 would not Tend to efficiency - - 52,931-2

Applications, receipt of, by post would be an advantage, but clerks might claim extra payment 52,986-90

Y Y

ALMS, EDWARD; SHADWELL, W. H. L., and
SIMPSON, GORDON—continued.

DISTRICT PROBATE REGISTRIES—continued.

Clerks :

Allowance to, by registrar for extra official work, case of - - - - - 53,051-2

Appointment, irregularity in method of
- - - - - 52,808-22, 52,823

Duties of - - - - - 52,843-50

Employment in other than registry work occasionally - - - - - 53,025-30

Pensions :

Contributory scheme, salaries would have to be raised - - - - - 52,886-9, 52,980-1

Grant of, advocated - - - - - 52,841

Inconvenience from absence of, by men staying on when past work 52,870, 52,873-4

53,009-16

Right of certain clerks to, varying opinions of law officers and Treasury decision against 52,830-7

not Private clerks of registrars, 52,830-7, 52,977-9

Question whether whole time of, occupied by work of registry - 52,849-56, 52,857-68,

52,869-72

Salaries, comparison with those of solicitors'
clerks - - - - - 52,890-6

Solicitors' clerks generally - - - - - 52,894

Copying of wills, typewriting desirable, but application not allowed - - - - - 52,866-8

Fees, higher than in Principal Registry, and more work therefore sent to London, and uniform scale
desirable - - - - - 52,902-7

Grants made in, number :

1859 and 1913 - - - - - 52,901

1913 - - - - - 52,897

fairly Steady from year to year - - - - - 52,898

Hours - - - - - 53,017-21

Large estates dealt with - - - - - 53,031-3

Number, increase might be advantageous 52,910

Readjustment of places, question of, and possible advantage - - - - - 52,908-26

Registrars :

Agency business :

Amount of fees taken for correspondence work
- - - - - 53,046-51

Attitude of legal profession - - - - - 52,948

if not Carried on, work would probably be sent to London - - - - - 52,963-5 not Considered contrary to Rule 5 of Rules and Orders of 1863 - - - - - 52,959-69

Convenience of system to public, and should continue - - - - - 52,945, 52,952 52,970

Justification for charge being made 52,949-51

Practice of receiving applications by post
- - - - - 52,938-42

Practice re charging for letters 52,995-3,000,
53,001-2, 53,003-6, 53,004-8, 53,025-6

Treasury Minute re, March 1861 - 52,955-7

Appointment :

Committee, proposal approved - 52,781-2

Method - - - - - 52,777

Present system considered satisfactory
- - - - - 52,778, 52,780-1

Barristers and solicitors, numbers and places
- - - - - 52,749, 52,762-5

Clerks in Principal Registry as :
should be best Qualified on principle

52,930-1

best Suited - - - - - 52,928

Holding of other official posts by - 52,759-61

Number having served in Principal Registry
- - - - - 52,748

Pensions should be granted as a matter of course after certain service, and suggestion in case of part-time officers - 52,803-6, 52,806-7

Position re - - - - - 52,783, 52,784-96, 52,802

Private practice :
None, a condition of appointment in some cases - - - - - 52,751-3, 52,753

Prohibition of, only in own registry in some cases 52,736-7, 52,754, 53,053-6, 53,065-74

Private practice and other occupations, position re - - - - - 52,767-9, 52,769-70

ALMS, EDWARD; SHADWELL, W. H. L., and
SIMPSON, GORDON—continued.

DISTRICT PROBATE REGISTRIES—continued.

Registrars—continued.

Qualifications, experience as solicitor, question of combining of, with experience as clerk in Principal Registry - - - - - 53,657-64 may be Qualified to become registrars of Principal Registry - - - - - 52,975-7

Receipt of applications by post as part of duties, extra payment would be claimed, and salaries should be reconsidered 52,759-61, 52,991-3

also Registrar of County Court, no case known of - - - - - 52,757-8

also Registrar of High Court, in three cases
- - - - - 52,755-6

Responsibility of - - - - - 52,851

Whole time not taken up by work in some cases
- - - - - 52,771-6

Sending of papers through Inland Revenue officers,
system - - - - - 52,920-2

Statistical returns for year ended 31st Dec. 1914, summary - - - - - App. C.

Substitution by Inland Revenue officers, not considered possible - - - - - 52,912-9

System advantageous - - - - - 52,908

Territorial jurisdiction, abolition would be approved
- - - - - 52,933-7

old Wills :

Local preservation of, desirable - 52,974

Steps taken re preservation, protection from fire, indexing, etc. - - 52,971-3, 52,982-5, 53,022-4

District Probate Registrars Association, membership - - - - - 52,766

Incorporated Law Society of London, attitude re agency business by district probate registrars 52,946-8

Independent tribunal, to determine questions of pensions, &c., need for - - - 52,825-40

Solicitors' clerks, pensioning of, in some cases
- - - - - 52,875-81

ANDERSON, WILLIAM BOYD, President of the

Incorporated Society of Law Agents in Scotland

59,915-60,062

APPOINTMENT :

by Lord Advocate, extent of canvassing 59,025

by Lord President, question of representation in Parliament - - - - - 60,027-9

Political considerations, abolition desired as far as possible - - - - - 60,024

PROCURATORS FISCAL :

Appointment :

Committee not advocated, but if created must appoint not only advise - - - 59,941-8 not Ideal system, but results satisfactory

- - - - - 59,935-6

by Lord Advocate, continuance advocated, and question as to eliminating political considerations, but possibility doubted - 59,949-54

by Lord President, question of - - 59,955-9

a Political system, and majority of Council of Society of Law Agents object to - 59,937-40

Clerks :

Appointments, political considerations not involved - - - - - 59,960-1

no Security of tenure, and dismissal should not be possible without consent of Sheriff or Lord
Advocate - - - - - 59,962-70

Combination of districts advocated so that whole time should be taken up by official work, with system of ad hoc deputed when necessary

59,995-60,003

Deputes :

Pensions advocated - - - - - 60,012-5

Private practice, question of - - 60,019

Promotion by transfer advocated - 59,971-3

Qualifications, law agent advocated
- - - - - 59,927, 59,932-4

Holding of public appointments, approval of
- - - - - 59,992-3, 60,030-3

not a Law agent in one case, but no objection
- - - - - 59,930

ANDERSON, WILLIAM BOYD—*continued.*PROCURATORS FISCAL—continued.

- Pensions desirable for, but less important than for deputes - - - - 60,012-5
- Private practice, prohibition advocated, but holding of public appointments might be allowed, but difficulty in case of part-time officers
59,991-4, 60,009
- Promotion by transfer advocated - - 59,974-5
- Qualifications, advocate or law agent advocated 59,927-31

SHERIFF CLERKS :

Appointment :

- Committee not advocated, but if created must appoint, not only advise - - 59,941-8
- not an Ideal system, but results satisfactory 59,935-6
- by Lord Advocate, continuance advocated, and question as to eliminating political considerations, but doubt as to possibility - 59,949-54
- by Lord President, question of - - 59,955-9
- a Political system and majority of Council of Law Agents object to - - - 59,937-40

Clerks :

- Appointments, political considerations not involved - - - - 59,960-1
- Difficulty of keeping - - - 60,016-7, 60,036
- Pensions desirable - - - - 60,016-8

Promotion :

- Prospects of, would improve service, and question as to possibility - - - 60,038-43
- by Transfer, Committee of Sheriff Clerks would be approved - - - 59,977-85
- Salaries, comparison with law agents' offices 60,044-5
- no Security of tenure, and dismissal should not be possible without consent of Sheriff or Lord Advocate - - - - 59,962-70

Deputes :

- Appointment by Sheriff after consultation with Sheriff Clerk, no objection seen, and possible advantage - - - - 60,056-8
- Pensions advocated - - - - 60,012-5
- Private practice should not be allowed where whole time taken up by official work, but difficulty in case of part-timers, and suggestion
60,019-21

Promotion by transfer :

- Advocated - - - - 59,974-6
- by Committee of Sheriff Clerks would be advantageous - - - - 60,047-8

- Qualifications, qualified law agent not advocated as hard and fast rule - - - 59,924-6
- no Security of tenure, and Sheriff Clerk should not have absolute power of dismissal 60,053-5

Holding of public appointments, approval of 59,992-3, 60,030-3

Number, recommendation re reduction approved

59,986-90

Pensions desirable for, but less important than for deputes - - - - 60,012-5

Private practice, prohibition advocated, but holding of public appointments might be allowed

59,991-4, 60,010-1, 60,059-62

Promotion by transfer, advocated - - 59,974-6

Qualifications, qualified law agent with considerable experience of Sheriff Court business advocated, with possibility of exceptions

59,919-23, 60,049-52

Sheriff Courts, work well done - - - 60,022-3

ANDREW, JAMES—*continued.*SHERIFF CLERKS—continued.

Clerks :

- Appointment by open competition, objections to 58,110-4

- Pension system not advocated
58,065-9, 58,094-7

- Promotion from, upward, system suggested 58,054-60

- Promotion and transfer, proposed control by Committee of Sheriff Clerks, no difficulty seen, and approval of - - 58,061-4, 58,121
- Training, comparison with training in outside offices - - - - 58,112

Deputes :

Appointment :

- by Consultation with Sheriff after consultation with Sheriff Clerk would be approved, and preferred to Committee of Sheriff Clerks - - - 58,088-90, 58,106-9

- from Staff, and approval of 58,039-40, 58,054-6

- Appointment as auditors approved, and should continue - - - - 58,051

- Dismissal not advocated without right to appeal to Secretary for Scotland - - 58,087

- Fixity of tenure desired - - - 58,086-7
- previous Legal experience, importance of 58,016-8

- Position of - - - - 58,091-3

- Restriction of private practice, desirable and practicable - - - - 58,052-3

- Duties of, and deputes, re registration of voters and elections - - - - 58,083-5

- previous Legal experience, importance of, and should be qualified law agent 58,016-7, 58,100-2

- One head of service, objections to proposal
58,118-20

- Organisation of offices satisfactory - 58,076

- Pension system for deputes and, advocated, and suggestion re 58,065-75, 58,095-7, 58,103-5, 58,115-6

- Promotion system among, and among deputes, desirable and would work satisfactorily 58,045-6, 58,054

- special Qualifications required - - 58,015

- Reduction of number, and whole-time appointments only, desirable - - - - 58,047-50

Staff under :

- Debarred from qualifying as law agents by Law Agents Act, 1873, and change advocated 58,077-9

- no Difficulty in obtaining satisfactory recruits
58,041

- Promotion, regular system of, question of advantage or not - - - - 58,042-4

- Promotions and transfer, extent of - 58,034-40

- different Treatment from ordinary law clerks, with right of competition in profession not necessary - - - 58,111-4, 58,124-5

- Sheriffs and Sheriffs Substitute, pension system 58,069-72, 58,098

- Appointment to Civil Service generally by open competition, more influence should be given to recommendations of masters and tutors in schools and universities as regards appointments not requiring technical training or experience, Birkdale 51,294, 51,318-20, 51,342

Appointment, England :

AGE :

- Present limits and suggestions re, Muir Mackenzie, 44,004-6 ; Stringer, 49,642-4 ; Macdonell, 45,442, 45,451-2 ; Fox, 47,779-80 ; Townesend, 52,332, 52,367, 52,374, 52,380-1 ; Kentish
54,464-5

- Question whether 30 too high, Loreburn 50,681-3

APPLICATIONS :

- Method of dealing with, in Lord Chancellor's office, Muir Mackenzie - - 44,033-41, 44,048

- Possibility of making, apparently well known, Muir Mackenzie - - - - 44,036-9

- Candidates, comparison with candidates for second division and assistant clerkships, Leathes 48,860-1

CIVIL SERVICE QUALIFYING EXAMINATION :

- Age limits, 18 to 25 suggested, Leathes 48,873-7

- Alteration advocated, Muir Mackenzie, 44,091-5 ;
Townesend, 52,346-9

ANDREW, JAMES, law agent, Glasgow, and representative of the Faculty - - 58,010-125

Appointment, Committee to advise on, no purpose would be served by, in Scotland, and political influences would not necessarily be avoided 58,031-3

SHERIFF CLERKS :

Appointment :

- Method and retention advocated
58,019-30, 58,099

- Political considerations, but appointments good, and difficulty of change of system 58,022-30, 58,080-2

- as Auditors, not advocated - - - 58,051

Appointment, England—continued.CIVIL SERVICE QUALIFYING EXAMINATION—cont.

Educational standard of, considered sufficient, Stringer - - - -	49,670-4, 49,771-5
Exemption from : "Bona-fide clerk to solicitor," interpretation difficulty, Leathes - - - -	48,865-7 in Certain cases and admission under Clause 7, Muir Mackenzie , 44,022-4; Heath , 60,507-10
Conditions, &c., Leathes - - - -	48,840-50, 48,919-21
Failures in, men allowed to sit again and paid as temporary clerk in meanwhile, Stringer	49,802-12
Inadequacy of, as test of good education, Macdonell	45,590
Legal procedure instead of digesting of returns, suggestion, Stringer - - - -	49,665-71
Legal procedure, question of inclusion, Leathes	48,887-9
Particulars re , and nature of, Muir Mackenzie , 44,042-4; Leathes , 48,838-40, 48,855-8
System, Muir Mackenzie - - - -	43,959, 44,007-10, 44,017-9
sometimes Taken after appointment, Muir Mackenzie - - - -	44,042
Clerks would probably specify if desiring to go into King's Bench or Chancery Division, Romer	45,111
COMMITTEE :
to Advise and report on qualifications of applicants :
Advantage doubted, Leathes - - - -	48,890-6
Composition suggested, Muir Mackenzie , 44,078, 44,087; Haldane , 60,910 if Created, heads of departments should be represented, Evans - - - -	60,746-8
Desirable, and suggestion, Wrenbury	54,864-5
on Lines of advisory committees for appointment of Justices of the Peace not advocated, Haldane	60,958-61
no Objection seen, Heath - - - -	60,495
Promotions should come under, Haldane	60,927-8
Proposal not agreed with, Musgrave , 44,588-90; Baker , 45,717-8.
Proposal approved, Fox , 47,788-91; Simpson , Alms , 52,781-2; Haldane , 60,904-9.
Question of, as regards Land Registry, Sir P. Gregory - - - -	55,137-8
Recommendations should not be publicly known, Haldane - - - -	60,906
Treasury representation, no advantage seen, Heath - - - -	60,496
not Advocated, Neish - - - -	50,776
Advocated for all appointments of a public character, Loreburn - - - -	50,540-1, 50,545
should Apply to all offices except judges and personal appointments by judges, Loreburn	50,640-50
Appeal to Lord Chancellor suggested, Loreburn , 50,566, 50,576-7
Appointment by one person preferable, Wrenbury	54,864
Appointment of, by Lord Chancellor suggested, Loreburn - - - -	50,620-1
Appointment year by year suggested, Loreburn , 50,568, 50,578
Appointments should be made on own responsibility, and direct responsibility to Parliament not desirable, Loreburn	50,566-70, 50,620-9
Arrangements would be better made by Order in Council, Loreburn - - - -	50,639
proposed Composition, Loreburn - - - -	50,546-56, 50,559-65, 50,573, 50,579
Composition proposed by Lord Loreburn, opinion re , and independent member advocated, Muir Mackenzie - - - -	55,256-60 should be Confined to original appointments, Muir Mackenzie - - - -	55,437
Legislation would be necessary, Loreburn	50,632-8, 50,649-50
Lord Loreburn's suggestion not agreed with, Haldane - - - -	60,904
would Meet very occasionally, Loreburn	50,695
proposed Method of making appointments by, Loreburn - - - -	50,566
More than one would be possible if necessary, Loreburn - - - -	50,579

Appointment, England—continued.COMMITTEE—continued.

no great Objection seen, but no improvement on present results probable, Brickdale - - - -	51,219, 51,303
on which Outsiders represented would be objected to, Disturnal - - - -	47,545
Recommendation of Royal Commission re Treasury Committee not considered as satisfactory, Loreburn - - - -	50,616-9
Scheme would have to be worked out by sub-committee or between Lord Chancellor and Treasury, Muir Mackenzie - - - -	55,261
Suggestion, and question of constitution, Stringer	49,652-61, 49,881-6
COMPETITION :
should be Adopted wherever possible, and legal work could probably be learnt after appointment, Leathes - - - -	48,936-46
Advocated - Mais , 52,480-5, 52,502, 52,592-4, 52,604-5; Macdonell , 45,455-60, 45,592-4 not Advocated, and objections to proposal, Musgrave , 44,576-87, 46,511-8; Farmer , 46,912-3; J. R. B. Gregory , 47,257-64, 47,338-9; Austen-Cartmell , 47,664-6; Fox , 47,784-6; Bayford , 48,119-25, 48,204-6, 48,215-20; Stringer , 49,654-5, 49,882-6; Hansell , 50,940-4; Sartoris	54,571 would be Approved for junior posts, but must be combined with personal interview and inquiry, Wrenbury , 54,871-9, 54,942-6, 54,959-76 as in Civil Service generally, question of, Wrenbury , 54,965-76 not Desirable for higher posts, but might do for third class, Manston - - - -	49,278
Higher class of men would not be obtained, Townesend - - - -	52,365
Limited :
Advantages of, Loreburn - - - -	50,686-91
would be Approved in Lunacy Departments, Theobald - - - -	48,422-4
Difficulty, Leathes - - - -	48,865-7
Suggestion, Haldane - 609,14, 60,916, 60,970-2
Suggestion, and question re inclusion of legal subjects, Leathes - - - -	48,878-86
for Lower grades would be approved and no difficulty seen, Muir Mackenzie - - - -	55,364-9 would not be Objected to, and question of limited or open, but question of personal interview, Muir Mackenzie - 44,050, 44,059-64, 44,346-55 no Objection seen, Leathes , 48,859; Roscoe , 49,459-61; Townesend , 52,350, 52,362-6.
Open, among men with certain legal experience : no Difficulty seen, Muir Mackenzie - 55,305-6
Suggestion, Leathes - - - -	48,868-72
Open for some departments and nomination or limited competition for others, question of possibility, Leathes - - - -	48,868, 48,947-9
of Persons with certain experience in solicitor's office, no objection seen, Austen-Cartmell	47,667-8
not Possible as regards masters, Muir Mackenzie	44,070-1
Question of, and no objection seen provided man has certificate of legal and business capacity as solicitor's clerk, Romer - - - -	44,888-99
for Second or first class, possible difficulty, Barnes	49,366-71
Standard of education and intellectual attainment would probably be raised, Leathes - - - -	48,862
by Competition for general offices and selection for others, but possibility of promotion advocated, Haldane - - - -	60,915-9
DIRECT TO HIGHER CLASSES :
Advocated, and schemes, Fox , 47,754-71, 47,996-8,000, 48,035-43, 48,059-78; Caunt , 50,083-7, 50,099, 50,272; Kentish , 54,401-5.
Advocated as a rule, and promotion in exceptional cases, Goodchild	47,409-13, 47,435-6, 47,493-5
Advocated, solicitors' managing clerks to be specially considered for, Worley - - - -	48,257-302
Age limit, 50 suggested, and question in connection with pension, Worley - - - -	48,283-9 would be Approved in some cases, J. R. B. Gregory	47,276-80, 47,349-53

Appointment, England—continued.DIRECT TO HIGHER CLASSES—continued.

- Chancery judge would be suitable person to make selection, Caunt - - - 50,108-12
- Discretion of, should be left to proposed committee, Loreburn - - - 50,583
- Examination not considered necessary, Caunt 50,110-1, 50,302-3, 50,320-1
- of Managing clerks in solicitors' offices with 15-20 years' experience proposed, Goodchild 47,438-41
- if Opportunity to be given to third class clerks, candidate should satisfy official that he is fully qualified to perform duties, Worley - 48,297
- Question of, Romer - - 44,879-80, 45,015-22
- Question whether present rates of pay would be sufficient attraction, Goodchild - 47,446-9
- Right of, in theory, Muir Mackenzie - 55,262
- to Second class with subsequent promotion to first, advocated, Goodchild - - - 47,437
- Selection should be made by high officials with whom managing clerk comes in contact, Goodchild - - - 47,438, 47,442-5
- Solicitors' managing clerks would be suitable, Caunt - - - 50,100, 50,299-301
- Solicitor's managing clerk should not be compelled to obtain Civil Service certificate, Worley 48,299-300, 48,301
- at 30 suggested, Caunt - - - 50,101-7
- Young admitted solicitors or middle-aged managing clerks would be suitable, J. R. B. Gregory 47,281-6
- in Each division made by President of that division, by Section 84 of Judicature Act, 1873, Muir Mackenzie - - - 43,946, 43,990
- Exemption of certain offices in, from operation of Civil Service clause in Act of 1873, by amending Act of 1879, Leathes - - - 48,922-9
- Head of department should have voice in, Macdonell - - - 45,460-2
- TO HIGHER CLASSES:
- Direct, see Direct to higher classes, above.
- by Promotion or from outside advocated according to where better man obtainable, Wrenbury 54,880-91, 54,929-41, 54,947-51, 54,980
- by Promotion advocated, with discretion to Board to appoint from outside, Loreburn 50,698-9
- BY LORD CHANCELLOR:
- see also under Patronage below.
- no Objection seen to, Wrenbury - - 54,870
- Opinion of profession sufficient safeguard, Manson - - - 49,383-7
- Ultimate authority, Wrenbury - 54,864, 54,869
- Masters and registrars, see that title.
- Medical certificate should be required in all cases, Heath - - - 60,535-8
- Method, petitions by Solicitors' Managing Clerks Association to Lord Chancellor, Worley 48,257
- Nomination of man by each nominator and competition between the three suggested, Townsend 52,377
- Nomination, possible want of uniformity in methods, Leathes - - - 48,957
- No one not responsible to Parliament should have power of appointment, Muir Mackenzie 44,084-6, 55,249, 55,252-5
- Orders in Council instead of statutory regulations, no objection seen, Heath - - - 60,674-6
- Particulars as to candidates nominated since 1899, Leathes, 48,847-52, 48,899-910, Appendix XCVII.
- PATRONAGE:
- Abolition of, question whether head of department should not have voice in appointment, Muir Mackenzie - - - 55,483
- Concentration of, in hands of Lord Chancellor desirable, Heath, 60,491-4; Haldane, 60,901-3, 60,949
- Personal solicitation experienced to slight extent in regard to minor appointments, Loreburn 50,544-5
- Political pressure experienced, for a time with regard to certain posts, but little now, Loreburn 50,542-3, 50,630
- in Practice almost entirely to third class, but not so under regulations, Muir Mackenzie 44,006, 44,011-4
- Principles of report of Royal Commission re patronage should be adopted, Muir Mackenzie 44,080-3, 44,052-8, 44,072-3, 44,079

Appointment, England—continued.

Qualifications, see under particular departments.

SECONDARY SCHOOL LEAVING CERTIFICATE:

- if Adopted would be good test for, and Civil Service examination might perhaps be dispensed with, Stringer - - - 49,874-8
- Suggestion, Haldane 60,912-4, 60,970-2, 61,000
- would be Valuable, Wrenbury - - 54,960

SYSTEM:

- not Approved, Loreburn - - - 50,540
- Particulars re, Muir Mackenzie 43,946, 43,990-8, 44,407-9
- Satisfactory, Austen-Cartmell - 47,662, 47,665
- Satisfactory in results, in way work done, Loreburn 50,540

VACANCIES:

- Intimation of:
- no Advantage seen, Townsend - - 52,370
- no Objection to, Loreburn - - 50,700-1
- Provision to enable consideration as to necessity for post, Muir Mackenzie, 44,484-5; Heath, 60,472

Appointment, Scotland:

see also under Court of Session and other departments.

- no Alternative system can be suggested, R. Munro 60,322-3

COMMITTEE TO ADVISE LORD ADVOCATE:

- Advantage doubted, Mackenzie - - 56,614-5, 56,648-55
- no Advantage seen, Dodds, 55,648; Adam 56,036-8
- not Advocated, Scott-Dickson 60,358, 60,392-4
- Civil Service Commissioner on, question not considered, but would depend on number of appointments, &c., to be dealt with, Kennedy 59,738
- Composition, question of, Haldane - 60,978-94
- Failure of, in case of appointments of Justices of the Peace, Macnochie - - 58,298-302
- would be Improvement for lower posts, Haldane 60,944-6, 60,973-7
- Objections to proposal, Macnochie, 58,298-304; Fleming, 59,395-404; Dunedin, 58,436, 58,510, 58,521; Salvesen, 58,932-3, 58,937, 59,003-5, 59,097-9; R. Munro, 60,160-2.
- Nomination by Lord Advocate preferred, and reasons, Adam - 56,114-22, 56,150-1, 56,162-9
- same Principle might apply as in England, but question on smaller scale than in England, Heath 60,497
- no Purpose would be served by, in Scotland, and political influences would not necessarily be avoided, Andrew - - - 58,031-3
- System would be applicable in Scotland, Bisset 57,139

COMPETITION:

- Extension of, no reason known against, Dodds 55,645-7
- Field, question of, compared with England, Scott-Dickson - - - 60,406
- Objections to, Dunedin, 58,447-51, 58,515-8; Scott-Dickson, 60,398-400, 60,412-4.
- same Type of man would not be obtained and work would not be as well done, Adam 56,124

CROWN:

- Abolition would be advantageous as regards organisation, and questions of transfer and promotion, Adam - - - 56,016-7
- Explanation and effect, Dodds - - 55,609-12
- Limit of 70 years of age fixed in warrants by arrangement with Treasury, but no statutory warrant for, Adam - - - 56,014-5
- Reduction of number:
- Legislation would be necessary, Dodds 55,639-40
- Suggestion, but Lord Advocate should be consulted, Dodds - 55,612, 55,636, 55,641
- Retention, no reason known for, Adam, 56,012-3; Salvesen - - - 58,951-4
- Retention of system for junior appointments not necessary, R. Munro, 60,215-6; Scott-Dickson, 60,386-91; Heath, 60,511.
- System of, and fees payable, Adam - 56,010-1
- Entry age limit, question as to desirability, Salvesen 59,023-6

Appointment, Scotland:—continued.

TO HIGHER POSTS :

from Outside :

an Advantage, Mackenzie - - - 56,705

Certain appointments should always be made from outside, Salvesen - - - 59,060

Detrimental to lower grades of service, Salvesen
58,910-1

Objection to, that inferior may have to teach superior, Salvesen - - - 59,057-9 as a Rule, Dodds - - - 55,642 from Outside or by promotion :

no Hard and fast rule advocated, R. Munro

60,123, 60,134, 60,143-7

must be left to discretion of Lord Advocate,

R. Munro - - - 60,166-9

by Promotion :

Advocated whenever possible, Salvesen, 58,904;

Scott-Dickson, 60,348-50, 60,355, 60,420.

Hard and fast rule not advocated, Scott-Dickson

60,359-60

Practice of, increasing, Scott-Dickson - 60,348,

60,351

System disregarded in some cases, Scott-Dickson

60,359

Legal qualifications considered essential, Salvesen

58,945-6

BY LORD ADVOCATE :

Approval of, and advantages, Adam, 56,020,

56,221-6; Dunedin, 58,436, 58,509-14, 58,520-1

Approval of, and transfer to Secretary for Scotland not advocated, Haldane - - - 60,973-5

Canvassing :

Extent of, and question of preventing, Anderson,

60,025; Scott-Dickson, 60,415-7.

Takes place, and objection to, Salvesen 59,070-1

Change of system, difficulty of, and retention advocated, Scott-Dickson - 60,356-7, 60,461

Question of possibility of improvement, Salvesen

58,928-31

Retention advocated, R. Munro 60,163, 60,256-63

Safeguards, Salvesen, 58,937-43, 59,038-41; R.

Munro, 60,141, 60,163, 60,169; Scott-Dickson

60,357

BY LORD PRESIDENT :

Objection to, R. Munro - - - 60,162 might be Preferable, but question of political bias in case of, Salvesen - - - 58,909, 58,929-31

Question of representation in Parliament, Anderson

60,027-9

Suggestion re, as alternative, Salvesen - 59,048,

59,097-107, 59,115-8

Ordinary method of admission by Civil Service certificate should be followed, Heath - - - 60,498

POLITICAL CONSIDERATIONS :

Abolition :

would be an Advantage if possible, Scott-Dickson

60,457-9

Advocated, although results good, Lewis

59,452-4, 59,533-5, 59,583-6

Desired as far as possible, Adam, 56,019;

Salvesen, 59,053-4; Anderson, 60,024.

not Necessary or desirable, R. Munro 60,123,

60,158-9, 60,273-7

Question of, Haldane - - - 60,944-6

not Applicable as regards clerical appointments,

Salvesen - - - 59,050-2

some Appointments made of men in opposite party, R. Munro - - - 60,245

not Approved, but Committee not necessarily a safeguard against, Adam - - - 56,189-91

Attitude of profession as regards, Scott-Dickson

60,455-6

no Bad appointment known of, R. Munro 60,124

60,262-3

under Coalition Government, question of, R. Munro

60,326-8

not Defensible on principle, but successful in results, Scott-Dickson - 60,344-8, 60,463-4

Difficulty of preventing, Salvesen - - 58,906-9

Effects on politics, question of, Dunedin, 58,527-31;

Salvesen, 59,027-33; Harrison, 59,248-52; R.

Munro, 60,242, 60,304; Scott-Dickson, 60,347,

60,395, 60,411, 60,447-54

Existence of, Dodds - - - 55,643-4, 55,655-6

Appointment, Scotland:—continued.

POLITICAL CONSIDERATIONS—continued.

Extent to which involved, question of, Salvesen,

58,905; R. Munro, 60,239-47; Haldane, 60,944.

General throughout service, and not objected to,

Bisset - - - 57,257-61

Good men appointed, H. H. Brown - - - 57,466 not Ideal, but has worked reasonably well, Salvesen,

58,902-3, 59,030-3, 59,046-7, 59,096

Lord Advocate's hands not considered to be tied by any tradition re, R. Munro - - - 60,149-57

Majority of Council of Society of Law Agents object to, Anderson - - - 59,937-40

Method of preventing, question of, Dunedin 58,522

Question of, Adam - - - 56,186-8, 56,198-203,

56,213-6

Scotch people have no strong feeling against,

Haldane - - - 60,944-6, 61,005-7

Services considered rather than opinions, Dunedin

58,523

the Tradition, Paterson - - - 57,658

Witnesses objecting to, should have given definite examples, R. Munro - - - 60,307

Qualifications, as law agent, opinion re, Dunedin

58,452-8

Results of system as regards keeping appointments

within legal profession, Scott-Dickson 60,401-10

Secretary for Scotland's position re, Dunedin

58,437-46

by Secretary for Scotland, advisory committee would be approved for minor appointments, Haldane

60,995-8

APPS, WESTON, writer in Scrivenery Department,

Royal Courts of Justice (joint evidence), see

STEWART, W., and APPS, WESTON

45,832-46,081

ASPINALL, BUTLER, K.C., Admiralty Division

50,813-80

ADMIRALTY REGISTRY :

Clerks :

Appointment, method - - - 50,842

Retirement, fixed age desirable - - - 50,850

Excellence of registrar and merchants as tribunal

50,858-62

Referring of cases to arbitration instead of to Court, reasons for - - - 50,868-75

Registrar :

Appointment, method, and statutory qualification - - - 50,834-40

Assistance by two merchants - - - 50,818-25

Assistant :

Appointment, method - - - 50,834-5

Barristers most qualified as a whole 50,841,

50,863-7

Barristers most qualified as a whole - 50,841,

50,863-7

Retirement, fixed age desirable - - - 50,850-1

Solicitor as (Mr. Rothery), and ability of 50,837-9

Slave trade bounties, believed not to be settled in 50,876-7

Taxing work, transfer to Central Taxing Office, no advantage seen and present system considered preferable - - - 50,853-7

Vacations, no complaints heard of undue length of 50,844-9

Witnesses often heard - - - 50,828

Work :

Admirably done - - - 50,816, 50,832-3

Nature of - - - 50,817-31

Clerks, prohibition by Rules of Inns of Court from becoming barristers, possible reason - 50,878-80

Assize Clerks :

APPOINTMENT :

by Board, advocated, Loreburn - - - 50,649-50

no Change of method desirable, Disturnal

47,605-10

by Committee, no advantage seen, Denman

51,462-5

Method and qualifications, Muir Mackenzie,

44,249-53, 44,336-8; Disturnal, 47,6004;

Denman, 51,432-7, 51,472.

of Subordinate officers as, cases of, and opinion re, Denman - - - 51,473-7

Assize Clerks—continued.

- all Barristers, as a rule, Disturnal, 47,604; Denman - - - - - 51,452
 ex-Cavalry officer as, case of, Denman - 51,452-3
 Combination of functions with post in Central Office would be impossible, Denman - 51,485-7
 Duties - Disturnal, 47,590-2; Denman, 51,445-7
 Judges' sons as, and opinions re, Disturnal, 47,625-30; Denman, 51,449-61, 51,466-9.
 Number, Denman - - - - - 51,410
 Office held for life, but power of removal by Lord Chancellor, Denman - - - - 51,504-5
 Offices embodied in, Denman - - 51,412, 51,415
 Offices in London, and arrangements re, Denman 51,420-3
 Parentage of present men, Denman - - 51,469-71
 not Pensionable, Denman - - - - 51,478
 Position, Muir Mackenzie - - 44,242, 44,359-62
 Private practice allowed, Denman - - 51,428-9
 Records, arrangements re, Denman - - 51,424-7 no Regular attendance required, and not an officer of the High Court, Denman - - - - 51,418-9
 Retirement, no fixed age, and cases of continuance in office when unfit, Denman - - - 51,480-4
 Salaries, Muir Mackenzie, 44,415; Disturnal, 47,608-9; Denman, 51,411.
SUBORDINATE OFFICERS:
see also Assize officers.
 Appointment:
 by Clerk of Assize, desirable, Denman 51,440-4, 51,517-21
 Method, and objection to, Denman 51,438-44, 51,517-21
 Clerk of Assize has power of removal with sanction of Treasury, Denman - - - - 51,444
 not Pensionable, Denman - - - - 51,478-9
 Private practice allowed but cannot be done, Denman - - - - - 51,430, 51,494
 Retirement, no fixed age, and some inconvenience from, Denman - - - - - 51,481
 Salary, inadequacy of, Denman 51,416-7, 51,484, 51,490-3
 Work outside assizes, Denman - - - 51,431
 Tea-planter as, case of, Denman - - 51,511-2
 Utilisation of local registrars, suggestion not agreed with, Denman - - - - - 51,488-9

Assize Officers:

see also Assize Clerks, and Subordinate officers under Assize Clerks.

ASSOCIATES:

- Duties - Disturnal, 47,593-5; Denman, 51,413-5
 Employment at Royal Courts of Justice might be possible when no circuit work, but no other officer, Denman - - - - - 51,486-8
 Practice at County Courts on circuit, case of, and objection to, Denman - - - - 51,430
 Clerk of Indictments, duties of, Disturnal, 47,591-3; Denman, 51,413-5.
 Interpreters, fees to, Denman - - - 51,515
 Organisation, duties, &c., Disturnal - 47,589-610
 Retirement, no fixed age and procedure in case of failure, Denman - - - - - 51,506-7
 Staff, increase in work, Denman - - 51,491-503
 Travelling allowances, Denman - - - 51,513-4
 Utilisation at Royal Courts of Justice when Assize Courts not sitting, recommended by Committee of 1887, but difficulty now, Muir Mackenzie 44,246-7

Assize Offices:

- Establishment at minimum possible, Muir Mackenzie 44,242
 Organisation, Muir Mackenzie - - - 44,242-6
 Assizes, allocation of time, system, and difficulty of estimating time required, Muir Mackenzie 44,483

Associated Provincial Law Societies:

- Explanation, Morton - - - - - 52,626
 Representative, see Morton, Charles Henry 52,623-731
 Associates Department, see under Central Office.
 Association of County Councils in Scotland, representatives, see Munro, Sir Thomas, and Shaw, James E. 60,063-97

Association of County Court Registrars:

- Membership, Lowe - - - - - 53,325
 Representative, see Lowe, Arthur Labron 53,322-634
 Association of Sheriff Clerks of Scotland, see Sheriff Clerks of Scotland Association.

Attendance Books:

- Actual time of arrival should be signed, Evans 60872-3
 System of, Musgrave, 44,676-8, 46,422-5; Baker, 45,798-9; Collins, Leader, 46,630-45; Farmer, 46,775; Fox, 47,969-74; Brougham, 49,130-2; Stringer, 49,827-33; Paulton, Sellar, 50,528-9; Brickdale, 51,273-5; Carr, 54,263.
 Uniformity of practice re, desirable, Muir Mackenzie 55,427

- AUSTEN-CARTMELL, JAMES - - - 47,631-742
 Chancery Chambers, decrease in work - 47,647
 Chancery Judges, success of linked judge system 47,725-7, 47,732-4

CHANCERY MASTERS:

- Amalgamation with Chancery Registrars, objections to - - - - - 47,705-12
 Appointment:
 by Lord Chancellor, no change advocated 47,640-2 from Subordinate officers, not advocated 47,637-9, 47,669, 47,681-91
 Attendance in court in a few cases, but no alteration in practice to extend necessary - 47,660-1 further Devolution of work, possibility doubted 47,656-9
 Number, decrease might be possible - 47,647
 Organisation of office satisfactory, judging by results - - - - - 47,670
 Solicitor from 35-45 with considerable experience as a principal the most qualified man 47,635-9
 Vacation, arrangements for work believed to be satisfactory - - - - - 47,648
 Work well done and without arrears - 47,643-6
 Chancery orders, drawing of minutes by counsel 47,671-6

CHANCERY REGISTRARS:

- Allocation to particular judges, proposal not agreed with - - - - - 47,706-9
 Appointment:
 Direct from the Bar or solicitors, would be a mistake - - - - - 47,682, 47,693 from Principal clerks, system considered satisfactory - - - - - 47,678-91
 Attendance in court, system - - - 47,729-31
 Clerks:
 Promotion by seniority, preferable - 47,718-9
 Qualification, legal training desirable and solicitor's examination possibly the best 47,693-4, 47,738-41
 Work well done - - - - - 47,677

CLERKS:

- Appointment:
 Competition:
 Open, not advocated - - - - 47,664-6 of Persons with certain experience in solicitor's office, no objection seen - 47,667-8
 System satisfactory - - - - 47,662, 47,665
 Clerks in solicitors' offices the most suitable 47,663
 Legal Departments, no important change suggested in organisation or method of appointment, but certain economies might be effected 47,720-8
 Lunacy Department, work considered to be well and expeditiously done - - - 47,714-7
 Masters, no objection seen to fixed age for retirement if late enough for man to earn sufficient pension, and system of added years would be approved 47,649-55
 Registrars, no objection seen to fixed age for retirement if late enough for man to earn sufficient pension, and system of added years would be approved 47,692-3

TAXING MASTERS:

- Appointment from clerks not advocated 47,699-700
 Barristers appear before, occasionally 47,702-3
 Clerks, appointments practically confined to clerks in solicitors' offices - - - - 47,739-41
 Retirement, no objection seen to fixed age if late enough for man to earn sufficient pension, and system of added years would be approved 47,692-3
 Solicitors as, essential - - - - 47,695-9
 Ayrshire, Procurator Fiscal, see that title.

BAKER, MASTER WILLIAM FREDERICK, Senior Master in the Taxing Office of the Supreme Court
45,675-831

TAXING MASTERS OF THE SUPREME COURT:

Appointments:

Method and approval of - 45,711, 45,715-9
Standing Committee to advise on, suggestion not agreed with - - - 45,717-8

Deputies, system and appointment generally as taxing master or Chancery master on vacancy 45,715-6

all London men - - - 45,807-10, 45,818-20
statutory Qualifications. - - - 45,707

all Recent appointments solicitors - 45,708-10
Retirement, no age limit for, and not advocated 45,781-5

Solicitor's experience most valuable on the whole, but one or two members of the Bar useful 45,712-3

Uniformity of work between different masters, steps taken to secure - - - 45,830-1

Work, method of distributing between masters
45,704-6, 45,720-4

TAXING OFFICE OF THE SUPREME COURT:

Amount of costs taxed, decrease owing to war
45,701-3

Clerks:

Appointment:

average Age - - - - 45,733-4

Method and success of - - - 45,725-32

Attaching of two clerks to each master necessary
45,771-4

Attendance-book - - - - 45,798-9

previous Experience in solicitor's office considered essential, and all men recently appointed have had - - - - 45,735-9

First class, not eligible for appointment as masters, and not advocated 45,776-9, 45,821-8

High standard of ability and capacity 45,732,
45,738

Hours, and work frequently taken home 45,796-7

Junior, work of, and responsibility 45,751-2, 45,815

all London men - - - - 45,808-10

Number - - - - 45,720

Organisation - - - - 45,742-50, 45,811-4

Principal:

having Served 11 years as second class should be entitled to promotion to first class
45,766-70

Work of - - - - 45,753-5

Promotion, method - - - 45,740-2, 45,762-5

Retirement, age limit not advocated - 45,786-8

Salaries, initial, no change considered necessary
45,816-7

Third class, having served 11 years as, should be entitled to promotion to second class 45,770, 45,787-8

no Delay in work - - - - 45,792-4

Formation, 1902, amalgamation of work formerly done in separate departments - - - 45,682-3

Hours - - - - 45,795-7

Staff - - - - 45,687

Taxation under Solicitors Acts, explanation 45,829

Taxing bills, particulars re work involved in, and procedure - - - - 45,751-62

Transfer of Admiralty, Bankruptcy, and Probate taxation work to, not advocated and reasons 45,802-6

Transfer of Lunacy taxation to, advocated by all masters, but difference of opinion as regards other departments - - - - 45,800-6

Total amount of costs taxed, 1902-4, and yearly average and amount taxed off - - - 45,700-1

Vacation work - - - - 45,789-91

Work of - - - - 45,678-99, 45,766

Bancroft, Mr., Clerk of Assize, reference - 51,469

Bankruptcy:

Course of proceeding in, Brougham - - 48,972-91

Decisions in County Court, appeals from, Brougham
49,000

Decisions in High Court, appeals from, Brougham
49,000

Judge in, amount of sittings in court, Brougham
49,004-9

Bankruptcy—continued.

Nature of proceeding before judge in court and in chambers, Brougham - - - - 48,985-91

PETITIONS:

Decrease, Brougham - - - - 48,998

Statistics, Brougham - - - - 48,995-9

Bankruptcy Division:

CLERKS:

Appointment:

previous Experience and age on, Brougham
49,033-4

Method and success, Brougham - 49,028-36

Open competition not advocated, nomination and present qualifying examination preferred,
Hansell - - - - 50,940-4

some Barristers, and have become so since appointed as clerks, Hansell 50,901, 50,904-5, 50,981-3

Commendation of, and up-to-date legal knowledge,
Hansell - - - - 50,894-901

Competency of, and work very well done, Kentish 54,340-2

First class:

Increased number advocated, Brougham, 49,081-95, 49,135-6; Hansell, 50,963-6; Cartwright
54,194-212, 54,211, 54,226

Proportion, and smaller than in other departments, Cartwright - - - - 54,197-203

High educational qualifications desirable, but present system considered satisfactory, Brougham
49,137-45

Holidays, Brougham - - - - 49,114-5 previous Legal experience, advantage of, but not indispensable, Brougham - - - - 49,037-41

Number of different classes, Brougham 49,042-4

Petition from, to Commission, supported, Brougham
49,095-6

Professional qualifications desirable, but need not be barristers, Hansell - 50,933-5, 50,938-9

Promotion:

Discontent in office re, Brougham - 49,155-6

Election according to merit and suitability for post, Hansell - - - - 50,953-60

Service scale, question of, Brougham - 49,157-62

System, Brougham - - - - 49,097-105

to Registrars:

Duties and importance of, Brougham - 49,045-54

Efficiency of, Goodechild - - - - 47,490

Promotion from third class clerks not advocated,
Goodechild - - - - 47,491-2

Senior, should be first class clerk, Cartwright
54,194, 54,211-2

Work more important than that of other second class clerks, Cartwright - - - 54,204-9

Retirement:

no Fixed age and question of, Brougham
49,116-9

Fixed age, no objection to, Hansell - 50,945-7

Second class:

Pay:

500l. should be maximum instead of 400l.,
Cartwright - - - - 54,193-5, 54,225

Inadequacy of, considering nature and responsibility of work, Cartwright - 54,176-92, 54,222-5

Sitting in court, duties and importance of,
Brougham - 49,082-94, 49,141-3, 49,152

Work, nature of, and responsibility, Cartwright
54,181-92 54,204-9, 54,212-21, 54,227-9

Third class:

Attendance-book, Carr - - - - 54,263

Holidays, Carr - - - - 54,264

Hours, Carr - - - - 54,258-63 previous Legal experience one argument for increased maximum, Carr - - - 54,265

Pay, maximum of 250l. instead of 200l. advocated, Carr - - - - 54,238-48

Promotion:

to First and second classes, no reason known against, Hansell - - - - 50,936-7

Small prospects of, in future, Carr - 54,239-45

Work, comparison with that of clerk to official solicitor, Carr - - - - 54,254

Time book, Brougham - - - - 49,130-2

Bankruptcy Division—continued.CLERKS—continued.*Work:

- After hours, question as to amount, Brougham 49,122-3 more Difficult than in other offices, Kentish 54,341-5

Companies (Winding up) Department, see that title.
 Hours, Brougham - - - 49,106-8, 49,133-4 late Hours worked in some cases, Hansell 50,968-73

Official receivers, examiners to, capability of, Goodchild - - - - - 47,490
 Official shorthand writers, Hansell - - 50,926-8

ORDERS:

Drawing of, procedure, Hansell - - 50,919-23
 Minutes not drawn by counsel, Hansell - 50,919-20
 Organisation satisfactory, Brougham 49,080, 49,120-1; Hansell, 50,925.

Records, particulars re, Brougham - - 49,012-23

REGISTRARS:

Appeal from, power of, and numbers, Brougham 48,991-3

Appointment:

Method, Brougham - - - - 49,024
 under Royal Sign Manual up to 1849, now by Lord Chancellor, Brougham - - 48,963-4
 System satisfactory in results and work well done, Hansell 50,883-7, 50,890-1, 50,948-52

Attendance in court, but necessity doubted, Hansell - - - - - 50,909-21

Barristers best qualified to be, Hansell - 50,892-3 Clerks should not be eligible, Hansell - 50,902-4 in Court, often consulted by judges, Hansell 50,914-5 previous Experience, Brougham - - 49,026-7

 Number, Brougham - - - - 49,001

Retirement:

no Fixed age, and question of, Brougham 49,116-9
 no Necessity seen for fixed age, Hansell 50,930-2

Senior:Clerks in department:

Second class, work important, Brougham 49,078-9
 Third class, work of, Brougham - 49,055-60
 Clerks under personal control and supervision of, Brougham - - - - 49,128-9
 Duties, Brougham - - - - 49,010-2
 Number of searches in department of, 1914, and fees taken, Brougham - - - 49,011 no Statutory qualifications, Brougham - 49,025

Work:

Changes in character, Brougham - 48,966
 Comparison with Companies (Winding-up) Department, Hansell - 50,888, 50,964-5
 Importance of, Hansell - - - 50,888-9
 Nature of, Brougham - 48,970-84, 49,002-3

Scrivenery Department, no typewriting, and question of, Brougham - - - 49,064-75, 49,146-52

Shorthand notes, delay experienced in getting transcripts, Hansell - - - - 50,925-9

Shorthand writing, Brougham - - - 49,060-3

System of administration, Brougham - 48,966-9

TAXING OFFICE:Clerks:

First class clerk should be appointed to, Hunt 54,636-40, 54,643-4

Third class:

Eligible for transfer to other taxing offices, but no case known, Hunt - - 54,649-50

Promotion:

to Other branches in department, eligibility for, but case of refusal, Hunt - 54,645-7 to Second class, no opportunities, Hunt 54,644

Work of, Hunt - - - - 54,641-2

Transfer of work to Central Taxing Office not advocated, and reasons, Baker, 45,806; Brougham, 49,126-7; Hansell, 50,991-3.

Work satisfactorily done, Brougham - 49,124-5

Vacation work, Brougham - 49,109-13, 49,163-4

BANNEHR, W. J.; BLAKE, H. F., and PORTER, A. W., Clerks in the Supreme Court Taxing Office 54,983-55,125

TAXING MASTERS:Delegation of work to clerks:

Extent of, at present, and examples 55,104-7, 55,114-6, 55,118-21, 55,121-2
 Suggestion re extension of, clerks to receive higher pay for - - - 55,104-7

TAXING OFFICE CLERKS:

Appointment, age of - - - - 55,001
 Assigning of certain work to each class of, would be possible, but reduction of staff would not result - - - - 55,100-2
 Attachment to particular masters, possible advantage of change of system - - - 55,110-7 more Difficult for clerk to tax bills than for masters - - - - 55,108-9
 Higher classes, proportion lower than in other offices - - - - 55,006-12
 Holidays, and comparison with solicitor's office 55,002-3

Hours, shorter than in solicitor's office - 55,002

Order of Lord Chancellor and Treasury in 1881, and alteration of classification since, without alteration of duties - - - 55,079-94

Pay, comparison with solicitor's office - 55,004-5

Principal, all should be first class clerks 54,998, 55,079-96, 55,101

Second class, length of service of man at top of 55,028

Sitting master's clerk, work now performed by third class clerk, and claim to higher position 55,074-6, 55,087-91, 55,091-2, 55,095

Third class:

Checking of bills, work cannot be done in office hours - - - - 55,063-73
 previous Legal experience - - - 55,001
 Pay, claim to higher scale - - - 55,077
 Promotion, prospects and rate of, and comparison with other offices - 55,006-27, 55,030
 Restoration to position of second class, claim to 54,998, 55,079-99, 55,101
 Work of, nature and importance - 55,030-76

BARNES, THOMAS, chief clerk, Companies (Winding up) Department (in attendance) - 49,168-49,394

Barnes, Mr., temporary second class clerk, Chancery Registrars Office, reference - - - 41,924-5

Barristers, admission of clerks as, see under Clerks.

Barristers' clerks, competency of, and avenues of employment should be opened to, Wrenbury 54,920-8

BAYFORD, ROBERT FREDERIC, barrister

48,099-223

DISTRICT PROBATE REGISTRIES:

Created by Act of 1857 - - - - 48,173
 Work apparently done reasonably well - 48,105
 Divorce, Probate, and Admiralty, barristers pleading before courts specialise - - - 48,174-5

PRINCIPAL PROBATE REGISTRY:Clerks:

Appointment as district registrars, system approved - - - - 48,144-8

First class, appointment by promotion, system and success - - - - 48,185-203

previous Legal experience not necessary, 48,117-8

Number - - - - 48,195

Promotion:

from Second to first class, system 48,131-42, 48,222-3

Slow rate, complaints heard of 48,132, 48,168-9 from Third to second class, system and success - 48,130, 48,188-203, 48,222-3

Salaries, and generally suitable except in case of clerks to registrars 48,180-1, 48,126

Third class:

Appointment, present system satisfactory and open competition not advocated 48,119-25, 48,204-6, 48,215-20

Class of men not considered too good for work - - - - 48,170-2

Work well done - - - - 48,114-6

Clerks to registrars, salaries not considered adequate owing to importance of posts 48,126-9

History of - - - - 48,173

BAYFORD, ROBERT FREDERIC—continued.PRINCIPAL PROBATE REGISTRY—continued.

Orders, drawing up of, method, and system of having minutes drawn by parties might be extended	- - - - -	48,156-66
Organisation satisfactory as a whole, judging by results	- - - - -	48,154-5
Personal Application Department, no difficulty known to be experienced by persons going to Registrars :	- - - - -	48,212-4
Appointment, system good	- - - - -	48,107
Appointment of district registrars as, experience no disqualification but particular value doubted	- - - - -	48,149-50
Retirement, age limit suggested with power to President to extend	- - - - -	48,107-13, 48,182-4
Senior, appointment by selection instead of seniority, no advantage seen	- - - - -	48,207-10
Taxing work, transfer to Central Taxing Office not advocated	- - - - -	48,151-3
Work done satisfactorily on the whole	- - - - -	48,106, 48,221
Biddle, Mr., first class clerk, reference	- - - - -	50,265-8

Bill Chamber :CLERKS :

Appointment, method, Paterson ,	57,555, 57,564-6
Assistant Clerk of the Bills :
Higher, qualifications required than in other offices, and qualified law agent desirable, Salvesen	- - - - - 58,947-8
Law agent's qualification, or equivalent, should be insisted on, in new appointments, Paterson	- - - - - 57,567-8
Previous posts, Paterson	- - - - - 57,558
Salary, Paterson	- - - - - 57,569
Ordinary Clerk of the Bill Chamber :
Law agent's qualification or equivalent should be insisted on, in new appointments, Paterson	- - - - - 57,567-8
Possibility of promotion to Assistant Clerkship of Session, Paterson	- - - - - 57,669-74
Previous posts, &c., Paterson	- - - - - 57,559-63
Salary and work, and comparison with Assistant Clerk of Session, Paterson	57,569, 57,672-6
Particulars, Paterson	- - - - - 57,547
Principal Clerk, see that title below.
Recommendations of Committee of 1911 re salaries of, carried out, Adam	- - - - - 56,197
Satisfactory men obtained, Paterson	- - - - - 57,687
Sufficiency of staff, Paterson	- - - - - 57,660
Disciplinary control, Adam , 55,963, 56,055; Paterson	57,570-82, 57,616-7

HOURS :

Extension to 5 p.m. under consideration, but work all done by 4, Adam	- - - - - 56,097
Recommendation of Lord Salvesen's Committee not carried out, question of reason, &c., but matter believed to be under consideration, Paterson	- - - - - 57,549-52

INCLUSION IN CONSOLIDATED SERVICE WITH COURT OF SESSION :

would be Approved, and extent to which possible, Paterson	- - - - - 57,584-94, 57,626-31
Impossibility of, Dunedin , 55,416-7; Salvesen , 59,087; Scott-Dickson , 60,387-8.
Suggestion, Mackenzie	- - - - - 56,482-4, 56,609-13
Organisation satisfactory, Paterson	- - - - - 57,583
Pensions, officers entitled and not entitled to, Adam , 55,997; Paterson , 57,556-7.
Preparation and issue of extracts by, explanation, &c., Paterson	- - - - - 57,539-44

PRINCIPAL CLERK :

Abolition of post, and carrying out of work by Principal Clerk of Session, proposal not considered feasible, Paterson	- - - - - 57,618-9
Appointment :
Method, Paterson	- - - - - 57,553-4
from Outside :
Advantageous, Jameson	- - - - - 58,182-3
Approved, but definite rule not advocated, Paterson	- - - - - 57,625, 57,661-3
Experience as practising solicitor desirable, Paterson	- - - - - 57,620-4
no Prescribed hours, Paterson	- - - - - 57,664-8
Responsibility of, Paterson	- - - - - 57,677-86

Bill Chamber :—continued.

Removal of registry, &c., work from, not necessary, Paterson	- - - - - 57,643-7
RETIREMENT :
Age for, 70, Paterson	- - - - - 57,607-9
Civil Service rule not advocated, Paterson	- - - - - 57,610-1
Salaries, extent to which recommendations of Lord Salvesen's Committee carried out, Paterson	57,548
Transfer between Extractor's Department and Court of Session should be possible to some extent, Lewis	59,474-6, 59,529
Vacation judge, Adam	- - - - - 56,258-9
WORK :
Continues all the year round, Paterson	- - - - - 57,612-5
Nature of, Adam , 55,959-62; Paterson ,	57,537-8, 57,545-6
Birmingham County Court, see under County Courts.

BISSET, CHRISTOPHER JOHNSTON, Sheriff
Clerk of Forfarshire, and representative of the Association of Sheriff Clerks of Scotland : 56,902-57,320

APPOINTMENT :

Committee to advise on, system would be applicable in Scotland	- - - - - 57,139
Political considerations, general throughout service, and not objected to	- - - - - 57,257-61
Procurators Fiscal, appointment by promotion, in case of recent appointments	- - - - - 57,136

SHERIFF CLERKS :Appointment :

no Alteration suggested unless department put on Civil Service basis	- - - - - 57,095, 57,268
Candidates, no lack of	- - - - - 57,026-7
by Lord Advocate, question of alteration, and Committee to advise would be applicable	- - - - - 57,134-9

Method	- - - - - 57,002, 57,094, 57,253-4
from Outside in almost all cases	- - - - - 57,028

Political influences :

Abolition of, no general desire for, heard of, but would not be resented	- - - - - 57,268-72
Recognised as basis of, and example	57,028-33, 57,255-6, 57,209-11

by Promotion might be possible in future, and probability of	- - - - - 57,127-33, 57,136
from Qualified law agents advocated	- - - - - 57,035

Carrying out of work almost entirely by deputies : Discovery of, by superior authority, question of	- - - - - 57,240-7
---	--------------------

probably Exceptional cases, where office held under old system, and in part-time appointments	- - - - - 57,081, 57,240
in Some cases	- - - - - 56,582

Custody of fees and consignations	- - - - - 56,981-6
Deputies, number holding other appointments and carrying on separate business	- - - - - 57,152-6

Dundee, staff	- - - - - 57,060-4
Duties	- - - - - 56,928-35, 56,943-6
Number	- - - - - 56,926

Number, reduction :

must be Gradual, and men having office at present should have first claim to any vacancies	- - - - - 57,092-3
--	--------------------

Whole-timers only, and would be approved	- - - - - 57,082-91
--	---------------------

Offices :

doing of Private business in, would be matter for arrangement with Court-house Commissioners	- - - - - 57,315-6
Provided by Government	- - - - - 57,310-4
not Pensionable and no fixed age for retirement	- - - - - 57,065-7

Personal attendance during office hours in larger counties	- - - - - 57,077-81
--	---------------------

Private practice and holding of other appointments : Permitted in some cases	- - - - - 57,069-76
--	---------------------

Prohibition of, would be approved if salary made sufficient	- - - - - 57,082, 57,248-52
Right to, of present men, should not be interfered with	- - - - - 57,179

Promotion between clerkships :

System of, desirable, but some present men would not care to move	- - - - - 57,022-5
no System of, and cases rare	- - - - - 57,020-1

BISSET, CHRISTOPHER JOHNSTON—*continued.*SHERIFF CLERKS—continued.

Qualifications in practice, and solicitors considered more suitable than clerk in office - 57,006-16
 no statutory Qualifications - - - 57,005
 Recommendations in report and evidence of Lord Salvesen's Committee, non-carrying out of - 57,262-5

Responsibility for acts of staff:
 should not Continue if method of appointment, &c., changed - - - 57,161, 57,169-70
 Extent of, and cases - - - 57,162-8
 Fidelity guarantee or insurance, not common - 57,170

Retirement:

at Fixed age, should not be compulsory on present men, and suggestion re - 57,179-84
 at 70, paragraph in commissions re, and condition not known of, when appointment accepted - 57,067-8

Size of districts of, and salaries, great variations in, - 57,018-9

Staff:

Appointment:

of Junior clerks direct from school with no definite prospect of promotion - 57,051-4
 by Sheriff Clerk - - - 56,954, 57,002
 Apprenticeship with Sheriff Clerk, should be equivalent to apprenticeship with law agent, for enabling apprentice to go up for Law Agents examination - - - 57,157-60
 Civil Service basis advocated - 57,185, 57,202-5 good Class obtained, but proposed scheme might improve - - - 57,288-90 Discipline and control should be dealt with by Sheriff Clerk, with appeal to Committee and Lord Advocate or Secretary for Scotland - 57,161, 57,171-3

Dismissal:

Case of - - - - 57,039-41
 Power of, possessed by Sheriff Clerk - 56,955
 Distribution of work between, and example of in Forfarshire - - 56,957-80, 56,987-57,001 generally Familiar with all branches of work in office - - - - 57,300-3

Juniors:

Difficulty of obtaining, owing to uncertainty of prospects - - - - 57,058-9
 Leaving for other employment - 57,055-7
 Legal knowledge desirable - - - 57,304
 Lump sum for, system - 56,949-53, 56,956, 57,216-23

not Pensionable, and no fixed age for retirement - 57,065-7

Reappointment by incoming Sheriff Clerk invariably - - - - 57,038-9

Salaries:

Comparison with lawyers' offices - 57,317-20
 Fixing of, question as to method - 57,291-6
 Lowness of, and reasons - 57,212-5, 57,286-7 proposed Scheme will result in increased cost - 57,297-9

Single service:

Appointment:

Entrance examination under Regulations for admission of Law Agents, or leaving certificates suggested as qualification - 57,117-22, 57,130, 57,186-91 from Existing staff at first and then from non-established staff advocated - 57,107-27
 to Higher posts:
 from Outside, should be possible if no member of staff eligible and with approval of Secretary of State or Lord Advocate - - - - 57,125-6
 by Promotion, would probably be tendency - 57,127-33, 57,136 Selection should be in hands of Sheriff Clerk - - - - 57,123-4 would be Approved, and no real difficulty seen - - - - 57,096-8
 Control and promotion by Committee of Sheriff Clerks under presidency of King's Remembrancer, scheme - 57,099-106, 57,192-201

BISSET, CHRISTOPHER JOHNSTON—*continued.*SHERIFF CLERKS—*continued.*Staff—*continued.*Single Service—continued.

Established staff should be pensionable - 57,140
 Retirement, fixed age would be necessary, and question of age - - - 57,141-3 would be Whole-time employees only, but certain official appointments might also be held - - - - 57,144-51

Suggestions re, summary - - - 57,157-61

Tenure of office - - - - 57,036-7

Transfer between offices, extent - 57,046-50

Vacancies in higher posts, filling of, by promotion or rearrangement of places generally, seldom from outside - - - 57,042-5

Suggestions re, summary - - - 57,157

Whole-time:

Difficulty in smaller counties, and reduction in number of Sheriff Clerks would be approved - 57,083-91

Required in recent appointments and important counties - - - - 57,069

Sheriff Clerks of Scotland, Association of, membership, &c. - - - - 56,906-8

SHERIFF COURTS:

Applications for confirmation of appointment of executors, court for, determined by domicile of testator - - - - 56,919-20

Auditor:

Holding of post by Sheriff Clerk Depute, and approval of - - - - 57,144-5

Private work, practice of, and approval, and same accounts would not afterwards be audited in official capacity - - - 57,224-39

Remuneration by fees, work might be included in that for which salary paid, if salary increased - - - - 57,146-51

Consignations, explanation - - - 56,942-8

Forfarshire system - - - - 56,958-80

Jurisdiction - - - - 56,910-5

Recommendations in report and evidence of Lord Salvesen's Committee, non-carrying out of - 57,262-5

Records:

Custody of, &c. - - - - 56,915-8, 57,273-80
 no General Index, but deeds relating to particular county registered in that county - 57,281-5

Register of deeds - - - - 56,936-41

Sheriffs, non-resident except in Edinburgh and Glasgow - - - - 56,922

SHERIFFS SUBSTITUTE:

not Appointed by Sheriff, and work could not be covered by - - - - 57,266-7

Lanarkshire, attachment of clerk to each, and duties of - - - - 56,991-57,001

Number - - - - 56,924-7

Small Debt Courts, jurisdiction - - - 56,914-5

BLAKE, H. F., second class clerk in Taxing Office, see BANNER, W. J., &c. - 54,983-55,125

Blaker, Mr., clerk in Chancery Registrars Office, reference - - - - 46,926-9

BORTHWICK, ANDREW L., see TOLMIE, JOHN, and BORTHWICK, ANDREW L. - 58,845-96

BOURDELOT, H. E., writer, Scrivenery Department Principal Probate Registry (joint evidence), see McMULLEN, L., and BOURDELOT, H. E. - 46,082-46,197

Bovill, Mr., reference to appointment as Clerk of Assize, Denman - - - - 51,452-3

BRADFORD, J. W., first class clerk, Bankruptcy Department (in attendance) - 48,959, 49,167

BRICKDALE, SIR CHARLES FORTESCUE, Registrar of the Land Registry - 50,994-51,406

Appointment to the Civil Service by open competition, more influence should be given to recommendations of masters and tutors in schools and universities as regards appointments not requiring technical training or experience - 51,294, 51,318-20, 51,342-7

Cadastral survey, explanation - - - 51,348-9

Clerks, admission to the Bar after appointment as clerks, difficulty not heard of - 51,302, 51,370

BRICKDALE, SIR CHARLES FORTESCUE—cont.

LAND REGISTRY :

Appointments :

All, made by Lord Chancellor - - - 51,186
by Committee, no great objection seen, but no improvement on present results probable

51,219, 51,303

Consultation of registrar re - - - 51,197-9

Direct, to third and second class, a certain number of - - - - - 51,189-91

Attendance-books, system and punctuality of staff,
51,273-5

Attendants, chief, pensions advocated - 51,179

Boys :

Appointment, method - - - 51,312

Appointment as assistant clerks in some cases,
51,201

Decrease since 1913-14, and substitution by assistant clerks - - - 51,324

Boys and younger members of staff, evening classes, 51,399-401

Card indexes :

Particulars re, and advantages of system,
51,135-53

Public not allowed access to 51,137, 51,146-8

Central Office, work and staff - - 51,074-5

Clerks :

Assistant :

Appointment, method - 51,200-1, 51,313

Number - - - - 51,025

Distribution of work among different classes and
nature of - - - - 51,165-75

Direct appointment to higher classes, of barristers and admitted solicitors desirable
51,224-7

First class :

Appointment as assistant registrar, possibility of - - - - 51,363-81

all Barristers with exception of Land Charges clerk - - - - 51,192-6

Number and scales of salary - - 51,019-22

Pay probably lower than in other departments for same character of work - 51,743-8

Promotion :

Few prospects of - - - 51,249

Prospects less favourable than expected on entering office - - - 51,250-7

First and second class :

Better work done by, than could be expected having regard to salaries - - 51,240-1

Titles, proposed change - - - 51,238

proposed Lower grade :

Appointment partly by open competition and partly by limited competition among law clerks proposed - - - 51,234-7

Clerks in solicitors' offices most suitable 51,228-31

Work that would be done by - - 51,232-3

Second class :

Barristers and solicitors :

Desirable in most cases - - - 51,360

Numbers - - - - 51,193-6, 51,359-60 some Called to Bar after appointment as

clerks - - - - 51,300-2

Number and scale of salary - - 51,023

Temporary :

Appointment, method - - - 51,202-4

Number and pay - - - 51,026

Reason for employment - - - 51,027

if Work permanent, permanent staff desirable
51,028-9

Third class :

Improvement in position desirable - 51,270

Number and scale of salaries - 51,024

Pay, raising of maximum after 15 years' service proposed as compensation for absence of promotion - - - - 51,267-9

Promotion, expectations - - - 51,361-2

Self-contained body, would be approved and clear division in work possible 51,220-3, 51,337-41

Work well done - - - - 51,176-7

Constitution of office - - - 50,996

Discipline, &c., administration - - 51,159-64

Estimate of cost if whole kingdom under Land

Registry Act - - - - 51,323, 51,327

BRICKDALE, SIR CHARLES FORTESCUE—*cont.*LAND REGISTRY—continued.

History of office - - - - 50,996

Hours - - - - 51,272

Jurisdiction - - - - 51,054-5

Land Charges Registry - 50,996, 51,009-12

Leave, &c., Civil Service rules applicable generally speaking - - - - 51,271

Mapping Department :

Appointments, method - - - 51,205-6

Boys :

Majority leave at 19 - - - 51,096-101

Retired soldiers might be substituted for 51,354-8

Work of - - - - 51,094-5, 51,354

Co-operation with Ordnance Survey, extent of 51,080-4

Development of work, question of, and of finding employment for boys - - - 51,102-3

Mapping formerly done by Land Commission and advantage of present system - - 51,085-6

Pay, determination of rates by those in Ordnance Survey - - - - 51,104-5

Pension scheme advocated for - - 51,179-85

Reproduction, method, &c., and question of improvements - - - - 51,314-7

Staff - - - - 51,087-101

Work of 50,996, 51,006-8, 51,076-84, 51,178

Middlesex Registry :

Indexes - - - - 51,136, 51,140-1, 51,150

Staff - - - - 51,155, 51,008

Work of - - - - 50,096, 51,008

Office in Lincoln's Inn Fields - - 51,352-3

Pensions, position of staff as regards - 51,179

Promotion :

Ability should be first consideration - 51,382-4 by Committee, proposal not approved, and mediocrity might increase as result 51,211-8

Large proportion by selection, not seniority
51,385-90

Method - - - - 51,207-8

Rate believed to be slower than in Supreme Court - - - - 51,265-6

Small prospects of, owing to youth of staff 51,256

Registrars :

Acting assistant, proposed grade of - 51,238-41

Assistant :

Acting, explanation - - - 51,017-8

Salary - - - - 51,016

Statutory qualifications and retention advocated, but actual qualifications generally higher - - - 50,996, 51,187, 51,366

Salary - - - - 51,015

Statutory qualification - - - 50,996, 51,187

Registration of title :

Absolute title, increase in proportion and encouragement of - - - 51,045-8, 51,068-73

Compulsory :

in County of London, and form of obligation
51,049-52

Difference of opinion in legal profession re
51,061-3

Increase, question as to possibility 51,060

Outside London, provision for, but no applications made by county councils 51,056-9 in case of Purchases by county councils under Small Holdings Act - - - 51,053

Recommendation of Royal Commission on Land
Transfer Acts, 1911 - - - 51,064-9

Documents, method of dealing with 51,108-11

Improvements suggested by Royal Commission on Land Transfer Acts, 1911 - - 51,067-9

Registration of possessory title and dealings with land, nature of work - - 51,037-44

Staff - - - - 51,031-6

Work of - - - - 50,996, 51,009

closer official Relationship with Cadastral Survey and Land Valuation Office desirable, and suggestion of Joint Board - 51,295-8, 51,321-2, 51,328-36

Retirement, compulsory, at 64 :

Age considered rather early - - 51,281-93

Liability accepted by all present permanent
staff - - - - 51,278

BRICKDALE, SIR CHARLES FORTESCUE—*cont.*LAND REGISTRY—continued.

Scrivenery and Typing Department :

Typists :

Male, reason for employment - - 51,405-6
Rates of pay - - - 51,119-20

Women :

All women but one - - - 51,118
Work excellently done 51,155, 51,325-6

Writers :

Examination of typing by - - 51,124-6
Hours - - - 51,133-4
Number, and all men - - - 51,121-2
Pay and earnings - - - 51,123-32 on Piecework, men only - - 51,402-4
Regular employment of, and question in case of old age - - - 51,307-11
Work of - - - 51,107-16

Secretary and Accounts Department, work of,
and adoption of system might be advantageous in other departments - 51,157-62, 51,304-6

Staff :

Difficulty of obtaining improvements in position owing to small surplus of receipts over expenditure and objection to system - 51,258-63
Numbers, &c., and distribution 51,013-36,
51,074-5, 51,087-106, 51,155
Satisfactory, and system approved - 51,209-10
Women, question as to possibility of increased employment - - - 51,391-8

Work of :

Nature of - - - 50,996-1012
Variation in amount and adjustment of leave with regard to - - - 51,276-7

Ordinance Survey, military character - 51,350-1

BRIDGEMAN, BENJAMIN JAMES, Superintendent of the County Court Department of the Treasury : - - - 51,522-907

Circuits, number, and number of courts to 51,562-3

Clarke, F. F., letter re establishment of County Court
clerks - - - 51,773

COUNTY COURTS :

Administration - - - 51,633

Average net cost - - - 51,543

Bailiffs :

Appointment by high bailiffs or registrars
51,594-7

Part-time employees in small courts, and allowances - - - 51,602-3

Business of, decrease - - - 51,720

Clerks :

Allowance for, system and no reduction of pay 51,727-31

alleged Alteration of status, explanation
51,786-7

Appointed by registrars - - - 51,586

Breakdown from ill-health, &c., procedure in case of - - - 51,756-61

never Dismissed except for misconduct 51,823

Employment in some cases partly on County Court business and partly on registrar's private
work - - - 51,598-601

Establishment of, cost of offices would be increased - - - 51,772-4

Information possessed re, extent of - 51,659-62

Pensions :

Contributory scheme, consideration of, formerly and no reason known against 51,762-6

Difficulty of dispensing with services
51,817-24

Inconvenience from absence of - 51,752-5

Salaries :

Examples - - - 51,783-92

not believed to be Inadequate and approximate to those paid to private staff 51,663-5

Tenure practically permanent - 51,767-71

Whole-timers compulsory in courts above
6,000 plaintiffs - - - 51,611-2

Work, nature of, and comparison with that of clerks in solicitor's office - - 51,665-82

Equity and Admiralty jurisdiction, &c., assignment of fees to registrars - - 51,623-6

Finance, arrangements - - - 51,528-61

BRIDGEMAN, BENJAMIN JAMES—*continued.*COUNTY COURTS—continued.

High Bailiffs :

Duties - - - 51,588, 51,593-4

an Expiring office, and duties taken over by
registrars - - - 51,588-92, 51,621-2

Permanent retention, probable number 51,616-21

Remuneration :

Arrangements, and rate - - - 51,613-5

Systems, former and present - - 51,703-6

Judges, number - - - 51,562

Jurisdiction - - - 51,525-7

Rearrangement of, desirable, so that judges could sit oftener in some places - - 51,850-62

Registrars :

Appointment, method and statutory qualifications - - - 51,565-7, 51,585

Audit of accounts of - - - 51,751, 51,891-5

Delegation of work to clerks, question as to extent - - - 51,575-7

also District Registrars :

Arrangement re staff - - - 51,693-702

Remuneration, method - - - 51,698-702

Special remuneration - - - 51,627

Duties - - - 51,569-77

Fixed salary not advocated and reasons
51,720-1, 51,793-805

Payment by results :

Reason for system, and advantages 51,710-35

Statement by clerks re results of, reply
51,806-16

Private practice :

Prohibited in some cases, and officer then pensionable - - - 51,578-82

in Some cases - - - 51,583-4

Remuneration :

Arrangements re, and scale 51,604-9, 51,723-6

Total - - - 51,628

Security given by, and extent of responsibility
51,568, 51,744-9, 51,896-904

Whole-time, on pensionable salaries, list, App.
XCVIII.

Registry of judgments, particulars re, and maintenance desirable - - - 51,655-8

Salaries :

Fees sufficient to pay, with exception of 1915-16
51,542-59

Source of payment - - - 51,538-61 over 6,000 plaintiffs courts, list of, and allowances at, 1915 - - - App. XCIX.

Staff :

Employment by individual registries, reason for, success of system, and alteration not advocated - - - 51,736-51, 51,773-4, 51,886

Establishment :

Difficulties would be less in case of 12 courts where pensionable registrars - 51,883-5

Objection to - - - 51,825-9, 51,888-904

Report of Committee of 1900 re
51,882-3, 51,905-7

Whole and part timers, proportion - 51,865-7

System - - - 51,525

Women, employment at Birmingham - 51,871-3

County Court Clerks and Officers Association, membership - - - 51,863-8

COUNTY COURTS DEPARTMENT OF THE TREASURY :

ordinary Civil Service rules re leave, &c., applicable - - - 51,784

Duties - - - 51,629-58

Examiners :

Appointment, method and success
51,776-82, 51,834-40

Importance of work - - - 51,830-3

Office, organisation satisfactory, but more convenient if all on one floor - - 51,783, 51,881

Staff - - - 51,775

Women, employment not considered, and doubt as to possibility - - - 51,874-80

County Courts Fund, system - - - 51,534

District probate registries, fusion of small with High Court and County Court registries desirable, but difficulty of patronage - - 51,841-9

District registries, system - - - 51,525

Brighton County Court, staff, Jennings - 54,009-12

Bristol County Court Clerks, see under Clerks under County Courts.

BROCKLESBY, A., second-class clerk in Central Office, see TOWNSEND, J. F., &c. 52,199-459

BROUGHAM, JAMES RIGG, Senior Registrar in Bankruptcy - - - - 48,959-49,167

BANKRUPTCY :

Course of proceeding in - - - - 48,972-91
Decisions in County Court, appeals from 49,000
Decisions in High Court, appeals from - 49,000
Judge in, amount of sittings in court - 49,004-9
Nature of proceedings before judge in court and in chambers - - - - 48,985-91

Petitions :

Decrease - - - - - 48,998
Statistics - - - - - 48,995-9

BANKRUPTCY DEPARTMENT :

Clerks :

Appointment :

previous Experience and age on - 49,033-4
Method and success - - - - 49,028-36

First class, two more desired

49,081-95, 49,135-6

High educational qualifications desirable, but present system considered satisfactory

49,137-45

Holidays - - - - - 49,114-5

previous Legal experience, advantage of, but not indispensable - - - - 49,037-41

Number of different classes - - - - 49,042-4

Petition from, to Commission, supported 42,095-6

Promotion :

Discontent in office re - - - - 49,155-6

Service scale, question of - - - - 49,157-62

System - - - - - 49,097-105

Retirement, no fixed age and question of 49,116-9

Second class, sitting in court, duties and importance of - 49,082-94, 49,141-3, 49,152

Time-book - - - - - 49,130-2

Work done after hours, question as to amount 49,122-3

Hours - - - - - 49,106-8, 49,133-4

Organisation satisfactory - - - - 49,080, 49,120-1

Records, particulars re - - - - 49,012-23

Registrars :

Appeal from, power of, and numbers 48,991-3

Appointment :

Method - - - - - 49,024

under Royal Sign Manual up to 1849, since by Lord Chancellor - - - - 48,963-4

Clerks attached to, duties and importance of 49,045-54

previous Experience - - - - - 49,026-7

Number - - - - - 49,001

Retirement, no fixed age, and question of 49,116-9

Senior :

Clerks in department :

Second class, work important - 49,078-9

Third class, work of - - - - 49,055-60

Clerks under personal control and supervision of - - - - 49,128-9

Duties - - - - - 49,010-2

Number of searches in department of, 1914, and fees taken - - - - 49,011

no Statutory qualifications - - - - 49,025

Work :

Changes in character - - - - 48,966

Nature of - - - - 48,970-84, 49,002-3

Scrivenery Department, no typewriting, and question of - - - - 49,064-75, 49,146-52

Shorthand writing - - - - - 49,060-3

System of administration - - - - 48,966-9

Taxing work :

Transfer to Central Taxing Office, would be very inconvenient - - - - 49,126-7

Work done satisfactorily - - - - 49,124-5

Vacation work - - - - 49,109-13, 49,163-4

References to - - - - 44,486, 50,930-1

BROWN, HENRY HILTON, Procurator Fiscal of Midlothian and Secretary of the Association of Procurators Fiscal in Scotland - 57,321-57,484
Appointment, political considerations, good men appointed - - - - - 57,466

BROWN, HENRY HILTON—continued.

PROCURATORS FISCAL :

Appointment :

to Better-paid posts, by promotion, if suitable, system would be approved - - - 57,387-9 from Deputes and Clerks would be approved if with required qualifications, but clerks not likely to have - - - - 57,390-5 of Deputes and Sheriff Clerks Depute in a few cases - - - - 57,366, 57,370 of Fully qualified law agents generally 57,366

by Lord Advocate :

Breadth of appointment since - - - 57,467

Preferred - - - - 57,421, 57,433-40, 57,475-84

Method - - - - - 57,363

Political considerations may have entered into, in some cases - - - - 57,371-3

by Promotion from smaller district in some cases 57,370

by Promotion, possible without alteration of the law - - - - - 57,430-2

Clerks, acquisition of qualifications as a law agent while in office, question as to possibility 57,452-3

Combination with office of Sheriff Clerk in small places, possibility doubted - - - 57,457-61

Contact with Crown Office and Advocates Depute 57,475-82

Deputes :

Acquisition of qualifications as a law agent while in office, question as to possibility 57,451-3

Established service, appointment :

by Committee, proposal not approved 57,421

by Lord Advocate with concurrence of Procurator Fiscal advocated - - - 57,417-21

Honorary - - - - - 57,454-6

not Pensionable - - - - - 57,397

Qualifications, raising of, suggested - 57,379, 57,394-5

Tenure of office - - - - - 57,357

Transfer between places, no difficulty in way of 57,474

Whole-time, in small number of cases only 57,358-9 salaries Deputes and Clerks, promotion between districts possible, but rests with Procurators Fiscal - - - - - 57,416

Duties - - - - - 57,328-35

few Duties of, statutory, but alteration not advocated - - - - - 57,428-9

Efficiency of - - - - - 57,449-50

Established service and appointment by promotion, younger men would be appointed - 57,414-15

Establishment, possibility of, without extra charge on Exchequer - - - - - 57,422-7

History of office - - - - - 57,363

Midlothian, staff and work of, and salaries 57,350-4

Number - - - - - 57,336-7

Offices included in that of - - - - 57,328

Offices, part of county buildings - - - 57,347-8 not Pensionable and reasons, and need for 57,396-9

Pensions :

Advocated for, and whole staff - - - 57,396

Difficulty owing to cases in which work done for, and paid for by, local authorities, and taking over of by Exchequer desirable, but difficulty of vested interests of Justices of the Peace Court - - - - - 57,400-11

Fixed age for retirement would be necessary, and 70 suggested with option of retiring earlier - - - - - 57,413-6

Private practice :

Allowed in a few cases 57,360, 57,362, 57,363

Restriction :

Desirable in larger districts - - - 57,376

in Small districts, question of, and possibility of amalgamation - - - - 57,376-8

Qualifications, fully qualified law agent with certain number of years' practice advocated 57,365-9, 57,473

no statutory Qualifications - - - - 57,364

Qualities and qualifications required - 57,441-6

Reduction in number and assistance by highly qualified full-time deputes, scheme 57,379-86

Remuneration :

Elements of - - - - - 57,340-4

BROWN, HENRY HILTON—*continued.*PROCURATORS FISCAL—*continued.*Remuneration—continued.

Salary:

Allowance for provision of clerk to write precognitions included in, in some counties not in others - - - 57,349
 Fixed on each appointment - - - 57,338-9
 Inclusion of salaries of clerks and office expenses in, and system 57,345-6, 57,353-4
 Stationary allowance included in, in some counties, not in others - - - 57,349 very Small in some of smaller districts 57,361-2

Retirement at 70, clause:

was Illegal and unfair - - - 57,412 not in Recent commissions - - - 57,412
 Staff, appointment, method - - - 57,374
 Tenure of office - - - 57,355-6
 Whole time, a condition in modern commissions 57,360, 57,363

BROWN, WILLIAM, Sheriff Clerk Depute, Paisley, and representative of Sheriff Clerks Depute Association - - - - - 58,704-45

Salary, position, &c. - - - - 58,734-45

SHERIFF CLERKS:

Allowance to, extent of Treasury control re expenditure - - - - 58,728-9

Deputes:

Appointment from outside, cases of 58,709-10, 58,726
 Insurance of - - - - 58,715-8
 Promotion by transfer between offices, possibility of - - - - 58,714-5
 Recommendations of Committee on Minor Legal Appointments re, non-carrying out of 58,724-5, 58,730-3
 Salaries, memorial re fixing of, and increase in Commissary fees handed in - - - 58,719-23
 Special class, recommendation of Committee on Minor Legal Appointments agreed with 58,711-3

Sheriff Clerks Depute Association, membership 58,708

BURGESS, W., see HEMMONS, A.; CROSS, F. W., &c. 51,908-52,198

BYERS, E. OWEN, third class clerk, Land Registry - - - - 54,837-60

LAND REGISTRY CLERKS:

Assistant, nature of work - - - 54,853-4

Third class:

Abolition and substitution of second division clerks, no objection to proposal, and possibility of dividing mechanical from other work 54,847-8

Average age and length of service - - - 54,838

Promotion:

Block, causes - - - - 54,842-6 to First class, professional bar which would prevent, should not be introduced 54,856 Small prospects of - - - 54,838-9, 54,857-60 within 10 years' service expected on appointment - - - - 54,840-1

Salaries, proposed increase after 15 years' service, comment on - - - - 54,839-40

Work, nature of - - - - 54,848-53

Work of second class clerks being done by 54,839

Cadastral Survey:

Explanation, Brickdale - - - - 51,348-9 closer Official relationship with Land Registry and Land Valuation Office desirable, and suggestion of joint Board, Brickdale - - - 51,295-8, 51,321-2

CARR, H. J., third class clerk, Bankruptcy Department - - - - 54,233-265

BANKRUPTCY DEPARTMENT, THIRD CLASS CLERKS:

Attendance-book - - - - 54,263

Holidays - - - - 54,264

Hours - - - - 54,258-63

previous Legal experience one argument for increased maximum - - - - 54,265

Pay, maximum of 250*l.* instead of 200*l.* advocated 54,238-46

CARR, H. J.—*continued.*BANKRUPTCY DEPARTMENT, THIRD CLASS CLERKS—continued.

Promotion, small prospects of, in future 54,239-45

Work, comparison with that of clerk to official solicitor - - - - 54,254

CARTWRIGHT, C. C., second class clerk, Bankruptcy Department - - - - 54,170-232

BANKRUPTCY DEPARTMENT, CLERKS:

First Class:

Increased numbers advocated - - - 54,194-212, 54,211, 54,226

Proportion, and smaller than in other departments - - - - 54,197-203

to Registrars:

Senior, should be first class clerk - - - 54,194, 54,211-2

Work more important than that of other second class clerks - - - - 54,204-9

Second Class:

Pay:

500*l.* should be maximum instead of 400*l.* 54,193-5, 54,225

Inadequacy of, considering nature and responsibility of work - - - 54,176-92, 54,222-5

Work, nature of, and responsibility 54,181-92, 54,204-9, 54,212-21, 54,227-9

Cases for Trial, work done by barristers and solicitors respectively in preparation of, Disturnal 47,547-50, 47,611-3

CAUNT, FREDERICK, managing clerk to Messrs. Chester, Broome, and Griffiths - - - 50,062-321

Chancery Chambers, extension of hours, certain amount of work could be done without presence of solicitors - - - - 50,232-4

Chancery judges, all business under Trading with the Enemy Act conducted before Mr. Justice Warrington - - - - 50,208-13

CHANCERY MASTERS:

Amalgamation with registrars, advocated 50,144-5, 50,184-213

Amalgamation with taxing masters suggested 50,144-83

Vacation:

Two masters desirable instead of one, during 50,250-5

"Vacation business," more liberal interpretation would be an advantage - - - 50,256-7

CHANCERY ORDERS:

Drawing of, inconvenience of present system 50,185-9

Drawing of minutes by counsel - - - 50,192

Masters would be able to deal with, as well as with other work - - - - 50,190-7

CHANCERY REGISTRARS:

Attendance in court not considered necessary, work could be done by clerk - - - 50,201-8

some Delay experienced and reasons 50,224-6, 50,304-10

Hours in office, extension, certain amount of work could be done without presence of solicitors 50,235-8

Office not overstaffed - - - - 50,227

Vacation, work dependent on work done by vacation judge and vacation master - - - 50,259

CLERKS:

previous Experience in solicitor's office desirable for all classes - - - 50,068-82, 50,269, 50,278-83

Second class:

Direct appointment to:

Advocated - - - 50,083-7, 50,099, 50,272

Chancery judge would be suitable person to make selection - - - - 50,108-12

Examination not considered necessary 50,110-1, 50,302-3, 50,320-1

Solicitors' managing clerks would be suitable 50,100, 50,299-301 at 30 suggested - - - - 50,101-7

Promotion from third class, certain advantages admitted - - - - 50,274-7

Promotion to first class, by seniority advocated, with some regard to ability - - - 50,115-43

CAUNT, FREDERICK—*continued.*CLERKS—continued.

Third class :

- Self-contained body, advocated and question as to class of man that would be obtained
50,083-98, 50,271, 50,294-8
- Work cannot be satisfactorily learnt in office, and man would never be as efficient as with previous legal experience - 50,075-82
- Work well done on the whole - 50,071-3

COMPANIES (WINDING-UP) DEPARTMENT :

- Registrar, no longer attends in court - 50,206-7
- Works very well, and question of reason for greater efficiency than in other departments 50,214-23

Hours, question of extension - 50,229-42

MASTERS' HOURS :

- Opinion re - 50,312-5
- Work frequently taken home - 50,311
- Retirement, fixed age not desirable - 50,261-8

SOLICITORS' OFFICES :

- Hours - 50,241-9
- Important posts believed to be generally filled by seniority - 50,118-23

TAXING MASTERS :

- Amalgamation with Chancery masters advocated, and no inequality in work anticipated 50,144-83

Clerks :

- Skilled work done by both first class and junior 50,285-93
- Third class, selection from solicitor's office, advantage and disadvantage - 50,288-91
- Office hours, question of extension - 50,239-40
- Vacations, work practically stopped 50,258, 50,260

Central Office :

ASSOCIATES' DEPARTMENT :

Associates :

- Explanation, Macdonell - 45,578-9
- Qualities required, Kershaw - 53,262
- Work of, Kershaw, 53,261; Kentish, 54,286.

Clerks :

- Appointment without previous experience in solicitor's office and success of, Kershaw 53,270-3

- Distinction between work of different classes, Kershaw - 53,274

- Number, and number in different classes, Stringer, 49,615-6; Kershaw, 53,268.

- Satisfactory class, Kershaw 53,269, 53,273, 53,303

Third class :

- no previous Legal experience, and question as to method of learning work, Stringer 49,617-20

- Self-contained body, system would not be applicable, Kershaw - 53,275-7

- Vacations and arrangements re work in, Kershaw 53,290-1

- Work of, no difficulty in, Kentish - 54,432-40

Separation from Central Office :

- Advocated, and scheme, Kershaw 53,278-88,
53,303-5

- Proposal not approved, Muir Mackenzie 53,350

- Work of, Stringer - 49,611-4

CLERKS :

Appointment :

Age limits :

- 17 or 18 desirable, Townesend - 52,367

- 17-25 advocated, Townesend 52,332, 52,380-1

- 18-25 suggested, Stringer - 49,644

- 20-30, and defect of, Stringer, 49,642-3;
Townesend, 52,374.

- 20-30, and 20-25 desired, Macdonell 45,442, 45,451-2

Civil Service qualifying examination, see under Appointment.

Competition :

- not Advocated on the whole, Stringer
49,654-5, 49,882-6

- Higher class of man would not be obtained, Townesend - 52,365

- Objection to, J. R. B. Gregory - 47,257-66

- no Objection seen, Townesend 52,350, 52,362-6

- would be Preferred, Macdonell - 45,455-60, 45,592-4

Central Office—*continued.*CLERKS—*continued.*Appointment—continued.

- Head of department should have voice in, Macdonell - 45,460-2

- without previous Legal experience, Leathes
48,853-4

- Method, Macdonell 45,443-9, 45,453-4, 45,585-6;
Townesend, 52,368-71.

- Professional examination not necessary, Townesend - 52,379

- Right class of man obtained, Kentish 54,275

- Selection by Committee, suggestion and question of constitution, Stringer 49,652-61, 49,881-6

- Sons of men already in office, Stringer
49,784-801, 49,836-8

- System not satisfactory, Stringer 49,638-9, 49,662-3

- to Third class only, and approval of system, Macdonell - 45,491-4, 45,588-94

- Vacancies :

- Intimation of, no advantage seen, Townesend
52,370

- not Published, Macdonell - 45,457

- Disciplinary power, question as to extent of, Macdonell - 45,466-73

- Division of work between, question as to extent of, Macdonell - 45,495

- previous Experience in case of recent appointments, Macdonell - 45,450

First class :

Direct appointment :

- Desirable, Kentish - 54,401-5

- Examination would be necessary, Macdonell
45,663

- Some managing clerks in solicitors' offices would be good, but would have discouraging effect on second and third classes, and inferior class would come in, Macdonell
45,659-63

- Proportion lower than in Chancery Division, Brocklesby - 52,273-5, 52,279-80

- Retirement :

- Fixed Age, advantage of, but extension beyond 65 should be possible, Townesend
52,310-20, 52,351-4

- Value of long experience, Townesend 52,315-9

- Salaries, Macdonell - 45,656-8

- Salaries, little comparison possible with clerks in solicitors' offices, Townesend 52,333-7, 52,345

- Work and position, comparison with solicitor's managing clerk, but scales of pay should not be determined by pay of, Stringer 49,693-707

Hours :

- Comparison with solicitor's office, Kentish 54,293-6

- Longer than hours to public, little need for, Stringer - 49,770

- Normally, and during vacations, Macdonell,
45,518-23; Stringer, 49,752-7.

- Work sometimes done after, Stringer 49,758-68

- Ineligible for appointment as masters, and barrier should be maintained, Macdonell - 45,533-6

- Interchange between departments, Macdonell
45,489-90

- Interchangeability :

- with Associates Department and Crown Office advantageous, and separation of departments not advocated, Muir Mackenzie - 55,350

- Difficulties as regards Crown Office and Associates Department, and suggestion, Kershaw
53,278-88, 53,318-21

- Leave, method of arranging, Stringer 49,732

- Leave, and work during vacations, Macdonell
45,509-27, 45,645-51

- previous Legal experience not essential, public school man the class required, Townesend
52,333-4, 52,364, 52,372-6

- Number of different classes in each department, Stringer - 49,621-8

- Number and question of suitability of, on the whole, Macdonell - 45,496-508

- Pay :

- Comparison with other Government departments, Stringer - 49,709-17

Central Office—continued.CLERKS—continued.*Pay—continued.

Comparison with clerks in solicitor's office,
Kentish - - - - - 54,297-300
 Extra payments in addition to, in some cases,
Townesend, 52,450-4; Stringer, 53,967-72.
 Scales proposed by clerks, approved, Stringer
 49,681-717

Probation period instead of veto on appointment would be satisfactory, Macdonell - 45,574-7 no Probationary period, but power of removal in case of gross incompetence or neglect of duty,
Macdonell - - - - - 45,463-70

Promotion:

Passing over of men in some cases, Macdonell
 45,475-80, 45,485
 small Prospects of, compared with other offices,
Townesend - - - - - 52,332
 Rate of, Macdonell - - - - - 45,580 of Second class, suggestion re qualifying examination, Stringer - - - - - 49,677-86 to Second class, examination advocated before,
Macdonell - - - - - 45,462, 45,487-8
 System, Macdonell - - - - - 45,474-80 of Third class, see under Third class below.

Qualifications required, Macdonell - 45,436-41

Retirement:Fixed age:

not Advocated, but men might be liable to be asked to resign after 65, Stringer 49,779-83 would be Desirable for office, Brocklesby, 52,208-9, 52,322; Overbury, 52,323.

not Desirable, unless with power of extension even over 70, Macdonell 45,528-32, 45,595-6

Lump sum on, decrease for every year in service after 65, Townesend - - - 52,399

Second class, salaries:

should be Raised, Townesend - 52,325-32 proposed Scale, Brocklesby - - 52,269-72 some Shorthand writers, but shorthand not much required, Macdonell - - - - - 45,614-7
 Some, still on old scale, Townesend - 52,325-32

Third Class:

Appointment, see that title above.

Class of man required, Stringer 49,646-51, 49,771

Dismissal, possibility but no case known of, for incapacity, Stringer - - - - - 49,854-63

Increments, automatic, but certificate of efficiency before, would be approved, Stringer
 49,868-73

previous Legal experience not necessary or desirable, Stringer - - - 49,640-1, 49,645

Promotion:

Decrease in rate, Townesend - 52,307
 Effect of transfer to Court of Criminal Appeal, Overbury, 52,255; Brocklesby,
Townesend, 52,284-306.

Qualifying examination, suggestion, Stringer,
 49,675-6, 49,776-8; Townesend, 52,378,
 52,382-91

Rate of, 1907-1913, Townesend 52,299-305 probable Slow rate of, in future, Overbury
 52,251-68

System, and men passed over occasionally,
Stringer - - - - - 49,813-5, 49,864-5

Question as to time required to learn work,
Worley - - - - - 48,265-76

Salaries:

Inadequacy of, compared with other departments, Overbury - 52,222-44, 52,439-49 possibly Inadequate, and less good class of men may be obtained, Macdonell - 45,581 proposed Scale, Overbury - - 52,250
 Self-contained body, objections to proposal,
Stringer - - - - - 49,740-51, 53,976-80
 Sitting in courts in capacity of registrar or associate, Townesend - - - 52,455-9

Work:

Comparison with that of solicitor's managing clerk, Townesend, 52,340-2; Kentish, 54,287-92 not Mechanical only, Stringer - 49,746-50 Nature of, and simplicity, Kentish 54,406-42

s (5)30320

Central Office—continued.CLERKS—continued.*Work—continued.

Time-book, no custom of men signing earlier than actual time of arrival, Stringer
 49,827-33

Transfer between departments, system, and should be more thoroughly carried out,
Stringer - - - - - 49,629-37

Committee of Control, Muir Mackenzie, 44,099-100;
Macdonell, 45,672; Stringer, 49,727-31.

Crown Office, see that title.

Departments of, Muir Mackenzie - - 43,949

Departments of, and staff, Macdonell - 45,428-9

DISCIPLINE, &c.:

Administration, system, Stringer - 49,733-9

Appointment of chief clerk to deal with:

Advantage doubted, Kentish - - 54,393-5

Proposal approved, Stringer, 49,729-39;
Townesend, 52,402-8

Explanation, Muir Mackenzie - 43,901-3, 43,990

Formation of, Macdonell - - - - 45,425-7

Four posts at 700*l.* suggested, to be filled by selection chiefly, Townesend - - 52,355, 52,357-61

Functions, Macdonell - - - - - 45,423-4

King's Remembrancer, see that title.

MASTERS:

Assistant, Muir Mackenzie - - - 44,127-30

all Barristers, and system should be maintained,
Kentish - - - - - 54,270-1

Relations of, and of assistant masters, to judges,
Muir Mackenzie, 44,399-406; Macdonell
 45,602-8

Office appliances, question as to further improvements, Macdonell - - - - - 45,621-6

Rule Committee, see Rule Committee of the Supreme Court.

Sending of documents to and from, by post instead of by messenger, not advocated, Kentish 54,476-87

SUMMONS AND ORDER DEPARTMENT:

Clerks, previous legal experience desirable, but work could be learned in office, Kentish 54,281-4

Third class clerks, duties and knowledge required,
Townesend 52,413-30

Work in, no difficulty seen, Kentish - 54,426-30

some Typing, and question of increase, Macdonell,
 45,618-20; Kentish, 54,385-91, 54,454

WORK:

Comparison with work in Chancery Division,
Brocklesby, 52,275; Townesend, 52,276-8

Nature of, Macdonell - - - - - 45,430-5

Question as to whether decreased, Macdonell
 45,498-508

WRIT, APPEARANCE, JUDGMENT, AND EXECUTION DEPARTMENT:

Appointment to higher offices by promotion might be suitable, Oakshott - - - - 47,161

Clerks:

Number excessive, Kentish - - - 54,346-7
 Number of different classes, and question re large proportion of second class, Stringer
 49,816-26

Question as to knowledge required, Brocklesby
 52,431-8

Salaries, Stringer - - - - - 53,948-51

Work of, re judgments, and difficulty of, Stringer
 49,565-76, 53,937-47

Rules of Court governing work of, and difficulty experienced re, Stringer - - - 49,577-80

Rush of work from 2 to 4, question as to possibility of expediting, Kentish - - 54,379-84

System of working, Stringer - - - 49,551-2

Work:

Nature of, Stringer - - - - - 49,553-76

Nature of, and no difficulty seen, Kentish
 54,275-80, 54,406-17

Work done sometimes after office closed to public,
Stringer - - - - - 49,759-62

WRITS OF SUMMONS:

Question as to work involved in issue of, Macdonell
 45,652-5

Reduction in number owing to adoption of summons for directions, Macdonell - - 45,503-6

Z Z

Chancery Chambers:

CLERKS:

Absence owing to illness, procedure in case of, and uniformity of practice desirable, Fox 47,975-81
Accommodation satisfactory, Romer - 45,164-5
Appointment:

Age limit:

None known of, Romer - - - 45,086
Twenty to twenty-five suggested, Fox 47,779-80

Competition:

Not advocated, and objections, J. R. B. Gregory, 47,257-64, 47,338-9; Fox, 47,784-6.
Question of, and no objection seen personally, provided man has certificate of legal and business capacity as solicitor's clerk, Romer 44,888-99

Direct to office instead of transfer from other offices important, Fox - - - 47,753

Direct to higher classes:

Have been made, Romer - - - 45,087-9
Question of, but unfairness of, to third class clerks, Romer - - - 44,879-80, 45,015-22
Solicitors' clerks of 25 to 35 with at least five years' experience advocated, Fox 47,754-71, 47,996-8000, 48,035-43, 48,059-78

Method, Romer

45,032-4, 44,855-7, 44,861-4, 45,090-2 all Recent appointments have been of men formerly solicitors' clerks, Romer - 44,882
Results satisfactory, J. R. B. Gregory 47,256, 47,264

System approved, but service in solicitor's office should be essential qualification, Fox 47,781-6

Apportionment of work among, and suggestion, Fox 48,047-51

Attendance books, system and uniformity desirable, Fox - - - - - 47,969-74

Class of men, Romer - - - - - 44,974-7

Distinction between work of first and second class, Oakshott - - - - - 46,995-6 not Eligible for appointment as masters, and eligibility not advocated, Romer 44,917-25, 45,107-8

First class:

Appointments from managing clerks by judges would be better than by promotion, Oakshott 46,975-81, 47,019-20, 47,092-127, 47,154-60, 47,162-4

Devolution of work to lower class not desirable, Fox - - - - - 47,809-17, 47,870, 48,089 not Excessive and justification for, Romer, 45,106; Fox - - - - - 47,867-70

Hearing of cases by, Oakshott - - - 47,082-6

Work of, Romer, 44,790-9, App. XCVI.; Oakshott, 46,997-7,002, 47,018; Fox, 47,869.

Higher offices:

Large proportion of, and question of modification, Muir Mackenzie - 44,138-41, 55,313

Proportion of, compared with proportion in Central Office, justification for, Romer 45,026-31

Hours, Romer - - - - - 44,978-80

Leave, Romer - - - - - 45,067-73

Number, difficulties of decreasing, and objection to, Romer, 45,023; Muir Mackenzie, 55,319-21.

Organisation, Fox - - - 47,966-8, 48,044-6

Overlapping of work, extent of, Romer - 44,811-6

Promotion:

Complaints made of slowness of, Romer 45,118
Method and functions of sub-committee re, and approval, Romer - - 44,915-6, 45,045-7
Rate, comparison with Central Office, reasons, Romer - - - - - 45,118-9 by Seniority unless men not fit, Romer 44,909-14

Retirement, fixed age:

if Adopted, 75 suggested, Fox 47,876, 47,894-900
not Advocated, and reasons, Romer 44,969-73, 45,100-5

Salaries very ample, Oakshott - 47,126, 47,133

Second class, work of, Romer - - - 44,800-7, App. XCVI.

Second and third classes, reduction in number, Fox - - - - - 47,856-66

Chancery Chambers—continued.

CLERKS—continued.

Separate staff attached to each master, and advantages of arrangement, Romer - - 44,927-39
Technical qualifications, question as to need for, Leathes - - - - - 48,950-6

Third class:

Better class than necessary, Fox - 48,055-6 every Encouragement should be given to rise, Romer - - - - - 44,908

Five years' experience in solicitor's office desirable for, Romer, 44,865-78, 44,881, 44,892; Fox, 47,772-8, 47,782-3, 47,955-8, 48,082-5.

Inconvenience experienced from insufficient knowledge or training of, Oakshott - 46,982-3

Men having had 10 or 15 years' experience in solicitor's office, including outdoor work, might be qualified for second or first class, Oakshott 46,984-94

Pooling of work not considered desirable, Fox 48,097-8

Promotion:

not Advocated except in exceptional cases, Fox 47,754-60, 47,943-65, 48,017-26, 48,057-8, 48,086-8

Selection preferable, but difficulty, Fox 48,094-6

by Seniority, at present subject to certificate, Fox - - - - - 48,090-3

by Seniority, and disapproval of, should be by merit, Oakshott - 47,003-9, 47,130-2

Salary considered inadequate by masters, and increase advocated, Romer 44,900-8, 45,093-5

Some not having served in solicitor's office, Romer - - - - - 45,074-86

Supervision of, question of, Fox - - - 48,044-6, 48,052-4

Work of, Romer 44,808-10, 44,870, 44,937-9, App. XCVI.

Work distinct from that of higher classes, Oakshott, 46,978, 47,170-1; Fox - - - 48,022

Transfer from other departments, Romer, 45,096-9, 45,116; Millikin - - - - 54,593-600

Two separate grades, question of, but present system approved, Muir Mackenzie - - 55,269-74

Vacancies:

no Public advertisement, Romer - - 45,133
Time taken to fill, Romer - - - - 45,134-9

Committee of masters, Muir Mackenzie - 55,331-5 little Delay in getting appointment in, but variation in different chambers, Oakshott 46,963-6, 47,151-3

Holidays should not be taken on Saturdays without leave, Oakshott - - - - - 47,069-71

HOURS:

Extension, certain amount of work could be done without presence of solicitors, Caunt - 50,232-4 considered Sufficient, but whole staff not always in attendance by 10, Oakshott - - - 47,072-5

STAFF:

Reduction, Muir Mackenzie - - - 55,314 more than Sufficient for work, Oakshott - 47,010-7, 47,067-8, 47,128-9

Vacation, criticism re, Oakshott - - 47,077-8

WORK:

Decrease in, and question as to extent, Austen-Cartmell, 47,647; Muir Mackenzie, 55,315-7.
Excellently done and no delay, J. R. B. Gregory 47,234-5

Chancery Department, Scotland:

Abolition of, and merging with another department, under consideration, Dodds, 55,618; MacDougall 55,713-6

Amalgamation with Extractor's Department not advocated, MacDougall, 55,853; Thomson, 59,825, 59,827-9

Director of, functions, Dodds - - - 55,543

Placing of, under Deputy Clerk Register would be approved, MacDougall - - - 55,852-4

Separate office not necessary, part of work might go to Register House and part to Sheriff Clerk in Edinburgh, Mackenzie - - - 56,562-4

Work of, MacDougall - - - - 55,711-2

Chancery Division, England:CLERKS:

see also under Chancery Chambers and Chancery Registrars.

previous Experience as solicitor's clerk desirable, J. R. B. Gregory 47,369-78, 47,363-8; Stringer 49,880

Transfer between divisions would be undesirable, Fox - - - - 48,071 practically no Delay in, Oakshott - - - 46,962-70

Higher posts, no opinion re proportion of, dependent on work, Wrenbury - - - - 54,909-12

Transfer of administrative work of Lunacy Department to, see under Lunacy Department.

Transfer of debenture holders' actions to Companies (Winding-up) Department, see under Companies (Winding-up) Department.

WORK:

Comparison with work in Central Office, Brocklesby, 52,275; Townesend, 53,276-8.

Decreased, and possibility of offices being over-staffed, Winterbotham - - - 49,980-4

Difference from that of King's Bench masters, Macdonell - - - - 45,635-44

Well done on the whole, Winterbotham - 49,978-9

Chancery Judges:

all Business under Trading with the Enemy Act conducted before Mr. Justice Warrington, Caunt 50,208-13

"LINKED JUDGES":

Explanation and advantages of system, Fox 47,901-14

Success of system, Austen-Cartmell 47,725-7, 47,732-4

Registrars should be attached to groups of, for drawing up orders, and scheme, J. R. B. Gregory 47,233, 47,236-54, 47,333, 47,340-8

Chancery Masters:

Administration actions, nature of work involved in, Romer - - - - 44,817-34, 44,843, App. XCVI.

Amalgamation with registrars, see Chancery Offices, amalgamation of.

Amalgamation with taxing masters, suggested, Caunt 50,144-83

APPOINTMENT:

Committee to report on qualifications of candidates, proposal approved, Fox - - - - 47,788-91

Forty should be minimum age, Fox - - - 47,877

Judge should have voice in selection, Fox, 47,787-8, 48,003-8 by Judges formerly, and success of, Romer 44,981-9, 44,990, 45,050-4

by Lord Chancellor, no change advocated, Austen-Cartmell - - - - 47,640-2

Method and system approved, and Committee would not be an improvement, Romer 44,837, 44,853, 44,858-60, 45,055-66 from Subordinate officers:

not Advocated, Goodchild, 47,478; Austen-Cartmell, 47,637-9, 47,669, 47,681-91.

not Advocated, unless with 10 years' practice as solicitor, Fox - - - - 47,749-52

Appointment of one, to Rule Committee suggested, Stringer, 49,580-8; Morton, 52,695-6.

Assistant masters, question of, Wrenbury - - 54,913

Attached to each linked pair of judges, three instead of four, objections to proposal, Fox - - 47,819

Attachment to judges, importance of, Fox 47,914-5

Attendance in court, in a few cases, but no alteration in practice to extend, necessary, Austen-Cartmell 47,660-1 formerly Called chief clerks, Romer - - - 44,748-9

Clerks, see under Chancery Chambers.

Debenture holders' actions, nature of work involved in, Romer - - - - 44,817-9, App. XCVI.

Distribution of work between, Romer - - 44,769-72

Experience, value of, Fox - - - 47,891-3, 48,009-16

Foreclosure proceedings, nature of work involved in, Romer - - - - 44,817-9, 45,167, App. XCVI.

Hearing of cases:

Average time allotted, Romer - - - - 45,140-53

Clerk not present, Romer - - - - 45,159-63

Hours, and large amount of work done after 4, Romer, 44,776-83, 44,992-9

Chancery Masters—continued.

Jurisdiction re wards of court, Romer - 44,848-52

NUMBER:

no Addition to, when number of judges increased, Fox - - - - 48,027-8

Decrease might be possible, Austen-Cartmell 47,647 not Excessive Romer, 45,106; Fox, 47,818.

OFFICE:

Arrangements in vacations, Romer - - 45,000-6, 45,067-72

Organisation satisfactory, judging by results, Austen-Cartmell - - - - 47,670

Organisation satisfactory and no delay on part of Court, Fox - - - - 47,871-5

Orders drawn up by, see under Chancery Orders.

Pedigree cases, nature of work involved in, Romer 44,817-9, App. XCVI.

Position of, Romer - - - - 44,750-4

Present, none were solicitors in provinces, Romer 45,122-8 statutory Qualifications and retention of, considered desirable, Romer - - - - 44,835-48

RETIREMENT, FIXED AGE:

not Advocated, and reasons, Romer - 44,969-73, 45,100-5

not Advocated, but opinion might be modified if system of added years applied to, Fox 47,876-81

Seventy too early, 75 early enough, Fox 47,881-93

SENIOR:

Appointment by election instead of seniority, suggestion, Fox - - - - 47,987-93

Responsibility of, as regards organisation in office, discipline, &c., Fox - - - - 47,983-5 by Seniority, Romer - - - - 45,129-32

SHORTHAND WRITERS:

Desirable for, and every third class clerk should be, Fox - - - - 47,851-3 not necessary, Romer - - - - 45,048-9

SOLICITORS AS:

considered Essential, J. R. B. Gregory, 47,204, 47,206, 47,229-32, 47,398-401; Morton, 52,651.

most Suited, and qualification of 10 years' practice should be retained, Fox - - - 47,747-8, 47,876 from 35-45 with considerable experience as a principal the most qualified man, Austen-Cartmell 47,635-9

Sons of judges, Loreburn - - - - 50,661-2

Training, no distinction between that of registrars, &c., Farmer - - - - 46,848-64

Uniformity of practice, steps taken to ensure, Fox 47,802

Vacancy, no public advertisement or invitation of applications, Romer - - - - 45,120-1

VACATION:

Arrangements for work in, believed to be satisfactory, Austen-Cartmell - - - 47,648

Two masters desirable instead of one, during, Caunt - - - - 50,250-5

"Vacation business," more liberal interpretation would be an advantage, Caunt - - 50,256-7

Vacations, Romer - - - - 44,784-7

WORK:

more Administrative and less judicial, than that of King's Bench masters, J. R. B. Gregory 47,226-7

Decrease in amount, but increase in importance, Fox - - - - 47,819-63

Devolution to clerks:

Further, impossibility, Fox - - - 47,792-808

Possibility doubted, J. R. B. Gregory, 47,307; Austen-Cartmell, 47,656-9.

Mr. Toye's suggestions re, comments on, Fox 47,798-808

Holding of auctions, Fox - - - - 47,836-46

Little could be passed down to clerks, Oakshott 47,018-9

Nature of, Romer, 44,750-68, 45,007-14; App. XCVI.; Fox, 47,834-5

Taken home constantly, Fox - - - - 48,079

Well done and without arrears, Austen-Cartmell, 47,643-6

Chancery Offices, Amalgamation of:

possible Advantages and disadvantages, Fox 47,956-9

* certain Advantages would be derived, but question as to best method, Romer - - - - 44,945-68

Chancery Offices, Amalgamation of—continued.

Advocated, and suggestions re method, Muir Mackenzie, 44,137, 44,142-3, 55,397; J. R. B. Gregory, 47,238-54, 47,332-5; Winterbotham, 49,994, 50,046-50; Caunt, 50,144-5, 50,184-213; Haldane, 60,941-2.

not Advocated, and reasons, Farmer, 45,257-64, 46,736-61; Austen-Cartmell, 47,705-12.

Desirable, but existing interests should not be disturbed, Loreburn - - - - - 50,602

Drawing of registrar's orders by master, see under Chancery Orders.

Impossibility of masters sitting in court and doing chamber work as well, but special assignment of two officers for present registrar's work would meet difficulty, Fox - - - - - 47,924, 47,926-35
would be impossible without attachment of registrars to particular sets of chambers, and objection, but question of possibility of rotating, Farmer 45,262-4, 46,737-46, 46,751-4

Inconvenience caused by present system, J. R. B. Gregory - - - - - 47,253-4

Masters and staff, difficulty probable at first, but not ultimately, Oakshott 47,045-6, 47,053-8, 47,174-6

One office, with masters and registrars in close touch, suggested, distribution of work to be left to men themselves, Wrenbury - - - - - 54,892-3 would Open avenue of promotion to third class clerks, Farmer - - - - - 46,771

Possibility of same man performing work of registrar and master, Wrenbury - - - - - 54,892, 54,899

Possibility of, and great economy of labour would result, Oakshott - - - - - 47,042-60, 47,172-7

Question of, Fox - - - - - 47,924-42

Question from point of view of different sources of appointments, Fox - - - - - 47,940-2

no Reason seen against, Winterbotham - 49,985-91

Recommendation by Kekewich Committee of 1907 that offices should remain separate, and question of reasons, Farmer - - - - - 45,259-62, 46,738

Registrars not considered fitted to undertake work of masters, Fox - - - - - 47,924

Chancery Orders :

no Delay in drawing up at present, owing to steps taken, Farmer - - - - - 46,820-2

Chamber orders, explanation and proportion settled by masters and by registrars, Romer - 44,802-7

Discovery of errors in, by Pay Office, Paulton, 50,488, 50,492; Sellar, 50,489-92.

Distribution between masters and registrars, Romer, 44,945-9; Fox, 47,917-21.

Drawing of minutes by counsel, Austen-Cartmell, 47,671-6; Winterbotham, 49,991; Caunt, 50,192; Wrenbury, 54,895-8.

Drawing of, work not difficult or complicated, Winterbotham - - - - - 49,991

Drawing up of, by solicitors would not be possible, Oakshott - - - - - 47,036-41 never Drawn up by solicitor, Farmer - - 45,233-5

DRAWN UP BY REGISTRARS :

Consultation of masters re, in some cases, Romer, Farmer - - - - - 45,245-6

Masters could not draw, Farmer - - - 46,865-78

More might be drawn up by masters, Fox 47,863, 47,922-3

Nature of, Farmer - - - - - 45,214-8

Process of drawing up, &c., Farmer - 45,231-56

Proportion of, Farmer - - - - - 45,219-30

Question as to possibility of work being done in chambers, Romer - - - - - 44,945-68

Work well done as a rule, and no delay now, Oakshott - - - - - 47,031-5

Inconvenience of present system, Caunt - 50,185-9

Made by masters without reference to judge, nature of, Romer - - - - - 44,788-9; App. XCVI.

Masters would be able to deal with, as well as with other work, Caunt - - - - - 50,190-7

Necessity for complying with requirements of Pay Office, Paulton - - - - - 50,486-7

Particulars re drawing of, &c., Romer - 44,955-61

Skilled body of men necessary for drawing up, Wrenbury - - - - - 54,892

Time taken in drawing of, Oakshott - - 47,178-81

Chancery Registrars :

Allocation to particular judges, proposal not agreed with, Austen-Cartmell - - - - - 47,706-9

Amalgamation with masters, see Chancery Offices, amalgamation of.

APPOINTMENT :

Direct from the Bar and solicitors would be a mistake, Austen-Cartmell - - - - - 47,682, 47,693 from Principal clerks, Muir Mackenzie - 44,027-8

by Selection and not seniority, recommendation of Kekewich Committee not agreed with, Farmer 46,798-809, 46,834

System considered satisfactory, Austen-Cartmell 47,678-691

Attachment to groups of masters, system not approved, Wrenbury - - - - - 54,980-2

ATTENDANCE IN COURT :

Delegation of work to clerks not advocated, Fox 47,916 not considered Necessary, Winterbotham, 49,987-90; Caunt, 50,201-8

Necessary in all but witness actions, Wrenbury 54,900-8, 54,925-7 not Necessary from point of view of consultation by judge, Wrenbury - - - - - 54,903-4

Registrar may now be relieved of part of work by clerks, Farmer - - - - - 45,206-8

System, Austen-Cartmell - - - - - 47,729-31

CLERKS :

Appointment, method and examination would be deprecated, Farmer 46,762-4, 46,767, 46,772-3, 46,902-3, 46,912-3

Attendance-book, Farmer - - - - - 46,775

Explanation re organisation, Farmer 45,183-5, 46,910, 46,921-30

Hours, Farmer - - - - - 46,775-80

Legal training desirable, and solicitors' examination possibly the best, Austen-Cartmell 47,693-4, 47,738-41

Organisation, present and former systems, Muir Mackenzie - - - - - 55,283

Petition clerk and clerk of entry, explanation, and one clerk would be sufficient, Farmer 45,198-9, 46,794, 46,900-1

Principal :

Appointment by promotion, Farmer - 46,914-5

Direct appointment, Oakshott - - - 47,061-4

Number to be decreased to eight, Farmer 45,194 statutory Right of succession to registrarship, but none of present clerks have vested right, but came in on tacit understanding of succession, Farmer - 45,174-5, 45,178-82, 46,713-35, 46,885-96, 46,931-6

Right of succession to registrarship, no understanding on which claim could be founded, but possible expectation, Muir Mackenzie 55,284-90

Three, without legal qualifications, and appointment considered illegal, Farmer - 46,830-1

Work, Farmer - - - - - 45,241-4

Work different to that of second class clerks in other legal offices, Farmer - - - - - 46,916

Promotion by seniority preferable, Austen-Cartmell 47,718-9

Qualifications required, Farmer - - - 46,949-54

Retirement :

One second class clerk of 65, case of, Farmer 46,794, 46,900-1

Civil Service rule of voluntary retirement at 60 and compulsory at 65, would not be objected to as regards new appointments, Farmer, 46,795-7

Statutory qualifications, Farmer - - - 45,176-7

Third class :

no Avenue for promotion, Farmer 46,765-70, 46,773-4, 46,824-6

Cases of, aged 54 and 55 on appointment, Farmer 46,904-6

Difference of work from that of second class clerks, and third class clerks could not do, Farmer - - - - - 46,827-33

Hardship of position, and some if not promoted should have higher salary, Farmer 46,773, 46,826, 46,941-2

Chancery Registrars—continued.CLERKS—continued.*Third class—continued.

Passing over of four elder as regards transfer to other offices, and grievance re, Millikin 54,579-616, 54,627-8

Promotion, possible occasionally by special application, Farmer - - - 46,943

Work of, Farmer, 46,883; Millikin - 54,617-25

Transfer from other departments, Muir Mackenzie 55,283

University and legal qualifications, Farmer 46,803-6

Vacations, Farmer - - - 46,781-90

Work of, nature of, and experience required, Oakshott - - - 47,021-30

Deputy Registrars, cases of, Farmer - 46,946-8

Establishment, Farmer - - - 45,183-200

Hours, Farmer - - - 46,776-8

JUNIOR:

Doubt whether notice to, re retirement at 70, is binding, Farmer - - - 46,937

Special position of, Farmer - - - 45,192-5

NUMBER:

to be Reduced to eight, Farmer - - 45,194

Reduction in, Loreburn - - - 50,602

OFFICE:

Committee appointed to inquire into, 1906-7:

Memorandum prepared by Sir K. Muir Mackenzie for, 1907 - - - App. XCIII.

Report of, Muir Mackenzie - App. XCII.

only Delay in getting appointment due to registrars having work in court, Oakshott 46,967-70

some Delay experienced, and reasons, Caunt 50,224-6, 50,304-10

Higher officers, large proportion of, and question of modification, Muir Mackenzie 44,138-41, App. XCIV.

Hours, extension, certain amount of work could be done without presence of solicitors, Caunt 50,235-8 not Overstaffed, Caunt - - - 50,227

Overstaffed, and suggestion re reduction, J. R. B. Gregory - - - 47,340-8

Orders drawn up by, see under Chancery Orders.

Report of Kekewich Committee, extent to which carried out, Farmer - - - 46,817-24

RETIREMENT:

in Consequence of ill-health, under pressure known of, and power re, Farmer - - - 46,938-40

no Fixed age, but 70 would not be objected to, Farmer - - - 46,791-2

SENIOR:

Control over clerks, extent of, and increased power not desired, Farmer - - 46,810-3

no Responsibility re work of other registrars, and increased power (as recommended by Kekewich Committee) not desired, Farmer - 46,810-5

Shorthand writing not required, Farmer - 46,823

SOLICITORS AS:

Essential, J. R. B. Gregory 47,255, 47,398-401

would be Mistake, Austen-Cartmell 47,682, 47,693

Statutory position and qualifications, and opinion re, Farmer - 45,171-5, 46,721, 46,731, 46,843-7

Training, no distinction between that and that of masters, Farmer - - - 46,848-64

Vacation work, Farmer, 46,784-8, 46,879-82; Caunt, 50,259

Vacations, Farmer - - - 46,782-3, 46,788

WORK:

Nature of, Romer, 44,944; Farmer - 45,201-56

Well done, Austen-Cartmell - - 47,677

Channell, Mr., Clerk of Assize, reference - 51,469

Chitty, Master J. H., reference - - 50,662

Circuits:

Amount of time occupied by, in year, Denman 51,419

Number, and number of courts to, Muir Mackenzie, 44,203-6; Bridgeman, 51,562-3

Officers, see Assize Officers.

Civil Service:

Appointment to, see that title.

Comparison between work of, and that in private offices, &c., Murray - - - 57,980, 58,001-6

Civil Service qualifying Examination, see under Appointment.

CLARK, JAMES SMITH, S.S.C., Auditor of Accounts of the Court of Session - - - 58,532-72

COURT OF SESSION, AUDITOR OF ACCOUNTS:

Accounts and remits dealt with, 1912, 1913, 1914 58,548-52

Appointment, method - - - 58,536

no Arrears of work - - - 58,553

Clerks:

Appointment, method - - - 58,557-8

Chief, failure of health - 58,558, 58,561-2

Pensions, no inconvenience known from lack of 58,559-62

Excerpt of points in report of Law Courts Commission in 1868 - - - 58,568

Fees for work for Government Departments and inclusion of work in increased salaries would not be objected to - - - 58,546, 58,554-7

Pension, no inconvenience known from lack of 58,559-60

Practice as law agent not allowed - - 58,535

Private taxations, particulars re, and same account would never ordinarily come before officially and opinion re 58,542-5, 58,547, 58,549-50, 58,563-72

Remuneration - - - 58,539-41, 58,568

Retirement, no fixed age - - - 58,537

Staff of - - - 58,538

Work of - - - 58,535

Clarke, F. F., letter re establishment of County Court clerks, Bridgeman - - - 51,773

Clerk of the Crown, see under Crown Office Department, House of Lords.

Clerks:

see also under particular departments.

ABSENCE OWING TO SICKNESS:

Control of, present system, Muir Mackenzie 55,429-31

Procedure in case of, and uniformity of practice desirable, Fox - - - 47,975-81

Uniformity of practice re, desirable, but no unreasonable diversity known, Muir Mackenzie 55,427-30

Access to highest posts desirable, and suggestion re intermediate grade between 600*l.* and 1,500*l.* grades, and strong efficiency bar, Muir Mackenzie 44,030, 44,123-35, 55,307-12

ADMISSION AS BARRISTERS:

not allowed by Inns of Court, but should be, Roscoe 49,491-4

Difficulty not heard of, Brickdale - 51,302, 51,370

Land Registry clerks allowed, Sir P. Gregory 55,181, 55,187-8

Practice of Inns of Court re, believed not to be uniform, and cases decided on merits and no definite rule known, Hansell 50,905-8, 50,984-90

Prohibition:

Extent of, Sir P. Gregory - - - 55,183-8

Justification for, Hansell - - - 50,976-81 possible Reason, Aspinall - - - 50,878-80

Appointment, see that title.

Appointments desired by clerks in solicitors' offices, Kentish - - - 54,376-8

Class of men applying for posts, Muir Mackenzie 44,045-50

Classes and salaries, Muir Mackenzie - 43,982-3

Classification, establishment of, Muir Mackenzie 55,262

Clerks in solicitors' offices the most suitable, Austen-Cartmell - - - 47,663

Distinction of work from that of masters, Muir Mackenzie - - - 43,987-9

PREVIOUS EXPERIENCE IN SOLICITOR'S OFFICE:

Desirable for all classes, Caunt 50,068-82, 50,269, 50,278-83 should not be absolute Qualification, as leaven of men of higher or university education desirable, Muir Mackenzie - 44,025-6, 44,061-8, 44,471

FIRST CLASS:

Appointment by promotion in practice, Muir Mackenzie - - - 44,096-8, 44,363-70

Appointment of some, from outside would be an advantage, Muir Mackenzie 44,068-9, 44,104

Inefficiency, difficult for legal profession to complain of, Kentish - - - 54,392

Clerks—continued.

PREVIOUS LEGAL EXPERIENCE:

not Essential for clerks as a whole, Haldane 60,912-60,915
 Question as to need for, Heath - - - 60,687-92

PROPOSED LOWER GRADE:

Appointment, question of method, Loreburn, 50,588-94, 50,606-7 might be Desirable, Muir Mackenzie - 55,362-3
 Legal experience would probably not be necessary, Loreburn - - - - 50,608-11
 Recruitment of, without expectation of promotion but possibility of promotion in cases of exceptional merit advocated, Loreburn 50,580-2, 50,584-5, 50,723
 Scheme, Loreburn - - - - 50,715-29
 Pay, common scale, Musgrave - - - 46,316-20
 Probation, Muir Mackenzie - - - 44,475-7
 Probation, draft regulations, Muir Mackenzie App. XCIV.

Promotion, see that title.

Retirement, see that title.

ROUTINE WORK:

Inquiry as to possibility of reducing, would be advantageous, Muir Mackenzie - 44,385-8
 Question as to amount of, Muir Mackenzie 44,368-70

Salaries, same scales for different branches of work, considered fair, Kentish - - - 54,466-75
 Second and first classes, experience in solicitor's office useful and desirable, but not indispensable, Loreburn - - - - 50,674-5

SECOND CLASS:

Appointment through third class, certain advantages admitted, Caunt - - - 50,274-7
 Particulars as to candidates nominated since 1900, Leathes - - - - App. XCVII.
 Tenure of office, Muir Mackenzie - - - 44,176-7

THIRD CLASS:

proposed Intermediary class between scriveners and, no opening seen for, Stringer - 53,893-9
 Legal experience not absolutely necessary, but junior clerks in solicitors' offices would sooner acquire knowledge of duties, Goodchild 47,415-7
 47,496, 47,522-5
 Long waiting list, Loreburn 50,631, 50,684-5
 Particulars as to candidates nominated since 1899-1913, Leathes - - - App. XCVII.
 Position, comparison with second division clerks, Leathes - - - - 48,862-4
 Self-contained body:
 Advocated, and question as to class of man that would be obtained, Caunt 50,083-98, 50,271, 50,294-8 would not be Applicable in Associates Department, Kershaw - - - - 53,275-7 would not be Applicable to Crown Office, Kershaw - - - - 53,275-7 would be Approved, Brickdale 51,220-3, 51,337-41
 Examination suggested by Royal Commission for junior clerical staff would meet case of, Leathes 48,958
 Objections to proposal, Stringer, 49,740-51, 53,976-80; Wrenbury, 54,880-91, 54,929-41, 54,977-9
 Question of, Musgrave - - - - 46,474-9 might be Satisfactory if promotion given in special cases, Leathes - - - - 48,897-8 Suggestion, Fox 47,754-60, 47,943-65, 48,017-26, 48,057-8, 48,086-8 would be Workable and merits seen, but promotion preferred, Muir Mackenzie - 55,262-74 more Share or opportunity of sharing in better work desirable, Muir Mackenzie - 55,262
 Transfer between departments, objection to, Goodchild - - - - 47,419-34
 Work:
 cannot be Learnt satisfactorily in office, and man would never be as efficient as with previous legal experience, Caunt - - - 50,075-82
 Mechanical nature of, Goodchild - 47,409-10
 Mechanical part of, comparison with work of Scrivenery Department, not considered possible, Stringer - - - - 53,895-9
 Well done on the whole, Caunt - - 50,071-3

Clerks—continued.

TRANSFERS BETWEEN DEPARTMENTS:

not Desirable, J. R. B. Gregory - - 47,329-31
 Objection to, Goodchild - - - 47,419-22 at Present, and increase of interchangeability desirable, Muir Mackenzie 44,114-22, 44,472-3

PROPOSED UPPER GRADE:

Appointment:

by Board would be preferable to competition, Muir Mackenzie - - - - 55,389-96

Competition:

Advantages and disadvantages, Loreburn 50,612 with Discretion to bring men in subject only to qualifying examination, suggested, Loreburn 50,586-7, 50,594-7, 50,612 at about 27 suggested, Muir Mackenzie 55,393-5 should be purely Professional, Muir Mackenzie 55,391-2

Useful for clerk before appointment to have knowledge of different offices, J. R. B. Gregory 47,329

Women might be employed, Loreburn - 50,707-11

WORK:

Difference between that of different classes, Muir Mackenzie - - - - 44,111-2
 Doing of better work by men lower in Service, in some cases, steps taken to prevent, Muir Mackenzie - - - - 44,111-2, 44,371-6

Clerks of Assize, see Assize Clerks.

Coleridge, Mr., Clerk of Assize, reference - 51,469

COLLINS, LAURENCE CHURTON, and LEADER, ERNEST WILLIAM, third class clerks, Principal Probate Registry - - - 46,532-712

PRINCIPAL PROBATE REGISTRY CLERKS:

Appointment to district registrarships:

Larger proportion of, claim to 46,566-70, 46,867
 Particulars re cases - - - - 46,599-606 not all Londoners - - - - 46,588-9
 Number - - - - 46,533
 Resignation of young, owing to old men having been persuaded to retire - - - 46,613-9

Third class:

Age for entry - - - - 46,537
 Appointment, method - 46,590-4, 46,693-6
 Attendance-book, system - - - 46,630-45 previous Experience in solicitor's office, question as to value of - - - - 46,576-85 ultimate Goal is to be principal clerk of Seat 46,595-7
 Holidays, and arrangement during Long Vacation - - - - 46,684-9, 46,705
 Hours - - - - 46,680-3, 46,705
 Length of service of men at head of, and ages 46,551-4
 Number - - - - 46,534
 Number eligible for promotion - - 46,536
 Number at maximum pay - - - 46,555-6

Promotion:

Rate, and unevenness of incidence in different years - - - - 46,544-50 to Second class by seniority, but some cases of men being passed over - - 46,539-43 unduly Slow, and application of Civil Service rule re retirement desired - 46,557-65, 46,698-701, 46,707-12
 Removal, power of, believed to be only in case of misconduct - - - - 46,709-10
 Salary, scale - - - - 46,538
 University and legal qualifications - 46,702-4
 Work of - - - - 46,646-79

Collisson, Mr., Assize Associate, reference, Denman 51,481

Collyer, Mr., Assistant Clerk, Chancery Registrars Office, reference - - - 46,907-8, 46,941-2

Commercial Court:

Clerk to, appointment suggested in order to secure continuity of practice, Goodchild - 47,463-76
 Clerk to draw up orders and issue summonses advocated, Kentish - - - - 54,363-75
 Elasticity of practice in, Goodchild - 47,463-76
 Issue of summonses impossible during vacation, Kentish - - - - 54,365-8
 Orders, drawing up of, by solicitors, Goodchild 47,464-6

Commissary Clerk of Edinburgh:ABOLITION OF OFFICE AND TRANSFER OF WORK TO SHERIFF CLERK:

Economy as result of, doubted, Richardson	56,869-71
no Objection seen, Salvesen	58,996-9
Proposal not agreed with, Lewis	59,524-7
Suggestion, Mackenzie	56,584-6
Appointment by Crown, Richardson	56,828

CLERKS:Appointment:

Ages on, Richardson	56,898
by Commissary Clerk, Richardson	56,849
of Men with previous legal experience, Richardson	56,855
previous Education and experience, Richardson	56,897-901

Pensions desired for, Richardson	56,866-8, 56,874-8
---	--------------------

Salaries:

Increase would be approved, Richardson	56,866-8, 56,874-8
---	--------------------

Method of fixing, Richardson	56,857-8
no Trouble with, and public satisfied with work, Richardson	56,856

Correspondence, work by, Richardson	56,884-5
Functions and jurisdiction, Dodds , 55,569-70; Mackenzie , 56,584-8.

Lump sum for expenses of office, amount and system, Richardson	56,859-65
---	-----------

Preparation of Calendar of Confirmations and Inventories by, Richardson	56,814
--	--------

Profit made by Treasury out of office, Richardson	56,872-3
--	----------

Public coming to office, accommodation for, Richardson	56,887-9
---	----------

STAFF:

Particulars re , and work of, Richardson	56,842-8
not Pensionable and no fixed age for retirement, but staff at present comparatively young, Richardson	56,850-4

Typewriting in office, no tendency seen of documents fading, Richardson	56,894-6
--	----------

WOMEN TYPISTS:

Good work done by, Richardson	56,891-2
Promotion to other work, question of, Richardson	56,890-3

Work of office, nature, procedure, amount of, &c., Richardson	56,829-41, 56,879-83
--	----------------------

Commissary Clerks, duties merged in office of Sheriff's Clerk except in Midlothian, Dodds	55,570
--	--------

Companies:

Large number struck off register as defunct, and no control over or inquiry, Manson	49,191-201
Winding-up, judges dealing with, Manson	49,213-6

Companies (Winding-up) Department:CLERKS:*Appointment:

Higher posts by competition not desirable, but might do for third class, Manson	49,278
Method and success, Manson , 49,270-1, 49,284-5; Barnes , 49,285-90.

to Third class, competition among persons having served in solicitor's office would be approved, Manson	49,291-9
--	----------

Class, comparison with 30, 40, and 50 years ago, Brougham	49,165-7
--	----------

Competition for second or first class, possible difficulty, Barnes	49,366-71
---	-----------

Eligibility for appointment as registrar would not be objected to, Manson	49,308-9
--	----------

First class, number compared with Bankruptcy Department, question of reason, Barnes	49,357-9
--	----------

Hours, work often done after, Barnes	49,315-6
---	----------

Legal experience mostly acquired in office, Manson	49,272
---	--------

Organisation satisfactory, Manson	49,326-8; Barnes
--	-------------------------

Praise of, Manson	49,326
--------------------------	--------

Promotion:

Hardship re , and introduction of Service scale would be approved, Manson	49,359-65
---	-----------

Companies (Winding-up) Department—continued.CLERKS—continued.*Promotion—continued.

few Prospects of, Barnes , 49,302-7; Manson ,	49,303
---	--------

to Second or third class, legal experience or certificate or diploma should be necessary qualification, Manson	49,273-9
---	----------

System, Manson , 49,300-2; Barnes , 49,302.
---	--

Retirement, ordinary Civil Service rule would be approved, Manson , Barnes	49,344-9
--	----------

Third class:

Giving of good work and more responsibility to, successful, Manson	49,350-2
---	----------

Legal knowledge desirable, Manson , 49,280-3, 49,291-9; Barnes , 49,354-6.
--	--

Transfers to other departments owing to slow rate of promotion, Manson , 49,303; Barnes , 49,304-5
--	--

Work of different classes, and extent of distinction, Barnes , 49,248-67, 49,388-90; Manson	49,252
---	--------

Creation of, 1891, Manson	49,174-8
----------------------------------	----------

DEBENTURE HOLDERS' ACTIONS, TRANSFER FROM CHANCERY DIVISION TO:

Desirable, but heavy burden on clerks would result, Manson	49,218-23, 49,225
---	-------------------

should be Limited to supervision cases as well as compulsory, Barnes	49,223-5
---	----------

Hours, Manson , 49,311; Barnes , 49,314-5.
--	--

Official receivers and functions, Manson	49,181-2, 49,207
---	------------------

Orders, procedure, Manson , 49,234; Barnes	49,236
--	--------

REGISTRARS:

Appointment, method and statutory qualification, Manson	49,268-9
--	----------

no longer Attend in court, Caunt	50,206-7
---	----------

no Civil Service certificate furnished personally, Manson	49,378
--	--------

Duties, Manson	49,208-12, 49,217, 49,222, 49,225-31
-----------------------	--------------------------------------

Pension, added years, Manson	49,375
-------------------------------------	--------

Retirement, 70 considered a good age for, Manson	49,344
---	--------

Relation to Board of Trade, Manson	49,179-80
---	-----------

Scrivenery work, and question of typewriting, Barnes , 49,330-1, 49,337-43, 49,391-4; Manson ,	49,343
--	--------

Shorthand, use of, in private examinations, Manson	49,334-6
---	----------

Staff not overworked since augmentation in 1912, Barnes	49,317-8
--	----------

Vacation work, Barnes	49,311-4
------------------------------	----------

Winding-up proceedings, particulars re , Manson	49,183-91, 49,202
---	-------------------

WORK OF OFFICE:

Description, Manson , 49,233-6; Barnes	49,236-47
--	-----------

Increase, Manson	49,319-25
-------------------------	-----------

Less and less arduous than in Bankruptcy Department, Hansell	50,888, 50,964-5
---	------------------

Works very well, and question of reason for greater efficiency than in other departments, Caunt	50,214-23
--	-----------

Control:

see also under particular departments.

Definite head of department, as regards, opinion re , Heath	60,487
---	--------

General and uniform responsibility of Lord Chancellor over all departments, would be more convenient, Heath	60,677-8
--	----------

Improvement possible, Heath	60,721-2
------------------------------------	----------

COOK, EDMUND RALPH, Secretary of the Law Society (in attendance)	47,182-401
--	------------

COOMBS, GURNEY, Registrar and High Bailiff of the Thrapston and Oundle County Court	54,099-169
---	------------

COUNTY COURTS:

Abolition of smaller, advantage would depend on transit facilities	54,151-2
--	----------

Amalgamation of, increasing number of cases and advantages	54,143-50
--	-----------

Bailiffs, importance of appointment by registrar, in small courts	54,122-5
---	----------

COOMBS, GURNEY—continued.COUNTY COURTS—continued.

Clerks:

Appointment:

by Registrar, importance of, in smaller courts 54,122-5 by Treasury by limited competition would not be objected to in larger offices 54,165-9

if Civil Servants, better class of men doubted 54,164

Hours, and comparison with those of solicitors' clerks - - - - - 54,161-2

Pay and prospects, comparison with those of solicitors' clerks - - - - - 54,160

Pensions:

Contributory scheme would be practicable on lines of that for Poor Law officers suggested 54,130-7

Desirable - - - - - 54,130-1

Transfer between courts - - - - - 54,126-8

Work in spare time - - - - - 54,163

High Bailiffs:

Payment by results, system not objected to 54,154

Remuneration, inadequacy of - - - - - 54,153-7

Registrars:

as High Bailiff also, convenient, and the general practice in smaller courts - - - - - 54,139-42

High Bailiff acting as, method of calculating salary - - - - - 54,108-9

Payment:

by Results:

no Complaints heard from registrars, and system preferred personally - 54,119-20

Satisfactory on the whole in smaller courts, and the only possible system 54,114-8

System - - - - - 54,107

Remuneration at Thrapston and Oundle 54,110-1

Thrapston and Oundle:

Area and population of districts, and industries 54,113

Decrease in work - - - - - 54,105-6

Staff - - - - - 54,112-3, 54,124, 54,158-9

County Courts:

ABOLITION OF SMALLER, AND RE-ARRANGEMENT:

Advantage would depend on transit facilities, Coombs - - - - - 54,151-2

Advocated, Lowe - - - - - 53,446-58

Desirable, as regards place of trial, but plaintiffs could still be issued, Jennings - - 54,059-60

Legislation might be necessary, but might be done by Orders in Council, Lowe 53,546-9, 53,632-4

Local and individual interests would cause difficulty, Lowe, 53,453-8; Jennings, 54,060; Muir Mackenzie, 55,468-72.

Administration, Bridgeman - - - - - 51,633

Amalgamation of District Probate Registries with, see under District Probate Registries.

Amalgamation with High Court Registry, Birmingham, advantage of, and no inconvenience experienced, Lowe - - - - - 53,432-5

Amalgamation of, increasing number of cases and advantages, Coombs - - - - - 54,143-50

Audit, Hemmons, Wade - - - - - 52,133-42

Average net cost, Bridgeman - - - - - 51,543

BAILIFFS:

Appointment:

by High Bailiffs or Registrars, Bridgeman 51,594-7

by Registrar, importance of, in smaller courts, Coombs - - - - - 54,122-5

Birmingham:

Appointment of possession men as, Davey 53,701

Numbers and wages, Davey - - - - - 53,659-65

Class, Davey - - - - - 53,696, 53,701

no Compensation in case of injury, but advocated, Cross - - - - - 52,158-60

Duties, Cross - - - - - 52,150-5, 52,160-4

Pensions advocated, Cross - - - - - 52,158

Position of, Cross - - - - - 52,158

Part-time employees in small courts, and allowances, Bridgeman - - - - - 51,602-3

County Courts—continued.BAILIFFS—continued.

Warrant officers, difficulty of obtaining, Davey

53,699-700

Work, dangers of, &c., Davey - - - 53,670-5

BIRMINGHAM:

Bailiffs, see under Bailiffs above.

Building, particulars re, Lowe - - - 53,627-31

Clerks generally remain permanently, particulars re cases where men have left, Lowe, 53,406-8

Copying clerks, separate and not eligible for promotion, Lowe - - - - - 53,428-31

Copying work, and question as to extension of typewriting, Lowe - - - - - 53,376-84

Correspondence, amount of, and method of dealing with, Lowe - - - - - 53,531-3

Departments of, and work and staff, Lowe 53,344-61

Girls, employment of, for copying work, salaries, &c., Lowe - - - 53,357-8, 53,376, 53,385

High bailiff, see that title below.

Registrar, remuneration and allowance for clerks and ushers, 1912, 1913, 1914, Lowe - 53,362-3

Remuneration of clerks, Lowe - - - 53,370-5

Women, employment of, Bridgeman - 51,871-3

Brighton, staff, Jennings - - - - - 54,009-12

Business of, decrease, Bridgeman - - 51,720

CLERKS:

Allowance for, system, and no reduction of pay, Bridgeman - - - - - 51,727-31

Appointment:

Age, Lowe, 53,398-9, 53,405; Davey - 53,689

Candidates, no difficulty in obtaining, and method, Lowe - - - - - 53,395-6

by Central authority or by competition, drawbacks, Lowe - - - - - 53,499-504

Method of deciding between applicants, Lowe 53,401, 53,522-4, 53,604-5 by Name by Treasury before 1889, Hemmons 52,077, 52,097

by Registrar, importance of, in smaller courts, Coombs - - - - - 54,122-5

by Registrars, Bridgeman, 51,586; Lowe, 53,391 of Relations, by registrars, isolated cases known of, Hemmons - - - - - 52,109-10

by Treasury by limited competition would not be objected to in larger offices, Coombs 54,165-9

Appointment, &c., by Registrar must continue while responsible for clerks, Lowe, 53,498, 53,412-4, 53,476, 53,550-9, 53,588-90, 53,603-22; Jennings, 54,044-6, 54,081-2, 54,089-92.

Break-down from ill-health, &c., procedure in case of, Bridgeman - - - - - 51,756-61

Bristol:

Ages, Hemmons - - - - - 52,002-6

Promotion by seniority generally, Hemmons 52,108

Remuneration, 1912, 1913, 1914, Hemmons 51,950

Salaries, Hemmons - - - - - 52,028-36

Capacity of, to carry out work of Central Office, Lowe - - - - - 53,526-30

Class of, Lowe, 53,397-400, 53,404; Davey, 53,687

Dismissal:

not Likely on appointment of new registrar or high bailiff, Lowe, 53,409-11, 53,550-3, 53,607-9; Davey, 53,684-6.

Power of, Hemmons - - - - - 52,105-7 never Dismissed except for misconduct, Bridgeman 51,823

Employment by individual registrars, reason for, success of system, and alteration not advocated, Bridgeman - 51,736-51, 51,773-4, 51,886

Employment in some cases partly on County Court business and partly on registrar's private work, Bridgeman - - - - - 51,598-601

Encouragement of further education and attendance at evening classes, Lowe 53,402-3

Establishment of:

Appointment by central authority would be involved, and objection to, Jennings 54,042-6 would not be Approved unless registrars Civil servants, Lowe - - - - - 53,625

County Courts—continued.CLERKS—continued.*Establishment of—continued.

- Attitude of registrars re, Hemmons - 52,119, 52,142
- Better class of men doubted, Coombs - 54,164
- would Cost more than present system, Bridgeman, 51,772-4; Lowe, 53,482-5.
- Difficulties and objections to, Bridgeman, 51,825-9, 51,888-904; Lowe, 53,476, 53,485-6, 53,623; Jennings, 54,038.
- Difficulties would be less in case of 12 courts where pensionable registrars, Bridgeman 51,883-5
- Report of Committee of 1900 re, Bridgeman 51,882-3, 51,905-7
- Transfer between courts would be necessary with, but difficulties, Jennings - 54,040-1
- Fidelity guarantee from, Jennings - 54,093
- Holidays, Lowe - - - - 53,507-9
- Hours, and comparison with those of solicitors' clerks, Lowe, 53,506; Jennings, 54,098; Coombs 54,161-2
- Information possessed re, extent of, Bridgeman 51,659-62
- previous Legal experience :
- Necessary, Lowe, 53,392-4, 53,525; Davey, 53,690-5; Jennings, 54,094-7.
- Necessary for high bailiff's indoor staff, Cross 52,146-9
- Paid at market rate, Heath - 60,637, 60,652-3
- Pay and prospects, comparison with those of solicitors' clerks, Coombs - - - 54,160
- Pensions :
- Advocated, and suggested method, Morton 52,664
- Appointment of clerks by registrars should still be possible, Jennings - - - 54,073-7
- Argument in favour of, hardly a bank, railway company, &c., without provision, Hemmons 52,014-9
- the Chief need, Jennings - - - 54,055
- Contributory scheme :
- would be Advantageous, but whole-time clerks should be treated as clerks in offices of solicitors appointed to public departments, Muir Mackenzie - - - 55,493-7
- in City of London Court, Hemmons, 52,049-50; Wade, 52,051-5.
- Consideration of, formerly, and no reason known against, Bridgeman - 51,762-6
- Government would have to pay existing men, Lowe - - - - 53,534
- Mr. Hobhouse's suggestion, reason for non-carrying out of, Hemmons - - 52,038-46
- would be Possible, Lowe, 53,489-93, 53,626; Jennings, 54,056-9.
- would be Practicable on lines of that for Poor Law officers suggested, Coombs - 54,130-7
- Suggestion re, in case of men with many years' service, Hemmons - 52,099-101
- probable Treasury attitude, Heath 60,637-61
- Desirable, Coombs - - - - 54,130-1
- Difficulty in case of part-time clerks, Lowe, 53,504-5
- Half-timers, question of, Hemmons - 52,073-6
- Inconveniences from lack of, Bridgeman, 51,752-5, 51,817-24; Hemmons, 52,002-13; Morton, 52,654-7, 52,665; Lowe, 53,487-8, 53,562-4; Jennings, 54,038-9, 54,078-80.
- Legislation would be necessary, Heath 60,617, 60,628
- Medical examination would be necessary, Jennings - - - - 54,076
- on Non-contributory basis would be preferred, but contributory would be better than none, Hemmons - - - 52,020-37, 52,047-8
- greater Precautions would be necessary as regards appointment, Lowe - - 53,564-70
- Practically permanent, Jennings - - 54,014-7
- Position and system, Muir Mackenzie - 44,226-31
- Position not analogous to that of clerks in High Court, Lowe - - - - 53,476-7
- Promotion, method, and men may occasionally be passed over, Lowe - - - - 53,471-8
- Qualifications required, Hemmons - 51,999-2,001

County Courts—continued.CLERKS—continued.*Remuneration :

- Adequacy of, question, Jennings - 54,053
- Adequate, Lowe - - - - 53,473-5
- Birmingham, Lowe - - - - 53,370-5
- Brighton, Jennings, 54,010-2.
- City of London Court, Hemmons - 52,050
- Comparison with pay for work outside Government service, Hemmons, 51,957-60; Lowe, 53,473-4; Jennings, 54,054.
- Examples, Bridgeman - - - 51,683-92
- not believed to be Inadequate, and approximate to that paid to private staff, Bridgeman 51,663-5
- Increments, Hemmons - - - 52,116-8
- Reduction of, on becoming less efficient, examples, Lowe - - - - 53,534
- Rises, impossibility of, under lump-sum system, Hemmons, 51,929-45; Wade, 52,173.
- Sums allowed for :
- Inequality of, in different courts, Cross 52,185-8
- Reduction of, sometimes even when no vacancy in staff, Cross, 52,189-95; Hemmons, 52,195, 52,196-8
- Reduction in, on falling off of work, and example of, at Bristol, Cross, 52,189-95, 52,195, 52,196-8; Hemmons, 51,932-43.
- System, Hemmons - - - - 52,111-4
- System considered satisfactory, but power to increase pay desirable, Jennings - 54,047-52
- Unofficial scale not heard of, Hemmons 52,104
- Yearly increments would be approved, Lowe 53,624-5
- Retirement, fixed age :
- would be Approved, if pensions given, and 65 suggested, Lowe - - - - 53,515-6
- Sixty suggested, Morton - - - 52,657
- in under 6,000 plaintiffs courts :
- no Part of fees received by, generally speaking, Wade - - - - 52,174-5
- Position of, disadvantages, Wade - 52,170-84
- Status :
- Alleged alteration of, explanation, Bridgeman 51,786-7
- Alteration of, by County Courts Bill of 1888, Hemmons, Wade, Cross - - - 52,077-98
- Tenure, practically permanent, Bridgeman 51,767-71
- Transfer between courts, Coombs - - 54,126-8
- Whole-timers compulsory in courts above 6,000 plaintiffs, Bridgeman - - - - 51,611-2
- Work, nature of, and comparison with other Government offices and solicitors' offices, Bridgeman, 51,665-82; Hemmons, 51,960-96; Wade, 52,165; Lowe, 53,477-81; Davey, 53,666-9; Jennings, 54,053-4, 54,098
- Work in spare time, Coombs - - - 54,163
- Equity and Admiralty jurisdiction, &c., assignment of fees to registrars, Bridgeman - - 51,623-6
- Fees, Bristol, Hemmons - - - - 51,947-52
- Finance arrangements, Bridgeman - - 51,528-61
- HIGH BAILIFFS :
- Appointment, method, Davey - - - 53,676
- Birmingham :
- Absence owing to illness, arrangement re salary, Davey - - - - 53,733-7
- Number of clerks and salaries, Davey 53,648-58
- Brighton, remuneration at, Jennings 54,007-8
- Duties, Bridgeman, 51,588, 51,593-4; Davey, 53,640-7
- previous Experience, Davey - - - 53,679
- an Expiring office, and duties being taken over by registrars, Bridgeman - 51,588-92, 51,621-2
- Payment by results, system not objected to, Coombs - - - - 54,154
- Permanent retention, probable number, Bridgeman 51,616-21
- Qualifications desirable for, Davey - 53,678
- Remuneration :
- Arrangements, and rate, Bridgeman - 51,613-5
- Inadequacy of, Coombs - - - - 54,153-7
- former and present Systems, Bridgeman 51,703-6

County Courts—continued.HIGH BAILIFFS—continued.

Separate from registrars essential in large court,
Davey - - - - - 53,680-3

Staff:

see also Bailiffs above.

Appointment, change of method not advocated while high bailiffs responsible for work and honesty, Lowe - - - - - 53,498

Birmingham, whole-time employees, and no other work allowed during office hours, Davey - - - - - 53,726-9

Dismissal without notice, power of, and cases have occurred, Davey - - - - - 53,718-23

Guaranteed now, Davey - - - - - 53,724

Pay, and opinion re, Birmingham, Davey - - - - - 53,704-9

Pensions:

Contributory scheme would be applicable, Lowe, 53,494-7; Davey, 53,714.

Inconvenience from absence of, and pensions desirable, Davey - - - - - 53,711-2

Process servers, Birmingham, difficulty with, re wages, Davey - - - - - 53,706-7

Promotion:

Extent of, Davey - - - - - 53,703

System, Davey - - - - - 53,738-9

Retention of power of appointment and dismissal desirable, Davey - - - - - 53,716-21

Retirement, fixed age would be approved, and 65 suggested, Davey - - - - - 53,712-3

System of nomination and promotion considered satisfactory, Davey - - - - - 53,702-3

Judges, number, Muir Mackenzie, 44,205-6; Bridgeman, 51,562.

Jurisdiction, Bridgeman - - - - - 51,525-7

Mr. Lowe's evidence agreed with generally, Jennings - - - - - 53,998-9

Re-arrangement of, desirable, so that judges could sit oftener in some places, Bridgeman - 51,850-62

REGISTRARS:

Absences, and arrangements re work during, Wade - - - - - 52,127-32

Appointment:

Continuance of system advocated, Muir Mackenzie - - - - - 55,462-3 by Lord Chancellor instead of by judge not advocated, Lowe, 53,390; Evans, 60,784.

Method and statutory qualification, Muir Mackenzie, 43,999-4,000, 44,002, 44,213-5; Bridgeman, 51,565-7, 51,585; Lowe, 53,386-7; Evans, 60,783

Audit of accounts of, Bridgeman 51,751, 51,891-5

Bristol:

One, with private business, and staff employed in, Hemmons - - - - - 51,953-6

Remuneration, 1912, 1913, 1914, Hemmons - - - - - 51,947-50

Civil servants, number, Lowe - - - - - 53,476

Control of staff and organisation of office by, Lowe - - - - - 53,580-7

Delegation of work to clerks, question as to extent, Bridgeman - - - - - 51,575-7

High Bailiff acting as, method of calculating salary, Coombs - - - - - 54,108-9 also High Court Registrar:

Appointment, by judge not approved, and by Lord Chancellor perhaps assisted by Committee advocated, Muir Mackenzie 44,125-6, 55,458-60, 55,463, 55,482

Arrangement re staff, Bridgeman 51,693-702

in Certain places, Muir Mackenzie - 55,454

Convenient, and the general practice in smaller courts, Coombs - - - - - 54,139-42

Special remuneration, Bridgeman - 51,627

One to each court in each circuit, Muir Mackenzie 44,207

Pensions:

Position re, Heath - - - - - 60,629-34

Private practice would have to be prohibited, Heath - - - - - 60,634

Private practice:

not Allowed, Birmingham, Lowe - 53,444-5

Prohibited in some cases, and officers then pensionable, Bridgeman - - - - - 51,578-82

County Courts—continued.REGISTRARS—continued.*Private practice—continued.

Prohibition, question as to engagement in business, Bridgeman - - - - - 51,580-2 in Some cases, Bridgeman - - - - - 51,583-4

Remuneration:

Arrangements re scale, Bridgeman 51,604-9, 51,723-6

Brighton, Jennings - - - - - 54,002-6

Limit to salaries, Lowe - - - - - 53,368

Payment by results:

no Complaints heard from registrar and system preferred personally, Coombs - 54,119-20

Effect of few committals by judges, Wade - - - - - 52,125-6

Effect on imprisonment for debt, question of, Lowe - - - - - 53,571-8 not a Good system, but possibility of altering doubted, Muir Mackenzie 44,412, 44,224-5, 55,505-6

Instances of questions on which remuneration would depend on line of policy of registrar, Jennings - - - - - 54,071-2

Objection to, in larger courts, and fixed salary advocated, Jennings - - - - - 54,018-36

Objections, Lowe - - - - - 53,460-7 only Possible system in smaller courts, Lowe, 53,460, 53,468-9; Jennings - 54,019

Reply to criticism, Muir Mackenzie 44,410-2

Reason for system and advantages, Bridgeman 51,710-35 considered Satisfactory on the whole by registrars generally, Lowe - - - - - 53,460

Satisfactory on the whole in smaller courts, and the only possible system, Coombs - 54,114-8

Statement by clerks re results of, reply to, Bridgeman - - - - - 51,806-16

Touting for business as result of, Lowe - - - - - 53,462-4

Rochester, Lowe - - - - - 53,364-9

by Salary:

not Advocated and reasons, Bridgeman 51,720-1, 51,793-805

System should be extended, Lowe 53,469-72

in over 6,000 plaintiffs courts, attitude of Treasury re, and fixed salaries not assigned to all, Jennings - - - - - 54,024-34

System, Bridgeman, 51,698-702; Coombs, 54,107

Thrapston and Oundle, Coombs - 54,110-1

Total, Bridgeman - - - - - 51,628

Retirement, fixed age:

Desirable, Lowe - - - - - 53,510-1

70 suggested, Lowe - - - - - 53,512

Reservation of part of salary for late holders, case of, Muir Mackenzie - - - - - 55,498-501

Security given by, and extent of responsibility, Bridgeman, 51,568, 51,744-9, 51,896-904; Lowe, 53,412-9, 53,610-20 practising Solicitors generally, and approval of, Lowe - - - - - 53,388-9

Solicitors as, essential, Mais - - - - - 52,549

Union of courts under one, in some cases, not in exact accordance with meaning of Act, Muir Mackenzie - - - - - 55,467

Whole-time:

Increase desirable where practicable, Muir Mackenzie - - - - - 55,464-5

List of, Bridgeman - - - - - App. XCVIII.

Number might be increased by uniting more than one court under, Muir Mackenzie 55,466

Work of:

Distinction from work as registrar of High Court, Lowe - - - - - 53,341-2

Nature of, Muir Mackenzie, 44,208-12; Bridgeman, 51,569-77; Lowe, 53,329-43, 53,591-602

Registry of judgments, particulars re, and maintenance desirable, Bridgeman - - 51,655-8

SALARIES:

Fees sufficient to pay, with exception of 1915-16, Bridgeman - - - - - 51,542-59

Source of payment, Bridgeman - - - 51,538-61 over 6,000 plaintiffs courts, list of, and allowances at, 1915, Bridgeman - - - - - App. XCIX.

County Courts—continued.

under 6,000 plaintiffs courts, cases known of hardship, but difficulty of giving specific instances, Wade 52,170 in Small places, certain advantage, Muir Mackenzie 55,470

STAFF:

Security of tenure, lack of, dismissal possible by new registrar or high bailiff, and examples, Hemmons, Cross - - - 52,056-69 over 65, number, Cross - - - 52,143-4
Whole and part timers, proportion, Bridgeman,
51,865-7; Hemmons, Wade - - 52,070-2
Whole time, court of between 700 and 800 plaintiffs sufficient for, Wade - - - 52,185
System, Muir Mackenzie 44,202-6; Bridgeman, 51,525
THRAPSTON AND OUNDLE:
Area and population of districts, and industries,
Coombs - - - 54,113
Decrease in work, Coombs - - - 54,105-6
Staff, Coombs - 54, 112-3, 54,124, 54,158-9
Whole-time officers, better that work should be done by, Lowe - - - 53,535-6
Women, employment at Birmingham, Bridgeman 51,871-3

County Court Clerks and Officers Association:

Amalgamation with County Court Officials Association, Hemmons - - - 51,911-12, 51,917-9
Classes represented in, Hemmons - - 51,926-8
Membership, Bridgeman, 51,863-8; Hemmons 51,914-20
Total number of officers in classes represented by,
Hemmons - - - 51,922-5
County Court Officials Association, membership, Wade 51,921

County Courts Department of the Treasury:

ordinary Civil Service rules re leave, &c., applicable, Bridgeman - - - 51,784
Duties, Bridgeman - - - 51,629-58
EXAMINERS:
Appointment, method and success, Bridgeman 51,776-82, 51,834-40
Importance of work, Bridgeman - - 51,830-3
Office, organisation satisfactory, but more convenient if all on one floor, Bridgeman - 51,783, 51,881
Staff, Bridgeman - - - 51,775
Women, employment not considered, and doubt as to possibility, Bridgeman - - - 51,874-80
County Courts Fund, system, Bridgeman - 51,534
Court of Claims, Muir Mackenzie - - 44,304

Court of Criminal Appeal:CLERKS:

Appointment without previous experience in solicitor's office, and success of, Kershaw - 53,270-3
Satisfactory class, Kershaw - 53,270-3, 53,303
Copying of documents in Central Scrivenery Department,
Kershaw - - - 53,306-7
Date of, Kershaw - - - 53,248

REGISTRAR:

Assistant desirable, but might do some work for other masters, Kershaw - - - 53,300 Entirely distinct from masters' department in the King's Bench, Macdonell - - 45,541-8 a Master of the Central Office, Muir Mackenzie 44,254-5
Separation from office of master of Crown Office:
Advocated, Kershaw - - 53,299-300, 53,303
Proposal not approved, Muir Mackenzie 56,350-1
Work of, and responsibility, Kershaw, - 53,296-8
Shorthand typist would be most useful, Kershaw 53,308-12
Staff, Muir Mackenzie, 44,254-5; Kershaw, 53,301

Court of Justiciary:CLERKS:

Appointment:
Method, Crole - - - 56,736-8, 56,788-9
Method satisfactory, Crole - - 56,759-60
Fees charged for translating documents, &c. accounted for to Exchequer, Crole - 56,786-7 Increase of pay, Mackenzie - - - 56,659 criminal Legal experience, importance of, Crole 56,748-9, 56,758, 56,796-802, 56,809-15

Court of Justiciary—continued.CLERKS—continued.

Qualifications, suggestion, Crole - - 56,821
Recommendations of Committee of 1911 re, carried into effect, Crole - - - 56,732-3
Retirement, extension of age to 70 advocated, Crole 56,821 in Training, system, Crole 56,731, 56,760-1, 56,772-9 Transfer between civil work and, question of, and suitability would depend on individual, Adam 56,080-1
Whole time taken up by work, Crole - 56,767
Work of, Crole - - - 56,731, 56,743-52
Constitution, Dodds - - - 55,536
Distinction from Court of Session, Crole 56,770, 56,790-5
Hours of office, Crole - - - 56,766
INCLUSION IN SINGLE SERVICE UNDER PRINCIPAL CLERK OF SESSION:
not Advocated, and reasons, Mackenzie, 56,481,
56,485-7, 56,603-5; Crole, 56,770-1, Jameson, 58,172
Impossibility, Paterson, 57,627-9; Lewis, 59,472,
59,530; R. Munro, 60,179; Scott-Dickson, 60,387-8
Question as to possibility, Adam - - 56,080-3, 56,238-53
Jurisdiction - - - 55,516

MACERS:

former Clerk in Register House as, Crole 56,780-2
Fees from witnesses abolished, Crole - 56,783-4
Number and appointment, method, Crole 56,740-2
Officers, appointment, method, Dodds - 55,608

PRINCIPAL CLERK:

Appointment:
of Barrister from outside preferred to promotion on the whole, Crole - - 56,823-4
Method, Crole - - - 56,734-5
by Promotion, case of, Crole - - 56,823
Control of staff, extent of, Crole - - 56,752-5
Efficiency of work done by, according to the Lord
Justice Clerk, Crole - - - 56,820 Impossibility of Principal Clerk of Session performing duties of, efficiently, in addition to own duties, Crole - - - 56,816-9
Legal knowledge required, Crole 56,748-9, 56,758,
56,796-802, 56,809-15
Tenure of office and no age limit fixed, Crole 56,822
Whole time taken up by work in practice, Crole 56,768-9
Work of, Crole - - - 56,743-52
Records of, custody, &c., Crole - - 56,753-8
Royal Trumpeters, appointment method, Crole 56,741
Sittings, particulars re, Crole - - 56,726-30
Staff of, Dodds, 55,536; Crole, 56,731, 56,740.
Taking of circuit work by Depute Clerks of Session formerly, and failure of, Crole 56,770, 56,804-8

Court of Session:ACCOUNTANT:

Appointment, method, Penney - - 57,724-6
Auditing of accounts of trustees by, extent of,
Penney - - - 57,835-9
Clerical assistance, allowance for, Mackenzie 56,708

Clerks:Appointment:

Competition, question of possibility, Penney 57,734-7, 57,773-7, 57,801
Method and approval of, Penney - 57,727-8,
57,731-3, 57,742-5, 57,773-7, 57,800
Apprentices as, who would eventually pass Chartered Accountants' examinations, attempted, but stopped by Chartered Accountants' Society, Penney - - - 57,808
Civil Service certificates held, Penney 57,738-9
Duties, Penney - - - 57,723

Established:

Appointment, Penney - - - 57,766-7
more Important work done by, Penney 57,768
Increase in number advocated, Penney 57,755-63, 57,769-72

Court of Session—continued.ACCOUNTANT—continued.*Clerks—continued.Higher posts filled by promotion, Penney

57,797-9

proposed Junior clerical class, question as to suitability, Penney - - - 57,809-16Knowledge of Scotch law necessary and method of acquiring, Penney 57,740-1, 57,778-80, 57,804-8Promotion, special grant of increased salary advocated if no promotion after certain length of service, Penney - - - 57,781-2Seven, entitled to pensions, Penney - 57,729-30Service pension on promotion to established post should count from date of original appointment, Penney - - - 57,764-5Department:Branches of, Penney - - - 57,692Hours and holidays, Penney - - - 57,746-9Retirement, no age limit, but Civil Service rule would be approved, Penney - - 57,751-4Staff, Penney - - - 57,718-9Work distributed over whole year, Penney

57,750

Work of, Penney - 57,692-716, 57,783-96,

57,811-47

Duties, Mackenzie, 56,708-10; Penney, 57,718-22Functions re lunatics, Penney - - 57,813-6Functions re minors, Penney 57,694-9, 57,783-96Inclusion in consolidated service under Principal Clerk of Session not advocated, Mackenzie

56,713

Relations to Treasury, Penney - - 57,812Salary and reduction suggested, Mackenzie 56,708, 56,712APPOINTMENT:at All ages, Adam - - - 56,112Committee to advise on:Question of, and some check would be approved if present system retained, and proposed composition, Jameson - 58,149-50, 58,200-10 would be less Satisfactory than present system of nomination by Lord Advocate, Adam 56,114-22Competition:Objection to, Lewis - - - 59,470Open, advocated with regular promotion system, Mackenzie - - - 56,467-71Right class of man might not be obtained, and retention of personal nomination system would be preferred, Adam - - - 56,021-35not Sufficient test, but question of competition among people with certain qualifications and service in law agent's office, Jameson 58,151-5 same Type of man would not be obtained and work would not be as well done, Adam 56,124by the Crown:Retention of system not considered necessary, Dodds, 55,612; Adam, 56,012-3.System of, and fees payable, Adam - 56,010-1Field limited, Adam - - - 56,109to Higher posts:from Outside, and question as to possibility of appointment from office, Adam - 56,000-6 by Promotion and from outside, Mackenzie 56,458Promotion:Advocated, Lewis - - - 59,467-9Preferable as general rule, if men suitable, Adam, 56,006, 56,008-9; Mackenzie 56,463-6previous Legal experience important, Adam 56,028-9on Lord Advocate's nomination, results satisfactory, approval of, Adam - 56,020, 56,221-6 by Lord President:Advocated and Committee of Advice not considered necessary, Jameson 58,147-9, 58,208, 58,211-30, 58,235-8, 58,242-3Objection to proposal, Dunedin - - 58,436Method and opinion re, Dodds, 55,606-8; Adam, 55,998, 56,006, 56,124-6, 56,217-20; Mackenzie, 56,455-8from Outside or by promotion, should be left to discretion of Lord Advocate, R. Munro 60,143-7Court of Session—continued.*APPOINTMENT—continued.*Political considerations:not Approved of and change advocated, Jameson 58,186-99, 58,233-4Elimination desirable, Jameson - - 58,143-4naturally Enter into, Mackenzie 56,460-1, 56,643-7but Fit men appointed, Dunedin - 58,421by Promotion:Instances of, R. Munro - - - 60,165Preferred wherever possible, but hard and fast rule not advocated, R. Munro - 60,135-7Qualifications:Certified law agent advocated in all cases, with system of promotion to higher posts, with exception of Principal Clerk, scheme, Jameson 58,129-46Qualified law agent and recognised equivalents advocated, Lewis - - - 59,446-50Results satisfactory, Adam, 56,124-6; Mackenzie, 56,462; Lewis, 59,451.by Second division clerks examination:Second division clerks too young, Jameson 58,133Suggested, Mackenzie 56,514-9, 56,692-707Standing Advisory Committee, suggestion, and proposed constitution, Lewis - 59,459-69, 59,541-54, 59,557-9, 59,565System satisfactory, R. Munro - - 60,143AUDITOR OF ACCOUNTS:

Accounts and remits dealt with, 1912, 1913, 1914,

Clark - - - 58,548-52Appointment, method, Clark - - 58,536no Arrears of work, Clark - - - 58,553Clerks:Appointment, method, Clark - - 58,557-8Chief, failure of health, Clark 58,558, 58,561-2Pensions, no inconvenience known from lack of, Clark - - - 58,559-62Excerpt of points in Report of, Law Courts Commission in 1868, Clark - - - 58,568Fees for work for Government Departments, and inclusion of work and increased salary would not be objected to, Clark - 58,546, 58,554-7Inclusion in consolidated service under Principal Clerk of Session not advocated, Mackenzie 56,713Official salary, Adam - - - 56,145Pension, no inconvenience known from lack of, Clark - - - 58,559-60Position and duties, &c., Adam - - 55,964-70Practice as law agent not allowed, Clark 58,535Private work, Mackenzie - - - 56,714-8Private taxations done by, particulars re, and opinion as to system, Adam, 55,967-8, 56,139-49; Clark, 58,542-5, 58,547, 58,549-50, 58,563-72.Qualifications required, Mackenzie - 56,456Remuneration, Clark - - 58,539-41, 58,568Retirement, no fixed age, Clark - - 58,537Staff of, Clark - - - 58,538Work of, Clark - - - 58,535all Work sent to, officially, should be done without charge of separate fees, even if salary raised, Mackenzie - - - 56,717-20Bill Chamber, see that title.Books of Sederunt, Adam - - - 55,925-9Box office, Adam - - - 56,064Civil Service basis, no larger number of applicants would be obtained, Adam - - - 56,113CLERKS:Acquisition of law agent's qualifications, question of possibility of, Scott-Dickson - 60,432-40

Appointment of Lord Advocate's Clerk as:

Assistant clerkship should be given to, with subsequent promotion, Salvesen - 58,916-24Capable men appointed, Scott-Dickson 60,352-3Criticism, Lewis - - - 59,455-7as Depute, tradition formerly of right of, but breaking through of, Dunedin - 58,413Justification, R. Munro - - - 60,137Lord Advocate should have free hand as regards appointments, R. Munro - - - 60,141Personal appointments but not political, R. Munro - - - 60,139Practice of, Adam, 56,162-73, 56,223-6; Mackenzie, 56,459.Practice of, but lapse of post, Paterson 57,586-91Practice of, and opinion re, Jameson 58,145, 58,244

Court of Session—continued.CLERKS—continued.

- Appointment of Lord Advocate's Clerk as—cont.
 Recommendation by Lord Salvesen's Committee of preferential treatment of, R. Munro 60,137, 60,140, 60,330
 Removal of tradition would be an advantage if possible, Scott-Dickson - - - 60,460 at 67:
 Case of, Salvesen, 59,039-41; R. Munro, 60,137-9, 60,315-21
 Retirement at 70 a condition of, and question of enforcement, R. Munro 60,265-9, 60,315-21
 Tradition of, Salvesen, 58,934-6; R. Munro, 60,142, 60,149; Scott-Dickson, 63,354.
 Assignment to particular court and no power of transfer, Adam - - - 56,041-8
 Assistant:
 Appointment from outside from Lord Advocate's clerk and subsequent promotion to Clerk of Court, suggestion, Salvesen 58,916-24, 59,060
 Vacation, Adam - - - 56,098
 Delegation of more routine work to junior clerks, no steps taken re, Adam - - - 56,183
 Depute:
 Appointment:
 of Assistant clerks as, preferred to appointment from outside, Dunedin 58,508, 58,511 by Promotion should be compulsory, Dunedin 58,459-64
 Retirement, fixed age for, Mackenzie - 56 637
 Duties, Adam - - - 55,952-5
 previous Legal experience not necessary in all cases, Mackenzie - - - 56,467-71
 Legal knowledge, extent to which necessary, Adam 56,116-8
 Pensionable with exception of one part-timer, Adam 55,990-4
 Prohibition of private practice advocated, Jameson 58,173, 58,245-7
 Qualifications on entering, Adam - 56,111
 Retirement, fixed age:
 if Adopted, 70 would be early enough, with power of extension, Salvesen 58,995, 59,065 not Advocated, Salvesen 58,993-5, 59,009-10, 59,061-6
 Routine work:
 Absence of, Adam - - - 56,127-32
 Separate class for, not necessary, Mackenzie 56,656-8 over 65, cases of, Adam 56,087-95, 56,137, 56,162-3
 Transfers between different branches, question of, Jameson - - - 58,159-62
 Whole-timers, employment not laid down, but the practice since 1905, Adam - - - 55,994-6
 Women, employment would not be objected to, Adam - - - 56,160-1
 Clerks of Court, inclusion in consolidated service suggested, Jameson - - - 58,172
 Constitution, Dodds - - - 55,523-6
CONTROL OVER REGISTER HOUSE:
 Maintenance advocated, Lewis - - 59,488-3
 Opinion re, Dunedin - - - 58,474-84
DISCIPLINE, &C., CONTROL:
 Evolution of system, Adam - - 56,077 by Lord Advocate, not advocated, R. Munro 60,278-87
 by Principal Clerk:
 Dismissal, extent of powers re, and final control by Lord President approved, Adam 56,178-81 proposed Extension not agreed with, Dunedin 58,470
 Extent of powers, Dodds, 55,572-6, 55,597-8; Adam, 55,963, 56,039-63, 56,076, 56,085; Paterson, 57,570-82, 57,616-7.
 Extent of, and approval, Jameson - 58,158, 58,184-5 under Lord President, Adam - - 56,078-9
 Power re, Adam, 56,049-63; Dunedin, 58,465.
 Punitive power, recommendation of Committee of 1911 re increase not carried out, Adam 56,177
 Distinction of Court of Justiciary from, Crole 56,770, 56,790-5
 Extractor's Department, see that title.

Court of Session—continued.

- Hours, Adam - - - 56,096-7
 Hours, extension to 5 o'clock advocated all the year round, Jameson - - - 58,167-8
JUDGES' CLERKS:
 Appointment by judges, Adam - - 55,974
 Control by judges, not by Principal Clerk, Adam 55,984-5
 Duties, Adam - - - 55,971-3
 Emoluments other than salary, Adam - 55,980-3
 Number, Adam - - - 55,975
 Pension system, Adam - - 55,976-9, 55,997
 Jurisdiction - - - 55,516
MACERS:
 Applications, number received on vacancy, Adam 56,152
 Appointment:
 by Crown, no need for retention of system, R. Munro, 60,215-6; Scott-Dickson, 60,389-91
 Method, Adam - - - 55,987, 56,227-36
 Class of men, Adam, 56,153-6, 56,235; Mackenzie 56,689-91
 Disciplinary control, Adam - - - 56,059
 Duties, Adam - - - 56,153
 Emoluments other than salary, Adam - 55,988-9
 Employment of, from Court of Justiciary in times of pressure, Adam - - - 55,986
 Fees to, for witnesses, Mackenzie - 56,624-31
 Nominee of Marquess of Bute not pensionable, but should be, Adam - - - 56,235
 Pensionable with one exception, Adam - 55,997
 Minute book, Adam - - - 55,930-3, 55,952-4
 Moneys consigned in, placed on deposit receipts with banks, not invested, Penney - - 57,704-9
 Officers, whole-time, and making of, Civil Servants as far as pension concerned approved, Adam 56,007
OFFICES, TRANSFER TO PARLIAMENT HOUSE OR CLOSE PROXIMITY:
 Advocated, and advantages to be derived, Adam, 56,071-5; Paterson, 57,595-606; Jameson, 58,165-9; Dunedin, 58,470; Salvesen, 59,001-2; Lewis, 59,478-84; R. Munro, 60,177-8.
 would be a Convenience, but difficulty, Mackenzie 56,557-61 a Matter of practical convenience for agents, advocates not affected by, Scott-Dickson 60,361-4
 Question of, but Extractor's Department would not be affected, Thomson - - - 59,832-4
 Organisation satisfactory on the whole, as regards way work done, Mackenzie - - - 56,478-80
 Pensions, list of pensionable and non-pensionable officers, Adam - - - 55,990, 55,997
 Pooling of clerical, registry, and record-keeping work, no steps taken re, Adam - - - 56,182
 Powers of, re Register of Sasines, legislation should be passed to define, Murray - - 57,873-7
PRINCIPAL CLERK:
 Abolition of second, 1912, Adam - - 56,206-12
 Appointment direct from outside approved, and should be in hands of Lord President, Jameson 58,140, 58,156-7
 Attendance in court, and abolition of right of, not desired, Adam - - - 55,950-1, 56,104
 Clerk desired, Adam - - 56,104, 56,174-6
 Control and supervision by, see under Discipline, &c., Control, above.
 Duties, Adam - - - 55,925, 55,950-1
 Impossibility of performing duties of Principal Clerk of Justiciary Office efficiently in addition to own duties, Crole - - - 56,816-9
 Keeping of own records by, Adam, 56,104-5, Mackenzie, 56,657-8.
 Salary, and increase advocated if responsibilities increased, Adam - - 56,106-8, 56,212
 Six, former system of, Adam, 56,077; Jameson 58,163
 Procedure re cases in, Dodds - - - 55,526-7
 Processes, explanation, custody of, &c., Adam 55,934-42
 Promotion, slow and uncertain, Mackenzie 56,472-3
 Promotions, Paterson - - - 57,657
 Records, custody, Crole - - - 56,756-7
 Register House proper must be kept separate from, Mackenzie - - - 56,496
 Relations to Register House, Dunedin - 58,440

Court of Session—continued.RETIREMENT:

Age limit of 70 in commissions, Adam, 56,014-5, 56,086 ordinary Civil Service rule:

would be Approved for future appointments, Jameson - - - - 58,173-5 would be Approved if extension beyond 65 possible in exceptional cases, Adam, 56,087, 56,133-7 would not be Objected to, Dunedin - 58,496-7

Fixed age would be approved, but 70 early enough, Lewis - - - - 59,486-7

SINGLE SERVICE FOR:

on Civil Service basis, under direct supervision and control of single head, possibility of, and question of inclusion of Court of Justiciary and Teinds Office in general organisation, Adam 56,038-57, 56,077-85

Extent to which possible, Mackenzie, 56,481, 56,485-7, 56,492-3, 56,603-6, 56,713; Crole, 56,770-1; Paterson, 57,584-94, 57,626-31; Dunedin, 58,414-20, 58,504-7, 58,519; Salvesen, 58,912-5, 58,947-50, 59,056, 59,087-90; Lewis, 59,471-6, 59,528-32; R. Munro, 60,179; Scott-Dickson, 60,387-8.

Impossibility of, Scott-Dickson - - 60,387-8

Proposal approved, but doubt as to whether worth while owing to small extent to which possible, R. Munro - - - - 60,179-80

Promotion would be facilitated, Mackenzie 56,466

Question of, and of departments to be included, Jameson - - 58,159, 58,170-2, 58,176-81

Scheme, Mackenzie - 56,479-93, 56,601-13

Teinds Office might possibly be included, Mackenzie - - - - 56,492-3 free Transfer of men between different branches would be desirable, Mackenzie - - 56,489-92

STAFF:

Acquisition of qualification of law agent, impossibility unless apprenticeship received in outside office, Jameson - - - - 58,135-7

Particulars re, and duties, Dodds - - 55,528-35

Private practice should not be allowed, Lewis 59,485

Statutes re, consolidation needed, Dodds - 55,637-8

Statutory regulations of details of, very minute, and possible room for improvement, Dodds - 55,577

Trumpeters, Crown appointments, retention not necessary, Scott-Dickson - - - - 60,389-90

Typewriting largely used by judges' clerks, Adam 56,158-9

Vacation Courts, Adam - - - - 56,099

Vacations, particulars, Adam 56,098-102, 56,258

one Woman attendant, Adam - - - - 56,157

Crichton-Browne, Sir James, Visitor in Lunacy, references - - - - 48,732, 48,736

Criminal Appeal, Court of, see Court of Criminal Appeal.

Criminal System:PRIVATE PROSECUTIONS:

Allowed, but small number of, Scott-Dickson 60,396-7

Case of Coates v. Brown, Salvesen, 59,008, 59,108-14

Prosecutions, system - - - - 60,074

Success of, Salvesen - - - - 59,006-8

CROLE, GERALD LAKE, LL.B., K.C., Principal Clerk of Justiciary - - - - 56,721-824

JUSTICIARY COURT:

Distinction from Court of Session, 56,770, 56,790-5

Records of, custody, &c. - - - - 56,753-8

Royal Trumpeters, appointment, method 56,741

Sittings, particulars - - - - 56,726-30

Taking of circuit work by Depute Clerks of Session formerly, and failure of - 56,770, 56,804-8

JUSTICIARY OFFICE:Clerks:*Appointment:

Method - - - - 56,736-8, 56,788-9

Method satisfactory - - - - 56,759-60

Fees charged for translating documents, &c., accounted for to Exchequer - - 56,786-7 criminal Legal experience, importance of, 56,748-9, 56,758, 56,796-802, 56,809-15

CROLE, GERALD LAKE—continued.JUSTICIARY OFFICE—continued.*Clerks—continued.

Qualifications, suggestion - - - 56,821

Recommendations of Committee of 1911 re, carried into effect - - - 56,732-3

Retirement, extension of age to 70 advocated 56,821

in Training, system, 56,731, 56,760-1, 56,772-9

Whole time taken up by work - - 56,767

Work of - - - - 56,731, 56,743-52

Consolidation with service under Principal Clerk of Session not advocated, and reasons - 56,770-1

Hours - - - - 56,766

Macers:

former Clerk in Register House as - 56,780-2

Fees for witnesses, abolished - - 56,783-4

Number and appointment - - - 56,740-2

Principal Clerk:Appointment:

of Barrister from outside preferred to promotion on the whole - - - 56,823-4

Method - - - - 56,734-5

by Promotion, case of - - - 56,823

Control of staff, extent of - - - 56,752-5

Efficiency of work done by, according to the Lord Justice Clerk - - - 56,826

Impossibility of Principal Clerk of Session performing duties of, efficiently, in addition to own duties - - - 56,816-9

Legal knowledge required, 56,748-9, 56,752, 56,796-802, 56,809-15

Tenure of office and no age limit fixed 56,822

Whole time taken up by work in practice 56,768-9

Work of - - - - 56,743-52

Records, custody, &c. - - - 56,753-8

Staff of - - - - 56,731, 56,740

Register House, training of clerks, same system as in Justiciary Office might be possible but not necessary 56,776

CROSBIE, JAMES CHALMERS, see HAMILTON, JOHN, &c. - - - - 58,573-703

CROSS, F. W., see HEMMONS, A.; CROSS, F. W., &c. 51,908-52,198

CROWN AGENT:

Allowance to, for clerical assistance, R. Munro, 60,110

Amount of time given to official duties, R. Munro, 60,114; Scott-Dickson - - - 60,370

Appointment:

by Lord Advocate, Dodds - - - 55,605

by Lord Advocate, and appointment falls when Lord Advocate remits office, R. Munro 60,110

Change with change of Government, approval of system, Dunedin - - - - 58,485-92

Consultation of, re appointment of Procurators Fiscal advocated, Lewis - - - 59,521-3

Duties of, Dunedin, 58,491; R. Munro - 60,112

Permanent official might be necessary if work extended to include civil work, R. Munro, 60,116-8, 60,288-9

Political office, question of advantage, Scott-Dickson 60,371-4

Post considered essential, Scott-Dickson - 60,365

Solicitor in practice, R. Munro - - 60,113

Crown appointment, see under Appointment.

Crown Office, Scotland:

Clerks, permanent:

Number, salaries, &c., R. Munro - - 60,110

Responsibility of work, R. Munro - - 60,115

CONSOLIDATION WITH SERVICE UNDER PRINCIPAL CLERK OF SESSION:

not Advocated, Mackenzie, 56,485, 56,606; Jameson, 58,172.

Objections to proposal, Adam 56,192, 56,254-5 not Possible, Dunedin, 58,419-20; Lewis, 59,473, 59,530; Scott-Dickson, 60,387-8.

EXTENSION TO ALL GOVERNMENT CIVIL BUSINESS, WITH CERTAIN EXCEPTIONS:

Question of, Scott-Dickson - - - 60,365-9

Suggestion, R. Munro, 60,115-22, 60,288-9, 60,333-7

Work of, R. Munro - - - - 60,111

Crown Office Department of Central Office, England:CLERKS:

- Appointment without previous experience in solicitor's office, and success of, Kershaw - 53,270-3
 Distinction between work of different classes, Kershaw - - - - 53,274
 First class, possible explanation of large proportion of, Kershaw - - - - 53,289
 Number, and number in different classes, Kershaw - - - - 53,265-8
 Satisfactory class, Kershaw - - 53,269, 53,273, 53,303
 Third class, self-contained body, system would not be applicable, Kershaw - - - 53,875-7 Vacations, and arrangement re work during, Kershaw - - - - 53,290-1 one Master and three assistant masters, system considered satisfactory, Muir Mackenzie - 55,351

MASTER OF:

- Duties different from those of masters in the King's Bench Division, and as registrar for Court of Criminal Appeal entirely distinct, Macdonell - - - - 45,541-8
 Separation of Office of Registrar of Court of Criminal Appeal from that of, see under Registrar under Court of Criminal Appeal.

- the most Responsible department of the Central Office, Kentish - - - - 54,285

SEPARATION FROM CENTRAL OFFICE:

- Advocated, and scheme, Kershaw - 53,278-88, 53,303-5
 Proposal not approved, Muir Mackenzie 55,350

WORK:

- Nature of, Kershaw - - - - 53,249-60
 Technicality of, and possibility of reducing, Kershaw - - - - 53,263-5, 53,313-21

Crown Office Department, House of Lords:CLERK OF THE CROWN:

- Amalgamation with secretary's office:
 Advantages, Muir Mackenzie - - 44,302-3, 44,309-10
 Strain on office at times of general elections and coronations, Muir Mackenzie - 44,302-4, 44,478-9
 Ecclesiastical business, Muir Mackenzie 44,480-2
 Position and functions, Muir Mackenzie 44,299-308, 44,311-9
 Finances borne on Supreme Court Vote, although not a department of the Supreme Court, Muir Mackenzie - - - - 44,256
 Position of, Muir Mackenzie - 43,922, 44,299-30
 Work of, and staff, Muir Mackenzie - 44,255

DAVEY, WALTER EDWIN, High Bailiff, Birmingham County Court - - - 53,635-739COUNTY COURTS:*Bailiffs:*Birmingham:

- Appointment of possession men as - 53,701
 Number and wages - - - - 53,659-65
 Class - - - - 53,696, 53,701
 Warrant officers, difficulty of obtaining - 53,699-700

- Work, dangers of, &c - - - - 53,670-5

High Bailiffs:

- Appointment, method - - - - 53,676
 Birmingham, absence owing to illness, arrangement re salary - - - - 53,735-7

Clerks:

- Appointment, age - - - - 53,689
 Birmingham, number and salaries - 53,648-58
 Class of - - - - 53,687
 Dismissal on appointment of new high bailiff not known of - - - - 53,684-6
 Legal experience not necessary, can be obtained in office - - - - 53,690-5
 Work of - - - - 53,666-9
 Duties - - - - 53,640-7
 previous Experience - - - - 53,679
 Qualifications desirable for - - - 53,678
 Separate from registrar essential in large court - 53,680-3

DAVEY, WALTER EDWIN—continued.COUNTY COURTS—continued.*High Bailiffs—continued.*Staff:

- Birmingham, whole-time employees and no other work allowed during office hours - 53,726-9
 Dismissal without notice, power of, and cases have occurred - - - - 53,718-23
 Guaranteed now - - - - 53,724
 Pay, and opinions re, Birmingham - 53,704-9
 Pensions:
 Contributory scheme would be applicable - 50,714
 Inconvenience from absence of, and pensions desirable - - - - 53,711-2
 Process servers, Birmingham, difficulty with, re wages - - - - 53,706-7
 Promotion:
 Extent of - - - - 53,703
 System - - - - 53,738-9
 Retention of power of appointment and dismissal desirable - - - - 53,716-21
 Retirement, fixed age would be approved and 65 suggested - - - - 53,712-3
 System of nomination and promotion considered satisfactory - - - 53,702-3

DAVIS, A. E.; LISTER, J. E.; and JONES, R. W., representing the District Probate Clerks Association - - - 53,075-244DISTRICT PROBATE REGISTRIES:*Agency business:

- Division of fees between registrar and clerks - 53,164-8
 Doing of, during office hours - - 53,179-86
 Fees received, amount - - - - 53,219-31
 System, and charges - 53,169-78, 53,232-44

Clerks:

- Ages of - - - - 53,120-2

Appointment:

- Favouritism in cases where relatives appointed not known of - - - - 53,198-9
 Method - - - - 53,197
 Chief, should be eligible for district registrarships - - - - 53,136-41
 Copying by, extent of - - - - 53,105
 Holidays, Liverpool - - - - 53,155

Pensions:

- Absence of, results in men staying on when no longer efficient - - - - 53,120-5
 Civil Service examination should not have to be passed by present staff - 53,131, 53,187
 Granting of, by Treasury to certain clerks, on opinion of law officers, but subsequent change of opinion - - - 53,110-9
 Important position of clerks an argument for - - - - 53,128-31
 Men of certain length of service should be made pensionable without having to pass medical examination - - - 53,188-96
 all Past service since Judicature Act should count - - - 53,131, 53,202, 53,209-12
 Promotion, slowness of - 53,084-8, 53,101-2
 Retirement, fixed age advocated, and 65, with exceptions, suggested - - 53,127, 53,135

Salaries:

- not Affected by posts not being pensionable - 53,203-8 in Different registries fairly proportionate - 53,156-61 possible Explanation of lowness of - 53,208
 Fixed, examples of, and system of increments desired - 53,086-9, 53,101-2, 53,131-2
 Fixing of - - - - 53,213-7
 Inadequacy of, in smaller registries, and in case of junior clerks in larger - 53,100-2
 Whole time taken up by work in registry - 53,132-4, 53,142-52
 Office hours, but clerks sometimes work longer, Liverpool - - - - 53,153-4
 Small, amalgamation into larger suggested, and larger salaries and better promotion would result - 53,162-3
 District Probate Registry Clerks Association, representative nature of - - - - 53,077-9

Debenture Holders' Actions:

Nature of work involved in, Romer - - - 44,817-9,
App. XCVI.
Transfer from Chancery to Companies (Winding-up)
Department, question of, Barnes, Manson, 49,218-25
Deeds, Register of, see Register of Deeds.

DENMAN, ARTHUR, Clerk of Assize of the South
Eastern Circuit - - - - 51,407-521

ASSIZE, CLERKS OF:Appointment:

by Committee, no advantage seen - 51,462-5
Method - - - - 51,432-7

Appointment of subordinate officers as, cases of,
and opinion re - - - - 51,473-7

Associates:

Duties - - - - 51,413-5
Employment at Royal Courts of Justice might be possible when no circuit work, but no other officers - - - - 51,486-8

Practice at County Courts on circuit, case of,
and objection to - - - - 51,430

practising Barristers as a rule - - 51,452
ex-Cavalry officer as, case of - - 51,452-3

Clerk of Indictments, duties - - - 51,413-5

Combination of functions with post in Central Office, would be impossible - - - 51,485-7

Duties - - - - 51,445-7

Judges' sons as, and opinion re, and certain advantage - - - - 51,449-61, 51,466-9

Number - - - - 51,410

Office held for life, but power of removal by Lord
Chancellor - - - - 51,504-5

Offices embodied in - - - - 51,412, 51,415

Offices in London and arrangements re - 51,420-3

Parentage of present men - - - - 51,469-71

not Pensionable - - - - 51,478

Private practice allowed - - - - 51,428-9

Records, arrangements re - - - - 51,424-7

no Regular attendance required and not an officer of the High Court - - - - 51,418-9

Retirement, no fixed age, and cases of continuance in office when unfit - - - - 51,480-4

Salaries - - - - 51,411

Statutory qualification - - - - 51,472

Subordinate officers:Appointment:

by Clerk of Assize, desirable - - - 51,440-4, 51,517-21

Method and objections to, 51,438-44, 51,517-21

Clerk of Assize has power of removal with sanction of Treasury - - - - 51,444

not Pensionable - - - - 51,478-9

Private practice allowed but cannot be done
51,430, 51,494

Retirement, no fixed age and some inconvenience from - - - - 51,481

Salaries and inadequacy of 51,416-7, 51,484, 51,490-3

Work outside assizes - - - - 51,431

Tea planter as, case of - - - - 51,511-2

Utilisation of local registrars, suggestion not agreed with - - - - 51,488-9

ASSIZE OFFICERS:

Interpreters, fees to - - - - 51,515

Retirement, no fixed age and procedure in case of failure - - - - 51,506-7

Staff, increase in work - - - - 51,491-503

Travelling allowances - - - - 51,513-4

Circuits, amount of time occupied by, in year 51,419

Discipline, Leave, &c.:

Application of Civil Service Regulations to, legal position re, and difficulty with regard to Long Vacation, Muir Mackenzie - - - 44,157-60

APPOINTMENT OF OFFICIAL TO BE RESPONSIBLE FOR:
Advantage doubted, Kentish - - - 54,393-5

would be Approved if the right man, Haldane
60,937

Proposal approved, Macdonell, 45,299-304; For,
47,982; Stringer, 49,729-39; Townsend, 52,402-8

Proposal not altogether approved, and no advantage over, Muir Mackenzie - - - - 55,322-36 would be Useful if sufficient work for, Heath

60,487-9

Regulation of, by Rules of Court, Muir Mackenzie
44,357

District High Court Registries:

Amalgamation of District Probate Registries with, see under District Probate Registries.

CLERKS:Appointment:

Method, Mais - - - - 52,495

Open competition at 18-24 advocated, and same examination as for Probate registries, Mais 52,502

Establishment, no difficulties as regards control over clerks and discipline anticipated, Mais 52,507-10

Pensions:

Advocated for whole-timers, Mais, 52,499-501,
52,514-24

Advocated, and suggested method, Morton, 52,664

Inconvenience from lack of, Morton, 52,654-7, 52,665

Permanent in practice, but dismissal possible, Mais 52,497-8

Retirement, 60 suggested, Morton - - 52,657

Salaries, system, Mais - - - - 52,492-4

Jurisdiction, Muir Mackenzie, 44,257; Mais, 52,590

no Limit of jurisdiction, Mais - - - - 52,587

MANCHESTER:

see also under District Probate Registries.

Amount of business, Mais - - - - 52,606-7

Clerks, previous experience of, Mais - 52,503-6

Registrar, previous experience, &c., Mais 52,553-63

Staff, Mais - - - - 52,490-1

Number, and reduction in, not necessary, Mais 52,588, 52,591

REGISTRARS:

Appointment, method, Muir Mackenzie
43,999-4000, 44,002, 44,215-6

Appointment of district probate registrars as, undesirability of, Morton 52,631-48, 52,723-31

Birmingham, remuneration, Lowe - - 53,362

Number pensionable, Mais - - - - 52,511-3

Private practice, objection to, Morton - 52,669 may be Qualified to become registrars of Principal Registry, Simpson - - - - 52,975-7

Qualifications required, Morton - - - 52,632

Solicitors as, essential, Mais - - - - 52,549

Statutory qualifications, Morton - - - 52,647-8

Ten years' practice as solicitor desirable as a rule,
Morton - - - - 52,724-31

Work of, and importance, Morton
52,631-2, 52,640-5

System, Bridgeman - - - - 51,525

Transfer of work to London, possibility of, Mais 52,588-90

Work well done as far as experience of witness goes,
Morton - - - - 52,666-7

District Probate Registries:

ABOLITION OF SMALLER OR CONCENTRATION IN LARGER CENTRES:

no Hardship would result to public, Mais 52,527

Merging of some of smaller into larger, suggestion, Musgrave - - - - 44,731-5, 46,209-18

Question as to extent to which registries could be reduced, Mais - - - - 52,541-2, 52,586

Recommendation of Legal Departments Commission of 1874 re concentration of, question as to reasons for non-carrying out of, Mais 52,530-6

Staff question, Mais - - - - 52,543

Suggested, and larger salaries and better promotion would result, Davis - - - - 53,162-3 would be Useful, Muir Mackenzie - - - 55,473-5 old Wills might be transferred to London, Mais 52,544-8

Alteration of districts, legislation would be necessary, Musgrave - - - - 46,480-2

AMALGAMATION WITH OTHER DISTRICT REGISTRIES: would be Convenient in smaller places, and question of, in larger, Lowe - - - - 53,436-43

Desirable, but difficulties, Muir Mackenzie, 44,145-8, 44,231-3, 55,479-82; Bridgeman, 51,841-9

Efficient carrying out of work doubted, and reasons, Mais - - - - 52,549, 52,571-84

Legislation question, Lowe - - - - 53,545-9

Objections, Musgrave - - - - 44,736-7

Possibility of, Morton, 52,701; Lowe, 53,540-4

Possibility of carrying out work by one person, question of, Alms, 53,034-9; Shadwell, 53,040-5

District Probate Registries—continued.AMALGAMATION WITH OTHER DISTRICT REGISTRIES
continued.

- would be Practicable and desirable, Jennings
54,067-9, 54,083-8
- Question of, Simpson - - - - - 52,927
- no Reason seen for, and difficulties of, Evans
60,780-3
- Same areas for Probate and High Court work, but not same staff, question of, Mais - 52,585-7
- Suggestion, Morton, 52,668-70, 52,676-91, 52,702-14 would not Tend to efficiency, Alms - 52,931-2
- Applications, receipt of, by post would be an advantage, but clerks might claim extra payment, Simpson
52,986-90
- Created by Act of 1857, Bayford - - - 48,173
- CLERKS:
- Ages of, Davis - - - - - 53,120-2
- Allowance to, by registrars for extra official work, case of, Shadwell - - - - - 53,051-2
- Appointment:
- Favouritism in cases where relatives appointed not known of, Davis - - - - - 53,198-9
- Irregularity in method of, Shadwell
52,808-22; Simpson, 52,823
- Method, Musgrave, 46,281-6; Davis, 53,197
- by Open competition at 18 to 24 or 18 to 20, suggestion, Mais - - - 52,592-4, 52,604-5
- System not approved, and open competition advocated, Mais - - - 52,478-85, 52,480-3
- same Class not required as at Principal Registry, and no transfer between, Musgrave - 46,327-32
- Copying by, extent of, Lister - - - 53,105
- Duties of, Alms - - - - - 52,843-50
- Eligibility for district registrarship:
- not Advocated as a whole, Musgrave - 46,522-7
- Chief clerks should be eligible, Davis 53,136-41
- Employment on other than registry work occasionally, Musgrave, 46,287-8, 46,504; Mais, 52,598-9; Alms, 53,025-30
- Establishment, no difficulties as regards control over clerks and discipline anticipated, Mais 52,507-10
- Holidays, Liverpool, Lister - - - 53,155
- Number, question whether excessive, Musgrave,
46,275-8, 46,507-10; Mais, 52,597
- Old clerks taken on when new registrar appointed,
Mais - - - - - 52,600-1
- not Pensionable, and reasons, Musgrave, 46,279-80
- Pensions:
- Advocated, and reasons, Mais, 52,472-4; Morton,
52,664; Alms, 52,841.
- Civil Service examination should not have to be passed by present staff, Davis, 53,131, 53,187
- Contributory scheme:
- would be Advantageous, Muir Mackenzie
55,491-6
- Salaries would have to be raised, Alms
52,886-9, 52,980-1
- Granting of, by Treasury to certain clerks, on opinion of law officers, but subsequent change of opinion, Musgrave, 46,305-8; Simpson,
52,830-7; Davis, 53,110-9.
- Important position of clerks an argument for,
Davis - - - - - 53,128-31
- Inconveniences from absence of, by men staying on when past work, Morton, 52,654-7, 52,665;
Simpson, 52,870, 52,873-4, 53,009-16; Davis, 53,120-5
- Legislation would be necessary, Heath 60,614-7
- Men of certain length of service should be made pensionable without having to pass medical examination, Davis - - - 53,188-96
- all Past service since Judicature Act should count, Davis - - - 53,131, 53,202, 53,209-12
- System of appointment would have to be changed,
Heath - - - - - 60,618-20
- Permanent Civil servants appointed by Civil Service examinations, reason against, Musgrave
46,286
- Position, Musgrave, 46,502-3; Shadwell, 52,977-9
- Promotion, slowness of, Davis 53,084-8, 53,101-2
- Question whether whole time of, occupied by work of registry, Alms, 52,849-56; Shadwell, 52,857-68; Simpson, 52,869-72; Davis, Lister
53,142-52

District Probate Registries—continued.CLERKS—continued.

- no Registry with less than two, Musgrave 46,505
- Retirement, fixed age for:
- Advocated, and Civil Service rule would be approved, Mais - - - - - 52,475-7
- Advocated, and 65, with exceptions, suggested,
Davis - - - - - 53,127, 53,135
- Sixty suggested, Morton - - - - - 52,657
- Salaries:
- Adequate, but system of increments instead of fixed salaries would be preferable, Mais 52,486-9
- not Affected by posts not being pensionable, Davis
53,203-8
- Comparison with those of solicitors' clerks,
Alms, 52,890-1, 52,895-6; Simpson, 52,892-5, 52,896
- in Different registries fairly proportionate, Davis
53,156-61
- possible Explanation of lowness of, Davis 53,208
- Fixed, examples of, and system of increments desired, Davis 53,086-9, 53,101-2, 53,131-2
- Framing of, Davis - - - - - 53,213-7
- Inadequacy of, in smaller registries, and in case of junior clerks in larger, Davis 53,100-2, 53,132-4
- Salaries and system, Musgrave 46,272-4, 46,506
- Solicitors' clerks generally, Simpson - - - 52,894
- Copies of all wills and grants since 1857 kept at Somerset House, Musgrave - - - 46,255-8
- Copying of wills, typewriting desirable, but application not allowed, Shadwell - - - 52,866-8
- Fees, higher than in Principal Registry, and more work therefore sent to London, and uniform scale desirable, Simpson, Alms, Shadwell - 52,902-7
- GRANTS MADE IN, NUMBER:
- 1859 and 1913, Simpson - - - - - 52,901
- 1913, Simpson - - - - - 52,897
- fairly Steady from year to year, Simpson 52,898
- Hours, Alms, 53,017-21; Lister - - - 53,153-4
- Keeping of ancient records at, Musgrave - 46,251-8, 46,262-6
- Large estates dealt with, Alms - - - 53,031-3
- Location, question as to reason for, Musgrave
44,729-30
- MANCHESTER:
- Appointment as District High Court Registrar authorised by statute but not obligatory,
Morton - - - - - 52,634-8
- Clerks, previous experience, Mais - - - 52,484
- Combination with High Court Registry, method of working and hardship, Mais - - - 52,584
- Staff, Mais - - - - - 52,469-7
- Number, Musgrave - - - - - 44,728
- Number, increase, might be advantageous, Shadwell
52,910
- Probate agents at smaller places instead of, question as to feasibility, but Inland Revenue officers would be suitable, Musgrave - - - - - 46,237-50
- READJUSTMENT OF, TO CORRESPOND WITH PRESENT
IMPORTANCE OF PLACES:
- Desirable, and little local criticism anticipated,
Muir Mackenzie - - - - - 44,149-50
- Question of possible advantage, Shadwell, Alms,
Simpson - - - - - 52,908-26
- Redistribution would be advantageous if one complete scheme, Evans - - - - - 60,771-3
- REGISTRARS:
- Agency business:
- Abolition:
- Arrangement would have to be made as regards present holders, Evans
60,789, 60,883-8
- Business might still be transacted by post,
Evans - - - - - 60,789-90
- Amount of fees taken for correspondence work,
Alms, Shadwell, Simpson - - - 53,046-51
- Attitude of legal profession, Morton, 52,716;
Alms - - - - - 52,948
- if not Carried on, work would probably be sent to London, Alms - - - - - 52,963-5
- Continuance of system was not intended beyond life of holders at the time, Evans - - 60,786

District Probate Registries—continued.

REGISTRARS—continued.

Agency business—continued.

not considered Contrary to Rule 5 of Rules and Orders of 1863, Shadwell, Alms - 52,959-69
 Convenience of system to public, and should continue, Shadwell, Alms, 52,945, 52,952, 52,970

Division of fees between registrars and clerks, Davis - - - - 53,164-8

Doing of, during office hours, Davis, Lister, Jones - - - - 53,179-86 when Done in office hours, fact should be considered with regard to compensation, Muir Mackenzie - - - - 55,507-11

Fees:

Amount of, Davis - - - - 53,219-31

Exceed amount of salary in some cases, Evans 60,788

no List of, Evans - - - - 60,786-7

Fixed fees might be allowed by Treasury for correspondence work, Evans - - 60,883

Justification for charge being made, Shadwell 52,949-51

Nature of, and fees derived from, Morton 52,715-22

Objections to system, Evans 60,785-94, 60,883 as Part of official duties, question of, and of extra salary, Muir Mackenzie, 55,485-8; Shadwell, 52,957-8; Simpson, 52,991-3.

Practice of receiving applications by post, Alms, Simpson - - - - 52,938-42

Question considered formerly, and reason for no interference, Muir Mackenzie - 55,484-5

System, and charges, Davis - - 53,169-78, 53,232-44

System, and objections to, Mais - 52,616-22

Treasury minute re, March 1861, Shadwell 52,955-7

Appointment:

Committee, proposal approved, Simpson, 52,781-2;

Alms - - - - 52,782

Method, Alms - - - - 52,777

Present system considered satisfactory, Shadwell 52,778, 52,780-1

Appointment of clerk from Principal Probate Registry as, and subsequent promotion to District High Court Registrarship, undesirability of, Morton - - 52,631-48, 52,723-31

Appointment as registrars of Principal Registry, see under Registrars under Probate Registry, Principal.

Barristers and solicitors, numbers and places, Shadwell 52,749; Simpson 52,762, 52,764-5; Alms, 52,763.

Class of persons appointed as, and appointment from clerks of Principal Registry preferred, Musgrave - - 44,608-12, 46,219-36

Clerks in Principal Registry as:

no Definite right of appointment, and local men should be admitted in many cases, Evans 60,764

Number, Shadwell - - - - 52,748

Particulars re cases, Collins, Leader, 46,599-606 larger Proportion of appointments, claim to, Collins, Leader - - 46,566-70, 46,586-7 should be best Qualified on principle, Alms 52,930-1

most Suited, Simpson - - - - 52,928

System approved, Bayford - - 48,144-8

Directions given to, by Principal Registry, Musgrave - - - - 46,267

Giving of whole time to work insisted on in recent appointments, Musgrave - - - 44,740-2

Holding of other official posts by, Simpson, 52,759-61; Alms, 52,759.

Local solicitor as, private practice not allowed in recent cases, Musgrave - - - 46,231-4

Lump sum provides coal, stationery, &c., Mais 52,602-3

Man with experience in Central Registry more suitable than local solicitor, Mais - 52,550-1

Manchester, automatically the District High Court Registrar, Mais - - - - 52,552

District Probate Registries—continued.

REGISTRARS—continued.

Payment, method, Musgrave 44,738-9, 46,205-7

Pensions:

should be Granted as matter of course after certain service, and suggestion in case of part-time officers, Alms, 52,803-6; Shadwell, 52,806-7

Position re, Musgrave, 46,270-1; Shadwell, 52,783, 52,784-96, 52,802; Alms, 52,783, 52,799-802; Simpson, 52,790-1, 52,796-8.

Principle and practice re charging for letters, Simpson, 52,995 - 3000; Shadwell, 53,001-2, 53,004-8; Alms, 53,003-5, 53,025-6; Heath, 60,621-6.

Private practice:

probably still Allowed in considerable number of cases, Evans - - - - 60,767

Prohibition:

in All cases of appointment from Principal Registry, Evans - - - - 60,765 in recent Appointments, Evans - 60,764-7

Desirable, but difficulty in small registries, Evans - - - - 60,768-70

Only in own registry in some cases, Simpson, 52,754; Alms, 52,736-7, 53,053-6, 53,065-74

Private practice and other occupations, position re, Simpson, 52,767-9; Alms, 52,769-70; Shadwell, 52,769 no Private practice, a condition of appointment in some cases, Shadwell, 52,751-3; Simpson, 52,753.

Qualifications, experience as solicitor, question of combining of, with experience as clerk in Principal Registry, Alms, Shadwell 53,057-64 also Registrar of County Court, no case known of, Shadwell - - - - 52,757-8

Responsibility of, Alms - - - - 52,851

Salaries, Musgrave - - - - 46,208

Salaries:

at Different places and inequality as compared with amount of work, Mais - - 52,608-15

Readjustment needed, Mais - - 52,612-3

Same as High Court Registrar in certain places, Shadwell, 52,755-6; Muir Mackenzie, 55,452-3.

Tenure of office, Musgrave - - - 46,268

Whole time not taken up by work in some cases, Shadwell, Simpson, Alms - - - 52,771-6

Work, simple nature of, Morton, 52,667, 52,686-8

Sending of papers through Inland Revenue Officers, system, Musgrave, 46,238-48; Simpson, 52,920-2.

Small, advantage to public, Morton - - 52,671

Staff, whole-time, should become Civil Servants, Mais 52,567-9

Statistical returns of, for year ended 31st December 1914, summary, Simpson - - - App. C.

SUBSTITUTION OF INLAND REVENUE OFFICERS FOR SMALL REGISTRIES:

not considered Possible, Alms - - - 52,912-9

Suggestion, Morton - - - - 52,672-5

Suitability of Inland Revenue offices for work, Musgrave - - - - 46,237-50

System advantageous, Shadwell - - 52,908

TERRITORIAL JURISDICTION, ABOLITION:

Advocated and would be approved, Mais, 52,536-40, 52,587; Morton, 52,692-3; Alms, Simpson, Shadwell, 52,933-7.

no Objection known of, Muir Mackenzie, 55,476-8

Question of, but no great inconvenience seen from present system, Evans - - - 60,774-9

OLD WILLS:

Local preservation of, desirable, Shadwell, Alms 52,974

Steps taken re preservation, protection from fire, indexing, &c., Simpson, Shadwell, Alms, 52,971-3, 52,982-5; 53,022-4

WORK:

Comparison with Central Registry, Musgrave, 46,326-7

apparently Done reasonably well, Bayford 48,105

Nature of, Musgrave 44,491-513, App. XCV.

District Probate Registrars Association, membership, Alms - - - - 52,766

District Probate Registry Clerks Association, representative nature of, Davis - - - 53,077-9

DISTURNAL, WILLIAM JOSIAH, K.C., Recorder of the Borough of Dudley and representative of General Council of the Bar -	47,530-630
ASSIZE, CLERKS OF :
Appointment, method and qualifications, and no change desirable -	47,600-10,47,625-30
all Barristers now as a rule -	47,604
Duties -	47,590-2
Relationship to judges, &c. -	47,625-30
Salaries -	47,608-9
Cases for trial, work done by barristers and solicitors respectively in preparation of	47,547-50, 47,611-3
CIRCUIT OFFICERS :
Associate, duties -	47,593-5
Clerk of Indictments, duties -	47,591-3
Organisation, duties, &c. -	47,589-610
KING'S BENCH MASTERS :
Appointment:
of Barristers:
Approved -	47,536
Only, since taxing work removed and success of -	47,662-70
more Suitable generally speaking than solicitors	47,546-61, 47,611-3
Committee on which outsiders represented would be objected to -	47,545
Nominations by Rule Committee, suggestion,	47,543, 47,545
previous Practice at the Bar should have been for not less than 10 years -	47,536-42 present System of, by Lord Chancellor, Lord Chief Justice, and Master of the Rolls, approved -	47,543-4, 47,614-24
Duties :
Order XIV. summonses -	47,552-7
re Preservation or sale of property, the subject matter of an action -	47,559-61
Summons for directions -	47,551-2
Efficiency of, and work well done -	47,570-1
Pensions, adding of years for, system should be retained but should be considered in each individual case -	47,576-8
Relationship to judges -	47,619-24
Salaries, sufficiently good men attracted by	47,574-5
King's Bench offices, no criticism to be made	47,573
MASTERS, FIXED AGE FOR RETIREMENT :
Disadvantages of general rule -	47,579-88
no Public disadvantage from lack of, known in recent years -	47,583
DODDS, SIR JAMES MILLER, K.C.B., Under-Secretary for Scotland -
Admission of notaries, clerk to, functions	55,546
Advocates Depute, appointed by Lord Advocate,
APPOINTMENTS :	[55,605]
Committee to advise on, no advantage seen	55,648
Competition, no reason known against extension of by the Crown:	[55,645-7]
Explanation and effects -	55,609-12
Reduction of number:
Legislation would be necessary	55,639-40
Suggestion, but Lord Advocate should be consulted -	55,612, 55,636, 55,641
to Higher posts:
from Outside as a rule -	55,642
Political considerations believed to come in	55,643-4, 55,655-6
Nomination by Lord Advocate -	55,519
Commissary Clerk of Midlothian, functions and jurisdiction -	55,569-70
Commissary Clerks, duties merged in office of Sheriff's Clerk, except in Midlothian -	55,570
COURT OF JUSTICIARY :
Constitution -	55,536
Officers, appointment, method -	55,608
Staff -	55,536
COURT OF SESSION :
Appointments:
by the Crown, retention of system not considered necessary personally -	55,612
Method -	55,606-8
Constitution -	55,523-6
Discipline, &c., control by Principal Clerk of Session, and extent of power	55,572-6, 55,597-8
Procedure re cases in -	55,526-7
Staff of, and duties -	55,528-35

DODDS, SIR JAMES MILLER, K.C.B.—continued.
COURT OF SESSION—continued.
Statutes re, consolidation needed -	55,637-8
Statutory regulations of details of, very minute, and possible room for improvement -	55,577
Court of Teinds -	55,528-30
Crown Agent, appointed by Lord Advocate	55,605
Engrossing Staff, Committee on, recommendations carried out, generally speaking -	55,652
Keeper of the Signet, functions -	55,545-6
LORD ADVOCATE :
Duties and functions -	55,518-9
Establishment and staff under -	55,520-2
Lord Chancellor, no control over Scotch legal departments except justices of the peace -	55,657-9
Minor Legal Appointments, Departmental Committee on, extent to which recommendations carried out -	55,652-3
PROCURATORS FISCAL :
Appointment, by Lord Advocate	55,565, 55,605
Disciplinary control by -	55,581
Dismissal, power of -	55,582
Duties -	55,564
Number -	55,565
Responsibility of -	55,601-4
Staff:
Allowance system not considered satisfactory, and reference to report of Minor Legal Appointments Committee -	55,627-35
Appointment, method -	55,626
Particulars re arrangement and payment	55,565
Whole-time officers as a rule, but question considered on vacancy -	55,568
REGISTER HOUSE :
Appointments, method -	55,613-5, 55,617
Chancery Department, abolition under consideration -	55,618
Departments of, particulars re -	55,539-44
Director of Chancery, functions -	55,543
Discipline, &c., administration system -	55,578-80
Historical Department -	55,541
Record Department -	55,539-41
Register of Deeds -	55,543
Registry of Sasines -	55,541-3
Retirement, age for -	55,616
Retirement, no reason known against application of Civil Service rules -	55,650-1
SCOTTISH LAND COURT :
Appointments, method -	55,620
Constitution -	55,549-51
Disciplinary control -	55,583
Duties -	55,548
Establishment, 1911 -	55,547-8
Secretary for Scotland, extent of control of legal departments, and opinion re -	55,571-600
SHERIFF CLERKS :
Appointment, method -	55,622-3
Duties, &c. -	55,561-3
Responsibility of -	55,600-4
not necessarily Whole-time officers -	55,566
Whole-time officers, question considered on vacancy	55,568
SHERIFF COURTS :
Cost supported by local funds -	55,555-6
Discipline, &c., control -	55,581
Staff:
Allowance system not considered satisfactory, and reference to report of Minor Legal Appointments Committee -	55,627-35
Appointment, method -	55,624
Particulars re -	55,561-3
System -	55,552-7
SHERIFFS, SHERIFFS DEPUTE, OR SHERIFFS PRINCIPAL :
always Advocates -	55,553
Functions -	55,552
Non-resident in jurisdiction -	55,554
SHERIFFS SUBSTITUTE :
Appointment, method -	55,621
Jurisdiction, &c. -	55,661-2
Number and jurisdiction -	55,554
Salary -	55,650
Whole-time officers -	55,567
Staff, alteration in numbers or scale of pay, procedure -	55,584-95
Dumfries and Galloway, Sheriff, see under Sheriffs.

DUNEDIN, THE RIGHT HON. THE LORD, K.C.V.O. :

58,411-531
Advocates Depute, change with change of Government, approval of system - - - 58,485-90

APPOINTMENT :

Advisory Committee, objections to proposal 58,436, 58,510, 58,521
Lord Advocate as authority, approval of, and advantages - 58,436, 58,509-14, 58,520-1
Open competition, objections to 58,447-51, 58,515-8
Political considerations :

Effects on politics, question of - - 58,527-31
Method of preventing, question of - 58,522
Services considered rather than opinions 58,523
Qualifications, as law agent, opinion re - 58,452-8
Secretary for Scotland's position re - 58,437-46

Bill Chamber, system of promotion with other offices would not be suitable - - - 55,416-7

COURT OF SESSION :

Appointment :

by Lord President, objection to proposal 58,436
Political nature of, but fit men appointed 58,421

Chief Clerk :

Supervision by - - - - 58,465
Supervision, proposed extension not agreed with 58,470

Depute clerks :

Appointment by promotion should be compulsory - - - - 58,459-64
Appointment of assistant clerks as, preferred to appointment from outside - 58,508, 58,511
Tradition formerly of right of Lord Advocate's clerk to appointment, but breaking through of 58,413

Offices, transfer to Parliament House would be more convenient - - - - 58,470

Retirement, ordinary Civil Service rule would not be objected to - - - - 58,496-7

Single service, extent to which possible, and opinion re - - 58,414-20, 58,504-7, 58,519

CROWN AGENT :

Change with change of Government, approval of system - - - - 58,485-92
Functions - - - - 58,491

Crown Office, inclusion in single service with Court of Session not considered possible - 58,419-20

Extractor's Office, system of promotion with other offices, question of possibility - - 55,417-9

Lord Advocate, permanent legal secretary, proposal not agreed with - - - - 58,497-8

PROCURATORS FISCAL :

Appointment :

by Promotion and transfer, difficulty - 58,432-4
Systems - - - - 58,424, 58,436

Private practice :

no Objection known to, but should not be allowed where salaries sufficient - 58,428-9 Restriction of, and reason - - - 58,424-7
if made Public appointments pensions should be given - - - - 58,493
Retirement, fixed age would not be objected to, if pensionable - - - - 58,496-7

REGISTER HOUSE :

Control by Court of Session, opinion re 58,474-84
Method of recording deeds, change in, question as to authority required - - - 58,476-8
Relations to Court of Session - - - 58,440

Sasines, Register of, question of relations of Keeper with Deputy Clerk Register - - - 58,472-3

SHERIFF CLERKS :

Appointment :

Consultation of Sheriff re - - - 58,421 of Local people always - - - 58,434-5
Method - - - - 58,443-5

Depute :

Pension question - - - - 58,494-5
Promotion and transfer by Lord Advocate in consultation with Sheriff preferred - 58,501-3
Retirement, fixed age would not be objected to, if pensionable - - - - 58,496-7
Number, reduction, recommendation of Lord Salvesen's Committee agreed with - - 58,467-9
Peripatetic official to supervise work of, objection to proposal - - - - 58,465-6
Promotion and transfer, by Lord Advocate in consultation with Sheriff preferred - - 58,501-3

DUNEDIN, THE RIGHT HON. THE LORD, K.C.V.O.

—continued.

SHERIFF CLERKS—continued.

if made Public appointments pensions should be given - - - - 58,493
Retirement, fixed age would not be objected to if pensionable - - - - 58,496-7

Staff :

Promotions and transfers, Committee of Sheriff Clerks to decide on, objections to proposal 58,498-500

System and opinion re - - - - 58,423

Sheriffs substitutes, appointed personally by promotion and transfer irrespective of political considerations - - - - 58,420, 58,431-2

Teinds Office, clerk, appointment by promotion from another office, impossibility - - - 58,414-6

Edinburgh :

Commissary Clerk, see that title.

Procurator Fiscal, see under Procurators Fiscal.

Engrossing Staff, Committee on, recommendations carried out, generally speaking, Dodds - 55,652

EVANS, THE RIGHT HON. SIR SAMUEL, President of the Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Division :

60,739-893

Appointment, Advisory Committee, if created, heads of departments should be represented - 60,746-8

Attendance book, actual time of arrival should be signed - - - - 60,872-3

COUNTY COURT REGISTRARS, APPOINTMENTS :

where County Court and High Court registries combined, by Lord Chancellor and not by County Court judge, proposal not agreed with 60,784
Method - - - - 60,783

DISTRICT PROBATE REGISTRIES :

Amalgamation with County Court and High Court registries, no reason seen for, and difficulties of 60,780-3

Redistribution would be advantageous if one complete scheme - - - - 60,771-3

Registrars :

Agency business :

Abolition :

Arrangement would have to be made as regards present holders 60,789, 60,883-8
Business might still be transacted by post 60,789-90

Continuance of system was not intended beyond life of holders at the time - 60,786

Fees :

Exceed amount of salary in some cases 60,788
no List of - - - - 60,786-7

Fixed fees might be allowed by Treasury for correspondence work - - - 60,883

Objections to system - 60,785-94, 60,883

Clerks in Principal Registry as, no definite right of appointment, and local men should be appointed in many cases - - - 60,764

Private practice :

probably still Allowed in considerable number of cases - - - - 60,767

Prohibition :

in All cases of appointment from Principal Registry - - - - 60,765

in recent Appointments - - - 60,764-7

Desirable, but difficulty in small registries 60,768-70

Territorial jurisdiction, question of abolition, but no great inconvenience seen from present system - - - - 60,774-9

Hardy, Mr., appointment as registrar, Exeter, 60,891-8

PRINCIPAL PROBATE REGISTRY :

Attendance book, supervision of - - 60,872-5 no Business transacted by post, but would be a convenience and question as to power to change rule - - - - 60,795-9, 60,863-71

Clerks :

Appointment, open competition from general Civil Service list no objection seen in principle, but little improvement anticipated and certain amount of freedom should be left to appointing authority - - - 60,751-61, 60,827-9

Retirement, ordinary Civil Service rule would be approved, but 65 rather early - 60,800-6

EVANS, THE RIGHT HON. SIR SAMUEL—*continued.*PRINCIPAL PROBATE REGISTRY—*continued.*Clerks—continued.

- Second class, direct appointment, power might be advantageous - - - 60,822
 System of appointment to third class and promotion to upper classes, opinion re - 60,819-24
 Women, question as to employment of 60,876-7
 Overstaffing question - - - 60,836-53
 Senior registrar, position of, and question of responsibility as regards staff - - 60,848-62

PROBATE AND DIVORCE DIVISION:

Appointments:

- Selection method - - - - 60,749-55
 Transfer to Lord Chancellor, opinion re proposal 60,741-5
 Vacancies, publication not necessary owing to large number of applications - - 60,749
 Clerks, previous legal experience not necessary 60,760-3, 60,825-6
 Disciplinary control - - - - 60,817-8
 Number of staff and salaries, control by Lord Chancellor - - - - 60,807-16
 Registrars:
 Attendance in Court, need for - - 60,830-5
 Retirement, question of fixed age, and 70 might be reasonable - - - - 60,801-6

Extractor's Department:

- Amalgamation of Chancery Department with, not advocated, MacDougall, 55,853; Thomson, 59,825, 59,827-9

ASSISTANT EXTRACTOR:

- Appointment by Extractor should be discontinued and question of alternative method, legal experience must be secured, Thomson - 59,800-8
 Hardship of position, and refusal of Treasury to allow retirement on pension or superannuation, Thomson - - - - 59,795-9, 59,848-53
 Non-retirement at 70, question of, R. Munro 60,270-2

- Omission from Bill making appointment Crown appointment owing to intervention of then Principal Extractor, Thomson 59,797, 59,900-2
 Salary, arrangement re extra 100*l.* a year for certain period, Thomson - - - - 59,880-8

CLERK OF THE RECORDS:

- Appointment of Extractor should be discontinued and question of alternative method, legal experience must be secured, Thomson - 59,800-8
 Omission from Bill making appointment Crown appointment owing to intervention of then Principal Extractor (Mr. William Duncan), Thomson - - - - 59,795
 Remuneration, recommendation of Committee of 1911 re improvement not carried out, Thomson 59,809-11

CLERKS:

Payment:

- by Piecework, effect on length of extracts, Adam 56,193-6; Mackenzie, 56,633-4.
 by Salary now, Adam, 56,196; Mackenzie, 56,632
 Reduction in numbers and payment by salary instead of by piece, and results, Thomson 59,775-80, 59,782

- Disciplinary control, Adam, 56,056-7; Thomson 59,821, 59,841-6
 Duties, and legal knowledge required, Adam 55,943-9

EXTRACTS:

- Acceleration of work, Thomson 59,794, 59,908-13 part Custody of, by Deputy Clerk Register, Thomson - - - - 59,772-4
 Long warrant, shortening not carried out, and legislation necessary, Thomson - - 59,783-4
 Preparation by Clerks of Session and deputies, impossibility, and separate department must continue, Thomson - - - - 59,819-20
 Shortening of, Thomson - - - - 59,781-2
 Formation, reason for, Adam - - - - 56,077

INCLUSION IN SINGLE SERVICE WITH COURT OF SESSION:

- not Possible, Salvesen - - - - 59,087
 Suggested, Mackenzie - - - - 56,482-4
 Pensions advocated and 70 suggested as age for retirement, Thomson - - - - 59,903-7

Extractor's Department—continued.

PRINCIPAL EXTRACTOR:

Appointment:

- Crown, and fixed age limit, Thomson - 59,785-6 from Outside from members of the profession should continue, Thomson - - - 59,914
 Political considerations, Thomson - - 59,894-9
 Personal performance of duties now, Thomson 59,793-4

- Private practice not allowed now, Thomson 59,790-3

PROMOTION BY TRANSFER WITH CERTAIN OTHER DEPARTMENTS:

- Desirable, Thomson - 59,821-3, 59,876-9, 59,889-93
 Question of possibility, Dunedin - - - 55,417-9
 Relations of Principal Clerk of Session to, Adam 56,060-3

STAFF:

- Ages of, and periods of service, Thomson 59,780
 Particulars re, Thomson - - - - 59,775
 Position of, Thomson - - - - 59,787-8, 59,795 proposed Transfer of duties of Extractor to Depute Clerks of Session, and to charge of Principal Clerks, objection to, Jameson - - - 58,163-4 Transfer between Bill Chamber and Court of Session should be possible to some extent, Lewis 59,474-6, 59,529

TYPEWRITING:

- to be Introduced in future, and question of lady typists, Thomson - - - 59,811-8, 59,835-40
 Possibility of alteration not a practical difficulty, Thomson - - - - 59,867-75

Women typists:

- should be Civil Service appointments, and some legal experience would be required, Thomson 59,854-7, 59,861
 Promotion, no prospects seen, Thomson 59,859-66

- Work of, Mackenzie, 56,684; Thomson, 59,768-74.
 Faculty of Procurators, Glasgow, representative, see Murray, Dr. David - - - - 57,848, 58,509

- FARMER, CHARLES EDWARD, Senior Registrar in the Chancery Division 45,168-265, 46,713-954

CHANCERY OFFICES, AMALGAMATION:

- not Advocated, and reasons 45,257-64, 46,736-61
 would be Impossible without attachment of registrars to particular sets of chambers, and objection, but question of possibility of rotating 46,737-46, 46,751-4

Masters could not draw registrars' orders,

- 46,865-78
 would Open avenue of promotion to third class clerks - - - - 46,771
 Recommendation by Kekewich Committee of 1907 that offices should remain separate, and reasons, 45,259-62, 46,738

CHANCERY ORDERS:

- no Delay in drawing up, at present, owing to steps taken - - - - 46,820-2 never Drawn up by solicitor - - - - 45,233-5

CHANCERY REGISTRARS:

- Appointment, by selection and not seniority, recommendation of Kekewich Committee not agreed with - - - - 46,798-809, 46,834

Clerks:

- Appointment, method, and examination would be deprecated - 46,762-4, 46,767, 46,772-3, 46,902-3, 46,912-3

- Attendance-book - - - - 46,775

- Explanation re organisation - - - 45,183-5, 46,910, 46,921-30

- Hours - - - - 46,775-80

- Petition clerk and clerk of entry, explanation and one clerk would be sufficient - 45,198-9, 46,794, 46,900-1

Principal:

- Appointment by promotion - - - 46,914-5
 Number to be decreased to eight - 45,194
 Three, without legal qualifications, and appointment considered illegal - 46,830-1, 46,837-42
 Work - - - - 45,241-4
 Work different to that of second class clerks in other offices - - - - 46,916
 Qualifications required - - - - 46,949-54

FARMER, CHARLES EDWARD—continued.CHANCERY REGISTRARS—continued.*Clerks—continued.*Retirement:

Civil Service rule of voluntary retirement at 60 and compulsory at 65, would not be objected to as regards new appointments

46,795-7

One second class clerk of 65, case of 46,794

Statutory qualifications - - - 45,176-7

Statutory right of succession to registrarship, but none of present clerks have vested right, but came in on tacit understanding of succession, 45,174-5, 45,178-82, 46,713-35, 46,885-96, 46,931-6

Third class:

no Avenue for promotion, 46,765-70, 46,773-4, 46,824-6

Cases of, aged 54 and 55 on appointment 46,904-6

Difference of work from that of second class clerks and third class clerks could not do 46,827-33

Hardship of position, and some if not promoted should have higher salary 46,773, 46,826, 46,941-2

Promotion, possible occasionally by special application - - - 46,943

Work of - - - 46,883

University and legal qualifications - 46,803-6

Vacations - - - 46,781-90

Deputy Registrars, cases of - - - 46,946-8 no Distinction between training of, and that of masters - - - 46,848-64

Establishment - - - 45,183-200

Hours - - - 46,776-8

Junior:

Doubt whether notice to, re retirement at 70 is binding - - - 46,937

Special position of - - - 45,192-5

Number to be reduced to eight - - - 45,194

Orders drawn up in office:

Consultation of masters re, in some cases 45,245-6

Nature of - - - 45,214-8

Process of drawing up, &c. - - - 45,231-56

Proportion of - - - 45,219-30 may now be Relieved of part of work in court by clerks - - - 45,206-8

Report of Kekewich Committee, extent to which carried out - - - 46,817-24

Retirement:

in Consequence of ill health, under pressure known of, and power re - - - 46,938-40

no Fixed age, but 70 would not be objected to 46,791-2

Senior:

Control over clerks, extent of, and increased power not desired - - - 46,810-3

no Responsibility re work of other registrars, and increased power (as recommended by Kekewich Committee) not desired - 46,810-5

Shorthand writing, not required in office- 46,823

Statutory position and qualifications, and opinion re - - - 45,171-5, 46,721, 46,731, 46,843-7

Vacation work - - - 46,784-8, 46,879-82

Vacations - - - 46,782-3, 46,788

Work of - - - 45,201-56

Charitable endowments - - - 46,917-20

Fife and Kinross, Sheriff, see under Sheriff.

FISHER, JAMES, second class clerk in General Office of Sasines:

- - - 59,262-321

REGISTER OF SASINES, CLERKS:

Appointment, method, and qualifications required, 59,267-70

Comparison with second division clerks 59,271-83, 59,304, 59,310-21

Higher posts filled from, with exception of Keeper 59,280-3, 59,306-9

Report of Lord Low's Committee quoted re need for knowledge of conveyancing - - - 59,266

FLEMING, JAMES A., Sheriff of Fife and Kinross:

- - - 59,322-441

Appointment, objections to Committee 59,395-404

FLEMING, JAMES A.—continued.PROCURATORS FISCAL:

Amalgamation of districts, proposal objected to 59,428-9, 59,436-8

Appointment:

System approved - - - 59,334

by Transfer, approval of, if suitable - 59,339-40

Sheriff Maconochie's evidence agreed with 59,332-3

Number, reduction not advocated - - - 59,335

Private practice, no objection to, and advantage of 59,336-8

Staff, payment system - - - 59,405, 59,430

SHERIFF CLERKS:Appointment:

Political, not ideal, but results satisfactory on the whole - - - 59,367-71 of Political agents in some cases - - - 59,412-6

by Promotion, desirable as far as possible and question re qualifications and obtaining of 59,344-9

Restriction to deputed not advocated 59,355-6,

Clerks: 59,364-73

Boys, difficulty of keeping, for more than a few years - - - 59,351

Difficulty of obtaining boys in smaller towns, but would be avoided if boys could become law apprentices - - - 59,362-3

Pensions not advocated generally, except to few special senior clerks - - - 59,391-3, 59,431

Promotion by transfer, question of, and difficulty of cost of removal 59,351-4, 59,356-61

Court work only, and not process clerks, opinion re recommendation - - - 59,377-82

Depute:Appointment:

by Promotion desirable as far as possible and question re qualifications and obtaining of 59,344-9

Restriction to clerks in office not advocated 59,355-6, 59,364-76

Promotion of clerks to, desirable, and service as clerks should count toward pension 59,432-3

Public appointments approved - - - 59,439-41

Reappointment or not, by new Sheriff Clerk, recommendation re - - - 59,350

Sheriff Maconochie's remarks generally agreed with - - - 59,341

Number, reduction, recommendation of Lord Salvesen's Committee not agreed with 59,377-83

Pensions advocated for Sheriff Clerks and deputies, and should apply also to part-time officers 59,385-92, 59,409-10

Private practice should not be allowed if whole time can be taken up by official work, but approved otherwise - - - 59,384, 59,394

Public appointments approved - - - 59,439-41

Qualifications, legal training considered desirable, official experience can be picked up as regards smaller towns - - - 59,342-3, 59,417-26

Retirement, fixed age advocated and 70 suggested 59,385-8

Salaries, small, but no claim to increase 59,394

Staff, payment system - - - 59,405-8

Whole time, increase not advocated unless work sufficient - - - 59,426-8

SHERIFFDOMS:

Dumfries and Galloway, organisation and staff, &c. 59,325-6, 59,328

Fife and Kinross, organisation and staff, &c. 59,326-31

Forfarshire, Sheriff Courts, see that title.

FOX, MASTER JOHN CHARLES, Master of the Supreme Court in the Chancery Division

- - - 47,743-48,098

Chancery Clerks, transfer between divisions would be undesirable - - - 48,071

Chancery judges, explanation of "linked judge" system and advantages of - - - 47,901-14

CHANCERY MASTERS:Appointment:

Committee to report on qualifications of candidates, proposal approved - - - 47,788-91

Forty should be minimum age - - - 47,877

Judge should have voice in selection - 47,787-8

48,003-8

FOX, MASTER JOHN CHARLES—*continued.*CHANCERY MASTERS—continued.

Appointment of clerks as, not advocated, unless with 10 years' practice as solicitor - 47,749-52
 Appointment of official to be responsible for discipline, &c., in office, would be advantageous

47,982

three Attached to each linked pair of judges instead of four, objections to proposal - 47,819
 Attachment to judges, importance of - 47,914-5

Clerks:

Absence owing to illness, procedure in case of, and uniformity of practice desirable

47,975-81

Appointment:

Direct to office instead of transfer from other offices important - - - 47,753

Direct, to second class, of solicitors' clerks of 25-35 with at least five years' experience advocated 47,754-71, 47,996-8000, 48,035-43, 48,059-78

Apportionment of work among, and suggestion, 48,047-51

Attendance-books, system and uniformity desirable - - - - 47,969-74

First class:

Devolution of work to lower class not desirable 47,809-17, 47,870, 48,089

Number, justification for - - - 47,867-70

Work of - - - - 47,869

Organisation - - - 47,966-8, 48,044-6

Promotion:

Selection preferable, but difficulty - 48,094-6 by Seniority at present, subject to certificate

48,090-3

Retirement, if fixed age adopted, 75 suggested

47,876, 47,894-900

Second and third classes, reduction in number 47,856-66

Third class:

Appointment:

Age limits, 20-25 suggested - 47,779-80

Competition, not advocated - 47,784-6

System approved, but service in solicitor's office should be essential qualification

47,781-6

Better class than necessary - - - 48,055-6

Five years' experience in solicitor's office desirable for 47,772-8, 47,782-3, 47,955-6, 48,082-5

Pooling of work not considered desirable

48,097-8

Promotion not advocated except in exceptional cases 47,754-60, 47,943-65, 48,017-26, 48,057-8, 48,086-8

Supervision of, question of 48,044-6, 48,052-4

Work distinct from that of higher classes 48,022

Experience, value of - - - 47,891-3, 48,009-16

Number:

no Addition to, when number of judges increased 48,027-31

Present, considered necessary - - - 47,818 more Orders might be drawn up by, which now drawn up by registrars - 47,863, 47,922-3

Organisation satisfactory, and no delay on part of Court - - - - 47,871-5

Retirement, fixed age for:

not Advocated, but opinion might be modified if system of added years applied to - 47,876-81

70 too early, 75 early enough - - - 47,881-93

Senior:

Appointment by election instead of seniority, suggestion - - - - 47,987-93

Responsibility of, as regards organisation in office, discipline, &c. - - - 47,983-5

Shorthand writers. desirable for, and every third class clerk should be - - - 47,851-3

Solicitors most suited for, and qualification of 10 years' practice should be retained - 47,747-8, 47,876

Uniformity of practice, steps taken to ensure 47,802

Work:

Decrease in amount, but increase in importance 47,819-63

FOX, MASTER JOHN CHARLES—*continued.*CHANCERY MASTERS—*continued.*Work—continued.

Devolution to clerks:

Further, impossibility - - - 47,792-808

Mr. Toye's suggestions re, comments on 47,798-808

Holding of auctions - - - 47,836-46

Nature of, examples - - - 47,834-5 constantly Taken home - - - 48,079

CHANCERY OFFICES, AMALGAMATION:

possible Advantages and disadvantages 47,936-9

Impossibility of masters sitting in court and doing chamber work as well, but special assignment of two officers for present registrars' work would meet difficulty - - - 47,924, 47,926-35

Question of - - - - 47,924-42

Question of, from point of view of different sources of appointments - - - 47,940-2

Registrars not considered fitted to undertake work of masters - - - - 47,924

Chancery Orders, division between masters and registrars - - - - 47,917-21

Chancery Registrars, work in court, delegation to clerks not advocated - - - 47,916

Garrett, Mr., Principal Clerk to Chancery Registrar, reference - - - - 46,884-96

GILES, G., Senior Procurator Fiscal Depute, Glasgow, see HORN, W., &c. - - - 58,746-844

GOODCHILD, FREDERICK CHARLES, Managing Clerk to Messrs. Trinder, Capron & Co. 47,402-529

BANKRUPTCY DEPARTMENT:

Clerks to registrars:

Efficiency of - - - - 47,490

Promotion from third class clerks not advocated 47,491-2

Official receivers, capability of examiners to 47,490

Chancery masters, appointment from first class clerks not advocated - - - - 47,478

CLERKS:

Appointment:

Direct to higher classes:

Advocated as a rule, and promotion in exceptional cases - - 47,409-13, 47,435-6, 47,493-5 of Managing clerks in solicitors' offices with 15-20 years' experience, proposed 47,438-41

Question whether present rates of pay would be sufficient attraction - - 47,446-9 should be to Second class with subsequent promotion to first - - - 47,437

Selection should be made by high officials with whom managing clerk comes in contact

47,438, 47,442-5

Third class, legal experience not absolutely necessary, but junior clerks in solicitors' offices would sooner acquire knowledge of duties - - 47,415-7, 47,496, 47,522-5

Retirement, fixed age not advocated, and no case known since Judicature Act of officer remaining in office when not fit. - - - 47,460-2

Third class:

Promotion from:

should be in Exceptional cases only 47,409-13, 47,418

should be in Same department only 47,418, 47,428-31

Transfer between departments, objection to 47,419-34

Work, mechanical nature of - - 47,409-10

Transfer between departments, objection to

COMMERCIAL COURT: 47,419-22

Clerk to, appointment suggested in order to secure continuity of practice - - 47,463-76

Elasticity of practice in - - - 47,463-76

Orders, drawing up of, by solicitors - 47,464-6

HOURS:

Approved from solicitor's point of view, and extension not desired - 47,453-6, 47,497-521

Question as to amount of work that could be done by clerks, &c., after 4 o'clock closing to public 47,500-21

Master, fixed age for retirement not advocated, and no case known since Judicature Act of officer remaining in office when not fit 47,460-2

GOODCHILD, FREDERICK CHARLES—cont.

Solicitors' offices, hours in - 47,503-4, 47,526-9

TAXING MASTERS:

Appointment from first class clerks in Taxing Office, and managing clerks advocated 47,477-85, 47,489

Clerks, third class, not considered necessary 47,485-8

VACATIONS:

more Liberal interpretation of "Vacation business" would be an advantage - 47,457

Masters, two, instead of one, would be advantageous - 47,458-9

Recommendations of Royal Commission on Delay in King's Bench Division, not advocated 47,458

Goodies, Mr., clerk in Manchester High Court Registry, reference - 52,564-6

Grantham, Mr., clerk of assize, reference - 51,469

GREGORY, JOHN ROGER BURROW, member of the Council of the Law Society, and solicitor and member of firm of Rawle, Johnstone & Co.:

47,182-401

Central Office, appointment of clerks by competition, objection to - 47,257-66

Chancery chambers, work excellently done, and no delay - 47,234-5

CHANCERY CLERKS:

Appointment:

Direct, to upper classes:

would be Approved in some cases 47,276-80, 47,342-53 previous Experience as solicitor's clerk, essential - 47,369-78, 47,363-8

Young admitted solicitors, or middle-aged managing clerks, would be suitable 47,281-6

Promotion by selection essential to efficiency, and suggested method - 47,267-78, 47,336-7

Chancery judges, registrars should be attached to groups of, for drawing up orders and scheme 47,233, 47,236-54, 47,333, 47,340-8

CHANCERY MASTERS:

Amalgamation with Chancery registrars:

Advocated, and proposed method 47,238-54, 47,332-5

Inconvenience caused by present system 47,253-4

Clerks, appointment:

Competition, objections to proposal 47,257-64, 47,338-9

Results satisfactory - 47,256, 47,264

Solicitors as, considered essential - 47,204, 47,206, 47,229-32, 47,398-401

Work:

more Administrative and less judicial than that of King's Bench masters - 47,226-7 further Delegation to clerks not considered possible - 47,307

CHANCERY REGISTRARS:

Office overstaffed, and suggestion re reduction 47,340-8

Solicitors as, essential - 47,255, 47,398-401

CLERKS:

Third class, promotion:

by Committee, suggestion - 47,394-6

to Higher classes, should be possible, but must be on merit - 47,267-78, 47,336-7, 47,388-93

Transfers between departments not desirable 47,329-31

Useful for clerk before appointment to have knowledge of different offices - 47,329

HOURS, 10-4:

Easy, but later hours not desirable from point of view of solicitors - 47,287-9

Masters and clerks frequently work later 47,289-90

KING'S BENCH MASTERS:

temporary Arrears of work owing to emergency legislation - 47,188, 47,196

Lists, method of arranging, and complaint re 47,188-94

Solicitors as, no reason known against, but not essential, as no control of staff by 47,197-206, Work: 47,398

Certain, might be delegated to assistant masters 47,307-10 well Done on the whole, and no serious delay 47,188, 47,195

GREGORY, JOHN ROGER BURROW—continued.

Lunacy masters, solicitors as, no reason known against, and advantages - 47,311, 47,358-61

Lunacy Office, work well done owing to competency of first class clerks - 47,311-3

RAWLE, JOHNSTONE & Co., MESSRS.:

Organisation of office - 47,314-28, 47,382

Pensioning of clerks - 47,380-1

Solicitors' offices, organisation of work - 47,314-28

TAXING MASTERS:

Clerks:

should not be Eligible for promotion as masters, and reasons - 47,217-22, 47,354-7

Solicitors' clerks, advocated as - 47,214-6

Solicitors as, essential and reasons 47,207-13, 47,398-401

Work:

no substantial Arrears - 47,224-5

Well and fairly done - 47,223

VACATION, LONG:

more Liberal interpretation might be put on "Vacation business" - 47,292-7

Recommendation of Royal Commission on Delay in King's Bench Division re offices being open after and before sittings of Courts, would be advantageous - 47,298-306

Two masters instead of one, might sit during 47,293-4

GREGORY, SIR PHILIP, representing the Bar Council: 55,126-188

Appointment, Committee to advise Lord Chancellor, question of, as regards Land Registry - 55,137-8

CLERKS, ADMISSION TO THE BAR:

Land Registry clerks allowed 55,181, 55,187-8

Prohibition, extent of - 55,183-8

LAND REGISTRY:

Appointment of technical staff by open competition not advocated; - 55,172-4

Assistant registrars:

Appointment by Lord Chancellor, continuance of system advocated - 55,138

Barrister or solicitor as, question of - 55,153-60

Commendation of work done by - 55,146

one Solicitor among, would be advantageous 55,141

Statutory qualifications and retention advocated 55,138-40

Clerks:

Admission to the Bar:

Encouragement desirable - 55,182

Possibility of - 55,181, 55,187-8

First class, opinion re claim to position of assistant registrar - 55,143-4

Legal qualifications, question as to need for 55,142-4, 55,175-9

Two grades, professional and non-professional, proposal probably good - 55,145

Work believed to be well done - 55,146-50

Combination with land valuation, question of 55,161-71

District registrars, statutory qualifications 55,138

Organisation and arrangement of office, no change suggested - 55,151

Registrar:

Appointment by Lord Chancellor, continuance of system advocated - 55,135-8

Barrister as, advantages over solicitor 55,152-6

Commendation of work done by - 55,146

Qualification of 10 years' standing at the Bar, should be retained - 55,133-4, 55,153-4

Qualifications required - 55,133

whole Registration of titles in the country may be centred in, ultimately - 55,131-2

HALDANE OF CLOAN, THE RIGHT HON. VISCOUNT

60,899-61,007

APPOINTMENTS, ENGLAND:

Advisory Committee:

Approval of suggestion - 60,904-9

proposed Composition - 60,910

on Lines of Advisory Committees for appointment of Justices of the Peace not advocated 60,958-61

Promotions should come under - 60,927-8

Recommendations should not be publicly known 60,906

HALDANE OF CLOAN, THE RIGHT HON. VISCOUNT

—continued.

APPOINTMENTS, ENGLAND—continued.

- Committee, Lord Loreburn's suggestion not agreed with - - - - - 60,904 Competition, limited, suggestion re, 60,914, 60,916, 60,970-2 by Competition for general offices and selection for others, suggested, but possibility of promotion advocated - - - - - 60,915-9 previous Legal experience not essential as a whole for clerks - - - - - 60,912, 60,915 all Patronage should be exercised by Lord Chancellor - - - - - 60,901-3, 60,949 on School-leaving certificate, suggestion, 60,912-4 60,970-2, 61,000

APPOINTMENTS, SCOTLAND:

by Lord Advocate:

- Advisory Committee:
 Composition, question of - - - - - 60,978-94 would be Improvement for lower posts 60,944-6, 60,973-7
 Approval of, and transfer to Secretary for Scotland not advocated - - - - - 60,973-5
 Political considerations:
 Elimination question - - - - - 60,944-6
 Extent of - - - - - 60,944
 Scotch people have no strong feeling against 60,944-6, 61,005-7

by Secretary for Scotland, Advisory Committee would be approved for minor appointments 60,995-8

Chancery offices, amalgamation, approval of proposal 60,941-2

Discipline, &c., Chief Clerk to be responsible for, would be approved if the right man - 60,937

Justice, Minister of, need for, and scheme 60,907, 60,966-9

Land Registry, opinion re employment of women 60,962-3

LORD CHANCELLOR:

Ecclesiastical patronage, removal question, but no improvement can be suggested on present system 60,999

Office:

- Development of - - - - - 60,951
 Improvement question - - - - - 60,952-4
 Representation in House of Commons, suggestion of Lord Muir Mackenzie not agreed with, and suggestion re method - - - - - 60,955-7
 Responsibility to Parliament, question of 60,949
 Work excessive - - - - - 60,907

LUNACY, VISITOR IN:

- Legal, abolition not advocated - - - - - 61,002
 Woman, would be useful and one of medical visitors might be - - - - - 61,001-2

MASTERS AND REGISTRARS:

- Appointment of relations of judges, existence of legal families - - - - - 60,948
 Senior, appointment by selection advocated, 60,935
 Organisation, proposed Minister of Justice would deal with - - - - - 60,966-9

PROMOTION:

- Clerks should have chances of - - - - - 60,918-9
 by Committee, suggestion - - - - - 60,927-8
 Eligibility of clerks for promotion to masterships and registrarships advocated in case of very exceptional abilities - - - - - 60,934 by Seniority tempered by selection, suggestion 60,922-33

RETIREMENT:

Clerks:

- Ordinary Civil Service rule might apply 60,940
 70 suggested as age for, with possibility of extension in very exceptional cases - 60,938
 Masters and Registrars, 70 with power of extension would be approved - - - - - 60,939

WOMEN, EMPLOYMENT OF:

- as many Offices as possible should be thrown open to - - - - - 60,943
 Opening of legal professions to women advocated 61,003-4
 Regular method of appointment would be necessary - - - - - 60,964-5

HAMILTON, ANDREW, see HAMILTON, JOHN, &c. - - - - - 58,573-703

HAMILTON, JOHN; HAMILTON, ANDREW; and CROSBIE, JAMES CHALMERS, in Sheriff Clerk's offices - - - - - 58,573-703

SHERIFF CLERKS:

Clerks:

- Appointment direct from school generally 58,611-3
 Appointment and dismissal should be dealt with by Committee of Sheriff Clerks' Association 58,630-6
 Difficulty of obtaining and keeping 58,613-6, 58,654-8, 58,672-8,
 Glasgow, personal clerks to resident Sheriffs Substitute, responsibility of work and inadequacy of pay - - - - - 58,638-47
 Hours - - - - - 58,665-6, 58,667, 58,701
 Pensions desirable if salaries not increased 58,695-6

Promotion:

- Clerks would be willing to move - 58,659
 General system of, under Committee of Sheriff Clerks' Association - 58,620-37, 58,660-3
 Want of - - - - - 58,620 not Represented before Minor Legal Appointments Committee - - - - - 58,679-80
 Salaries and inadequacy of, and comparison with second division clerks, &c., and private offices, 58,589-606, 58,617-9, 58,648-53, 58,664-5, 58,668-71, 58,681-2, 58,683-8, 58,697-700
 Work outside office, question as to possibility 58,702

Depute, appointment from outside, case of 58,609-12, 58,691-4

Sheriff Clerks' Association, explanation - 58,660

HANSELL, EDWARD WILLIAM, Barrister 50,881-993

BANKRUPTCY DEPARTMENT:

Clerks:

- some, Barristers and have become so since appointment as clerks - 50,901, 50,904-5, 50,981-3

Commendation of, and up-to-date legal knowledge - - - - - 50,894-901

First class, two instead of one, suggested 50,963-6

Open competition not advocated, nomination and present qualifying examination preferred 50,940-4

Professional qualifications desirable but need not be barristers - 50,933-5, 50,938-9

Promotion, selection according to merit and suitability for post - - - - - 50,953-60

Retirement, no objection to fixed age 50,945-7

Third class, promotion to first and second classes, no reason known against - 50,936-7

Late hours worked in some cases - 50,968-73

Official shorthand writers - - - - - 50,926-8

Orders:

Drawing of, procedure - - - - - 50,919-23

Minutes not drawn by counsel - - 50,919-20

Organisation found satisfactory - - 50,925

Registrars:

- Appointment, system satisfactory in results and work well done 50,883-7, 50,890-1, 50,948-52
 Attendance in court, but necessity doubted 50,909-21

Barristers best qualified to be - - 50,892-3

Clerks should not be eligible - - 50,902-4 in Court, often consulted by judges - 50,914-5

Retirement, no necessity seen for fixed age 50,930-2

Work, importance of - - - - - 50,888-9

Shorthand notes, delay experienced in getting transcripts - - - - - 50,925-9

Taxation work, transfer to Central Taxing Office not advocated and reason - - - 50,991-3

CLERKS, ADMISSION AS BARRISTERS:

- Practice of Inns of Court re, believed not to be uniform and cases decided on merits and no definite rule known - 50,905-8, 50,984-90
 Prohibition, justification for - - 50,976-81
 Companies (Winding-up) Department, work less and less arduous than in Bankruptcy Department 50,888, 50,964-5

Hardy, Mr., Assistant Clerk, Chancery Registrars Office, reference - - - - 46,904-6
 Hardy, Mr., appointment as Registrar, Exeter, Evans 60,891-8

HARRISON, ANDREW, Sheriff Clerk of Midlothian 59,119-261

Appointments, political, effect on politics 59,248-52
 REGISTER OF SASINES, CLERKS :

Comparison with men in law offices not apt 59,292-305

Promotion, slow rate anticipated for certain number of years owing to bringing in of men from outside about 1899 - - 59,284-7, 59,313-6

Second class, claim to special treatment re minimum and maximum salary - - 59,288-305

SHERIFF CLERKS :

Appointment:

from Deputes, no political considerations involved - - - - 59,253-4

Political - - - - 59,165 of Political agents - - - - 59,245-52

for Political reasons, tendency to leave work to deputies - - - - 59,260

Appointment of staff by, political appointments not known of - - - - 59,259-61

Clerks:

Age of entry - - - - 59,140-2

Difficulty of obtaining suitable men - 59,148-9

Promotion:

Committee of Sheriff Clerks, objection to proposal - - - - 59,180-91

Men should have chance of, without acceptance being compulsory - 59,143-9, 59,155-6 proposed Method of working 59,160-74, 59,221-6

Salaries, inadequacy of - - - - 59,150-4

Deputes:

Appointment should be on nomination of Sheriff and by Secretary for Scotland, from assistant sheriff clerks if possible 59,175-9, 59,192-9

Chance of promotion advocated, but acceptance should not be compulsory 59,143-9, 59,155-6

Special class, recommendations of Lord Salvesen's Committee agreed with - - 59,159 no Statutory qualifications, and actual experience in offices of the Court considered more important - - - - 59,133-9

Midlothian:

Employment of temporary typist - 59,236-40

Staff and organisation of office 59,125-32, 59,255

Number, reduction, recommendation of Lord Salvesen's Committee agreed with - - 59,157-8

Oppressive treatment of staff by, in a few cases 59,241-4, 59,257-8

Pensions, advocated for whole staff after few years' service at bottom and could also apply to part-timers - - - - 59,203-12

Private practice, should be restricted, but public appointments allowed - - - - 59,216-8

Staff:

Appointment of lower grades by Sheriff Clerks and Deputes by Sheriffs and Secretary for Scotland, suggested - - 59,275-9, 59,192-202

Pensions:

Civil Service scheme advocated - 59,229-35

Clerks might be examined as to health, &c., before being made pensionable 59,211-2

Retirement, fixed age for, necessary if pensions given, and 70 suggested - - 59,213-5

Sheriff Courts, Civil Service system not suitable for 59,219-20

HEATH, SIR THOMAS LITTLE, K.C.B., one of the Joint Permanent Secretaries to H.M. Treasury 60,470-738

APPOINTMENT:

England:

Advisory Committee:

no Objection seen - - - - 60,495

Treasury representation, no advantage seen 60,496

Civil Service certificate not required in certain cases - - - - 60,507-10

Concentration of patronage in hands of Lord Chancellor desirable - - - - 60,491-4

HEATH, SIR THOMAS LITTLE, K.C.B.—cont.

APPOINTMENT—continued.

England—continued.

Orders in Council instead of Statutory Regulations, no objection seen - - - 60,674-6

Vacancies, provision to enable consideration as to necessity for post - - - - 60,472

Medical certificate should be required in all cases 60,535-8

Scotland:

Advisory Committee, same principle might apply, but question on smaller scale than in England - - - - 60,497

Civil Service certificate should be required in all cases except the highest posts - - 60,511

Ordinary method of admission by Civil Service certificate should be followed - - 60,498

Central Office, Scriveners, difficulty re pensions 60,602-8

Clerks, question as to need for legal experience 60,687-92

CONTROL:

Definite head of department, as regards, opinion re 60,487

General and uniform responsibility of Lord Chancellor over all departments, would be more convenient - - - - 60,677-8

Improvement possible - - - - 60,721-2

COUNTY COURTS:

Clerks:

Paid at market rate - - - - 60,637, 60,652-3

Pensions:

Contributory scheme, probable Treasury attitude - - - - 60,637-61

Legislation would be necessary 60,617, 60,628

Registrars, pensions:

Position re - - - - 60,629-34

Private practice would have to be prohibited, 60,634

Discipline, &c., appointment of officer to be responsible for, would be useful if sufficient work for 60,487-9

DISTRICT PROBATE REGISTRIES:

Clerks, Pensions:

Legislation would be necessary - - 60,614-7

System of appointment would have to be changed - - - - 60,618-20

Registrars, position re pensions - - 60,621-6

HOURS:

Increase to seven in Civil Service, certain reduction in staff as result - - - - 60,664-5

Ordinary seven-hours day desirable, with staff in numbers corresponding to, and question of compensation to officers - - - - 60,521-3

LEGAL DEPARTMENTS:

Civil Service rule re granting of increment contingent on certificate re conduct, might apply to - - - - 60,527-8

Civil Service rule re official taking part in management of society or other business could apply to 60,524-6

Committee to attend to appointments and consider sufficiency of staff or over-staffing, &c., would be approved - - - - 60,704-7

Orders in Council governing Civil Service: should be substantially Applied to - 60,512 do not Apply to, entirely - - - - 60,504-6

Reduction of staff, position of Treasury re 60,475-8, 60,696-703

Representation in Parliament, extent of, and question of direct representation - 60,713-20

Scotland, Treasury control and method of exercising - - - - 60,481-6

Treasury control - 60,472-5, 60,486, 60,708-12

Land Registry, Mapping Staff, difficulties re pensions 60,591

Lord Chancellor, Permanent Secretary, further assistance might be necessary for, if duties of Lord Chancellor in connection with legal departments increased - - - - 60,479-80

Masters and Registrars, Senior, appointment by method other than seniority would be advantageous 60,679-80

Official Solicitor, clerks, opinion re claim to pensions, difficulties re, and different system of appointment, &c., would be necessary - - 60,583-90

HEATH, SIR THOMAS LITTLE, K.C.B.—cont.

Ordnance Survey officers, terms on which made pensionable - - - - - 60,592-3

PAY OFFICE, APPOINTMENT:

to Higher posts:

Civil Service certificate required - 60,502-3
by Treasury, considered the best method, but question of advisory committee 60,499-503
Recent, of Assistant and Deputy Paymasters 60,693-5

PENSIONS:

Cases of unestablished staff being made established, terms, &c: - - - - - 60,592-601

Contributory schemes:

Difficulty re persons approaching retiring age 60,646
Particulars re, and results - 60,556-82, 60,669 probable Treasury attitude 60,637-63, 60,727-33

to Part-timers:

Cases of, outside legal departments - 60,666-8 would be Impracticable as regards State pensions and undesirable, but might be possible in other systems - - - - - 60,735-8

Persons paid by piecework excluded from, by statute - - - - - 60,602-8

Poor Law officers, system - 60,577-9, 60,666-8

Principle under which distinction made as to officials entitled to pensions and officials entitled to gratuities - - - - - 60,529-32

Qualifications necessary to entitle employee to 60,533-55

Requirement of whole-time service should be maintained - - - - - 60,546-7

State assistance to Irish National School Teachers' Fund and English Elementary School Teachers' Fund - - - - - 60,556-69, 60,638-41

State assistance for secondary and technical school teachers, recommendation of Committee appointed by Board of Education re 60,570-5, 60,642-4

PRINCIPAL PROBATE REGISTRY:

Administrative work, transfer to Inland Revenue Department, no advantage seen and practicability doubted - - - - - 60,681-6

Difficulty re scriveners' pensions - - 60,602-8

PROCURATORS FISCAL, LUMP SUM:

Absence of Treasury control re expenditure 60,670-1 probable Expenditure in case of clerks going to the war - - - - - 60,672-3

RETIREMENT:

Clerks, ordinary Civil Service rule should apply 60,513-4, 60,723-4

Higher posts, 70 suggested - 60,515-8, 60,725-6

Vacation, ordinary Civil Service rules should apply as far as possible - - - - - 60,519-20

HEMMONS, A.; CROSS, F. W.; WADE, E. H.; and BURGESS, W., representing the Association of County Court Clerks and Officers 51,908-52,198COUNTY COURT CLERKS AND OFFICERS ASSOCIATION:

Amalgamation with County Court Officials Association - - - - - 51,911-12, 51,917-9

Classes represented in - - - - - 51,926-8

Membership - - - - - 51,914-20

Total number of officers in classes represented by 51,922-5

County Courts Officials Association, membership 51,921

COUNTY COURTS:

Audit - - - - - 52,133-42

Bailiffs:

no Compensation in case of injury, but advocated - - - - - 52,158-60

Duties - - - - - 52,150-5, 52,160-4

Pensions advocated - - - - - 52,158

Position of - - - - - 52,158

Clerks:

Alteration of status by County Courts Bill of 1888 - - - - - 52,077-98

Appointment by name by Treasury before 1889 52,077, 52,097

Appointment of relations by registrars, isolated cases known of - - - - - 52,109-10

HEMMONS, A.; CROSS, F. W.; WADE, E. H.; and BURGESS, W.—continued.COUNTY COURTS—continued.

Clerks—continued.

Bristol:

Ages - - - - - 52,002-6

Promotion by seniority generally - 52,108

Remuneration:

1912, 1913, 1914 - - - - - 51,950

Comparison with clerks in solicitors' offices 51,957-60

Salaries - - - - - 52,028-36

Work, and comparison with clerks in solicitors' offices - - - - - 51,960-96

Dismissal, power of - - - - - 52,105-7

Establishment, attitude of registrars re 52,119, 52,142

Pay:

City of London Court - - - - - 52,050

Increments - - - - - 52,116-8

Rises, impossibility of, under lump sum system - - - - - 51,929-45, 52,173

Unofficial scale not heard of - - 52,104

Pensions:

Argument in favour of, that hardly a bank, railway company, &c., without provision 52,014-9

Clerks go on when past work owing to absence of, and consequent inconveniences 52,002-13

Contributory scheme:

in City of London Court - - 52,049-50, 52,051-5

Mr. Hobhouse's suggestion, reason for non-carrying out of - - - - - 52,038-46

Suggestion re, in cases of men with many years' service - - - - - 52,099-101

Half-timers, question of - - - 52,073-6 on Non-contributory basis would be preferred, but contributory would be better than none - - - 52,020-37, 52,047-8

Qualifications required - - - 51,999-2,001

in Under 6,000 plaintiffs courts:

no Part of fees received by, generally speaking 52,174-5

Position of, disadvantages - - 52,170-84

Sum allowed for clerk hire, reduction in, on falling off of work, and example at Bristol 51,932-43, 52,189-95, 52,195, 52,196-8

Work:

Comparison with solicitor's office - 52,165

Nature of - - - - - 51,965-96

Fees, Bristol - - - - - 51,947-52

High Bailiffs, indoor staff of, legal experience necessary - - - - - 52,146-9

Lump sum, inequality of, in different courts

Registrars: 52,185-8

Absences, and arrangement re work during 52,127-32

Bristol:

One with private business and staff employed in - - - - - 51,953-6

Remuneration, 1912, 1913, 1914 - 51,947-50

Salary, effect of few committals by judges 52,125-6 under 6,000 plaintiffs courts, hardship, cases known of, but difficulty of giving specific instances

Staff: 52,170

Security of tenure, lack of, dismissal possible by new registrar or high bailiff, and examples 52,056-69 over 65, number - - - - - 52,143-4

Whole and part-timers, proportion - 52,070-2

Whole time, court of between 700 and 800 plaintiffs sufficient for - - - 52,185

Historical Department:

Allowance for publication of calendars, &c., MacDougall - - - - - 55,857-8

KEEPER:

Appointment, method, MacDougall, 55,856; Dunedin, 58,441-2.

Special qualities required and appointment from outside advocated, Murray- - - 57,928-32

Staff of, MacDougall - - - - - 55,687-8

Work of, Dodds - - - - - 55,541

HORN, W.; GILES, G.; and YEATES, J. R., Procurators Fiscal Depute - - - 58,746-844

PROCURATORS FISCAL:

Amalgamation of districts, scheme not agreed with, and reasons - - - 58,791, 58,815-8

Appointment, from deputes advocated wherever possible, and proposal re keeping of list by Crown Agent - - - -58,799, 58,829-31

Clerks:

Appointment:

Method - - - - - 58,761

Scheme - - - - - 58,794

Glasgow, special position of, and claim to increased salaries - - - - 58,841-4

Number, question of - - - - 58,821-2

Deputes:

Appointment:

Method - - - - - 58,761, 58,808-9

from Outside, case of - - - - 58,801-3

by Selection from clerks advocated wherever possible, and proposal re keeping of list by Crown Agent 53,795-9, 58,810-4, 58,829-31

Civil Service basis:

Claim to, with pensions - - - -58,762-73

Recommendation re - - - -58,823-36

Distinction from clerks of Procurators Fiscal 58,753-5

Fixity of tenure, claim to, but no case of dismissal by new Procurators Fiscal known of 58,762-8

Honorary appointments - - - - 58,824

Number - - - - - 58,819-20

Pensions, advocated for all whole-time officials 58,825-7

Promotion, claim to regular system of, and men would be prepared to move 58,762-3, 58,774-90, 58,838-41

Remuneration, system and objection to, and claim to fixing of scales by Treasury and direct payment by Lord Advocate 58,792-3, 58,805-7

Whole-time, number - - - - 58,837

Hours:

Approved from solicitors' point of view, and extension not desired, Goodchild 47,453-6, 47,497-521
Doing of work after, or at home, Musgrave, 44,662-6; Macdonell, 45,406-9; J. R. B. Gregory, 47,289-90; Caunt, 50,311.

Easy, but later hours not desirable from point of view of solicitors, J. R. B. Gregory - 47,287-91

EXTENSION:

not Advocated, Kentish - - - - 54,348-9

Question of, Caunt - - - - 50,229-42

Ten to five, question of, and no reason seen against, but solicitors, &c., do not require courts open after 4, Muir Mackenzie 44,197-200, 44,422-4

Increase to seven in Civil Service, certain reduction in staff as result, Heath - - - - 60,664-5

Ordinary seven-hour day desirable, with staff in numbers corresponding to, and question of compensation to officers, Heath - - - 60,521-3

Question as to amount of work that could be done by clerks, &c., after 4 o'clock closing to public, Goodchild, 47,500-21; Muir Mackenzie 55,043 draft Regulations, Muir Mackenzie - App. XCIV.

HUNT, G. A., third class clerk, Bankruptcy Taxing Office - - - - - 54,629-650

BANKRUPTCY TAXING OFFICE, CLERKS:

First class clerk should be appointed 54,636-40, 54,643-4

Third class:

Eligible for transfer to other taxing offices, but no case known - - - - 54,649-50

Promotion:

to Other branches in department, eligibility for, but case of refusal - - - 54,645-7 to Second class, no opportunities - 54,644

Work of - - - - - 54,641-2

Hunt, Mr., District Registrar, Carlisle, reference 46,603-5

Incorporated Law Society of London, attitude re agency business by district probate registrars, Shadwell, Alms - - - - - 52,946-8

Incorporated Society of Law Agents in Scotland, representative, see Anderson, William Boyd

59,915-60,062

Independent Tribunal to determine questions of pensions, &c., need for, Shadwell, 52,825-30, 52,837-8; Simpson, 52,830-7; Alms, 52,839-40

Ireland, Clerk of the Crown, Muir Mackenzie, 44,307-8, 44,316-7

JAMESON, JAMES HOTCHKIS, Writer to the Signet - - - - - 58,126-255

Bill Chamber, Principal Clerk, appointment from outside - - - - - 58,182-3

COURT OF SESSION:

Appointment:

from Advocates' clerks, and opinion re 58,145, 58,244

Committee to advise on, question of, and some check would be approved if present system retained, and proposed composition 58,149-50, 58,200-10

Competition, not sufficient test but question of competition among people with certain qualifications and service in law agent's office 58,151-5

by Lord President advocated, and Committee of advice not considered necessary 58,147-9, 58,208, 58,211-30, 58,235-8, 58,242-3

Political considerations should not enter into 58,143-4, 58,145

Qualifications, certified law agent advocated in all cases, with system of promotion to higher posts with exception of Principal Clerk, and scheme - - - - - 58,129-46

Clerks:

Prohibition of private practice advocated 58,173, 58,245-7

Transfer between different branches, question of 58,159-62

Clerks of Court, inclusion in consolidated service suggested - - - - - 58,172

Consolidated service, question of, and of departments to be included 58,159, 58,170-2, 58,176-81

Hours, extension to five advocated all the year round - - - - - 58,167-8

Offices of, at Register House, inconvenience of system, and transfer to Court buildings advocated - - - - - 58,165-9

Principal Clerk:

Appointment direct from outside approved, and should be in hands of Lord President 58,140, 58,156-7

Control by, and approval 58,158, 58,184-5

Six, former system of - - - - 58,163

Principal Clerk and Deputes, appointment, political considerations not approved of, and change advocated - - - - 58,186-99, 58,233-4

Retirement, ordinary Civil Service rule would be approved for future appointments 58,173-5

Second division clerks, age, too young 58,133

Staff, acquisition of qualifications of law agent, impossibility unless apprenticeship served in outside office - - - - - 58,135-7

Crown Office, inclusion in consolidated service not advocated - - - - - 58,172

Extractor's Department, proposed transfer of duties of Extractor to Depute Clerks of Session, and to charge of Principal Clerk, objection to 58,163-4

Justiciary Office, inclusion in consolidated service not advocated - - - - - 58,172

Signet Office, receipts, sources of, and covering of expenses of office by, and leaving of margin 58,252-5

JENNINGS, ARTHUR OLDHAM, Registrar and High Bailiff of the Brighton County Court, &c. COUNTY COURTS: 53,993-54,098

Abolition and amalgamation of smaller:

Desirable as regards place of trial, but plaintiffs could still be issued at smaller places 54,05669

Individual interests would be a difficulty 54,060

Brighton, staff - - - - - 54,009-12

Clerks:

Appointment, &c., by registrars must continue while responsible for clerks 54,044-6, 54,081-2, 54,089-92

JENNINGS, ARTHUR OLDHAM—*continued.*COUNTY COURTS—*continued.*Clerks—continued.

Establishment of:

Appointment by central authority would be involved, and objection to - 54,042-6
 Difficulty of grading, promotion, &c., in smaller courts - 54,038

Transfer between courts would be necessary with, but difficulties - 54,040-1

Fidelity guarantee from - 54,093
 Hours - 54,098

previous Legal experience not considered necessary, appointment at 18 approved - 54,094-7

Payment:

Adequacy of, question - 54,053
 Brighton - 54,010-2
 Comparison with that of solicitors' clerks 54,054
 System considered satisfactory, but power to increase pay desirable - 54,047-52

Pensions:

Appointment of clerks by registrars should still be possible - 54,073-7
 the Chief need - 54,055
 Contributory scheme would be possible 54,056-9

Inconvenience from absence of, and need for 54,038-9, 54,078-80

Medical examination would be necessary 54,076

practically Permanent - 54,014-7

Work, comparison with that of solicitors' clerks 54,053-4, 54,098

High Bailiff, remuneration at Brighton 54,007-8

Mr. Lowe's evidence agreed with generally 53,998-9

Registrars, payment:

in over 6,000 plaints courts, attitude of Treasury re, and fixed salaries not assigned to all 54,024-34

Remuneration at Brighton - 54,002-6
 by Results:

Instances of questions on which remuneration would depend on line of policy taken by registrar - 54,071-2

Objection to, in larger courts, and fixed salary advocated - 54,018-36 only Possible system in smaller courts 54,019

District probate registries, amalgamation with County Court and High Court registries, would be practicable and desirable - 54,067-9, 54,083-8

Johnston, A. J., clerk in Central Office, reference 49,799-800

Jolly, Mr., junior registrar, references 45,192-5 46,727-33, 46,937

JONES, R. W., see DAVIS, A. E., &c. 53,075-244

Judges, England:

in Chambers, devolution of duties to masters in the King's Bench, Macdonell - 45,274

CLERKS:

Appointment by judges important, Wrenbury 54,863
 Careers after retirement of judge, Muir Mackenzie 44,356 generally Clerks to judges when barrister, Muir Mackenzie - 44,280, 44,285

Competency of, and avenues of employment should be opened to, Wrenbury - 54,916-28 proposed Eligibility for clerkships in Supreme Court, after retirement of judge, objection to, Muir Mackenzie - 44,289-91

Non-pensionable, and question of pensions, Muir Mackenzie - 44,284-9

One to each judge, two formerly, Muir Mackenzie 44,278

Personal officers attached to judges, and appointed by them, Muir Mackenzie 44,277-80, 44,283

Salary, Muir Mackenzie - 44,279

Work of, Muir Mackenzie - 44,281-2

of the High Court, appointment of masters as, possible theoretically, but only one case of, Macdonell 45,569-70

Marshal, explanation, Loreburn - 50,645

Pensions, Macdonell - 45,375-8

Salaries, payment out of Consolidated Fund, Muir Mackenzie - 43,934

Judges' Clerks, Scotland:

Pension, position re, Adam - 55,978-9

Promotion rare, but qualifications as high or higher than Lord Advocate's clerks, Salvesen 58,925-6

as Reserve in case of illness of Clerks of Court, &c., Salvesen - 58,927

Judicature Acts, Muir Mackenzie - 43,928-46

Judicial work, more complicated than formerly, Macdonell - 45,500

Justice, Minister of, need for, and scheme, Haldane 60,907, 60,966-9

Justiciary Office, see Court of Justiciary.

KEELING, MR. (in attendance) - 53,740-992

Kellner, Sir George, former Assistant Paymaster-General, reference - 50,428

KENNEDY, THE HON. LORD, Chairman of the Scottish Land Court - 59,588-59,764

Appointment, Committee of Selection, question of Civil Service Commissioner on, not considered but would depend on number of appointments, &c. to be dealt with - 59,738

SCOTTISH LAND COURT:

Appointment:

to Higher posts, would be by promotion when possible - 59,643-6, 59,682, 59,740-8

Method - 59,624-34, 59,717-21

Open competition, not advocated - 59,641-2

no Political considerations involved 59,567-8, 59,722

by Secretary for Scotland advised by Committee, no objection seen to, but not advocated unless adopted in other departments - 59,655-6

Selection method - 59,659-63

System satisfactory - 59,639-40

Vacancies, question of giving public notification 59,664-6

Assistant Clerks:

Acquisition of law agent's qualification while in office, question as to possibility 59,647-54
 59,685-91

Duties - 59,614-5, 59, 630

Junior, overtime allowance - 59,670

Qualifications required - 59,629

Clerk of Accounts, duties, &c. - 59,618-9

Clerks, interchangeability - 59,674-5

Composition of, and division of work between members - 59,598-601

Depute Clerks:

Number, salaries and duties - 59,609-13

Qualifications required 59,627-8, 59,692, 59,743

Discipline, &c., control - 59,667-8

Draughtsman and Surveyor, duties - 59,617

Financing of - 59,749-50

Formation of, 1912 - 59,591-3

Grazings officer, duties - 59,621-2

Hours - 59,669-71

Keeper of the Rolls:

Appointment of man of 61, particulars re 59,698-716, 59,751, 59,755-61

Duties, &c. - 59,620

Members, position and salaries - 59,676-81

Orders in Council regulating Civil Service apply generally - 59,762-4

Pensions, position of staff re - 59,635-8

Principal Clerk and Secretary of Court:

Appointment, method and statutory qualifications - 59,626, 59,719-21

Duties - 59,607-8

Sitting of Court as a whole - 59,602-5

Staff:

Civil Service certificate need not be obtained unless appointment pensionable - 59,752-3

Particulars re - 59,606-7

Salaries, fixing of - 59,754

Vacations, and arrangement re work during 59,672-3

Women typists:

Position, method of appointment, &c. 59,635,

59,693-7, 59,723-9

Promotion to assistant clerkships, possibility of 59,730-7, 59,739

Work of, and organisation of - 59,594-605

Sheriff Clerks, work done by, for Scottish Land Court, and payment by fees - 59,750

KENTISH, CHARLES WILLIAM, Managing Clerk to Messrs. Williamson, Hill, and Co. 54,266-487

BANKRUPTCY DEPARTMENT:

Clerks, competency of, and work very well done
54,340-2
Work more difficult than in other offices 54,341-55

CENTRAL OFFICE:

Associates, work of - - - - 54,286
Associates Department, no difficulty in work of clerks - - - - - 54,432-40

Clerks:

Appointment, right class of man obtained
54,275
First class, appointment direct instead of promotion from third class desirable - 54,401-5
Hours, comparison with solicitor's office
54,293-6

Pay, comparison with clerks in solicitor's office
54,297-300

Work:

Nature of, and simplicity - - 54,406-42
Solicitor's managing clerk's work more varied and more responsible - - 54,287-92

Discipline, &c., appointment of chief clerk to deal with, advantage doubted - - - 54,393-5

Masters, all barristers, and system should be maintained - - - - - 54,270-1

Order Department:

Clerks, previous legal experience desirable, but work could be learnt in office - - 54,281-4
Work in, no difficulty seen - - - 54,426-30

Sending of Documents to and from, by post instead of by messengers, not advocated 54,476-87

Typewriting, no reason seen against extended use of,
and advantages of - - 54,385-91, 54,454

Writ Office:

Clerks:

no Difficulty in work - - - - 54,275-80
Number excessive - - - - - 54,346-7
Rush of work from 2 to 4, question as to possibility of expediting - - - - 54,379-84

Work in, nature of, and no difficulty seen 54,406-17

CLERKS:

Appointment desired by clerks in solicitors' offices
54,376-8

Inefficiency, difficult for legal profession to complain of - - - - - 54,392

Retirement:

Fixed age, not advocated - - - 54,357, 54,362
Voluntary, any time after 30 years' service on proportionate pension, suggestion - 54,357-63

Salaries, same scale for different branches of work, considered fair - - - - 54,466-75

Third class, appointment at 16 or 16 to 18, suggested - - - - - 54,464-5

COMMERCIAL COURT:

Clerk to draw up orders and issue summonses advocated - - - - - 54,363-75

Issue of summonses, impossible during vacation
54,365-8

Crown Office, the most responsible department of the Central Office - - - - - 54,285

Hours, extension not advocated - - 54,348-9

SOLICITORS' OFFICES:

Boys:

Age of appointment - - - - - 54,460-1 further Education possible, but no steps taken re 54,462-3

Clerks:

Pensions:

Given sometimes, but no general practice of 54,301-6

Law Clerks Society - - - - - 54,307-12

Salaries - - - - - 54,298-300

Hours - - - - - 54,293-6

Managing clerks, appointment to important Government posts of solicitors only, best men might be excluded - - - - 54,396-400

TAXING MASTERS:

Solicitors as, would be approved if they had had experience of taxing bills - - - 54,325-6

Solicitors' managing clerks as, would be most suitable - - - - - 54,325-39

Vacations, two masters for about three weeks after commencement of, advocated - - 54,350-6

KENTISH, CHARLES WILLIAM—continued.

TAXING OFFICE:

Clerks:

First class, appointment direct of solicitor's managing clerk suggested - - - 54,319 previous Legal experience desirable - 54,313-5 no great Legal knowledge or experience necessary - - - - - 54,443-53

Work well done - - - - - 54,322-3

Typewriting, fraudulent changes, no greater possibility seen than in manuscript 54,391, 54,455-6

VACATIONS:

two Taxing masters for about three weeks after commencement of, advocated - - 54,350-6

"Vacation business," scope considered sufficient 54,356

KERSHAW, LEONARD WILLIAM, Master of the Crown Office, and Registrar of the Court of Criminal Appeal - - - - 53,245-53,321

ASSOCIATES DEPARTMENT:

Associates:

Qualities required - - - - - 53,262

Work of - - - - - 53,261

Clerks:

Appointment without previous experience in solicitor's office, and success of - 53,270-3

Distinction between work of different classes
53,274

Number of, and number in different classes
53,268

Satisfactory class - 53,269, 53,273, 53,303

Third class as self-contained body, system would not be applicable - - - - 53,275-7

Vacations and arrangements re work in 53,290-1 should be Separate from Central Office, and form one office, under a master, with Crown Office 53,278-88, 53,303-5

COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEAL:

Clerks:

Appointment without previous experience in solicitor's office and success of - 53,270-3

Satisfactory class - - - - - 53,270-3, 53,303

Copying of documents in Central Scrivenery
Department - - - - - 53,306-7

Date of - - - - - 53,248

Registrar:

Assistant desirable, but might do some work for other masters - - - - - 53,300 should be Separate office from that of master of the Crown Office - - - - 53,299-300, 53,303

Work of, and responsibility - - - 53,296-8

Shorthand typist would be most useful - 53,308-12

Staff - - - - - 53,301

CROWN OFFICE:

Clerks:

Appointment without previous experience in solicitor's office, and success of - 53,270-3

Distinction between work of different classes
53,274

First class, possible explanation of large proportion of - - - - - 53,289

Number, and number in different classes
53,265-8

Satisfactory class - 53,269, 53,273, 53,303

Third class as self-contained body, system would not be applicable - - - - 53,275-7

Vacations, and arrangements re work during 53,290-1

should be Separate from Central Office, and form
one office, under a master, with Associates
Department - - - - 53,278-88, 53,303-5

Work:

Nature of - - - - - 53,249-60

Technicality of, and possibility of reducing,
53,263-5, 53,313-21

MASTERS, FIXED AGE FOR RETIREMENT:

Advisable - - - - - 53,294

70 would not be objected to - - - 53,294-5

KETCHEN, WILLIAM THOMAS, W.S., Keeper of the Register of Sasines, the Register of Hornungs, Inhibitions and Adjudications, and the Register of Entails - - - - - 56,261-445

Appointment as Keeper of the Register of Sasines,
particulars re - - - - - 56,392-400

KETCHEN, WILLIAM THOMAS—continued.

REGISTER HOUSE:

- Hornings, Inhibitions, Adjudications, and Entails, Registers of, explanation - - - 56,291-3
- Recording of Deeds:
- Change of Method:
- Legislation would be necessary - 56,387-8, 56,404-9
- Question under consideration since 1838
56,380

- Mechanical method, would solve difficulties re
engrossing staff - - - 56,386
- Photolithography, use of, under consideration by Commission on Conveyancing - 56,381-4
- Typewriting, considered, but permanency of record doubted - - - 56,385

REGISTER OF SASINES:

- Certificates, Government guarantee of accuracy
56,289-90
- Civil Service rules re discipline, &c., applicable
56,348

Clerks:

Appointment:

- by Examination, system and nature of examination, and change - - - 56,321-3
- Qualifications necessary for admission to examination and change in - - 56,324-8
- right Type of men obtained as a rule, and comparison with those appointed formerly without examination - - - 56,330-3
- Chief, number and duties - - - 56,300
- previous Legal experience needed
56,334, 56,436-45
- Qualifications, difficulty re, and regular apprenticeship as distinguished from clerkship would have been preferable - 56,329, 56,335-6
- Transfer between Register House departments and, rare, and filling of vacancies from within office preferred - - - 56,417-20
- Women, employment would be impossible without legal training, and Civil Service examination believed to be barred to - 56,421-31
- Combination with Register of Deeds, possibility of, and some economies would be effected 56,375-9

- Control or supervision by Deputy Clerk Register, proposal not approved - - - 56,359-60
- Drafting of minutes, distribution between clerks 56,301-3

Engrossing staff:

- Appointment by Keeper - - - 56,347
- Payment by piecework:
- All work now paid for - - - 56,364-5
- Retention of system necessary for proper conduct of work - - - 56,363-4

Pensions:

- would be Approved - 56,368-9, 56,372
- Contributory scheme, difficulty as regards present old men - - - 56,370-1
- Rate of pay increased by Treasury instead of granting - - - 56,366-7

Women, possibility of employing

- 56,410-5, 56,422-3

Entry in register, system - - - 56,316-8

Establishment of general register on new footing.
1869-70, and abolition of local registers 56,267Higher posts, appointment to, by promotion and success of system - - - 56,337-46

Hours - - - 56,349-52

Keepers:

- Advocates or solicitors with one exception 56,321
- Appointed by the Crown since 1881 - 56,319

Assistant:

- Appointed by the Crown since 1881 56,319
- Number and duties - - - 56,298-9
- Remuneration by fees formerly, by salary since 1845 - - - 56,264-6
- Control of staff by - - - 56,295, 56,357
- Direct communication with Secretary for Scotland - - - 56,359, 56,389-91
- Duties - - - 56,295-6
- Pension, no added years - - - 56,401-3
- statutory Qualifications - - - 56,326
- Remuneration by fees formerly, by salary since 1845 - - - 56,264-6
- Overtime and extent of, normally - - 56,353-5

KETCHEN, WILLIAM THOMAS—continued.REGISTER OF SASINES—continued.

- Promotion, system - - - 56,340-6
- Registration final subject to appeal to Court 56,442-4
- Relation of department to Deputy Clerk Register
56,358
- Searches, distribution of duties re, between clerks, and importance of work - - - 56,304-15
- Staff, number of different classes - - 56,294
- Vacancies - - - 56,356
- War vacancies, non-filling up of, and question of employment of women - - - 56,432-5
- Work of, nature and details of processes 56,268-91

King's Bench Division, Masters in:

- Ages, range of, Macdonell - - - 45,358-60

APPOINTMENT:

- usual Age on, Macdonell - - - 45,315-6
- Committee, on which outsiders represented would be objected to, Disturnal - - - 47,545
- Method and opinion re, Macdonell, 45,317-22,
45,600-11; Muir Mackenzie, 55,450-1.
- Nominations by Rule Committee, suggestion,
Disturnal - - - 47,543, 47,545
- previous Practice at the Bar should have been for not less than 10 years, Disturnal - 47,536-42
- present System of, by Lord Chancellor, Lord Chief Justice, and Master of the Rolls approved,
Disturnal - - - 47,543-4, 47,614-24
- Appointment as judge, no case of, Macdonell 45,569
- Appointment of one, on Rule Committee, suggested, Stringer, 49,580-8; Morton, 52,695-6

ASSISTANT:

- Barristers, Macdonell - - - 45,312, 45,314
- Work of, Macdonell 45,286, 45,388-96, 45,400-5

BARRISTERS AS:

- Approved, Disturnal - - - 47,536
- Only, in practice and opinion re, Disturnal,
47,662-70; Morton, 52,649-50.
- more Suitable, generally speaking, than solicitors,
Disturnal - - - 47,546-61, 47,611-3
- Clerk should be attached to each master, waste of time owing to lack of, Macdonell 45,333-41, 45,625

CLERKS:

- Ineligible for appointment as masters, and barrier should be maintained, Macdonell - 45,533-6
- Work of, and impossibility of further devolution to,
Macdonell - - - 45,342-6, 45,354, 45,566
- Court work, transfer to clerks and nature of work, and no complaints heard, Macdonell - 45,323-32
- Decisions, majority subject to appeal, Macdonell
45,552

Devolution of duties to, from judges, Macdonell

- 45,274

Efficiency of, and work well done, Disturnal 47,570-1previous Experience at the Bar, Macdonell 45,310-3Hearing of cases, time taken by, Macdonell 45,347-53Hours, and certain amount of work done after 4, Macdonell - - - 45,406-9Lists, method of arranging, and complaint re,
J. R. B. Gregory - - - 47,188-94Number, Macdonell - - - 45,284-5

NUMBER:

- Increase in, desirable to deal with issues in connection with executions by Sheriffs, Macdonell
45,381-7, 45,670-1

- Reduction in, Macdonell - - - 45,285-8

PENSIONS:

- Adding of years approved, but should be considered in each individual case, Macdonell, 45,372-5;
Disturnal - - - 47,576-8
- Superannuation Act of 1909 not believed to apply, but might for future masters, Macdonell
45,379-80

System, Macdonell - - - 45,368-72Statutory qualifications, Macdonell - - 45,310Relationship to judges, Disturnal - - 47,619-24Removal by Lord Chancellor possible, Macdonell

RETIREMENT: 45,366, 45,551

Fixed age, and recommendation of Coleridge Committee not carried out, Macdonell 45,358-62Inefficiency, pressure would probably result in retirement, Macdonell - - - 45,367Salaries, sufficiently good men attracted by, Disturnal

47,574-5

King's Bench Division, Masters in—continued.SENIOR:

Increasing amount of work has to be performed at home, Macdonell - - - 45,309
Office of King's Remembrancer held by, Macdonell 45,305
Promotion to post by seniority, Macdonell 45,269
Selection according to merit would not be objected to, Macdonell - - - 45,537-40, 45,597-8

Work of:

re Internal arrangements of business in office, and suggestion re special clerk to deal with matters of discipline approved, Macdonell 45,290-304

Nature of, Macdonell - - - 45,921-9

SOLICITORS AS:

Question of, but training at the Bar preferred on the whole, Macdonell 45,560-5, 45,627-34 no Reason known against, but not essential as no control of staff by, J. R. B. Gregory 47,197-206, 47,398

Suitability of, and should sometimes be appointed, Morton - - - 52,649-50

"Summons for directions," longer time should be given to hearing of, Macdonell - - 45,354-7

Taxing work, transfer to Taxing Office, Macdonell 45,281-2, 45,288

VACATIONS:

Arrangement re work during, Macdonell 45,413-6
Recommendations of Royal Commission on Delay in the King's Bench Division not yet carried out, Macdonell - - - 45,417-22

WORK:

Arrears owing to emergency legislation, Macdonell, 45,279, 45,411-2; J. R. B. Gregory 47,188, 47,196.
Comparison with that of Chancery masters, Gregory 47,226-7 in Connection with proceedings by or against poor persons, Macdonell - - - 45,289-90

Devolution of certain part of, to assistant masters might be possible, Macdonell, 45,397-9; J. R. B. Gregory, 47,307-10.

Difference from that of Chancery masters, Macdonell - - - 45,635-44 well Done on the whole, and no serious delay, J. R. B. Gregory, 47,188, 47,195.

Hardness of, Macdonell - - - 45,633

Increase of, by recent legislation, Macdonell 45,278-80, 45,553-6

Order XIV. summonses, Disturnal - 47,552-7

Particulars re, Macdonell, - 45,271-82, 45,309, 45,582-4

re Preservation or sale of property, the subject matter of an action, Disturnal - 47,559-61

Summonses for directions, Disturnal - 47,551-2

King's Bench Offices, no criticism to be made, Disturnal - - - 47,573

King's and Lord Treasurer's Remembrancer, Scotland:

Duties, Mackenzie - - - 56,449-51, 56,619-23
Girls, employment of, to do work of second division men, Mackenzie - - - 56,664-6

King's Remembrancer:

Duties, Macdonell - 45,306-8, 45,557-9, 45,571-3
Office, difference of procedure in, from that in King's Bench Division, Macdonell - 45,307
Office held by senior master in King's Bench, Macdonell 45,305

Lanarkshire:

Procurator Fiscal, see that title.

Sheriff Court and Sheriff Substitute, see those titles.

Land Registry:APPOINTMENTS:

All, made by Lord Chancellor, Brickdale 51,186 by Committee, no great objection seen, but no improvement on previous results probable, Brickdale - - - 51,219, 51,303

Direct, to higher classes, Muir Mackenzie, 44,238; Brickdale, 51,189-91.

System, Muir Mackenzie, 44,234-8; Brickdale, 51,197-8 of Technical staff by open competition, not advocated, Sir P. Gregory - - - 55,172-4

Land Registry—continued.ASSISTANT REGISTRARS:

Acting, explanation, Brickdale - - 51,017-8

Appointment:

by Committee would be a safeguard, Stewart-Wallace - - - 54,827 by Lord Chancellor, continuance of system advocated, Sir P. Gregory - - - 55,138

Method and statutory qualifications, Stewart-Wallace - - - 54,828-9 from Outside, no guarantee against, and present first class clerks should be recognised as eligible, Stewart-Wallace 54,717, 54,762-5, 54,807-17, 54,826

Barristers or solicitors as, question of, Sir P. Gregory - - - 55,153-60

Commendation of work done by, Sir P. Gregory 55,146

Salary, Brickdale - - - 51,016

one Solicitor among, would be advantageous, Sir P. Gregory - - - 55,141

Statutory qualifications and retention advocated, Brickdale, 50,996, 51,187, 51,366; Sir P. Gregory, 55,138-40.

Attendance-books, system, and punctuality of staff, Brickdale - - - 51,273-5

Attendants, chief, pensions advocated, Brickdale 51,179

BOYS:

see also under Mapping Branch below.

Appointment as assistant clerks in some cases, Brickdale - - - 51,201

Appointment, method, Brickdale - - 51,312

Decrease since 1913-4, and substitution by assistant clerks, Brickdale - - - 51,324

Boys and younger members of staff, evening classes, Brickdale - - - 51,399-401

CARD INDEXES:

Particulars re, and advantages, Brickdale 51,135-53

Public not allowed access to, Brickdale - 51,137, 51,146-8

Central Office, work and staff, Brickdale - 51,074-5

CLERKS:Admission to the Bar:

Encouragement desirable, Sir P. Gregory 55,182

Possibility of, Sir P. Gregory 55,181, 55,187-8

Assistant:

Appointment, method, Brickdale - 51,200-1, 51,313

Number, Brickdale - - - 51,025

Work, nature of, Byers - - - 54,853-4

Claims of, refusal believed to be owing to small surplus of revenue over expenditure, Stewart-Wallace - - - 54,666-88, 54,789

Direct appointment to higher classes of barristers and admitted solicitors desirable, Brickdale 51,224-7

Distribution of work among different classes, and nature of, Brickdale - - - 51,165-75

First class:

All, entered in second class, not third, Stewart-Wallace - - - 54,694

Appointment as assistant registrar, possibility of, Brickdale - - - 51,363-81

Average age, professional standing, public service, &c., Stewart-Wallace - 54,728

all Barristers with exception of land charges clerk, and number having practised, Brickdale, 51,192-6; Stewart-Wallace, 54,695-6, 54,699-701

Comparison with solicitors' managing conveying clerks, Stewart-Wallace - 54,818-21

Creation of seven additional posts, 1911, reduction of minimum salary on, Stewart-Wallace 54,669-88, 54,780-3

Dealings with staff, Stewart-Wallace - 54,721

Distribution of work between, Stewart-Wallace 54,724-7

Duties, and responsibility of work, Stewart-Wallace - 54,702-13, 54,720-1, 54,769-78, 54,799-802

Expectations, non-realisation admitted, Muir Mackenzie - - - 55,293

no Lower class clerks specially attached to individuals, Stewart-Wallace - - 54,722-3

Number and scales of salary, Brickdale 51,019-22

Land Registry—continued.CLERKS—continued.*First class—continued.*Pay:

Increase of, claim to, agreed with, Muir Mackenzie - - - - 55,300 probably Lower than in other departments for same character of work, Brickdale 51,743-8

Scale, Stewart-Wallace - - - 54,720

Position not analogous to that of first class clerks in Royal Courts of Justice, Stewart-Wallace

Promotion: 54,720-1, 54,825

Prospects less favourable than expected on entering office, Brickdale, 51,250-7; Stewart-Wallace, 54,768.

few Prospects of, Brickdale, 51,249; Stewart-Wallace, 54,728, 54,783.

Prospects not commensurate with those in other branches of the Civil Service, Stewart-Wallace

54,692

Questions now dealt with which would formerly have been referred to counsel, Stewart-Wallace

54,774-8

Replacement by equally good men for same salaries would be difficult, Stewart-Wallace 54,822-4

Temporary, years spent as, should count for pensions, Stewart-Wallace - - - 54,784

Title, change to "Acting Assistant Registrar":

Advocated, Stewart-Wallace - - 54,713-9A,

54,728-30, 54,830

no Importance attached to, but no objection, Muir Mackenzie - - - 55,301

Opinion re claim, Brickdale, 51,238-41; Sir P. Gregory, 55,143-4.

University and legal qualifications, Stewart-Wallace - - - - 54,692

Work:

Better work done than could be expected, having regard to salaries, Brickdale 51,240-1

the Same as that done by assistant registrars, Stewart-Wallace, 54,769-73; Muir Mackenzie, 55,294.

Legal qualifications, question as to need for, Sir P. Gregory - - - 55,142-4, 55,175-9

proposed Lower grade:

Appointment partly by open competition and partly by limited competition among law clerks proposed, Brickdale - - 51,234-7

Clerks in solicitors' offices most suitable, Brickdale - - - - 51,228-31 not Rising above 200*l.* appointment by open competition would be approved, Muir Mackenzie - - - - 54,302-4

Work that would be done by, Brickdale 51,232-3

Promotion, see that title below.

Resignations owing to discontent at small prospects, Stewart-Wallace - - - 55,766-7

Retirement, see that title below.

Second class:

Appointment, direct, of persons of considerable legal experience, Leathes - - 48,853

Barristers or solicitors, numbers of, and approval of system, Brickdale - 51,193-6, 51,359-60

Better work done than could be expected having regard to salaries, Brickdale - - 51,240-1

some Called to Bar after appointment as clerks, Brickdale - - - - 51,300-2

Legal and university qualifications, numbers with, Stewart-Wallace - - 54,735, 54,739

Number and scale of salary, Brickdale 51,023

Particulars as to candidates nominated since 1900, Leathes - - - App. XCVII,

Temporary:

Appointment, method, Brickdale - 51,202-4

Numbers and pay, Brickdale - - 51,026

Reason for employment, Brickdale - 51,027

if Work permanent, permanent staff desirable, Brickdale - - - - 51,028-9

Third class:

Abolition, and substitution of second division clerks:

no Objection to proposal, and possibility of distinguishing mechanical work, Byers

54,847-8

Suggestion, Stewart-Wallace - - 54,751-8,

54,831-6

Land Registry—continued.CLERKS—continued.*Third class—continued.

Average age and length of service, Byers 54,838 no Barristers or solicitors, Stewart-Wallace

54,735

Improvement in position desirable, Brickdale

51,270

Number and scale of salary, Brickdale 51,024

One with university standing, Stewart-Wallace

54,740

Pay, raising of maximum after 15 years' service:

Comment on proposal, Byers - - 54,839-40

Proposed as compensation for absence of promotion, Brickdale - - - 51,267-9

Promotion:

Block, causes, Byers - - - 54,842-6

Expectations, Brickdale - - 51,361-2 to First class, professional bar which would prevent, should not be introduced, Byers

54,856

Small prospects of, Byers 54,838-9, 54,857-60

Within 10 years' service expected on appointment, Byers - - - - 54,840-1

Self-contained class would be approved and clear division in work possible, Brickdale

51,220-3, 51,337-41

Work:

Nature of, Byers - - - - 54,848-53

Well done, Brickdale - - - 51,176-7

Work of second class clerks being done by, Byers

54,839

Transfers to other departments, grievance re

working of, Stewart-Wallace - - 54,759-61

Two divisions and lines of promotion, professional and non-professional:

Higher grade, should be barristers or solicitors, Muir Mackenzie - - - 55,291-2

Proposal probably good, Sir P. Gregory 55,145

Scheme, Stewart-Wallace - - - 54,741-58

Work believed to be well done, Sir P. Gregory

55,146-50

Constitution of office, Brickdale - - 50,996

Discipline, &c., administration, Brickdale 51,159-64 universal Discontent in, Stewart-Wallace - 54,664-5

District registrars, statutory qualifications, Sir P. Gregory - - - - 55,138, note

Estimate of cost if whole kingdom under Land Registry Act, Brickdale - - 51,323, 51,327

FEES:

Alteration, Stewart-Wallace - - - 54,787-8 smaller Estimate for 1915-16 than receipts in 1914-15, question of reason, Stewart-Wallace

54,803-6

Fixed to cover expenses, and fact of being self-supporting should be remembered in considering organisation, &c., Muir Mackenzie - 44,239-41

Formation of, Stewart-Wallace - - - 54,697

History of office, Brickdale - - - 50,996

Hours, Brickdale - - - - 51,272

Jurisdiction, Brickdale - - - 51,054-5

Land Charges Registry, Brickdale 50,996, 51,009-12

Leave, &c., Civil Service rules applicable, generally speaking, Brickdale - - - 51,271

MAPPING BRANCH:

Appointments, method, Brickdale - - 51,205-6

Boys:

Majority leave at 19, Brickdale - 51,096-101

Retired soldiers might be substituted for, Brickdale - - - - 51,354-8

Work, Brickdale - - - - 51,094-5, 51,354

Co-operation with Ordnance Survey, extent of, Brickdale - - - - 51,080-4

Development of work, question of, and of finding employment for boys, Brickdale - 51,102-3

Mapping formerly done by Land Commission, and advantage of present system, Brickdale 51,085-6

Men transferred from Ordnance Survey:

Claim to be made pensionable, Pleass 55,192-213

no Reversions to Ordnance Survey, Pleass, Tratman - - - - 55,208

Pay, determination of rates by those in Ordnance Survey, Brickdale - - - - 51,104-5

Pensions:

Difficulties re, Heath - - - 60,591

Scheme advocated for, Brickdale - 51,179-85

Land Registry—continued.MAPPING BRANCH—continued.*Pensions—continued.

Suggestion, Pleass, Tratman	-	-	55,247-8
same Terms as granted to Ordnance Survey officers, would not be satisfactory, Tratman, Pleass	-	-	55,243-5
Urgency of question, Pleass	-	-	55,224
Reproduction, method, etc., and question of improvements, Brickdale	-	-	51,314-7
Staff, Brickdale	-	-	51,087-101
Superintendent, pay, increase of maximum advocated, Tratman	-	-	55,246
Superintendent surveyors, and assistants:
Claim to be made pensionable, Tratman			55,229-37
Work of, and importance and responsibility of, Tratman	-	-	55,231-42
Surveyors, salary, Pleass	-	-	55,215
Surveyor and assistant superintendent, work of, Pleass , 55,214-23; Tratman , 55,223.
Work of, Brickdale	50,996, 51,006-8, 51,076-84,		51,178

MIDDLESEX REGISTRY:

Indexes, Brickdale	-	51,136, 51,140-1, 51,150
Staff, Brickdale	-	51,155
Work of, Brickdale	-	50,996, 51,008
Office in Lincoln's Inn Fields, Brickdale	-	51,352-3
Organisation, modification needed, Muir Mackenzie	44,238-9, 55,267-8, 55,293
Organisation and arrangements of office, no change suggested, Sir P. Gregory	-	55,151
Pensions, position of staff as regards, Brickdale		51,179, 51,280

PROMOTION:

Ability should be first consideration, Brickdale		51,382-4
by Committee, proposal not approved and mediocrity might increase as result, Brickdale		51,211-8
Large proportion by selection, not seniority, Brickdale	-	51,385-90
Method, Brickdale	-	51,207-8
Rate believed to be slower than in Supreme Court, Brickdale	-	51,265-6
Small prospects of, owing to youth of staff, Brickdale	-	51,256

REGISTRAR:

Appointment by Lord Chancellor, continuance of system advocated, Sir P. Gregory	-	55,135-8
Barrister as, advantages over solicitor, Sir P. Gregory	-	55,152-6
Commendation of work done by, Sir P. Gregory		55,146
Qualification of 10 years' standing at the Bar, should be retained, Sir P. Gregory		55,133-4, 55,153-4
Qualifications required, Sir P. Gregory	-	55,133
Salary, Brickdale	-	51,015
Statutory qualification, Brickdale	-	50,996, 51,187

REGISTRATION OF TITLE:

Absolute title, increase in proportion, and encouragement of, Brickdale	-	51,045-8, 51,068-73
Attitude of legal profession towards system, and effect on staff, Stewart-Wallace	-	54,689-91
Compulsory:
in County of London, and form of obligation, Brickdale	-	51,049-52
Difference of opinion in legal profession re, Brickdale	-	51,061-3
Increase, question as to possibility, Brickdale		51,060
Outside London, provision for, but no application made by County Councils, Brickdale		51,056-9
in case of Purchases by County Councils under Small Holdings Act, Brickdale	-	51,053
Recommendation of Royal Commission on Land Transfer Acts, 1911, Brickdale	-	51,064-9
Documents, method of dealing with, Brickdale		51,108-11
Expansion of work, Stewart-Wallace	-	54,698
Improvements suggested by Royal Commission on Land Transfer Acts, 1911, Brickdale	-	51,067-9
Registration of possessory title and dealings with land, nature of work, Brickdale	-	51,037-44

Land Registry—continued.REGISTRATION OF TITLE—continued.

whole Registration of titles in the country may be centred in, ultimately, Sir P. Gregory 55,131-2 Staff, Brickdale, 51,031-6; Stewart-Wallace

		54,780
Work of, Brickdale	-	50,996, 51,009
CLOSER OFFICIAL RELATIONSHIP WITH CADASTRAL SURVEY AND LAND VALUATION OFFICE:
Desirable, and suggestion of Joint Board, Brickdale	51,295-8, 51,321-2, 51,328-36
Question of, Sir P. Gregory	-	55,161-71
RETIREMENT:
Application of ordinary Civil Service rules desirable, Stewart-Wallace	-	54,785-6
Compulsory at 65:
Age considered rather early, Brickdale		51,281-93

Liability accepted by all present permanent staff, Brickdale	-	51,278
Revenue, question as to likelihood of increase, Stewart-Wallace	-	54,790-8
Salaries, increase, difficulty re source of extra money, Muir Mackenzie	-	55,294-300

SCRIVENERY AND TYPING DEPARTMENT:

Typing, examination by writers, Brickdale		51,124-6
Typists:
Male, reason for, Brickdale	-	51,405-6
Rates of pay, Brickdale	-	51,119-20
all Women but one, Brickdale	-	51,118
Women, work excellently done, Brickdale		51,155, 51,325-6
Work of, Brickdale	-	51,107-16

Writers:

Hours, Brickdale	-	51,133-4
Number, and all men, Brickdale	-	51,121-2
Pay, and earnings, Brickdale	-	51,123-32
on Piecework, men only, Brickdale	-	51,402-4
Regular employment of, and question in case of old age, Brickdale	-	51,307-11
Secretary and Accounts Department, work of, and adoption of system might be advantageous in other departments, Brickdale	-	51,157-62, 51,304-6
Self-supporting and consequent difficulty of raising salaries, Muir Mackenzie	-	55,294-300

STAFF:

Difficulty of obtaining improvements in position owing to small surplus of receipts over expenditure, and objection to system, Brickdale		51,258-63
Numbers, &c., and distribution, Brickdale	51,013-36, 51,074-5, 51,087-106, 51,155
Particulars re, April 1215, Stewart-Wallace		App. CII.
Reorganisation, 1911, Stewart-Wallace		54,669-84
Satisfactory and system approved, Brickdale		51,209-10

WOMEN:

Opinion re employment of, Haldane	-	60,962-3
Question as to possibility of increased employment, Brickdale	-	51,391-8

WORK OF:

Nature of, Brickdale	-	50,996-1012
Variation in amount and adjustment of leave with regard to, Brickdale	-	51,276-7

Land Valuation Office, closer official relationship with Cadastral Survey and Land Registry:

Desirable, and suggestion of Joint Board, Brickdale	51,295-8, 51,321-2, 51,328-36
Question of, Sir P. Gregory	-	55,161-71
Law Clerks' Society, Oakshott	-	47,169
Law Courts, no rooms overcrowded, Winterbotham		50,002

LEADER, ERNEST WILLIAM, third class clerk, Principal Probate Registry, see COLLINS, LAURENCE CHURTON, and LEADER, ERNEST WILLIAM - 46,532-712

LEATHES, STANLEY, C.B., First Civil Service Commissioner - 48,834-958, Apps. XCVII, CIII, CIV.
Admiralty Registry, appointment of clerks without previous legal experience - 48,853-4
Central Office, appointment of clerks without previous legal experience - 48,853-4

LEATHES, STANLEY, C.B.—continued.

Chancery Masters, clerks, question as to need for technical qualifications - - - 48,950-6

CLERKS:

Appointment:

Candidates, comparison with candidates for second division and assistant clerkships - - - 48,860-1

Civil Service qualifying examination:

Age limits, 18-25 suggested - - - 48,873-7

Exemption:

"Bona fide clerk to solicitor," interpretation - - - 48,865-7

Conditions, &c - - - 48,840-50, 48,919-21

Particulars re - - - 48,838-40, 48,855-8

Question of inclusion of legal procedure - - - 48,887-9

Limited competition:

Difficulty - - - - - 48,865-7

Suggestion and question re inclusion of legal subjects - - - - - 48,878-86

Nomination, possible want of uniformity in methods - - - - - 48,957

Open competition:

should be Adopted wherever possible and legal work could probably be learnt after appointment - - - - - 48,936-46

no Objection seen - - - - - 48,859

for Some departments and nomination or limited competition for others, question of possibility - - - - - 48,868, 48,947-9

Standard of education and intellectual attainments would probably be raised - - - 48,862

Particulars as to candidates nominated since 1899 - - - 48,847-52, 48,899-910, App. XCVII.

Second class, appointment by open competition with legal qualifications, suggestion - - - 48,868-72

Third class:

Position, comparison with second division clerks - - - 48,862-4

Self-contained body:

Examination suggestion by Royal Commission for junior clerical staff would meet case of - - - 48,958 might be Satisfactory if promotion given in special cases - - - - - 48,897-8

Land Registry, second class clerks, direct appointment of persons of considerable legal experience - - - 48,853

LEGAL DEPARTMENTS:

Appointments in, that come before Civil Service Commissioners - - - - - 48,836-7

Exemption of certain offices in, from operation of Civil Service clause in Act of 1873 by Amending Act of 1879 - - - - - 48,922-9

MASTERS AND REGISTRARS:

Committee to report on qualifications of candidates, advantage doubted, present system should be satisfactory - - - - - 48,890-6

Medical examination should be applied - - - 48,930-2

Probate Registry, clerks:

Appointment of sons of persons employed in registry - - - - - 48,902-10

Appointment without previous legal experience - - - 48,853-4

Register House and Register House Departments; Edinburgh, proportion successful of candidates at open competitions for clerkships, 1905-1914, Apps. CIII, CIV

LEE, GEORGE AUGUSTUS JAMES, W.S., Deputy Keeper of the Records (in attendance) - - - 55,670-921

LEE, PERCY, Assistant Secretary, Land Registry (in attendance) - - - - - 50,994-51,406

Legal Departments, England:

Application to, of recommendations made for Civil Service generally, difficulty, Muir Mackenzie - - - 43,962, 43,984-6

Appointments in, that come before Civil Service Commissioners, Leathes - - - - - 48,836-7 no important Change suggested in organisation or method of appointment, but certain economies might be effected, Austen-Cartmell - - - 47,720-8

Civil Service rules re granting of increment contingent on certificate re conduct, might apply to, Heath - - - - - 60,527-8

Legal Departments, England—continued.

Civil Service rule re official taking part in management of society or other business could apply to, Heath - - - - - 60,524-6

Committee to attend to appointments and consider sufficiency of staff or over-staffing, &c., would be approved, Heath - - - - - 60,704-7

List of, under Lord Chancellor's control and divisions, Muir Mackenzie - - - - - 43,899-927

Note in estimates that "office and salary to be reconsidered on vacancy," explanation, Muir Mackenzie - - - - - 44,464-7

ORDERS IN COUNCIL GOVERNING CIVIL SERVICE:

should be substantially Applied to, Heath - - - 60,512 generally do not Apply to, entirely, Heath - - - 60,504-6

Question as to control of possible under- or over-staffing, Stringer - - - - - 49,839-52

Reduction of staff, position of Treasury re, Heath - - - 60,475-8, 60,696-703

REPRESENTATION IN HOUSE OF COMMONS:

Inadequacy of, and suggestion re, Muir Mackenzie, 43,895-8, 44,425-8, 44,314, 44,325-35, 44,358, 44,456-63, 55,414; Loreburn, 50,571-2

Suggestion of Lord Muir Mackenzie not agreed with, and suggestion re method, Haldane 60,955-7

Representation in Parliament, extent of, and question of direct representation, Heath - - - 60,713-20

Treasury control, Heath 60,472-5, 60,486, 60,708-12

Legal Departments, Scotland:

Control by Secretary for Scotland, extent of, and opinion re, Dodds - - - - - 55,571-600

Staff, alteration in numbers and scale of pay, procedure, Dodds - - - - - 55,584-95

Treasury control and method of exercising, Heath - - - 60,481-6

Legal Offices Committee, Muir Mackenzie - - - 43,941-5

Legal profession, opening of, to women, see under Women.

LEWIS, WALTER JAMES, representative of the Society of Solicitors in the Supreme Courts in Scotland - - - - - 59,442-587

Appointments, political, system should be done away with, although results good - - - 59,452-4, 59,533-5, 59,583-6

Commissary Clerk of Edinburgh, abolition of post and transfer of work to Sheriff Clerk, proposal not agreed with - - - - - 59,524-7

COURT OF SESSION:

Appointment:

Competition, objection to - - - - - 59,470 of Lord Advocate's clerk, criticism - - - 59,455-7

Qualifications, qualified law agent and recognised equivalents advocated - - - - - 59,446-50

Results satisfactory - - - - - 59,451

Standing Advisory Committee, suggestion, and proposed constitution - - - 59,459-69, 59,541-54, 59,557-9, 59,565

Higher posts should be filled by promotion - - - 59,467-9

Offices, transfer to Parliament House, advantages to be derived and inconveniences at present - - - 59,478-84

Retirement, fixed age would be approved, but 70 early enough - - - - - 59,486-7

Single service, extent to which possible - - - 59,471-6, 59,528-32

Staff, private practice should not be allowed - - - 59,485

PROCURATORS FISCAL:

Appointment:

Crown agent should be consulted - - - 59,521-3

by Lord Advocate, Sheriff should be consulted - - - 59,540, 59,555-6

Number, reduction would be approved - - - 59,509-10

Private practice should be avoided as far as possible - - - 59,505-8, 59,566-8

Staff, promotion:

to Higher posts advocated - - - - - 59,511-2

by Transfer, would be approved - - - 59,513-5

Register House, control by Court of Session should be maintained - - - - - 59,488-9

Register of Sasines, unlimited control by Keeper of, not approved - - - - - 59,489

SHERIFF CLERKS:

Appointment, by Lord Advocate, consultation with Sheriff advocated - - - 59,517-9, 59,536-40

Auditing of private accounts by, no great objection to - - - - - 59,577-9

LEWIS, WALTER JAMES—continued.SHERIFF CLERKS—continued.

as Auditor of Court, should be allowed unless in large city, and should be only extra work

59,563-4

Clerks, promotion to higher posts should be possible, and apprenticeship in office should be equal to apprenticeship in law agent's office

59,496-9,
59,520, 59,580

Deputes :

Auditing of private accounts by, no great objection to - - - - -

59,577-9

Private practice, should be avoided as far as possible - - - - -

59,502-4

Qualifications, law agents' examination or equivalent and certain experience advocated

59,492-5

Special class, recommendation of Lord Salvesen's Committee agreed with - - - - -

59,501

Number, reduction, recommendation of Lord Salvesen's Committee agreed with

59,500, 59,560-2

Private practice should be avoided as far as possible, but public appointments should be allowed in some cases -

59,502-4, 59,569-72, 59,572-6

Qualifications, law agents' examination or equivalent and certain experience advocated

59,492-5

Staff, appointment by Lord Advocate, consultation with Sheriff advocated -

59,517-9, 59,536-40

Sheriff Courts, increase in volume and complexity of work - - - - -

59,490-1

Lewis, Mr., Assistant Clerk, Chancery Registrars Office, reference - - - - -

46,904-6

Lewis, Mr., former Assistant Paymaster, references

50,425, 50,427

LISTER, J. E., see DAVIS, A. E., &c.

53,075-244

Longley, Mr., former Deputy Paymaster, reference

50,433-9

Lord Advocate :

Allowance to, for clerical assistance, R. Munro

60,105

Appointment by, see under Appointment.

CLERKS :

Appointment to clerkships in Court of Session, see under Clerks under Court of Session.

Lapse of office, Paterson -

57,586-91, 57,632-42,

57,648-54

Particulars re, R. Munro - - - - -

60,105

Position re, R. Munro - - - - -

60,224-36

Rearrangement made re clerk in London, but still clerk in Edinburgh serving Lord Advocate, R. Munro - - - - -

60,170-6

Duties and functions, Dodds - - - - -

55,518-9

Establishment and staff under, Dodds -

55,520-2

Legal secretary, duties, salary, position, &c., R. Munro

60,102-4, 60,221

Permanent legal secretary, not advocated, Dunedin, 58,497-8; R. Munro, 60,106-9; Scott-Dickson

60,467

Lord Chancellor :

Appointment by, see under Appointment.

Control over Admiralty, Probate, and Divorce Division, difference from that over other departments, and opinion re, Muir Mackenzie - - - - -

55,410-2

no Control over Scotch legal departments except justices of the peace, Dodds - - - - -

55,657-9

Ecclesiastical patronage, removal question, but no improvement can be suggested on present system, Haldane - - - - -

60,999

OFFICE :

Development of, Haldane - - - - -

60,951

Improvement question, Haldane - - - - -

60,952-4

Question of reorganisation, Muir Mackenzie

55,413-9

Permanent Secretary, further assistance might be necessary for, if duties of Lord Chancellor in connection with legal departments increased, Heath

60,479-80

Relief of, of some part of work, no consideration of, known of, Muir Mackenzie - - - - -

55,445-7

Representation in House of Commons, see under Legal Departments, England.

Responsibility to Parliament, question of, Haldane

60,949

Unable to know all details of departments, Loreburn

50,540, 50,651-2

Work excessive, Haldane - - - - -

60,907

Lord President, appointment by, see under Appointment, Scotland.

LOREBURN, THE RIGHT HON. EARL: 50,537-729

APPOINTMENTS :

by Board or Committee :

Advocated for appointments of a public character

50,540-1, 50,545

should Apply to all offices except judges and personal appointments by judges

50,640-50

Appeal to Lord Chancellor suggested

50,566,

50,576-7

Appointment of, by Lord Chancellor suggested

50,620-1

Appointment year by year suggested -

50,568,

50,578

Appointments should be made on own responsibility and direct responsibility to Parliament not desirable - - - - -

50,566-70, 50,620-9

Arrangements would be better made by Orders in Council - - - - -

50,639

proposed Composition

50,546-56, 50,559-65,

50,573, 50,579

Legislation would be necessary -

50,632-8,

50,649-50

would Meet very occasionally -

50,695

proposed Method of making appointments by 50,566

More than one would be possible if necessary

50,579

Promotions should be dealt with by -

50,575,

50,613-5, 50,692-5

Recommendation of Royal Commission re Treasury Committee not considered as satisfactory to Higher posts, by promotion advocated with discretion to Board to appoint from outside

50,616-9

50,698-9

Personal solicitation experienced to slight extent in regard to minor appointments -

50,544-5

Political pressure experienced for a time with regard to certain posts, but little now -

50,542-3

50,630

System :

not Approved - - - - -

50,540

Satisfactory in results in way work done

50,540

Vacancies, no objection to advertising or making known of - - - - -

50,700-1

Assize clerks, should be appointed by proposed Board

50,649-50

CHANCERY MASTERS :

Amalgamation with registrars, desirable, but existing interests should not be disturbed -

50,602

Sons of judges - - - - -

50,661-2

Chancery registrars, reduction in number -

50,602

CLERKS :

Appointment, direct, to higher grades, discretion of, should be left to proposed Committee should be Eligible for masterships or any other office and bar should be removed -

50,583

50,669-80

proposed Lower grade :

Appointment, question of method

50,588-94,

50,606-7

Legal experience would probably not be necessary - - - - -

50,608-11

Recruitment of, without expectation of promotion, but possibility of promotion in cases of exceptional merit advocated

50,723, 50,580-2, 50,584-5

Scheme - - - - -

50,715-29

Third class :

Appointment :

Age, question whether 30 too high

50,681-3

Limited competition, advantages of 50,686-91

Long waiting list - - - - -

50,631, 50,684-5

Retirement, Civil Service rule would be approved

50,598-9

Second and first classes, experience in solicitor's office useful and desirable but not indispensable

50,674-5

proposed Upper grade :

Appointment by competition, with discretion to bring men in subject only to qualifying examination, suggested

50,586-7, 50,594-7, 50,612

Competition, advantages and disadvantages

50,612

Women might be employed - - - - -

50,707-11

LOREBURN, THE RIGHT HON. EARL—continued.

- Judge's marshal, explanation - - - 50,645
 Legal departments, inconvenience from non-representation in House of Commons and need for representation - - - 50,571-2
 Legal profession, barrier against women should be removed - - - 50,703-6
 Lord Chancellor, unable to know all details of departments - - - 50,540, 50,651-2

LUNACY DEPARTMENTS:

Visitors:

- Local supervision desirable - - - 50,605
 Secretary to, explanation of Mr. R. C. Reid's appointment - - - 50,663
 Women visitor and medical inspector, employment desirable - - - 50,605, 50,702, 50,712-4

MASTERS:

- Retirement, fixed age desirable and 72 suggested - - - 59,598-601
 Senior, appointment by selection desirable 50,557-8
 Medical examination, question of, in case of appointments to pensionable offices, and no objection seen - - - 50,653-8
 Messengers, &c., appointment of ex-soldiers and sailors, and approval - - - 50,589
 PROMOTION:
 Selection desirable - - - 50,557-8
 by Seniority, should be rule, and selection by special merit the exception - - - 50,696
 Registrars, fixed age for retirement desirable and 72 suggested - - - 50,598-601
 Scrivenery Department, women typists might be employed - - - 50,709-11
 Theobald, Master, non-acceptance of resignation - - - 50,658

LOWE, ARTHUR LABRON, M.A., LL.B., Registrar of the Birmingham County Court and High Court and President of the Association of County Court Registrars: - - - 53,322-634
 Association of County Court Registrars, membership - - - 53,325

COUNTY COURTS:

Abolition of smaller courts and rearrangement:

- Advocated - - - 53,446-58
 Legislation might be necessary, but might be done by Order in Council 53,546-9, 53,632-4
 Local interests would object - - - 53,453-8
 Amalgamation with High Court, Birmingham, advantage of, and no inconvenience experienced - - - 53,432-5

Birmingham:

- Building, particulars re - - - 53,627-31
 Copying clerks, separate and not eligible for promotion - - - 53,428-31
 Copying work, and question as to extension of typewriting - - - 53,376-84
 Correspondence, amount of, and method of dealing with - - - 53,531-3
 Departments of, and work and staff - 53,344-61
 Girls, employment of, for copying work, salaries, &c. - - - 53,357-8, 53,376, 53,385
 Registrar, remuneration and allowance for clerks and ushers, 1912, 1913, 1914 - - - 53,362-3

Clerks in Registry:

Appointment:

- Age - - - 53,398-9, 53,405
 Candidates, no difficulty in obtaining, and method - - - 53,395-6 by Central Authority or by competition, drawbacks - - - 53,499-504 Method of deciding between applicants - - - 53,401, 53,522-4, 53,604-5 by Registrar, system should continue as long as registrar responsible for work and honesty of - - - 53,412-4, 53,476, 53,498, 53,603-22
 Birmingham, generally remain permanently, particulars re cases when men have left 53,406-8 Capacity of, to carry out work of Central Office - - - 53,526-30 social Class of - - - 53,397-400, 53,404
 Dismissal, retention of power by registrar desirable - - - 53,556-9, 53,588-90, 53,621-2
 Dismissal not likely on appointment of new registrar - - - 53,409-11, 53,550-3, 53,607-9

LOWE, ARTHUR LABRON, M.A., LL.B.—*cont.*COUNTY COURTS—continued.Clerks in Registry—continued.

- Encouragement of further education, and attendance at evening classes, - - - 53,402-3

Establishment:

- would not be Approved unless registrars Civil servants - - - 53,625 would Cost more than present system - - - 53,482-5

- Difficulties - - - 53,476, 53,485-6, 53,623

- Holidays - - - 53,507-9

- Hours, Birmingham - - - 53,506

- previous Legal experience not considered necessary - - - 53,392-4, 53,525

Pensions:

Contributory scheme:

- Government would have to pay existing men - - - 53,534

- should be Possible, and would remove difficulty re promotion - - - 53,489-93

- Difficulty in case of part-time clerks - - - 53,504-5

- Inconvenience from absence of - - - 53,487-8, 58,562-4

- greater Precautions would be necessary as regards appointment - - - 53,564-70

- Position not analogous to that of clerks in High Court - - - 53,476-7

- Promotion, method, and men may be occasionally passed over - - - 53,471-8

Remuneration:

- Adequate - - - * 53,473-5

- Comparison with pay for similar work outside Government service - - - 53,473-4

- Reduction of salary on becoming less efficient, examples - - - 53,534

- Salaries, Birmingham - - - 53,370-5

- Yearly increments would be approved - - - 53,624-5

- Retirement, fixed age would be approved if pensions given, and 65 suggested - - - 53,515-6, 53,516

- Work, nature of, but not more difficult than that of clerks in High Court - - - 53,477-81

Clerks and officers, appointment by registrars 53,391

High Bailiff's staff:

- Appointment, change of method not advocated while high bailiff responsible for work and honesty - - - 53,498

- Contributory pension scheme might be applied to - - - 53,494-7

Registrars:

Appointment:

- by Lord Chancellor instead of by judge not advocated - - - 53,390

- Method and statutory qualifications 53,386-7

- Civil servants, number - - - 53,476

- Control of staff and organisation of office by - - - 53,580-7

Payment:

- Limit to salaries - - - 53,368

by Results:

- Effect on imprisonment for debt, question of - - - 53,571-8

- Objections - - - 53,460-7

- Only possible system where work only part time - - - 53,460, 53,468-9

- considered Satisfactory on the whole by registrars generally - - - 53,460

- Touting for business as result of - - - 53,462-4

- by Salary, system should be extended - - - 53,469-72

- Private practice not allowed, Birmingham - - - 53,444-5

- Responsibility of, and question of advantage - - - 53,412-9, 53,610-20

- Retirement, fixed age:

- Desirable - - - 53,510-4

- 70 suggested - - - 53,512

- Rocheater, remuneration - - - 53,364-9

- practising Solicitors generally, and approval of - - - 53,388-9

LOWE, ARTHUR LABRON, M.A., LL.B.—*cont.*COUNTY COURTS—*continued.*Registrars—continued.

Work of:

Birmingham - - - - 53,591-602

Distinction from work as registrar of High Court - - - - 53,341-2

Nature of, &c. - - - - 53,329-43

Whole time officers, better that work should be done by - - - - 53,535-6

DISTRICT PROBATE REGISTRY, AMALGAMATION WITH COUNTY COURT AND HIGH COURT REGISTRIES:

would be Convenient in smaller places, and question of, in larger - - - - 53,436-43

Legislation question - - - - 53,545-9

Possibility - - - - 53,540-4

District Registry of High Court, observations re clerks, pensions, &c., apply equally to - 53,517-21

High Court, Birmingham, registrar, remuneration 53,362

Whitelock, Mr., County Court Registrar, Birmingham, opinions of, expressed in witnesses' evidence 53,634

Lunacy Departments:

AMALGAMATION OF MASTERS, VISITORS, AND BOARD OF CONTROL:

certain Advantage that would be derived, Theobald 48,378-9no Advantage or disadvantage seen, Muir Mackenzie - - - - 44,622Legislation passed by Parliament without dealing with, Theobald - - - - 48,322-8Scheme of Lord Chancellor for, Theobald 48,317-21

BOARD OF CONTROL:

Functions, and certain overlapping with visitors, Theobald - - - - 48,331-2, 48,370-7two Lady members, Theobald - - - - 48,649Legal members, appointments by Lord Chancellor, women not appointed by him, Muir Mackenzie 44,429-32

CLERKS:

Appointment:

Competition among persons with certain legal experience would be approved, Theobald 48,422-4Method and results satisfactory, Theobald 48,394-7, 48,541-2to Third class generally, but occasionally to second, Theobald - - - - 48,391-3Appointment as master would be possible if statutory qualification possessed, Theobald 48,513-6no Attendance-book, and question as to hours clerks arrive, Theobald - - - - 48,568-73Chief, duties, Theobald - - - - 48,398-9Competent men obtained, Theobald 48,397, 48,421First class, importance of work, and nature of, Theobald - - - - 48,425-35Legal experience of some, and value of, but not essential, Theobald - - - - 48,424, 48,632-8Number in different classes, Theobald - 48,385-8not Overworked, Theobald - - - - 48,416-8

Promotion:

Access to higher office desirable, Muir Mackenzie 44,263System, and approval of, Theobald - 48,506-11, 48,543Retirement, fixed age advocated strongly and ordinary Civil Service rule would be approved, Theobald - - - - 48,481-6, 48,544-8Salaries, Theobald - - - - 48,389-90

Third class:

Length of service, Pritchard - - - - 48,628

Promotion:

to Higher offices, found satisfactory, Theobald 48,438-40, 48,562-7to Second class, Theobald - - - - 48,614-25Work of, and mechanical nature of, Theobald 48,436-8, 48,557-61no regular Waiting list, Theobald - - - - 48,578-82History of, Theobald - - - - 48,307

MASTERS:

Administration of lunatics' estates in Chancery Chambers instead of by, proposed at one time, Muir Mackenzie - - - - 44,266-70Lunacy Departments—*continued.*MASTERS—*continued.*Appeals from, rare, Theobald - - - - 48,367-8Appointment, method and qualification, Theobald 48,381-2Classes of persons under care of, and numbers, Theobald - - - - 48,334-54History of, Theobald - - - - 48,307, 48,366Incompetent from ill-health, &c., question as to possibility of dismissal, Theobald - 48,593-600Number of lunatics dealt with by, Theobald 48,333-4One master and two assistant masters would be an improvement, Muir Mackenzie - - - - 44,271Report of Committee appointed to inquire into office of, 1909-10, Muir Mackenzie - App. XCI.Retirement, fixed age advocated strongly, and 72 suggested, Theobald - - - - 48,481-9

Salaries:

Reduction question, Muir Mackenzie 44,2732,000*l.*, explanation, Muir Mackenzie 44,273Solicitors as, no reason known against, and advantages, J. R. B. Gregory 47,311, 47,358-61

Two co-ordinate masters:

Certain differences of practice, but no serious difficulty, and change of system not advocated, Winterbotham - - - - 49,973-7Unsatisfactoriness of system, and one master would be sufficient, Theobald 48,441-54, 48,512, 48,551-6, 48,601-4Work of, Muir Mackenzie, 44,266; Theobald, 48,329-30; 48,354-7Office hours, and work sometimes taken home, Theobald - - - - 48,400-1, 48,419-20Orders, difficulties in forms of, and need for technical knowledge, Theobald - - - - 48,427, 48,608-13Position of, Muir Mackenzie - - - - 44,261Royal Commission on Lunacy called attention to, Muir Mackenzie - - - - 44,274-6Shorthand-writer typists, recommendation of Master of the Rolls Committee in 1912 re employment of, not carried out, and question of reason, Theobald 48,574-7Staff, commendation of, Oakshott, 47,081; Winterbotham, 49,971-2.

TAXING WORK:

System and nature of work, Theobald 48,499-505

Transfer to Central Taxing Office:

no Advantage seen and not advocated, Theobald 48,316, 48,494-8Advocated by all masters, Baker - - - - 45,800-6Transfer of administrative work to Chancery Division, reports of Commissions, &c., for, and against, Theobald - - - - 48,310-5Vacations, and arrangement re work during, Theobald - - - - 48,401-10, 48,588-9, 48,630-1

VISITORS:

Appointment, method and qualifications, Muir Mackenzie, 44,440-1; Mansfield, 48,720-34.Appointment for 10 years only, with option to continue, would be approved, Theobald 48,492, 48,550

Clerks:

Ages, Mansfield - - - - 48,808Class not as high as in Masters Office, but scales of salary the same, Mansfield - - - - 48,775-6Hours and vacations, Mansfield - - - - 48,791-2, 48,814-5Retirement, application of Civil Service rule re, no reason known against, Mansfield 48,744-7Second class, not required, Mansfield - 48,757-8Shorthand typists only, question of, Mansfield 48,788-90no Time book, but clerks appear regularly, Mansfield - - - - 48,821-3Difference of opinion between, procedure in case of, Mansfield - - - - 48,686-7Division of work between, Mansfield - 48,675-7, 48,768, 48,774no Executive powers, but would be valuable in some cases, Mansfield - - - - 48,706-19Lady doctor might not command same confidence, Mansfield - - - - 48,820Lay, part-time visitor, question of, Muir Mackenzie 55,440-1

MACDONELL, SIR JOHN, LL.D., C.B.—*continued.*CENTRAL OFFICE—continued.

Writs of summons :

Question as to work involved in issue of 45,652-5

Reduction in number of, owing to adoption of summons for directions - - - 45,503-6

Committee of Control, composition - - 45,672

Crown Office, Master of, duties different from those of masters in the King's Bench Division, and as Registrar for Court of Criminal Appeal entirely distinct - - - 45,541-8Judges of the High Court, appointment of masters as, possible theoretically but only one case of 45,569-70

Judges, King's Bench, pensions - - 45,375-8

Judges in chambers, devolution of duties to masters in the King's Bench - - - 45,274

KING'S BENCH MASTERS :

Ages, range of - - - 45,358-60

Appointment as judge, no case of - - 45,569

Appointment :

usual Age on - - - 45,315-6

Method and approval of 45,317-22, 45,600-11

Assistant :

Barristers - - - 45,312, 45,314

Work of - - 45,286, 45,388-96, 45,400-5

Clerk should be attached to each master, waste of time owing to lack of - - 45,333-41, 45,625

Clerks :

Ineligible for appointment as masters and barrier should be maintained - - - 45,533-6Work of, and impossibility of further devolution to - - - 45,342-6, 45,354, 45,566Court work, transfer to clerks and nature of work, and no complaints heard - - 45,323-32

Decisions, majority subject to appeal - 45,552

Devolution of certain part of work to assistant masters might be possible - - 45,397-9

Devolution of duties to, from judges - 45,274 previous Experience at the Bar - - 45,310-3

Hearing of cases, time taken by - - 45,347-53

Hours, and certain amount of work done after 4 p.m. - - - 45,406-9

Number - - - 45,284-5

Number :

Increase in, desirable in order to deal with issues in connection with executions by sheriffs

45,381-7, 45,670-1

Reduction in - - - 45,285-8

Pensions :

fair Allowance of added years advocated in certain cases, and should be fixed in each individual case on appointment - - 45,372-5Superannuation Act of 1909 not believed to apply, but might for future masters 45,379-80

System - - - 45,368-72

statutory Qualification - - - 45,310

Removal by Lord Chancellor possible - 45,551

Retirement :

no Fixed age, and recommendation of Coleridge

Committee not carried out - - 45,358-62

Inefficiency, pressure would probably result in
retirement - - - 45,367

Lord Chancellor has power to require 45,366

Senior :

Increasing amount of work has to be performed at home - - - 45,309

Promotion to post by seniority - - 45,269

Selection according to merit would not be objected to - - - 45,537-40, 45,597-8

Work of :

re Internal arrangements of business in office, and suggestion re special clerk to deal with matters of discipline approved 45,299-304

Nature of - - - 45,291-9

Solicitors as, question of, but training at the Bar preferred on the whole - 45,560-5, 45,627-34"Summons for directions," longer time should be given to hearing of - - - 45,354-7Taxing work transferred to taxing office 45,281-2, 45,288

Vacations :

Arrangements re work during - - 45,413-6Recommendations of Royal Commission on Delay in the King's Bench Division not yet carried out - - - 45,417-22MACDONELL, SIR JOHN, LL.D., C.B.—*continued.*KING'S BENCH MASTERS—continued.

Work :

Arrears of - - - 45,279, 45,411-2 in Connection with proceedings by or against poor persons - - - 45,289-90Difference from that of Chancery masters 45,635-44

Hardness of - - - 45,633

Increase of, by recent legislation
45,278-80, 45,553-6Particulars re - - 45,271-82, 45,309, 45,582-4

KING'S REMEMBRANCER :

Duties - - 45,306-8, 45,557-9, 45,571-3

Office, difference in procedure in, from that in King's Bench Division - - - 45,307Office held by senior master in King's Bench
45,305Master in Chancery, appointment as judge, one case
45,569Masters, hearing of summonses, &c., during vacation
45,516Taxing masters, certain subsidiary parts of work might be performed by clerks - - 45,567Vacation, attendance of witnesses, counsel and solicitors difficult to obtain - - - 45,525

MACDOUGALL, SIR JAMES PATTEN, K.C.B.,

Registrar-General for Scotland, and Deputy Clerk
Register - - - 55,670-921

RECORD OFFICE :

Clerks :

Legal knowledge required - - - 55,693

Scale of pay - - - 55,692

Deputy Keeper of Records :

Appointment, method - - - 55,744

Retirement, Civil Service rule applicable 55,745

Records kept at, nature of - - - 55,674-83

Staff of - - - 55,689-91

Women indexers employed - - - 55,870

Work of - - - 55,684-6, 55,729-32

Work of, and relation to Sasines office system
55,674

REGISTER HOUSE :

Amalgamation of departments, no need for 55,849

Appointments :

Clerks :

Age limits - - - 55,777

Competition between men with certain legal qualifications, system and success 55,773-88,
55,889-91

Examination, nature of - - - 55,904-6

by Open competition, and special examination after training in office, might be advisable, but change not advocated at present

55,788-93

Vacancies, average number annually 55,794

Crown, number unnecessarily high - 55,752-3

to Higher posts :

from Department advocated - - 55,754-5

Headships open to clerks - - 55,900

from Outside :

Consultation of Lord President and Lord
Justice General, suggestion - 55,759-66generally of Men without previous Civil Service experience - - - 55,754by Secretary for Scotland on recommendation of Deputy Clerk Register advocated

55,756-66

Varying methods, no reason seen for, and uniform method desired - 55,751, 55,897-903

Method - - - 55,747-50

Attendance books kept - - - 55,845

Buildings, accommodation, &c. - - 55,859-62

Chancery Department :

Abolition of, and merging with another department under consideration for years 55,713-6Amalgamation with Extractor's Department, no reason seen for - - - 55,853Placing of, under Deputy Clerk Register would be approved - - - 55,852-4

Work of - - - 55,711-2

Clerks :

Class much the same as second division clerks
55,892-6

MACDOUGALL, SIR JAMES PATTEN, K.C.B.—*cont.*REGISTER HOUSE—*continued.*Clerks—continued.

statutory Legal qualifications:

Nature of - 55,693, 55,773-5, 55,779-82

Possibility of men having failed in profession entering Register House 55,784, 55,886-8

Nature of work - - - 55,907-14

Deputy Clerk Register:

Appointment, method - - - 55,733

Combination of post with that of Registrar-General of Births, Deaths and Marriages, not satisfactory and separation advocated 55,825-9

Control and supervision by:

Effective - - - 55,872-8

Full, over all other departments advocated 55,830-2

Power re - - - 55,717-8, 55,722-8

Post instituted 1806 - - - 55,733

statutory Qualifications - - - 55,737

statutory Qualifications should be retained, and question of extension to include Writers to the Signet - - - 55,767-72

also Registrar-General - - - 55,673

Tenure of office, and clause in warrant of appointment re retirement at 70 considered ineffectual - - - 55,733-6, 55,740-3

Work of - - - 55,719-21

Disciplinary control, system and procedure

55,717-8, 55,722-8, 55,833-9

Engrossing Staff:

Appointment, by heads of departments 55,795

Earnings - - - 55,797

Hours - - - 55,797, 55,879

Interchangeable between departments 55,797

Payment by salary, with condition of certain amount of work to be done, question of 55,881-2

Penmanship, deterioration - - - 55,797

Pensioning off of:

would be Feasible - - - 55,810

Scheme prepared formerly - - - 55,801

Unfortunate position of 55,797, 55,810, 55,880, 55,883

Historical Department:

Allowance for publication of calendars, &c.

55,857-8

Curator, appointment, method - - - 55,856

Staff of - - - 55,687-8

Hours, overtime worked and arrangement re payment for - - - 55,840-4

Indexing of ancient records, no reason seen against employment of women - - - 55,918-9

Lord Clerk Register, post of, formerly - 55,828

Organisation satisfactory on the whole - 55,825

Pensions, all staff pensionable except engrossing staff - - - 55,846

Photolithography proposed by Lord Low's Committee but opposed by legal bodies and bill not passed - - - 55,799-801

Promotion:

in Hands of Deputy Clerk Register - 55,748

System - - - 55,811-23

Retirement, Civil Service rules applicable except to direct Crown appointments - - - 55,847-8

Staff, interchange between departments provided for, but no great amount of - - - 55,814-6

Typewriting:

Substitution of, for engrossing, desired 55,797,

55,801-8

should be Tried in Register of Deeds first, but would also be useful in Register of Sasines

55,806-8

Women only for, question of - - - 55,863-9

Work of, and distinction from General Register House - - - 55,672

REGISTER OF DEEDS:

Amalgamation with Register of Sasines, not

advocated - - - 55,850-1

Deeds may be sent to, and copies returned from, by post - - - 55,917

Employment of, question as to extent - 55,705-8

Engrossers, number of, &c., and substitution of typists desired - - - 55,710

MACDOUGALL, SIR JAMES PATTEN, K.C.B.—*cont.*REGISTER OF DEEDS—continued.

Keeper of, appointment, method 55,739, 55,746, 55,755

Procedure, difference from Register of Sasines,

55,701-4

Staff - - - 55,709-10

Typists, women employed - - - 55,797, 55,798

Work of - - - 55,700

REGISTER OF SASINES:

Clerks, nature of work - - - 55,908-14

Deeds may be sent and returned by post 55,915-7

Keeper:

Appointment:

from Department, unless none suitable,

desirable - - - 55,755-8

Method - - - 55,738, 55,855

Tenure of office - - - 55,739

Staff:

Legal and technical knowledge required 55,699

Numbers and pay - - - 55,695-8

Work of - - - 55,694

REGISTRAR-GENERAL OF BIRTHS, DEATHS, AND

MARRIAGES:

Combination of post with that of Deputy Clerk

Register, not satisfactory and separation

advocated - - - 55,825-9

Department:

Office, accommodation - - - 55,861

Promotion, system - - - 55,823-4

Women typists, replacement of men by, experiment - - - 55,919-21

Work, increase of - - - 55,826-8

Sheriff's Courts, records, transfer to Register House

desirable - - - 55,678-9

TYPEWRITING:

Fraudulent alteration, no importance attached to

suggestion - - - 55,803

Use of, extending rapidly in lawyers' offices

55,884-5

MACKENNA, PETER FRASER, LL.B., Procurator

Fiscal of Ayrshire (Ayr District) 57,485-531

PROCURATORS FISCAL:

Assistant, question of - - - 57,520-4

Economies effected by, by improvements on system of criminal procedure - - - 57,509

Leave of absence:

Hardship owing to lack of provision for, in small districts, and question of remedy 57,491-500,

57,520-3

Peripatetic Procurators Fiscal, system might be feasible - - - 57,498-500

Sick leave, suggested provision for - 57,509-12

Pensions:

Economies affected by Procurators Fiscal would cover extra cost of - 57,509, 57,529-31

Fixed age for retirement would be necessary and 70 suggested as compulsory, 65 as optional

57,505-8

Grievance felt re non-carrying out of recommen-dations of Commission of 1871 re - 57,489

Inconvenience and hardship from lack of 57,490,

57,513-5, 57,524-8

Taking over of all payments by Government would remove one difficulty - - - 57,509

Position compared with that of other offices 57,509

Private practice, restriction:

Difficulty in small districts, and consolidation in districts suggested - - - 57,516

Necessity greater in small districts - 57,516

Remuneration:

Payment by local authorities, and Government should take over - - - 57,509

Salaries:

Decrease of, on occurrence of vacancies 57,504

no Increase with length of service, and automatic increase advocated - - - 57,500-4

Work:

Emergent nature of - - - 57,499-500

Increase owing to recent legislation - 57,501

Increase of, without increase of salary or more provision for help - - - 57,500-3, 57,517-9

MACKENZIE, SIR KENNETH, BART., King's and Lord Treasurer's Remembrancer, Scotland
56,446-720

APPOINTMENT:

Committee to advise Lord Advocate, advantage doubted - - - - 56,614-5, 56,648-55
to Higher posts from outside, an advantage 56,705 Chancery Office, separate office not necessary, part of work might go to Register House and part to Sheriff Clerk in Edinburgh - - - 56,562-4

COMMISSARY CLERK OF MIDLOTHIAN:

might be Attached to Sheriff Clerk's office 56,584-6
Functions and jurisdiction - - - 56,584-8
Justiciary clerks, increases of pay - - 56,659

COURT OF SESSION:

Accountant:

Position of, and staff, and duties - 56,708-11
Salary, and reduction suggested 56,708, 56,712

Appointment:

open Competition advocated with regular promotion system - - - - 56,467-71
to Higher posts:
by Promotion and from outside - 56,458 by Promotion, preferable as general rule, if men suitable - - - - 56,463-6
Method - - - - 56,455-8
by Ordinary Civil Service second division examination suggested - 56,514-9, 56,692-707
Political considerations naturally enter into 56,460-1, 56,643-7

Auditor:

Private work - - - - 56,714-8
Qualifications required - - - 56,456
all Work sent to, officially should be done without charge of separate fees, even if salary raised - - - - 56,717-20

Clerks:

Appointment of Lord Advocate's clerks as 56,459
Depute, fixed age for retirement - 56,637 previous Legal experience not necessary in all cases - - - - 56,467-71
Routine work, separate class for, not necessary
56,656-8

Macers:

Class of men - - - - 56,689-91
Fees to, for witnesses - - - 56,624-31
Offices, closer proximity to Courts would be a convenience but difficulty - - - 56,557-61
Organisation satisfactory on the whole as regards way work done - - - - 56,478-80
Principal Clerk, keeping of own records by 56,657-8

Promotion slow and uncertain - - - 56,472-3

Register House proper must be kept separate from 56,496

Single service under Principal Clerk:

Extent to which possible 56,481, 56,485-7, 56,603-6, 56,492-3, 56,713
Promotion would be facilitated - - 56,466
Scheme - - - - 56,479-93, 56,601-13
free Transfer of men between different branches would be desirable - - - 56,489-92

EXTRACTOR'S DEPARTMENT:

Clerks:

Payment:

by Piecework, effect on length of extracts 56,633-4
by Salary now - - - - 56,632

Work of - - - - 56,684

KING'S AND LORD TREASURER'S REMEMBRANCER:

Duties - - - - 56,649-51, 56,619-23
Girls, employment of, to do work of second division men - - - - 56,664-6

MINOR LEGAL APPOINTMENTS COMMITTEE, RECOM- MENDATIONS:

Carrying out of, would be duty of Scottish Office 56,660-1
Many, not carried out owing to legislation being needed - - - - 56,659

PROCURATORS FISCAL:

of County of City of Edinburgh, post might be merged in that of Midlothian - - 56,592-3 Experience required - - - - 56,596
not Pensionable - - - - 56,598
Regular service of, desirable, but doubt as to application of Civil Service conditions 56,596

MACKENZIE, SIR KENNETH, BART.—continued.

PROCURATORS FISCAL—continued.

Whole-timers:

nearly All recent appointments have been 56,600

Desirable where enough work to occupy whole time, but not otherwise - - - 56,600

Record Office, satisfactory flow of promotion
56,474-6

REGISTER OF DEEDS:

Combination with Record Office, suggestion
56,504-5

Deputy Clerk Register should have control over 56,498-501

Engrossing staff, combination with Register of Sasines, question of - - - 56,546-9

Register of Sasines, satisfactory flow of promotion
56,474-6

REGISTER HOUSE:

Appointment:

by Civil Service second division examination advocated with exception of head of departments - - - - 56,514-9, 56,694-707

Legal qualifications considered unnecessary, open competition advocated - - 56,509-20

Clerks, transfer between Registers of Deeds and Sasines and Record Office, possibility 56,502-3

Deputy Clerk Register, no necessity seen personally for separation from post of Register-General - - - - 56,506-8

Engrossing staff:

Holidays and absence of sick leave, hardship re
56,552, 56,556

Mutual sick benefit fund - - - 56,553-6

Payment:

by Piecework, retention recommended by Committee owing to difficulty of devising better system - - - - 56,521-3

by Salary, with condition of certain amount of work to be done, question of - 56,532-7

Pensions, contributory scheme might be possible
56,550-1

Sick leave, arrangement desirable - - 56,556

Recording of deeds:

Difficulty re engrossers would be solved
56,527

Typewriting:

would Cost less than present system 56,528 no Objection to now, as ink indelible, and typing into book possible - - 56,529

Pensioning off of engrossers would be possible
56,528

Typists, women:

Clerical work for, during slack season, question of - - - - 56,662-82

should be Employed on Civil Service basis, but question owing to unevenness in amount of
work - - - - 56,530-49

must be kept Separate from Court of Session
56,496

Women, employment of, accommodation difficulty 56,682, 56,685-8

SHERIFF CLERKS:

Carrying out of work almost entirely by deputes in some cases - - - - 56,582

Clerks:

Pensions, application of contributory scheme to part-time officers might be possible 56,575-7

Subordinate, inadequacy of salaries - 56,577-81
Varying numbers, &c., in different districts 56,566

of Edinburgh County, post might be merged in that of Sheriff Clerk of Midlothian - 56,592-3

Reduction in number and whole-time officers only, would be approved, and promotion throughout consolidated service would be facilitated 56,567-74, 56,582-3

Teinds Office, work diminishing - - 56,494-5

McMULLEN, L., and BOURDELOT, H. E., Writers, Scrivenery Department, Principal Probate Registry - - - - 46,082-197

PRINCIPAL PROBATE REGISTRY, SCRIVENERY DE- PARTMENT:

Ages of oldest members of examining and copying staffs, length of service, &c. - 46,163-71

McMULLEN, L., and BOURDELOT, H. E.—*continued.*PRINCIPAL PROBATE REGISTRY, SCRIVENERY DEPARTMENT—continued.

- Appointment, method - - - 46,172-5
 Copying, rates of pay and average weekly earnings 46,101-23, 46,178-82
 Copyists, difficulty of putting on salaried basis according to department - - - 46,192-7
 Establishment, suggested scheme 46,156-8, 46,192-5
 Examining work, rates of pay, stipulated amount of work, and weekly earnings - 46,093-100
 Handwriting work - - - 46,115-22, 46,183
 Holidays - - - - - 46,128-32
 Hours - - - - - 46,124-9, 46,179
 Organisation before 1894 - - - 46,085-9
 Pensions:
 Claim of writers to be made pensionable 46,133-6
 Contributory scheme would be considered 46,159
 Voluntary and contributory scheme not considered - - - - - 46,154-5
 Staff, number - - - - - 46,083
 Superintendence by second class clerk assisted by third class, and duties of - - - 46,141-5
 Typewriting, introduction 1894, and re-organisation of staff - - - - - 46,090-2
 Women typists, two, and position of - 46,184-7
 Writers:
 Appointment to third class clerkships, opportunities, &c., but no financial gain 46,146-53, 46,188-9
 Difference between work of, and that of third class clerks, question of - - - 46,176-7
 Permanency of employment - - - 46,136-9
 Rate of pay not higher than in general market 46,160-2 always Sufficient work for - - - 46,190-1

MACONOCHIE, CHARLES CORNELIUS, K.C., Sheriff of the Lothians and Peebles 58,256-410

APPOINTMENT, COMMITTEE:

- Failure of, in case of appointments of Justices of the Peace - - - - - 58,298-302
 Objections to - - - - - 58,298-304

PROCURATORS FISCAL:

- Appointment:
 Method - - - - - 58,284
 by Promotion, cases - - - - - 58,282-4
 Conducting of prosecutions for local bodies, and question of continuance - - - 58,377-8
 Number, objection to reduction - - - 58,356
 Position of, and relation to Sheriff Court 58,268-9
 Private practice:
 not Allowed, with a few exceptions - 58,357-8 should be Allowed unless salaries raised 58,359-69
 Prohibition, question as to reason for 58,360-2, 58,395-6
 Public appointments, allowed in some cases and no inconvenience known - - - 58,364-8
 Qualifications:
 Law agent desirable - - - - - 58,271-5
 Legal knowledge needed - - - - - 58,270-1
 Staff, promotion by Committee of Procurators Fiscal, possibility doubted - - - 58,318-9

SHERIFF CLERKS:

- Appointment:
 by Committee, objections to proposal 58,298-304
 Method and opinion re - - - 58,276-8, 58,285
 Political considerations, extent of, but no bad appointments as result, and opinion re 58,279-82, 58,288-97
 by Promotion, preferred when possible 58,285-90, 58,379-82
 Appointment of official to supervise work of, objection to proposal - - - - - 58,370-3 as Auditor of Court approved of, in country districts - - - - - 58,374-5 Deputies:
 Appointment by Sheriff preferred - - 58,388-9
 Pay inadequate - - - - - 58,387
 Position of - - - - - 58,383-6
 Special class, suggestion - - - 58,324-9, 58,335-6, 58,407, 58,410

MACONOCHIE, CHAS. CORNELIUS, K.C.—*cont.*SHERIFF CLERKS—continued.

- Difficulty in obtaining, in country districts 58,265-7
 Law agent as, not essential - - - 58,260
 Number, reduction:
 Recommended by Departmental Committee would be approved - - - 58,320-1
 Whole-time would be occupied by official work 58,322
 Pensions, advocated - - - - - 58,334, 58,407
 Promotion, difficulty re - - - - - 58,390-4
 Qualifications, official experience and procedure more important than legal knowledge 58,260-4
 Remits from Sheriff, approval of system 58,376
 Responsibility of, as regards staff:
 Question as to extent of enforcement 58,349-52
 Retention important - - - 58,345-8, 58,353-4
 Staff in Lanarkshire required to find caution or insure - - - - - 58,355
 Retirement, fixed age, 70 would be early enough 58,410
 Salaries, inadequacy in some cases - 58,339-44
 Staff:
 Appointment by competition, objection to 58,400-2
 Official experience more important than legal knowledge - - - - - 58,260, 58,393
 Payment, stricter control by King's Remembrancer advocated - - - - - 58,331-3
 Pensions, not recommended - - - 58,335-8
 Promotion:
 by Committee of Sheriff Clerks, proposal not objected to - - - - - 58,307-17
 Present position - - - - - 58,305-6
 Removal, approval of some higher power should be required - - - - - 58,397-8
 System - - - - - 58,332
 Work, book-keeping - - - - - 58,262-3
 McTavish, Duncan, appointment as Keeper of the Rolls of Scottish Land Court, Kennedy 59,698-716, 59,751, 59,755-61

MAIS, ROBERT STANLEY OLIVER, District Registrar and District Probate Registrar, Manchester 52,460-622

DISTRICT HIGH COURT REGISTRIES:

- Clerks:
 Appointment:
 Method - - - - - 52,495
 Open competition at 18 to 24 advocated, and same examination as for probate registries 52,502
 Establishment, no difficulties as regards control over clerks and discipline anticipated 52,507-10
 Pensions, advocated for whole-timers 52,499-501, 52,514-24
 Permanent in practice, but dismissal possible 52,497-8
 Salaries, system - - - - - 52,492-4
 Jurisdiction - - - - - 52,590
 no Limit of jurisdiction - - - - - 52,587
 Manchester:
 Amount of business - - - - - 52,606-7
 Clerks, previous experience of - - - 52,503-6
 Registrar, previous experience, &c. - 52,553-63
 Staff - - - - - 52,490-1
 Number and reduction in, not necessary 52,588, 52,591
 Registrars, number pensionable - - - 52,511-3
 Transfer of work to London, possibility of 52,588-90

DISTRICT PROBATE REGISTRIES:

- Clerks:
 Appointments:
 by Open competition at 18 to 24, or 18 to 20, suggestion - - - 52,592-4, 52,604-5
 System not approved, and open competition advocated - - - - - 52,478-85, 52,480-1
 Employment by solicitor on private work 52,598-9
 Establishment, no difficulties as regards control over clerks and discipline anticipated 52,507-10
 Excessive number in some cases - - - 52,597

MAIS, ROBERT STANLEY OLIVER—continued.DISTRICT PROBATE REGISTRIES—continued.*Clerks—continued.

Old clerks taken on when new registrar appointed - - - - 52,600-1
 Pensions, advocated, and reasons - 52,472-4
 Retirement, fixed age advocated, and Civil Service rule would be approved - - 52,475-7
 Salaries adequate, but system of increments instead of fixed salaries would be preferable 52,486-9

Combination with High Court and County Court Registries:

Efficient carrying out of work doubted, and reasons - - - - 52,549, 52,571-84
 Same areas for probate and High Court work, but not same staff, question of - 52,585-7

Concentration:

Question as to extent to which registries could be reduced - - - 52,541-2, 52,586
 Staff question - - - - 52,543 old Wills might be transferred to London 52,544-8

Manchester:

Clerks, previous experience - - - 52,484
 Combination with High Court Registry, method of working and hardship - - - 52,584
 Staff - - - - 52,469-71

Registrars:

Agency business, system and objections to 52,616-22
 Lump sum, powder, coal, stationery, &c.
 52,602-3

Man with experience in Central Registry more suitable than local solicitor - - 52,550-1

Manchester, automatically the District High Court Registrar - - - - 52,552

Salaries:

at Different places, and inequality as compared with amount of work - - - 52,608-15
 Readjustment needed - - - - 52,612-3

Small:

Abolition, no hardship would result to public 52,527

Recommendation of Legal Departments Commission of 1874 re concentration of, question as to non-carrying out of - - - 52,530-6

Staff, whole-time, should become Civil servants
 52,567-9

Territorial jurisdiction, suggestion re abolition
 52,536-40, 52,587

Manchester:

District High Court Registry, see under District High Court Registries.

District Probate Registry, see under District Probate Registries.

MANSFIELD, THE HON. JOHN WILLIAM, Legal Chancery Visitor of Lunatics - 48,650-833LUNACY VISITORS:

Appointment, method and qualifications 48,720-34

Clerks:

Ages - - - - 48,808
 Class not as high as in masters' office, but scales of salary the same - - - 48,775-6
 Hours and vacations - - 48,791-2, 48,814-5
 Retirement, no reason known against application of Civil Service rule - - - 48,744-7
 Second class, not required - - - 48,757-8
 Shorthand typist only, question of - 48,788-90 no Time book, but clerks appear regularly 48,821-3

Difference of opinion between, procedure in case of 48,686-7

Division of work between 48,675-7, 48,768, 48,774

Duties - - - - 48,653-5
 no Executive powers, but would be valuable in some cases - - - - 48,706-19

Lady doctor might not command same confidence 48,820

Legal:

if Dispensed with, medical man should be appointed instead - - - - 48,694-7

Extent of difference in work from that of medical visitors - - - - 48,678

Value of, question as to - 48,679-97, 48,761-3

MANSFIELD, THE HON. JOHN WILLIAM—cont.LUNACY VISITORS—continued.

Local people as, question of - - - 48,771
 Meetings with masters - - - - 48,687
 Notice of visits only given in some cases 48,793
 Number of establishments visited during year
 48,764

Number of patients visited in one day - 48,765-6

Number of persons visited and number of visits
 48,660-9

Office:

immediately Below that of masters - 48,759

Staff - - - - 48,738-43

Women in, question of - - - - 48,816-9

little Office work - - - - 48,673-4, 48,777-8

Paying of visits during vacation - - 48,779-84

Pensionable - - - - 48,760

Relations with masters, and considered satisfactory
 48,705-15

Removal, power of - - - - 48,737

Reports:

always sent to Lord Chancellor and sometimes to master - - - 48,698-703, 48,707-10

System - - - - 48,698-704, 48,751

special Requests received from Lord Chancellor and Lords Justices to visit 48,664-7, 48,670

Retirement, fixed age not advocated
 48,735-7, 48,794-807

Shorthand writer to, but no shorthand done, explanation - - - - 48,753-5, 48,811-3

Travelling by, amount of, and question of increase 48,670-2, 48,779-86, 48,830-3, 48,824-6

Typewriters, economy of time and labour would result from use of - - - 48,748-52, 48,756

Work:

Amount of, about stationary the last four years
 48,772

Other than travelling - - - - 48,827-9

Lunatics, extent of procedure by inquisition 48,656-9

MANSON, EDWARD, Registrar in Bankruptcy Companies (Winding-up) Department, and BARNES, THOMAS, Chief Clerk - 49,168-394

Appointment, by Lord Chancellor, opinion of profession sufficient safeguard - - - 49,383-7

COMPANIES:

Large number struck off register as defunct, and no control over or inquiry - - - 49,191-201

Winding-up, judges dealing with - - 49,213-6

COMPANIES (WINDING-UP) DEPARTMENT:Clerks:*Appointment:

to Higher posts by competition not desirable, but might do for third class - - 49,278

Method and success - 49,270-1, 49,284-90

Second or third classes, competition for, possible difficulty - - - - 49,366-71

to Third class, competition among persons having served in solicitor's office would be approved - - - - 49,291-9

Class, comparison with 30, 40, or 50 years ago
 49,165-7

Eligibility for appointment as registrars would not be objected to - - - - 49,308-9

First class, number compared with Bankruptcy Department, question of reason - 49,357-9

Hours, work often done after - - - 49,315-6

Legal experience mostly acquired in office 49,272

Organisation satisfactory - - - - 49,326-9

Praise of - - - - 49,326

Promotion:

Hardship re, and introduction of service scale would be approved - - - - 49,359-65

few Prospects of - - - - 49,302-7

to Second or third class, legal experience or certificate or diploma should be necessary qualification - - - - 49,273-9

System - - - - 49,300-2

Retirement, ordinary Civil Service rule would be approved - - - - 49,344-9

Third class:

Giving of good work and more responsibility to, successful - - - - 49,350-2

Legal knowledge desirable 49,280-3, 49,291-9, 49,345-6

MANSON, EDWARD, and BARNES, THOMAS—
continued.

COMPANIES (WINDING-UP) DEPARTMENT—continued.
Clerks—continued.

Transfer to other departments owing to slow rate of promotion - - - 49,303-5
Work of different classes, and extent of distinction - - - 49,248-67, 49,388-90
Creation of, 1891 - - - 49,174-8
Hours - - - 49,311, 49,314-5
Official receivers and functions 49,181-2, 49,207
Orders, procedure - - - 49,234, 49,236

Registrars:

Appointment, method and statutory qualifications - - - 49,268-9
no Civil Service certificate furnished personally 49,378
Duties - 49,208-12, 49,217, 49,222, 49,225-31
Pension, added years - - - 49,375
Retirement, 70 considered a good age for 49,344
Relation to Board of Trade - - - 49,179-80
Scrivenery work and question of typewriting 49,330-1, 49,337-43, 49,391-4
Shorthand, use of, in private examinations 49,334-6
Staff not overworked since augmentation in 1912 49,317-8
Vacation work - - - 49,311-4
Winding-up proceedings, particulars re 49,183-91, 49,202

Work of office:

Description - - - 49,233-6, 49,236-47
Increase - - - 49,319-25

DEBENTURE HOLDERS' ACTIONS, TRANSFER FROM CHANCERY TO COMPANIES (WINDING UP) DEPARTMENT:

Desirable, but heavy burden on clerks would result 49,218-23, 49,225 should be Limited to supervision cases as well as compulsory - - - 49,223-5

Master in Chancery (extinct), appointment as judge, one case, Macdonell - - - 45,569

Masters and Registrars of the Supreme Court:

see also under particular departments.

APPOINTMENT:]

Committee to report on qualifications of candidates, advantage doubted, present system should be satisfactory, Leathes - - - 48,890-6
without Examination, Muir Mackenzie - 44,020-1
Lord Chancellor not necessarily limited in choice to persons applying, but no need to go outside in practice, Muir Mackenzie - - - 44,074-7
Method, Muir Mackenzie 43,990-8, 44,399-409
Open competition not possible, Muir Mackenzie 44,070-1 of Relations of judges, existence of legal families, Haldane - - - 60,948

System considered satisfactory, but some modification suggested, Muir Mackenzie - 44,072-3

Clerks work under control of, Muir Mackenzie 43,989
Hearing of summonses, &c., during vacation, Macdonell - - - 45,516

HOURS:

Opinion re, Caunt - - - 50,312-5
Work frequently taken home, Caunt - 50,311

Medical examination should be applied, Leathes 48,930-2

Meetings between, to keep practice uniform in all divisions, Romer - - - 44,773-5

Pensions, adding of years, desirability of, Muir Mackenzie - - - 44,193-4 should have Power to try certain actions in court, Stringer - - - 49,718-9 statutory Qualifications, Muir Mackenzie - 43,962, 43,967, 43,980-1, 44,339-41

Retirement, see that title.

SENIOR:

Applicable only to common law side by statute, Muir Mackenzie - - - 55,424

Appointment by selection:

no Advantage seen, Bayford - - - 48,207-10
Desirable, Loreburn, 50,557-8; Muir Mackenzie, 55,420-6; Heath, 60,679-80; Haldane, 60,935. would not be Objected to, Macdonell, 45,537-40, 45,597-8; Fox, 47,987-93.

Masters and Registrars of the Supreme Court—cont.

Tenure of office, Muir Mackenzie - - - 44,175
Work of, Muir Mackenzie - - - 43,963-79
Work, devolution of certain parts of, to principal clerks, suggestion, Stringer - - - 49,719-26
Matthews, Mr., former Clerk of Assize, reference 51,477
Medical examination, question of, in case of appointments to pensionable offices, and no objection seen, Loreburn - - - 50,653-8
Melville, Mr., Clerk in Chancery Registrars Office, reference - - - 46,838-42
Midlothian, Sheriff Substitute, see that title.

MILLIKIN, THOMAS, Third Class Clerk, Chancery Registrars Office - - - 54,575-628

CHANCERY REGISTRARS OFFICE, THIRD CLASS CLERKS:

Passing over of four elder, as regards transfer to other offices, and grievance re 54,579-616, 54,627-8
Work of - - - 54,627-25

Minor Legal Appointments Committee, Recommendations:

Carrying out of, would be duty of Scottish Office, Mackenzie - - - 56,660-1
Extent to which carried out, Dodds, 55,652-3; Adam, 56,177-88, 56,193-7; Salvesen, 59,036-7.

Lines of least resistance followed in report, Salvesen 59,034-5

Many, not carried out owing to legislation being needed, Mackenzie - - - 56,659

Minute Book Office:

Consolidation with Court of Session service, and supervision by officer of rank of Depute Clerk of Session suggested, Mackenzie - - - 56,482-4

Disciplinary control, Adam - - - 56,057-8

Keeper of, and Depute, not pensionable, Adam 55,997

Transfer to Extractor's Department desirable, Thomson - - - 59,824-6, 59,829-31

More, Mr., Clerk in Chancery Registrars Office, reference - - - 46,837-42

MORTON, CHARLES HENRY, Honorary Secretary of the Associated Provincial Law Societies, &c. 52,623-731

Associated Provincial Law Societies, explanation

52,626
Chancery masters, solicitors as - - - 52,651

DISTRICT HIGH COURT REGISTRARS:

Appointment of District Probate Registrars as, undesirability of - - - 52,631-48, 52,723-31

Private practice, objection to - - - 52,669

Qualifications required - - - 52,632

Statutory qualifications - - - 52,647-8

Ten years' practice as solicitor desirable as a rule 52,724-31

Work of, and importance - 52,631-2, 52,640-5

DISTRICT PROBATE REGISTRIES:

Attachment to district High Court and County Court registries, suggestion 52,676-91, 52,702-14

Manchester, appointment as District High Court Registrar authorised by statute but not obligatory - - - 52,634-8

Registrars:

Agency work:

Attitude of legal profession re - 52,716

Nature of, and fees derived from - 52,715-22

Appointment of clerk from Principal Probate Registry as, and subsequent promotion to District High Court Registrarship, undesirability of - - - 52,631-48, 52,723-31

Simple nature of work - 52,667, 52,686-8

Registrarship, combination with registrarship of High Court, suggestion - - - 52,668-70

Small:

Advantage to public - - - 52,671

Sending up of papers, &c., by Excise officers, might take place of - - - 52,672-5

Territorial jurisdiction, abolition advocated 52,692-3

MORTON, CHARLES HENRY—continued.

DISTRICT REGISTRIES (PROBATE, HIGH COURT, COUNTY COURT):

Clerks:

- Pensions advocated, and suggested method 52,664
- Retirement, 60 suggested as age for - 52,657
- Stay on too long owing to no retiring allowance or pension - 52,654-7, 52,665
- Concentration of all subordinate legal duties in certain centres possible - 52,701
- Work well done as far as experience of witness goes - 52,666-7

KING'S BENCH MASTERS:

- Barristers always in practice - 52,649-50
- Solicitor as, suitability of, and should sometimes be appointed - 52,649-50

RULE COMMITTEE OF THE SUPREME COURT:

- Acting Chairman, suggestion - 52,699
- Amendment of rules, delays - 52,696
- Assistant secretary, suggestion - 52,699
- Constitution - 52,700
- King's Bench and Chancery Masters and Registrars of Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Divisions might be members, Taxing Master less necessary - 52,695-6
- Meetings, no fixed dates, and suggestion re 52,696-9

SOLICITORS' CLERKS:

- Pensions given in some cases - 52,660
- Practice re, when becoming inefficient - 52,658-9
- Provident or pension societies in some large towns - 52,662-3
- Taxing Masters, solicitors as, essential - 52,652

MUIR MACKENZIE, SIR KENNETH AUGUSTUS, G.C.B., K.C., Permanent Secretary to the Lord Chancellor - 43,891-44,486, 55,249-511, Apps. XCI.-XCIV.

APPOINTMENTS:

Committee:

- to Advise on qualifications of applicants, suggestion - 44,078, 44,087, 55,250-1
- as Described by Lord Loreburn:
- should be Confined to original appointments 55,437

Opinion re proposed composition and independent member advocated - 55,256-60

Scheme would have to be worked out by sub-committee or between Lord Chancellor and Treasury - 55,261

Method - 43,946, 43,990

No one not responsible to Parliament should have power of appointment 44,084-6, 55,249, 55,252-6

Patronage, abolition of, question whether head of department should not have voice in appointment - 55,483

Principles of report of Royal Commission re patronage should be adopted 44,052-8, 44,072-3, 44,080-7

Assizes, allocation of time, system, and difficulty of estimating time required - 44,483

ASSIZE CLERKS:

Appointment, method, and qualifications 44,249-53, 44,336-8

Position - 44,242, 44,359-62

Salary - 44,415, 44,416

Assize officers, utilisation at Royal Courts of Justice when Courts not sitting, recommended by Committee of 1887, but difficulty of, now - 44,246-7

ASSIZE OFFICES:

Establishment at minimum possible - 44,242

Organisation - 44,242-6

Associates Department, proposed separation from Central Office not approved - 55,350

Attendance-book, uniformity of practice re, desirable 55,427

CENTRAL OFFICE:

Assistant masters - 44,127-30

Clerks, interchangeability with Associates Department and Crown Office advantageous, and separation of departments not advocated - 55,350

Committee of Control - 44,099-100

Departments of - 43,949

Explanation - 43,901-3, 43,990

MUIR MACKENZIE, SIR KENNETH AUGUSTUS, G.C.B., K.C.—continued.

CHANCERY CHAMBERS:

Clerks:

- Diminution, difficulties of - 55,319-21
- Two separate grades, question of, but present system approved - 55,269-74
- Committee of Masters - 55,331-5
- Large proportion of higher offices, and question of modification - 44,138-41
- Work, question as to extent of diminution 55,315-7

CHANCERY OFFICES:

- Amalgamation, desirable 44,137, 44,142-3, 55,397
- Higher offices, proportion perhaps unnecessarily high - 44,138-41, 55,313, App. XCIV.

CHANCERY REGISTRARS:

- Appointment from principal clerks - 44,027-8

Clerks:

- Organisation, present and former - 55,283
- Principal, right of succession to registrarship, no understanding on which claim could be founded, but possible expectation - 55,284-90
- Transfer from other departments - 55,283
- Committee appointed to inquire into office of, 1906-7:

Memorandum prepared for - App. XCIII.

Report of - App. XCII.

Large proportion of higher offices, and question of modification - 44,138-41, App. XCIV.

Circuits, number - 44,203-6

CLERKS:

Absence owing to sickness:

- Control of, present system - 55,429-31
- Uniformity of practice re, desirable, but no unreasonable divergence known of - 55,427-30
- Access to highest posts desirable, and suggestion re intermediate grade between 600*l.* and 1,500*l.* grades and strong efficiency bar - 44,030, 44,123-35, 55,307-12
- Age limits - 44,004-6

Appointment:

Applications:

- Method of dealing with, in Lord Chancellor's office - 44,033-41, 44,048
- Possibility of making, apparently well known 44,036-9

Competition would not be objected to, and question of limited or open, and of personal interview - 44,050, 44,059-64, 44,346-55

Direct to higher classes, right of, in theory 55,262

Open competition for lower grades would be approved and no difficulty seen - 55,364-9

Open competition among men with certain legal experience, no difficulty seen - 55,305-6 in Practice almost entirely to third class, but not so under regulations - 44,006, 44,011-4

Qualifying examination of Civil Service Commission:

Alteration advocated - 44,091-5

Exemption in certain cases - 44,022-4

Nature of - 44,042-4

System - 43,959, 44,007-10, 44,017-9

sometimes Taken after appointment 44,042

System - 43,990-8, 44,407-8

Appointment as masters in some divisions, 44,027-9, 44,032

Class of men applying for posts - 44,045-50

Classes and salaries - 43,982-3

Classification, establishment of - 55,262

Experience in solicitor's office should not be absolute qualification, as leaven of men of higher or university education desirable - 44,025-6, 44,061-8, 44,471

First class:

Appointment by promotion in practice 44,096-8, 44,363-70

Appointment of some, from outside would be an advantage - 44,068-9, 44,104 proposed Higher class:

Appointment by Board would be preferable to competition - 55,389-96

Appointment at about 27 suggested - 55,393-5

should be purely Professional - 55,391-2

Interchange between departments - 44,472-3

MUIR MACKENZIE, SIR KENNETH AUGUSTUS,
G.C.B., K.C.—continued.

CLERKS—continued.

- greater Interchangeability between departments
desirable - - - - - 44,114-22
Probation - - - - - 44,475-7
Routine work:
Inquiry as to possibility of reducing, would be advantageous - - - - - 44,385-8
Question as to amount of - - - 44,368-70
Tenure of office - - - - - 44,176-7
Third class:
as Self-contained body, would be workable and merits seen, but promotion preferred 55,262-74 more Share, or opportunity of sharing, in better work desirable - - - - - 55,262
Work:
Difference between that of different classes
44,111-2
Distinction from that of masters - 43,987-9

COUNTY COURTS:

- Abolition of smaller, difficulty owing to local influences - - - - - 55,468-72
Clerks, contributory pension scheme would be advantageous, but whole-time clerks should be treated as clerks in offices of solicitors appointed to public departments - - - 55,493-7
Registrars:
Appointment:
Continuance of system advocated - 55,462-3
System and statutory qualifications 43,999-
4,000, 44,002, 44,213-5
One to each court in each circuit - 44,207
Payment by results:
not a Good system, but possibility of altering doubted - - - - - 44,412, 55,505-6
Reply to criticism - - - - - 44,410-2
Position of, &c. - - - - - 44,215-25
Reservation of part of salary for late holder, case of - - - - - 55,498-501
Same as High Court registrar:
Appointment:
by Committee, judge should have some voice or representation - - - 55,482 by Lord Chancellor advocated 55,458-60, 55,463
in Certain places - - - - - 55,454
Union of courts under one, in some cases not in exact accordance with meaning of Act 55,467
Whole-time:
Increase desirable where practicable
55,464-5
Number might be increased by uniting more than one court under- - - - 55,466
Work of - - - - - 44,208-12
Staff, system - - - - - 44,226-31
System - - - - - 44,202-6
Court of Claims - - - - - 44,304

COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEAL:

- Registrar:
a Master of the Central Office - - 44,254-5
Separate officer, proposal not approved 55,350-1
Staff - - - - - 44,254-5

CROWN OFFICE:

- Clerk of the Crown:
Amalgamation with Secretary's Office:
Advantages - - - - - 44,302-3, 44,309-10
Strain on office at times of general elections and coronations - - - - - 44,302-4, 44,478-9
Ecclesiastical business - - - - 44,480-2
Position and functions 44,299-308, 44,311-9 Finances borne on Supreme Court vote although not a department of the Supreme Court 44,256 one Master and three assistant masters, system considered satisfactory - - - 55,351
Position of - - - - - 43,922, 44,299-301
Separation from Central Office, proposal not approved - - - - - 55,350
Work of, and staff - - - - - 44,255

DISCIPLINE, &c.:

- Application of Civil Service regulations to, legal position re, and difficulty with regard to Long
Vacation - - - - - 44,157-60
Appointment of chief clerk to deal with, proposal not altogether approved, and no advantage seen 55,322-36

MUIR MACKENZIE, SIR KENNETH AUGUSTUS,
G.C.B., K.C.—continued.

DISTRICT HIGH COURT REGISTRIES:

- Jurisdiction laid down in Order 35 of the Rules of the Supreme Court - - - - - 44,257
Registrars, method of appointment, and suggestion
43,999-4,000, 44,002, 44,215-6

DISTRICT PROBATE REGISTRIES:

- Abolition of smaller, or concentration in larger centres, would be useful - - - 55,473-5
Amalgamation with other district registries, desirable but difficulties 43,145-8, 44,231-3, 55,479-82
Clerks, contributory pension scheme would be advantageous - - - - - 55,491-6
Readjustment of, to correspond with present importance of places desirable, and little local criticism anticipated - - - - 44,149-50

Registrar:

- Agency business:
when Done in office hours, fact should be considered with regard to compensation 55,507-11
might be Part of official duties and question of extra salary - - - - - 55,485-8
Question formerly considered and reason for no interference - - - - - 55,484-5 same as High Court registrar in certain places 55,452-3

- Territorial jurisdiction, no objection known of to abolition - - - - - 55,476-8

- Elections, functions of Clerk of the Crown re 44,302, 44,305-8

HOURS:

- Great deal of work could be done after hours public admitted - - - - - 55,043
Ten to five, question of, and no reason seen against, but solicitors, &c., do not require courts open after four - - - - - 44,197-200, 44,422-4

JUDGES' CLERKS:

- Careers after retirement of judge - 44,356 generally Clerks to judge when barrister 44,280, 44,285

- proposed Eligibility for clerkships in Supreme Court after retirement of judge, objection to 44,289-91

- Non-pensionable, and reasons - - 44,284-9
One to each judge, two formerly - 44,278
Personal officers attached to judges and appointed by them - - - - - 44,277-80, 44,283
Salary - - - - - 44,279
Work of - - - - - 44,281-2
Judicature Acts - - - - - 43,928-46

LAND REGISTRY:

- Appointments, system - - - - 44,234-8
Clerks:

First class:

- Change of title, no importance attached to, but no objection - - - - - 55,301
Expectations, non-realisation admitted 55,293
Increase of pay, claim to, agreed to be justified
55,300

- Work the same as that done by assistant
registrars - - - - - 55,294

- Lower grade, not rising above 200*l.*, appointment by open competition would be approved 55,302-4

- if Two grades, higher grade should be barristers or solicitors - - - - - 55,291-2

- Fees fixed to cover expenses, and fact of being self-supporting should be remembered in considering organisation, &c. 44,239-41, 55,294-300

- Higher officers, direct appointment to 44,238
Organisation, modification needed - 44,238-9, 55,267-8, 55,293

- Salaries, increase, difficulty re source of extra money - - - - - 55,294-300

LEGAL DEPARTMENTS:

- Application to, of recommendations made for Civil Service generally, difficulty 43,962, 43,984-6

- List of, under Lord Chancellor's control, and divisions - - - - - 43,899-927

- Note in estimates that "office and salary to be reconsidered on vacancy," explanation 44,464-7

MUIR MACKENZIE, SIR KENNETH AUGUSTUS,
G.C.B., K.C.—continued.

LEGAL DEPARTMENTS—continued.

Representation in House of Commons, inadequacy of, and suggestion re 43,895–8, 44,425–8, 44,314, 44,325–35, 44,358, 44,456–63, 55,414
Vacancies, provision to enable consideration as to necessity for post - - - 44,484–5

LORD CHANCELLOR:

Control over Admiralty, Probate and Divorce Division, difference from that over other departments, and opinion re - - - 55,410–2
Relief of, of some part of work, no consideration of, known of - - - 55,445–7
Office of, reorganisation question - 55,413–9

Lunacy, New Central Board, legal members appointed by Lord Chancellor, women not appointed by him 44,429–32

LUNACY DEPARTMENTS:

Amalgamation of masters' and visitors' offices, no advantage or disadvantage seen - 44,622
Clerks, should have access to higher offices 44,263

Masters:

Administration of lunatics' estates in Chancery Chambers instead of by, proposed at one time 44,266–70

One master and two assistant masters would be an improvement - - - 44,271

Report of Committee appointed to inquire into office of, 1909–10 - - - App. XCI.

Salaries:

Reduction, question - - - 44,273
2,000*l.*, explanation - - - 44,273

Work of - - - 44,266

Position of - - - 44,261

Royal Commission on Lunacy called attention to 44,274–6

Visitors in Lunacy:

Appointed by Lord Chancellor - 44,440

Lay:

Local, disadvantages of proposal 55,337
as Opposed to medical, advantageous, but lawyer not essential - 55,349, 55,439

Part-time visitor, question of - 55,440–1

Position of - - - 44,37–8

Reports, go before Board before being sent to Lord Chancellor - - - 55,039–45

Woman:

Desirable, but increased number of visitors not needed - - - 55,347–8

Employment of, part time in special cases would be approved - - - 55,448–9

no Women, and question has not been considered 44,433–6

MASTERS AND REGISTRARS OF THE SUPREME COURT:

Appointment:

without Examination - - - 44,020–1

Lord Chancellor not necessarily limited in choice to persons applying, but no need to go outside in practice - - - 44,074–7

Method - 43,990–8, 44,399–409, 55,450–1

Open competition not possible - 44,070–1

System considered satisfactory but some modification suggested - - - 44,072–3

Clerks work under control of - - - 43,989

Pensions, desirability of adding of years 44,193–4
statutory Qualifications 43,962, 43,967, 43,980–1, 44,339–41

Retirement, fixed age for:

Application of principles laid down in report of Royal Commission would be approved 44,186–8

70 suggested - - - 44,189–90

Vested interests would be entitled to compensation - - - 44,174

Senior:

Applicable only to common law side by statute 55,424

Appointment by selection by Lord Chancellor would be advantageous if possible 55,420–6

Tenure of office - - - 44,175

Work of - - - 43,963–79

MUIR MACKENZIE, SIR KENNETH AUGUSTUS,
G.C.B., K.C.—continued.

OFFICIAL SOLICITOR:

Clerks' claim to establishment should be treated in same way as establishment of other solicitors to public departments - - 44,295, 44,320–3

Payment, system - - - 44,293–5

Position of - - - 44,293

Private practice - - - 44,293, 44,323–4

PAY OFFICE:

Assistant Paymaster-General, functions of department and position of - - - 43,909–18 should be Looked into - - - 44,258 not under Lord Chancellor, but works under Supreme Court rules - - - 44,259

PENSIONS:

Adding of years, practice of, and position re 55,352, 55,357

Exemption of certain classes from condition of holding Civil Service certificate - 55,352–6

Ordinary Pension Act of the Civil Service applicable, with power to add years in case of masters 44,191–6

Peripatetic officer with higher salary than any present officer, proposal not approved 55,398–400

Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division, no Divorce registry, work done by officers in Probate registry 44,342–4

Probate Division, appointments in, if by committee, judge should have some voice in - 55,483

PROBATE REGISTRY:

Clerks, lower grade for routine work might be desirable - - - 55,362–3

Masters, experience as first class clerk one qualification - - - 44,027

Women, employment of, in storing, registering, and handling wills, no difficulty or objection seen 55,443–4

PROMOTION:

some Complaints heard, but generally of personal character - - - 44,109–11 from Bottom, preferred to division into two grades 55,262–74

by Committee, question of advantage or not 55,264–5 between Departments, possible but not general 44,113

Inequality in rate of, in different offices 44,119–22
44,377–80

Men seldom passed over except in Chancery division - - - 44,104–5

Official committee in each office to advise re, recommendation of Royal Commission could also apply to legal departments - 55,438

Selection:

Difficulty of managing - - - 55,263

Present men would have no legal claims to promotion by seniority - - - 55,370–1

System - - - 44,096–108, 44,381–4

System believed to work satisfactorily - 44,109–10

Registrars, see Masters and Registrars above.

RETIREMENT, FIXED AGE FOR:

Application of principles laid down in report of Royal Commission would be approved 44,186–8

Difference of opinion re power re - - 44,173

Legislation would not be necessary, but question as to compensation - - - 44,178–81

None, question as to procedure in case of inefficiency owing to age - - - 44,182–5

Present men would have no legal claims to compensation - - - 55,370

Question as to steps taken re inefficiency owing to age at present - - - 44,389–95

Recommended in Chancery Report of 1885 44,188

70 advocated - - - 55,361

SCRIVENERY DEPARTMENT:

Superintendent, work of - - - 55,329–30

Women, increased number might be employed 55,382–6

SUPREME COURT:

Acts of Parliament regulating, list of - 43,940–6

Departmental Committees on, list of - 43,954–7

Divisions of - - - 43,901–22

History of, and list of documents referring to 43,928–61

MUIR MACKENZIE, SIR KENNETH AUGUSTUS,
G.C.B., K.C.—continued.

SUPREME COURT—continued.

Fees, amount determined so as to pay all expenses with exception of judges' salaries - 43,933-6
Messengers, recommendations of Royal Committee re pensioner messengers should be applied 44,452-5

all Officers appointed since date of Judicature Act, 1873, with one exception - - - 43,928-32
Organisation - - - - 43,962-89
Reform of 1873 - - - 43,928-40, 44,468-70 draft Regulations for - - - 44,159, 44,171-2,
App. XCIV.

Rules and Orders of - - - - 43,948-53
Salaries, change of source of, by Salaries and Funds Act of 1869 - - - - 43,933
Self-supporting, except that judges' salaries paid in principle out of Consolidated Fund 43,934-5, 55,372-8

Self-supporting, fact of being, should be remembered in considering organisation, &c. 44,239,
Sick leave: [55,372

Continued, question as to steps taken in case of 44,392-5

System re salaries during - - - 44,419-21

Subordinate staff:

Appointment, system - - - 44,003, 44,296
Ex-soldiers and sailors - - - 44,297-8
Pay - - - - 44,296

Taxing Masters, method of appointment - 55,450-1
TAXING OFFICES:

Clerks:

Organisation, explanation and reason 55,275-80
Pooling of, masters should be consulted before any decision made - - - 55,281-2

One, for whole of Supreme Court:

would be Possible now, but not much importance attached to - - - - 44,156

Recommended by Lord Alverstone's Committee,
and carrying out of, as regards King's Bench and Chancery Divisions - - - 44,154

System - - - - 44,154-5

Typewriting, question of increased use of - 55,385

VACATIONS:

Long:

Office hours during - - - - 44,167
Courts should be continually open - 55,404-6
"Vacation business" - - - - 44,161-7
Particulars - - - - 44,168

WOMEN, EMPLOYMENT OF:

in Central Scrivenery Department should be possible - - - - 44,443
Desirable - - - - 55,379-88
no Objection to, if admitted to legal profession
44,443-4

Openings for more women as typists, question of 44,447-8

Women attendants - - - - 44,449-51

MUNRO, THE RIGHT HON. ROBERT, K.C., M.P.,
Lord Advocate - - - - 60,098-339

ADVOCATES DEPUTE:

Appointments technically fall when Lord Advocate vacates office, but re-appointment general by successor of same politics
60,105, 60,217, 60,222-3

Clerks, holding of three posts by one person, probable explanation - - - - 60,338-9

Extra Advocate Depute, explanation, salary, &c.
60,100, 60,220

Number, duties, salary, &c. - 60,100-1, 60,219

Private practice allowed - - - 60,102

APPOINTMENT:

no Alternative system can be suggested 60,322-3 advisory Committee, objections to - 60,160-2
Crown, retention of system for junior appointments not necessary - - - - 60,215-6

by Lord Advocate:

Retention advocated - - - 60,163, 60,256-63
Safeguards - - - 60,141, 60,163, 60,169

by Lord President, objections to - - 60,162

Political considerations:

some Appointments made of men in opposite party - - - - 60,245
no Bad appointment known of 60,124, 60,262-3

s (5)30320

MUNRO, THE RIGHT HON. ROBERT, K.C., M.P.
—continued.

APPOINTMENT—cont.

Political considerations—cont.

under Coalition Government, question of 60,326-8

Effect on politics, question of - 60,242, 60,304
Elimination of element not necessary or desirable
60,123, 60,158-9, 60,273-7

Extent to which involved, question of 60,239-47
Lord Advocate's hands not considered to be tied by any tradition re - - - 60,149-57

Witnesses objecting to, should have given definite examples - - - - 60,307

by Promotion or from outside:

no Hard and fast rule advocated 60,123, 60,134, 60,143-7, 60,235-7

must be Left to discretion of Lord Advocate 60,166-9

COURT OF SESSION:

Appointment:

from Outside or by promotion, must be left to discretion of Lord Advocate - - 60,143-7 by Promotion preferred wherever possible, but hard and fast rule not advocated - 60,235-7

System satisfactory - - - - 60,143

Assistant Clerks, appointments:

of Lord Advocate's clerks:

Justification - - - - 60,137

Lord Advocate should have free hand as regards appointments - - - - 60,141

Recommendation by Lord Salvesen's Committee of preferential treatment of 60,137, 60,140, 60,330

at Sixty-seven:

Case of - - - - 60,137-9

Retirement at 70 a condition of, and question of enforcement 60,265-9, 60,315-21

Traditional claim to - - - 60,142, 60,149

Personal appointments, but not political 60,139
Clerks, appointments by promotion, instances of 60,165

Discipline, control by Lord Advocate not advocated - - - - 60,278-87

Macers, no need for retention of system of Crown
appointment - - - - 60,215-6

Offices, transfer to Parliament House or close proximity, advantages to be derived - 60,177-8

Single service, principle approved, but doubt as to whether worth while owing to small extent to which possible - - - - 60,179-80

CROWN AGENT:

Allowance to, for clerical assistance - 60,110

Amount of time devoted to work of office, question of - - - - 60,114

Appointment by Lord Advocate, and appointment falls when Lord Advocate vacates office 60,110

Duties of - - - - 60,112

Permanent official might be necessary if work extended to include civil work
60,116-8, 60,288-9

Solicitor in practice - - - - 60,113

CROWN OFFICE:

Clerks, permanent:

Number, salaries, &c. - - - 60,110

Responsibility of work - - - 60,115,

Extension to Government civil business with certain exceptions, suggestions
60,115-22, 60,288-9, 60,333-7

Work of - - - - 60,111

Extractor's Department, Assistant Extractor, question of non-retirement at 70 - - 60,270-2

LORD ADVOCATE:

Allowance to, for clerical assistance - 60,105

Clerks:

Appointment to Court of Session, see under
Court of Session above.

Particulars re - - - - 60,105

Position re - - - - 60,224-36

Re-arrangement made re clerk in London, but still clerk in Edinburgh serving Lord Advocate - - - - 60,170-6

Legal Secretary, duties, salary, position, &c.
60,102-4, 60,221

Permanent Legal Secretary, not advocated, present system preferred and found satisfactory 60,106-9

MUNRO, THE RIGHT HON. ROBERT, K.C., M.P.—cont.

PROCURATORS FISCAL :

Appointment :

- by Promotion, preferred wherever possible, but hard and fast rule not advocated - 60,130-3
- Recent appointments, particulars re 60,125-33, 60,248-9, 60,294-6

Carrying out of prosecutions for local authorities by, question of - - - - 60,290-3

Carrying out of prosecutions for parish councils, &c., approved - - - - 60,200-4

Deputes :

- Appointment, method, and position - 60,208-10
- Pensions, difficulty re, as not whole-timers 60,207-10

Holding of public offices, inadvisable generally 60,199

Pensions, advocated for whole-timers - 60,205-6

Politics not taken part in, after appointment 60,250-3

Private practice, prohibition :

- Desirable with possible relaxation in very exceptional cases - - - - 60,196-8
- in Recent appointments - - - - 60,193-5

Register House appointments, Lord Advocate has no connection with - - - - 60,182

Retirement, fixed age advocated, and question of age 60,211-4, 60,264-5

SHERIFF CLERKS :

- recent Appointments, particulars re 60,297-303, 60,308-9

Clerks :

Pensions, advocated for whole-timers 60,189-90

Promotion by transfer :

- Advocated with Treasury grant towards cost of removal - - - - 60,185-6
- Committee of Sheriff Clerks to deal with, no objection seen - - - - 60,187-8

Deputes :

- Improvement of position advocated - 60,190-1
- Special class, recommendation of Lord Salvesen's Committee approved - - 60,183

Number, recommendation re reduction approved 60,183-4

SHERIFFS :

Appointment by promotion preferred wherever possible - - - - 60,130-3

Politics not taken part in, after appointment 60,250-5

MUNRO, SIR THOMAS, and SHAW, JAMES E., representing the Association of County Councils in Scotland - - - - 60,063-97

PROCURATORS FISCAL :

Carrying out of prosecutions for parish councils, &c., for special charge - - - - 60,081

Conveyancing work, &c., by, for small local authorities, question of - - - - 60,084-95

all Public prosecutions should be at the instance of, and payment made only by Treasury 60,069-70, 60,073, 60,082-3, 60,094-7

Remuneration :

Payment by counties for perusal of informations on which no proceedings taken :

Ayrshire, position re - - - - 60,076-7

Lanarkshire, refusal of county to make payment - - - - 60,069

Position re - - - - 60,067-72, 60,076-7

if Taken over by Treasury, compensation : should Apply to present holders only 60,078 should be Paid on amount to which legally entitled, not on sum settled as compromise - - - - 60,075 would be Payable to Treasury from county and need not increase salary of any future officials - - - - 60,079-80

Payment by local authorities for certain class of work - - - - 60,069

Payment should be wholly from Treasury, by salary, and should cover any necessary clerical assistance - - - - 60,072-4

Use of police officers by, and inconvenience of 60,072, 60,075

MURRAY, DR. DAVID, law agent and conveyancer,

Glasgow, and representative of the Faculty of Procurators, Glasgow : - - - 57,848-58,009

Civil Service, comparison between work of, and that in private offices, &c. - - - 57,980, 58,001-6

Court of Session, legislation should be passed to define power of, re Register of Sasines - 57,873-7

Historical Department, Curator, special qualities required and appointment from outside advocated 57,928-32

RECORD OFFICE :

entirely Separate from Register of Deeds and Register of Sasines - - - - 57,911-5

Well managed - - - - 57,928

REGISTER OF DEEDS :

Combination with Register of Sasines, no reason seen for, but would not be impracticable 57,916-22

Making of record distinct from custody 57,911-5

REGISTER HOUSE :

Administration of departments, praise of 57,992

Appointments :

Committee to advise Lord Advocate, one man preferred - - - - 57,956

Political considerations :

Objected to by legal profession - 57,954

System not approved, but good men appointed 57,899-902, 57,937, 57,950-9

Results satisfactory as regards way work done 57,903-5, 57,910

Deputy Clerk Register :

Control and supervision by, over Register of Sasines, position re, and opinion - 57,878-82

Registrar-General's work, separate officer for work of, of lower rank, under supervision of Deputy Clerk Register, suggestion - 57,857-61

Hours - - - - 57,990-1

Lord Clerk Register of Scotland should supervise whole work of - - - - 57,883

Recording of deeds :

Change of method :

Approval of Court of Session would be necessary - - - - 57,925, 57,938-9 careful Investigation necessary before, and should be made by Deputy Clerk Register and Court of Session - - - 57,941

Printing or zincography, Parliamentary sanction would be necessary - - 57,940

Typewriting :

Alterations, possibility of, an objection to 57,925-7

Use of, might be possible, but careful consideration necessary before - - 57,925-7

Women should be employed - - - 57,964

Women could be employed in copying work 57,963-6

Zincography, as regards maps and plans, adoption advocated - - - - 57,927

Women would be suitable for work in, if legal qualifications possessed - - - 57,966-71

REGISTER OF SASINES :

Abridgement formed by Mr. Thomson - 57,914

Appointment :

Examination, not sufficient test, and selection by Keeper advocated, and scheme - 57,906, 57,944-9, 57,960-2, 57,972-89

Keeper of the Register of Sasines should have larger degree of control in 57,865, 57,870-1

Methods - - - - 57,866-8

previous Professional knowledge necessary and conveyancing clerks would be suitable 57,906-9

Clerks, if made pensionable and with fixed retiring age, more consideration would be required in appointment - - - - 57,993-8,000

Combination with Register of Deeds, no reason seen for, but would not be impracticable 57,916-22

Control :

by Deputy Clerk Register, position re, and opinion - - - - 57,878-82

Recommendation of Lord Low's Committee re, and agreement with - - - - 57,873-4 by Secretary for Scotland, should be confined to questions of discipline and appointment 57,883-4

MURRAY, DR. DAVID—continued.REGISTER OF SASINES—continued.*Control—continued.

System	57,864
by Treasury, extent of, and opinion re , and fees should be fixed by Court with approval of Treasury	57,934-6, 57,885-8
Delay in minuting of deeds, no complaint re engrossing	57,921

Keeper:

only Competent practising law agent should be appointed	57,895-8
Political appointments, and system not approved although good men appointed	57,899-902, 57,937

Position with regard to Deputy Clerk Register, opinion re	57,890-4, 57,942-3
--	--------------------

Rejection of writ by, case of, and question should have gone before Deputy Clerk Register	57,890-4
---	----------

Making of record distinct from custody	57,911-4
--	----------

Search sheet:

Abolition of, smaller staff would be possible	57,923
---	--------

previous Recommendations and bills re	57,924
--	--------

Registrar-General, separate offices for work of, of lower rank, under supervision of Deputy Clerk Register, suggested	57,857-61
---	-----------

Women, suitability of conveyancing work for	57,969
---	--------

MUSGRAVE, ALFRED, Registrar of the Principal Probate Registry: 44,487-743, 46,198-531, App. XCV.

DISTRICT PROBATE REGISTRIES:

Alteration of districts, legislation would be necessary	46,480-2
---	----------

Amalgamation with County Court or Supreme Court registries, objections	44,736-7
--	----------

Clerks:

Appointment, method	46,281-6
same Class not required as at principal registry and no transfer between	46,327-32
not Eligible for appointment as district registrars and not advocated as a whole	46,522-7
Number, question whether excessive	46,275-8, 46,507-10

not Pensionable and reasons	46,279-80
-----------------------------	-----------

Pensions, contradictory opinions by law officers re	46,305-8
--	----------

Permanent Civil servants appointed by Civil Service examination, reason against	46,286
---	--------

Position	46,502-3
----------	----------

no Registry with less than two	46,505
--------------------------------	--------

Salaries and system	46,272-4, 46,506
might be Used by registrar if a solicitor in his own business	46,287-8, 46,504

Copies of all wills and grants since 1857 kept at Somerset House	46,255-8
--	----------

Keeping of ancient records at	46,251-8, 46,262-6
-------------------------------	--------------------

Location, question as to reason for	44,729-30
-------------------------------------	-----------

Merging of some of smaller into larger, suggestion	44,731-5, 46,209-18
--	---------------------

Number	44,728
--------	--------

Probate agents at smaller places instead of, question as to feasibility, but Inland Revenue officers would be suitable	46,237-50
--	-----------

Registrars:

Class of persons appointed as, and appointment from clerks of principal registry preferred	44,608-12, 46,219-36
--	----------------------

Directions given to, by principal registry	46,267
--	--------

Giving of whole of time to work insisted on in recent appointments	44,740-2
--	----------

Local solicitor as, private practice not allowed in recent cases	46,231-4
--	----------

Payment, method	44,738-9, 46,205-7
-----------------	--------------------

Pensions, a few recognised as entitled to, but not class as a whole	46,270-1
---	----------

Salaries	46,208
----------	--------

Tenure of office	46,268
------------------	--------

Work of	44,491-513
---------	------------

PRINCIPAL PROBATE REGISTRY:

Attendance-books	44,676-8
Calendar, method of keeping, and question of card index	46,467-73

MUSGRAVE, ALFRED—continued.PRINCIPAL PROBATE REGISTRY—continued.*Clerks:

Age limits, 20 to 30, and 18 to 30 suggested	44,560-3
--	----------

Appointment:

Direct to second class, no power for	46,370-1
Method and approval of	44,548-59, 46,499-501
by Open competition, objections to proposal	44,576-87, 46,511-8

Recommendation by Committee before nomination by president, not considered necessary	44,588-90
--	-----------

Appointment to district registrarships in some cases, and approval of	46,219-36
---	-----------

Attendance at office if registrar absent	46,433-5
--	----------

Attendance-book	46,422-5
-----------------	----------

social Class	46,513-4
--------------	----------

Distribution and transfer between departments	44,599-607
---	------------

Higher classes, appointment by promotion	44,555, 44,569
--	----------------

Holidays	46,421
----------	--------

Hours	46,414-20
-------	-----------

Hours in Long Vacation	46,436
------------------------	--------

Lower division, not rising to higher posts, question of	46,474-9
---	----------

Number of different classes, method of fixing	46,528-30
---	-----------

Promotion:
------------	--

former Copyists not eligible to rise beyond third class	46,498
---	--------

Increments may be stopped if clerks not deserving of	46,493
--	--------

Men passed over sometimes	44,592-6
---------------------------	----------

System	44,591-604, 46,368-9, 46,495-8
--------	--------------------------------

from Third class very slow	44,696
----------------------------	--------

Salaries, increase irrespective of merit, reply to criticism	46,364-8
--	----------

Second class, appointment by promotion and approval of	46,369-75
--	-----------

Selection to be registrar's clerks	46,426-7
------------------------------------	----------

Third class:
--------------	--

no clear Distinction between work of second class and, in some cases	44,632-7, 46,531
--	------------------

Qualifications required	44,564-8
-------------------------	----------

Work of office considered sufficient training	46,321-5
---	----------

Clerks of the Seats, and staff, work of, &c.	44,530-6
--	----------

Contentious work, transfer to Central Office, reasons against	44,613-27
---	-----------

Departments of	App. XCV.
----------------	-----------

Discipline and control of department, responsibility for	46,395-413
--	------------

Documents of Prerogative Court of Canterbury kept at	46,259-61
--	-----------

Housekeeper and charwomen, number and pay,	46,338-9
--	----------

Hours:
--------	--

Certain amount of work done in some departments after 4 p.m.	44,662-6
--	----------

and Objection of solicitors to longer hours in vacation	44,642-6
---	----------

10-5, objections to	44,647, 44,662-6
---------------------	------------------

Leave	44,679-80
-------	-----------

Long Vacation, assigning of some annual work to, question as to possibility	46,437-9
---	----------

Operations of, in connection with public,	44,648-61, 44,667-75
---	----------------------

Personal application instead of correspondence and question as to convenience of system	46,441-66
---	-----------

Registrars:
-------------	--

Attendance in Court during hearing of cases, necessity for	46,376-82
--	-----------

Clerks:
---------	--

should be Admitted to be entitled to second class pay, and four additional places provided for	44,628-37, 46,363
--	-------------------

Attendance book not signed by, and reasons	46,428
--	--------

Work of	44,541-5
---------	----------

Clerks eligible	44,575
-----------------	--------

Direct appointment	46,493-4
--------------------	----------

previous Posts	44,570-3
----------------	----------

statutory Qualifications	44,574, 46,492-4
--------------------------	------------------

MUSGRAVE, ALFRED—*continued.*PRINCIPAL PROBATE REGISTRY—*continued.*Registrars—continued.

Signing of grants by Clerks of Seats instead of by, proposed at one time, but objection to 44,638-41

Work of, 44,514-5, 44,525-9, 44,537-40,
46,383-94, App. XCV.

Retirement:

Age limit:

would be Approved subject to certain conditions - - - - 44,689-95

None - - - - 44,681

Question of - - - - 44,484-91
at Time at which man entitled to full pension
suggested - - - - 44,689-90

Number of clerks above 65 at present 44,682-7

Scrivenery Department:

Appointment, method - - - 46,519-21

Average earnings - - - 46,308-15

many Candidates for admission to, generally 46,297-8

Clerks, position of, and opinion re pension question - - - - 44,723-6

Examiners, rate of pay to be increased 46,310-1

Female typists:

Paid by salary and permanently on staff
46,337

Rate of pay - - - - 46,347

Two, and reasons against employment of larger number - - - 44,718-22, 46,340-56

Fixed number of established scriveners, present system preferred - - - 46,483

Head of, a second class clerk - - 46,521

Payment by piecework preferred and reasons,
46,291-4

Pensions, suggestion re making clerks pension-able after Civil Service certificate procured and after certain number of years' service, 46,294-5

Typing:

Comparison of cost with cost of manuscript and with rates in Central Office, 46,201-4, 46,301-4

Increased number of documents might be typed - - - - 46,200

Work of, &c., particulars re, 44,697-717, 44,703-6, 44,727

Work compared with that of Central Office
Scrivenery Department - - 46,299-300

Seats Department, work of - - - 44,665-75

Sittings - - - - 44,516-24

Staff:

Decrease impossible consistently with efficiency
46,362

Increase will soon be necessary - - 46,359-61

Taxing of bills:

Arduousness of work - - - 46,388-94

Number per year - - 44,619-26, 46,198-9 proposed Transfer of work from, objection to 44,617-27

Work:

Comparison with that of district registries
46,326-7

Comparison with that of Estate Duty office
46,333-6

Nature of - - - 44,491-513, App. XCV

PROBATE REGISTRIES:

Number of estates going through, 1913 - 44,493-7

Sending in of papers to, by Inland Revenue officers
46,238-42

MUSGRAVE, C. T., Assistant Registrar, Land
Registry (in attendance) - - 50,994-51,406

Neaves, Mr., former Principal Clerk of Justiciary, reference - - - - 56,823

NEISH, CHARLES, C.B., Registrar of the Privy Council (Judicial Committee): - 50,730-812

PRIVY COUNCIL, JUDICIAL COMMITTEE:

Appeals and petitions to:

Statistics - - - - 50,733

Work increasing - - - - 50,734-5

Clerks:

Appointment:

by Board or Committee, not advocated, 50,776

Method - - - - 50,764-73

Nomination only, no examination - 50,807-9

NEISH, CHARLES, C.B.—*continued.*PRIVY COUNCIL, JUDICIAL COMMITTEE—*continued.*Clerks—continued.

Appointment as Registrar:

no Case known of - - - 50,799

Possibility of, and no objection seen, 50,777-9, 50,799-800

First and second classes:

Direct appointment - - - 50,811

should be Solicitors - - - 50,810, 50,812

Holidays - - - - 50,759-60

Promotion, method - - - 50,765

Retirement, Civil Service rules apply - 50,761

Second class, promotion of third class clerk to, would not be objected to, if a solicitor, 50,812

Duties - - - - 50,733

Hours - - - - 50,758

Lady shorthand typist, work not purely mechanical 50,786-9

Organisation of office and system of appointment satisfactory - - - - 50,774-6

Proof reader, employment of, formerly, 50,748,
50,804-6

Registrar:

Appointment, method - - - 50,763

Civil Service certificate not held by - 50,801

Names of staff and salaries and previous experience - - - - 50,743-53

Office held during good behaviour and no age limit - - - - 50,761-2

Staff of office - - - - 50,741-2

no Statutory qualification - - - 50,777-8

Work of, and of staff - - - 50,736-40

Work much the same all the year round 50,756-7

Work, technical legal nature of - - 50,781-4

Women, example of working with male staff and with outside public, and no objection to - 50,792-5

Nepean, Mr., District Registrar, Bristol, reference 46,601

Neville, Mr., Principal Probate Registry, reference
46,615-9

Nicolson, Dr., Visitor in Lunacy, reference
48,732, 48,736

OAKSHOTT, WILLIS GILBERT, managing clerk in office of Messrs. Sharpe, Pritchard, and Company:
46,955-47,181

Central Office, Writ and Appearance offices, appointment to higher offices by promotion might be suitable - - - - 47,161

CHANCERY CHAMBERS:

Clerks:

Distinction between work of first and second class
46,995-6

First Class:

Appointments from managing clerks by judges would be better than by promotion 46,975-81, 47,019-20, 47,092-127, 47,154-60,
47,162-4

Work of - - - - 46,997-7002, 47,018

Salaries, very ample - - - 47,126, 47,133

Third Class:

Inconvenience experienced from insufficient knowledge or training of - - 46,982-3

Men having had 10 or 15 years' experience in solicitor's office, including outdoor work, might be qualified for second or third class
46,984-94

Promotion by seniority, and disapproval of,
should be by merit - 47,003-9, 47,130-2

Work entirely different from that of first class, and not sufficient training for 46,978, 47,170-1

little Delay in getting appointment in, but variation in different chambers 46,963-6, 47,151-3

Hearing of cases by first class clerks - 47,082-6

Holidays should not be taken on Saturdays without leave - - - - 47,069-71

Hours, 10 to 5 considered sufficient, but whole staff not always in attendance by 10 47,072-5

Staff more than sufficient for work 47,010-7, 47,067-8, 47,128-9

Vacation, criticism - - - 47,077-8

Chancery Division, practically no delay in 46,962-70

Chancery masters, little work of, could be passed down to clerks - - - - 47,018-9

OAKSHOTT, WILLIS GILBERT—continued.CHANCERY OFFICES, AMALGAMATION:

Masters and staff, difficulty probable at first but not ultimately - 47,045-6, 47,053-8, 47,174-6
Possibility of, and great economy of labour would result - 47,042-60, 47,172-7
Chancery Orders, time taken in drawing of 47,178-81

CHANCERY REGISTRARS OFFICE:Clerks:

Direct appointment to principal clerkships 47,061-4

Work of, nature of, and experience required 47,021-30 only Delay in getting appointment due to registrar having work in court - 46,967-70

Orders:

Drawing up of, by solicitors would not be possible 47,036-41

Work well done as a rule and no delay now 47,031-5

Law Clerks' Society - 47,169

Lunacy Office, staff very efficient - 47,081

Retirement, fixed age for, a few cases known in which fixed age would have been advantageous 47,065-6

Solicitor's managing clerks, work of, hours of, &c. 47,106-25, 47,138-48

Solicitor's offices, hours, holidays, &c. 47,124-5, 47,134-50, 47,164-9

Vacation, work during, little complaint re arrangements, but sitting on Mondays would be advantageous, and 11 to 3 - 47,076-7, 47,087-91

Official Solicitor of the Supreme Court:

Chief assistant, salary, Winterbotham - 49,902

CLERKS:

Appointment, retention of power of selection desired, Winterbotham - 50,014-5

Class of men, Winterbotham - 50,010

Comparison with other clerks in Law Courts, Winterbotham - 50,009

Difficulty of position of official solicitor with regard to, Winterbotham - 49,961-8 not Employed on private work of official solicitor, Winterbotham - 49,943-4

Establishment:

Claim to, should be treated in same way as establishment of other solicitors to public departments, Muir Mackenzie - 44,295, 44,320-3

after Four or five years' experience on recommendation of committee advocated, and scheme Winterbotham, 49,946-53, 49,956-60, 49,967-8

Pensions to present men, question of, and past years' service being counted, Winterbotham 50,051-6 previous Experience as solicitors' clerks not found necessary, Winterbotham - 49,946

Holidays, Winterbotham - 50,039-41

Number, Winterbotham - 49,913

Pensions, opinion re claim to, difficulties re, and different system of appointment would be necessary, Heath - 60,583-90

Position of, and unsatisfactoriness, Winterbotham 49,914-25, 50,057-8 no Retiring allowances and consequent difficulty of dispensing with services, Winterbotham 49,954-5

Salary:

Increase, desired, and reasons, Winterbotham 49,928-34

System re payment, and difficulty owing to, Winterbotham - 49,912, 50,004-6, 50,033-4

Training of, no difficulty experienced, Winterbotham 50,009-13

Uncertainty of position in case of threatened radical changes, Winterbotham, 50,044-5; Sant 50,045

Work, nature of, Winterbotham - 50,009

Work and position, comparison with solicitors' managing clerks, Winterbotham - 49,930-8

Hours, Winterbotham - 50,038-9

Office, well ventilated, &c., Winterbotham - 50,000-1

Payment and system, Muir Mackenzie, 44,293-5; Winterbotham, 49,902-11, 49,963-4

Official Solicitor of the Supreme Court—continued.

Position of, Muir Mackenzie, 44,293; Winterbotham 50,003-4

Private practice, Muir Mackenzie, 44,293, 44,323-4; Winterbotham, 49,890-2

Solicitors on staff of, salaries, Winterbotham 49,939-42

Women employed sometimes to visit lunatics, and fees paid, Winterbotham - 50,016-22

Work of, Winterbotham - 49,893-901, 50,016-32

Orders, see under particular departments.

Ordinance Survey:

Grant of pensions, Pleass - 55,209-10, 55,225-8

Military character, Brickdale - 51,350-1

Terms on which officers made pensionable, Heath 60,592-3

Organisation:

see also under particular departments.

proposed Minister of Justice would deal with, Haldane - 60,966-9

OVERBURY, R. L., third class clerk in Central Office, see TOWNSEND, J. F., &c. - 52,199-459

PATERSON, THOMAS SWINTON, B.L., S.S.C., Principal Clerk of Bills in the Court of Session in Scotland - 57,532-687
Appointments, political considerations the tradition 57,658

BILL CHAMBER:

Assistant clerk, previous posts - 57,558

Assistant and Ordinary Clerks:

Law agent's qualification or equivalent should be insisted on, in new appointments 57,567-8

Salaries - 57,569

Control and supervision by Principal Clerk of Session, extent of - 57,570-82, 57,616-7

Hours, recommendation of Lord Salvesen's Committee not carried out, question of reason, &c., but matter believed to be under consideration 57,549-52

Inclusion in consolidated service, would be approved, and extent to which possible 57,584-94, 57,626-31

Ordinary Clerk:

Possibility of promotion to Assistant Clerkship of Session - 57,669-74

Previous posts, &c. - 57,559-63

Salary and work, comparison with Assistant Clerk of Session - 57,672-6

Organisation satisfactory - 57,583

Pensions, officers entitled and not entitled to 57,556-7

Preparation and issue of extracts by, explanation, &c. - 57,539-44

Principal Clerk:

Abolition of post, and carrying out of work by Principal Clerk of Session, proposal not considered feasible - 57,618-9

Appointment:

Method - 57,553-4

from Outside approved, but definite rule not advocated - 57,625, 57,661-3

Experience as practising solicitor desirable 57,620-4

no Prescribed hours - 57,664-8

Responsibility of - 57,677-86

Removal of registry, &c., work from, not necessary 57,643-7

Retirement:

Age for, 70 - 57,607-9

Civil Service rule not advocated - 57,610-1

Salaries, extent to which recommendations of Lord Salvesen's Committee carried out - 57,548

Staff:

Appointment, method - 57,555, 57,564-6

Particulars - 57,547

Satisfactory men obtained - 57,687

Sufficiency of - 57,660

Work:

Continues all the year round - 57,612-5

Nature of - 57,537-8, 57,545-6

PATERSON, THOMAS SWINTON, B.L., S.S.C.—

continued.

COURT OF SESSION :

Assistant Clerks, appointment of Lord Advocate's clerks as, but lapse of post - 57,586-91
 Offices, in Parliament House instead of in Register House, would be advantageous - 57,595-606
 Promotions - - - - - 57,657
 Lord Advocate's Clerk, lapse of office - 57,586-91,
 57,632-42, 57,648-54

PAULTON, JAMES MELLOR, Assistant Paymaster-General of the Supreme Court; and SELLAR, HENRY, Principal Clerk - 50,322-536

CHANCERY ORDERS :

Discovery of errors in, by Pay Office - 50,488-92
 Necessity for complying with requirements of Pay Office - - - - - 50,486-7

Paymaster-General of the Supreme Court, history - 50,326-34

PAY OFFICE OF THE SUPREME COURT :

Allotment letters, procedure re - 50,349-65
 Assistant and Deputy Paymasters :
 Appointment by Treasury - 50,422-3
 Holders of posts and previous experience of - 50,425-39, 50,505-12, 50,518-20 not held to be Open to staff and question of, and cases formerly - - - 50,424-5
 Pension, position re - - - 50,514-7
 Bags, boxes, &c., in charge of - 50,366-72
 Cheques, delivery personally and by post and extension of system of sending by post to come into force - - - - 50,397-414

Clerks :

All, above second division have passed through second division, with two exceptions - 50,530-2
 Appointment, system satisfactory - 50,463

Assistant :

Unsuitability of, for work of office - 50,493-4, 50,521-3

Work of - - - - - 50,416-20

Work could not be done by women typists - 50,526

First class, work of - - - - 50,396-7

First and second classes, appointed from second division clerks in office, and system - 50,440-57

Number of different classes and number in different divisions - - 50,377, 50,388-91

Retirement, age for - - - - 50,471

Second division :

Appointment, method - - - 50,458-60
 Commendation of - - - - 50,464

Promotion, poor prospects and cause - 50,465-77

Unsatisfactory, power of rejection, but no occasion to exercise - - - 50,461

Work :

no Clear line between work of second class and - - - - - 50,464

Nature of - - - - - 50,392-6

Divisions of, and work of - - - 50,379-87

Dormant funds, and taking over of Consols represented by, by Treasury, suggested - 50,373-6

Funds in court, amount of, and particulars re investment - - - - 50,339-45

Hours - - - - - 50,479-80, 50-484-5

Leave, &c., ordinary Civil Service rules applied - 50,478

Letters, answering of, on day of receipt the rule - 50,534-6

Long Vacation, work during, and abolition of vacation would be welcomed - - 50,482-5

Promotion, rate - - - - - 50,465-77

Revision of rules - - - - - 50,412-5

Time-book, custom re - - - - 50,528-9

Typist employed - - - - - 50,524-5

Work of - - - - - 50,335-73

Retirement, for inefficiency, with some pension, power desirable - - - - 50,495-504

Pay Office of the Supreme Court :

Allotment letters, procedure re, Paulton, 50,349-55,
 50,358-60, 50,363-5; Sellar, 50,356-8, 50,359,
 50,361-2

APPOINTMENT TO HIGHER POSTS :

Civil Service certificate required, Heath - 60,502-3 by Treasury, considered the best method, but question of advisory committee, Heath - 60,499-503

Pay Office of the Supreme Court—continued.

ASSISTANT AND DEPUTY PAYMASTERS :

Appointment by Treasury, Paulton - 50,422-3
 Holders of posts, and previous experience of, Sellar, 50,425-31; Paulton, 50,432-9, 50,505-12, 50,518-20

not held to be Open to staff and question of, and cases formerly, Paulton, 50,424; Sellar, 50,425

Recent appointments, Heath - - - 60,693-5

ASSISTANT PAYMASTER-GENERAL :

Functions of department, and position of, Muir Mackenzie - - - - 43,909-18

Pension, position re, Paulton - - - 50,514-7

Bags, boxes, &c., in charge of, Paulton - 50,366-72

Cheques, delivery personally and by post, and extension of system of sending by post to come into force, Sellar, 50,397-409; Paulton, 50,404-5, 50,410-4

Clerks :
 All, above second division have passed through second division, with two exceptions, Sellar - 50,530-2

Appointment, system satisfactory, Paulton - 50,463

Assistant :

Unsuitability of, for work of office, Paulton - 50,493-4, 50,521-3

Work of, Sellar - - - - - 50,416-20

Work could not be done by women typists, Paulton - - - - - 50,526

First class, work of, Sellar - - - - 50,396-7

First and second classes, appointed from second division clerks in office, and system, Paulton - 50,440-57

Number of different classes, and number in different divisions, Paulton - 50,377, 50,388-91

Retirement, age for, Paulton - - - 50,471

Second division :

Appointment, method, Paulton - - 50,458-60

Commendation of, Paulton - - - 50,464

Promotion, poor prospects and cause, Paulton - 50,465-77

Unsatisfactory, power of rejection, but no occasion to exercise, Paulton - - - 50,461

Work :

no Clear line between work of second class and, Paulton - - - - - 50,464

Nature of, Sellar - - - - - 50,392-6

Divisions of, and work of, Paulton, 50,379-86; Sellar - 50,381, 50,387

Dormant funds, and taking over of Consols represented by, by Treasury, suggested, Paulton - 50,373-6

Funds in court, amount of, and particulars re investment, Paulton - - - - 50,339-45

Hours, Paulton, 50,479-80; Sellar, 50,484-5

Leave, &c., ordinary Civil Service rules applied, Paulton - - - - - 50,478

Letters, answering of, on day of receipt, the rule, Paulton - - - - - 50,534-6

Long Vacation, work during, and abolition of vacation would be welcomed, Sellar - - 50,482-5 should be Looked into, Muir Mackenzie - 44,258 not under Lord Chancellor, but works under Supreme Court rules, Muir Mackenzie - - 44,259

Paymaster-General, history, Paulton - 50,326-34

Promotion, rate of, Paulton - - - 50,465-77

Revision of rules, Paulton - - - - 50,412-5

Time-book, Paulton, Sellar - - - - 50,528-9

Typist employed, Paulton - - - - 50,524-5

Work of, Paulton - - - - - 50,335-73

Pearson, Mr. Justice, referred to, re reorganisation of Chancery Division, Muir Mackenzie - 55,307-12

PENNEY, JOSEPH CAMPBELL, Accountant of Court of Session - - - - - 57,688-847

COURT OF SESSION :

Accountant :

Appointment, method - - - - 57,724-6

Auditing of accounts of trustees by, extent of - 57,835-9

Clerks :

Appointment :

Competition, question of possibility - 57,734-7, 57,773-7, 57,801

Method and approval of - 57,727-8, 57,731-3, 57,742-5, 57,773-7, 57,800

PENNEY, JOSEPH CAMPBELL—continued.COURT OF SESSION—continued.*Accountant—continued.*Clerks—continued.

Apprentices as, who would eventually pass Chartered Accountants' examination attempted, but stopped by Chartered Accountants' Society	57,808
Civil Service certificates held	57,738-9
Duties	57,723
Established:
Appointment	57,766-7
more Important work done by	57,768
Increase in number advocated	57,755-63, 57,769-72
Higher posts filled by promotion	57,797-9
Hours and holidays	57,746-9
proposed Junior clerical class, question as to suitability	57,809-16
Knowledge of Scotch law necessary and method of acquiring	57,740-1, 57,778-80, 57,804-8
Promotion, special grant of increased salary advocated if no promotion after certain length of service	57,781-2
Service for pension on promotion to established post should count from date of original appointment	57,764-5
Seven, entitled to pensions	57,729-30
Department:
Branches of	57,692
Retirement, no age limit but Civil Service rule would be approved	57,751-4
Staff	57,718-9
Work of	57,692-716, 57,783-96, 57,811-47
Duties	57,718-22
Functions re lunatics	57,813-6
Functions re minors	57,694-9, 57,783-96
Relations to Treasury	57,812
Work distributed over whole year	57,750
Moneys consigned in, placed on deposit receipt with banks, not invested	57,704-9

Pensions:

see also under particular departments.

Adding of years, practice of, and position re, Muir Mackenzie 55,352, 55,357-9

Cases of unestablished staff being made established, terms, &c., Heath 60,592-601

CONTRIBUTORY SCHEMES:

Difficulty re persons approaching retiring age, Heath 60,646

Particulars re, and results, Heath 60,556-82, 60,669

probable Treasury attitude, Heath 60,637-63, 60,727-33

Exemption of certain classes from condition of holding Civil Service certificate, Muir Mackenzie 55,352-6

Medical examination in case of appointment to pensionable offices, question of, and no objection seen, Loreburn 50,653-8

TO PART-TIMERS:

Cases of, outside legal departments, Heath 60,666-8 would be Impracticable as regards State pensions and undesirable, but might be possible in other systems, Heath 60,735-8 ordinary Pension Act of the Civil Service applicable, with power to add years in case of masters, Muir Mackenzie 44,191-6

Persons paid by piecework excluded from, by statute, Heath 60,602-8

Poor Law officers, system, Heath 60,577-9, 60,666-8

Principle under which distinction made as to officials entitled to pensions and officials entitled to gratuities, Heath 60,529-32

Qualifications necessary to entitle employee to, Heath 60,533-55

Requirement of whole-time service should be maintained, Heath 60,546-7

State assistance to Irish National School Teachers' Fund and English Elementary School Teachers' Fund, Heath 60,556-69, 60,638-41

State assistance for secondary and technical school teachers, recommendation of Committee appointed by Board of Education re, Heath 60,570-5, 60,642-4

PLEASS, G., Mapping Staff, Land Registry, see TRATMAN, W. S., and PLEASS, G. - 55,189-248
Political appointments, see under Appointment, Scotland.

PORTER, A. W., third class clerk in Taxing Office, see, BANNER, W. J., &c. - 54,983-55,125
Prichard, G. E., clerk, Lunacy Office, reference 48,578
Principal Probate Registry, see Probate Registry, Principal.

PRITCHARD, RICHARD RUSSELL, Chief Clerk, Lunacy Department (in attendance) 48,303-649

Privy Council, Judicial Committee:APPEALS AND PETITIONS TO:

Statistics, Neish 50,733
Work increasing, Neish 50,734-5

CLERKS:Appointment:

by Board or committee not advocated, Neish 50,776

Method, Neish, Wallace 50,764-9, 50,807-9

Appointment as Registrar:

no Case known of, Neish 50,799

Possibility of, and no objection seen, Neish 50,777-9, 50,799-800

First and second classes:

Direct appointment, Neish 50,811 should be Solicitors, Neish 50,810, 50,812

Holidays, Neish 50,759-60

Promotion, method, Neish 50,765

Retirement, Civil Service rules apply, Neish 50,761

Second class, promotion of third class clerk to, would not be objected to if a solicitor, Neish 50,812

Duties, Neish 50,733

Hours, Neish 50,758

Lady shorthand typist, work not purely mechanical, Neish 50,786-9

Organisation of office and system of appointment satisfactory, Neish 50,774-6

Proof reader, employment of, formerly, Neish 50,748, 50,804-6

REGISTRAR:

Appointment, method, Neish 50,763

Civil Service certificate not held by, Neish 50,801

Names of staff and salaries and previous experience, Neish 50,743-53

Office held during good behaviour and no age limit, Neish 50,761-2

Staff of office, Neish 50,741-2

no Statutory qualification, Neish 50,777-9

Work of, and staff, Neish 50,736-40

Work much the same all the year round, Neish 50,756-7

Work, technical legal nature of, Neish 50,781-4

Probate Division, appointments in, if by committee, judge should have some voice in, Muir Mackenzie 55,483

Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Division:APPOINTMENTS:

Transfer to Lord Chancellor, opinion re proposal, Evans 60,741-5

Selection method, Evans 60,749-55

Vacancies, publication not necessary owing to large number of applications, Evans 60,749

Barristers pleading before courts specialise, Bayford 48,174-5

Clerks, previous legal experience not necessary, Evans 60,760-3, 60,825-6

Disciplinary control, Evans 60,817-8

no Divorce Registry, work done by officers in Probate Registry, Muir Mackenzie 44,342-4

Numbers of staff and salaries, control by Lord Chancellor, Evans 60,807-16

REGISTRARS:

Attendance in Court, need for, Evans 60,830-5

Retirement, question of fixed age, and 70 might be reasonable, Evans 60,801-6

Probate Registry, Principal:

Administrative work, transfer to Inland Revenue Department, no advantage seen and practicability doubted, Heath 60,681-6

Probate Registry, Principal—continued.

Attendance-books, Musgrave, 44,676-8, 46,422-5;
Collins, Leader, 46,630-45; Evans, 60,872-5
 no Business transacted by post, but would be a convenience, and question as to power to change rule,
Evans - - - - - 60,795-9, 60,863-71
 Calendars, method of keeping, and question of card index, Musgrave - - - - - 46,467-73

CLERKS:
 Age limits, 20 to 30, and 18 to 30, suggested, Musgrave - - - - - 44,560-3

Appointment:
 Direct, to second class:
 no Power for, Musgrave - - - - - 46,370-1
 Power might be advantageous, Evans 60,822 without previous Legal experience, Leathes
 48,853-4
 Method, Musgrave, 44,548-59, 46,499-501;
 Leader, Collins, 46,590-4, 46,693-6.
 by Open competition, objections to proposal, present system satisfactory, Musgrave, 44,576-87, 46,511-8; Bayford, 48,119-25, 48,204-6, 48,215-20
 Open competition for general Civil Service list, no objection seen in principle but little improvement anticipated, and certain amount of freedom should be left to appointing authority, Evans - - - - - 60,751-61, 60,827-9
 Recommendation by committee before nomination by President, not considered necessary, Musgrave - - - - - 44,588-90 to Third class, and promotion to upper classes, opinion re, Evans - - - - - 60,819-24 Appointment to district registrarships, see under Registrars under District Probate Registries.
 Appointment of sons of persons employed in registry, Leathes - - - - - 48,902-10
 Attendance at office if registrar absent, Musgrave
 46,433-5
 social Class, Musgrave - - - - - 46,513-4
 Distribution and transfer between departments, Musgrave - - - - - 44,599-607
 Higher classes, appointment by promotion and opinion re, Musgrave, 44,555, 44,569, 46,369-75; Bayford, 48,185-203.
 Holidays, and arrangements during Long Vacation, Musgrave, 46,421; Collins, Leader
 46,684-9, 46,705
 Hours, Musgrave, 46,414-20, 46,436; Collins, Leader, 46,680-3, 46,705.
 previous Legal experience:
 considered Desirable, Worley - - - - - 48,258-63 not Necessary, Bayford - - - - - 48,117-8 not all Londoners, Leader - - - - - 46,588-9
 Lower division, not rising to higher posts, question of, Musgrave, 46,474-9; Muir Mackenzie
 55,362-3
 Number, Collins, 46,533; Bayford, 48,195.
 Numbers of different classes, method of fixing, Musgrave - - - - - 46,528-30

Promotion:
 former Copyists not eligible to rise beyond third class, Musgrave - - - - - 46,498
 Increments may be stopped if clerk not deserving of, Musgrave - - - - - 46,495
 Men passed over sometimes, Musgrave, 44,592-6; Collins, 46,540-2.
 Slow rate, Musgrave, 44,696; Bayford 48,132, 48,168-9
 System, Musgrave, 44,591-604, 46,368-9, 46,495-8; Collins, 46,539-43; Bayford 48,130-42, 48,188-203, 48,222-3
 Resignation of young men owing to old men having been persuaded to retire, Collins, Leader - - - - - 46,613-9

Retirement, fixed age:
 Application of Civil Service rule: would be Approved, but 65 rather early, Evans
 60,800-6
 Desired, Collins, 46,557-65; Leader, 46,698-701, 46,707-12
 would be Approved subject to certain conditions, Musgrave - - - - - 44,689-95
 Number of clerks above 65 at present, Musgrave
 44,682-7

Probate Registry, Principal—continued.

CLERKS—continued.

Retirement, fixed age—continued.

Question of, Musgrave - - - - - 46,484-91
 at Time at which man entitled to full pension suggested, Musgrave - - - - - 44,689-90
 Salaries, increases irrespective of merit, reply to criticism, Musgrave - - - - - 46,364-8
 Salaries, and generally suitable, except in case of clerks to registrars, Bayford 48,126, 48,180-1
 Selection to be registrars' clerks, Musgrave
 46,426-7

Third class:
 Class of men not considered too good for work, Bayford - - - - - 48,170-2 no clear Distinction between work of second class clerks and, in some cases, Musgrave
 44,632-7, 46,531
 previous Experience in solicitor's office, question as to value of, Collins, Leader - 46,576-85 ultimate Goal is to be Principal Clerk of Seat, Collins - - - - - 46,595-7
 Length of service of men at head of, and ages, Collins - - - - - 46,551-4
 Number, Collins - - - - - 46,534
 Number at maximum pay, Collins - 46,555-6

Promotion:
 Number eligible for, Collins - - - 46,536
 Rate, and unevenness of incidence in different years, Collins - - - - - 46,544-50
 Qualifications required, Musgrave - 44,564-8
 Removal, power of, believed to be only in case of misconduct, Leader, Collins - 46,709-10
 Salary, scale, Collins - - - - - 46,538
 University and legal qualifications, Collins
 46,702-4
 Work of, Collins - - - - - 46,646-79

Work:
 Nature of, Morton - - - - - 52,631-2
 Well done, Bayford - - - - - 48,114-6
 Work of office considered sufficient training, Musgrave - - - - - 46,321-5 Clerks of the Seats, and staff, work of, &c., Musgrave
 44,530-6

Contentious work, transfer to Central Office, reasons against, Musgrave - - - - - 44,613-27
 Departments of, Musgrave - - - - - App. XCV.
 Discipline and control of department, responsibility for, Musgrave - - - - - 46,395-413
 Documents of Prerogative Court of Canterbury kept at, Musgrave - - - - - 46,259-61
 History of, Bayford - - - - - 48,173
 Housekeeper and charwomen, number and pay, Musgrave - - - - - 46,338-9

HOURS:
 Certain amount of work done in some departments after 4, Musgrave - - - - - 44,662-6 and Objection of solicitors to longer hours in vacation, Musgrave - - - - - 44,642-6 10-5, objections to, Musgrave 44,647, 44,662-6
 Increasing grants made through, number, Simpson
 52,900
 Leave, Musgrave - - - - - 44,679-80
 Long Vacation, assigning of some annual work to, question as to possibility, Musgrave - 46,437-9 Operations of, in connection with public, Musgrave
 44,468-61, 44,667-75
 Orders, drawing of, method and system of having minutes drawn by parties might be extended, Bayford - - - - - 48,156-66
 Organisation satisfactory as a whole, judging by results, Bayford - - - - - 48,154-5
 Overstaffing question, Evans - - - - 60,836-53
 Personal application instead of correspondence, and question as to convenience of system, Musgrave
 46,441-66

Personal Application Department, no difficulty known to be experienced by persons going to, Bayford - - - - - 48,212-4

REGISTRARS:
 Appointment:
 Direct, Musgrave - - - - - 46,493-4
 System good, Bayford - - - - - 48,107
 Appointment on Rule Committee suggested, Stringer, 49,580-8; Morton, 52,695-6.

Probate Registry, Principal—continued.REGISTRARS—continued.*Clerks:

should be Admitted to be entitled to second class pay and four additional places in second class provided for, Musgrave 44,628-37, 46,363
 Attendance-book not signed by, and reason, Musgrave - - - - 46,428
 Salaries not considered adequate owing to importance of posts, Bayford - - 48,126-9
 Work of, Musgrave - - - - 44,541-5
 Clerks eligible, Musgrave - - - - 44,575
 District registrars as, experience no disqualification, but particular value doubted, Bayford 48,149-50

Experience as first class clerk one qualification, Muir Mackenzie - - - - 44,027 Necessity for being in court during hearing of cases, Musgrave - - - - 46,376-82 previous Posts, Musgrave - - - - 44,570-3 statutory Qualifications, Musgrave - 44,574, 46,492-4

Retirement, age limit suggested, with power to President to extend, Bayford - 48,107-13, 48,182-4

Senior:

Appointment by selection instead of seniority, no advantage seen, Bayford - - 48,207-10
 Position of, and question of responsibility as regards staff, Evans - - - - 60,848-62
 Signing of grants by clerks of Seats instead of by, proposed at one time, but objection to, Musgrave 44,638-41
 Work of, Musgrave - - - 44,514-5, 44,525-9, 44,537-40, 46,383-94, App. XCV.

SCRIVENERY DEPARTMENT:

Ages of oldest members of examining and copying staffs, length of service, &c., McMullen 46,163-71

Appointment, method, McMullen, 46,172-5; Musgrave - - - - 46,519-21

Average earnings, Musgrave - - - 46,308-15 many Candidates for admission to, generally, Musgrave - - - - 46,297-8

Clerks, position of, and opinion re pension question, Musgrave - - - - 44,723-6

Copying, rates of pay and average weekly earnings, McMullen, 46,101-23; Bourdelot, 46,178-82

Copyists, difficulty of putting, on salaried basis, according to department, Bourdelot, McMullen 46,192-7

Establishment, suggested scheme, McMullen, 46,156-8; Bourdelot, 46,192-5.

Examiners, rate of pay to be increased, Musgrave 46,310-1

Examining work, rates of pay, stipulated amount of work, and average weekly earnings, McMullen 46,093-100

Female typist:

Paid by salary, and rate of, Musgrave, 46,347
 Permanently on staff, Musgrave - - 46,337
 Two, and position of, Bourdelot - - 46,184-7
 Two, and reasons against employment of larger number, Musgrave 44,718-22, 46,340-56

Fixed nucleus of established scriveners, present system preferred, Musgrave - - - 46,483

Handwriting work, McMullen, 46,115-22; Bourdelot, 46,183.

Holidays, McMullen - - - - 46,128-32

Hours, McMullen - - - - 46,124-9, 46,179

Organisation before 1894, McMullen - 46,085-9

Payment by piecework preferred, and reasons, Musgrave - - - - 46,291-4

Pensions:

Claim of writers to be made pensionable, McMullen - - - - 46,133-6
 Contributory scheme would be considered, McMullen - - - - 46,159
 Difficulty re, Heath - - - - 60,602-8
 Suggestion re making clerks pensionable after Civil Service certificate procured and after certain number of years' service, Musgrave 46,294-5

Voluntary and contributory system not considered, McMullen - - - - 46,154-5
 Staff, number, McMullen - - - - 46,083

Probate Registry, Principal—continued.SCRIVENERY DEPARTMENT—continued.

Superintendence by second class clerk assisted by third class, and duties of, McMullen, 46,141-5; Musgrave, 46,521.

Typing:

Comparison of cost with cost of manuscript and with rates in Central Office, Musgrave

• 46,201-4, 46,301-4

Increased number of documents might be typed, Musgrave - - - - 46,200

Introduction 1894, and reorganisation of staff, McMullen - - - - 46,090-2

Work of, &c., particulars re, Musgrave 44,697-717, 44,727, 46,299-300

Writers:

Appointment to third class clerkships, opportunities, &c., but no financial gain, McMullen, 46,146-53; Bourdelot, 46,188-9.

Difference between work of, and that of third class clerks, question of, McMullen 46,176-7

Permanency of employment, McMullen 46,136-9

Rate of pay not higher than in general market, McMullen - - - - 46,160-2 always Sufficient work for, Bourdelot 46,190-1

Seats department, work of, Musgrave - 44,665-75

Sending in of papers to, by Inland Revenue officer, Musgrave - - - - 46,238-42

Sittings, Musgrave - - - - 44,516-24

STAFF:

Decrease impossible consistently with efficiency, Musgrave - - - - 46,362

Increase will soon be necessary, Musgrave 46,359-61

TAXING OF BILLS:

Arduousness of work, Musgrave - - 46,388-94

Number per year, Musgrave 44,619-26, 46,198-9

Transfer of work to Central Taxing Office not advocated, and objection to, Musgrave, 44,617-27; Baker, 45,804-5; Bayford, 48,151-3.

WOMEN, EMPLOYMENT OF:

Question of, Evans - - - - 60,876-7 in Storing, registering, and handling wills, no difficulty or objection seen, Muir Mackenzie 55,443-4

WORK:

Comparison with that of district registries, Musgrave - - - - 46,326-7

Comparison with that of Estate Duty Office, Musgrave - - - - 46,333-6

Nature of, Musgrave - 44,491-513, App. XCV.

Satisfactorily done on the whole, Bayford 48,106, 48,221

Probate Registries, number of estates going through, 1913, Musgrave - - - - 44,493-7

Procurators Fiscal:

Amalgamation of districts, see Number, reduction of, below.

APPOINTMENT:

Committee not advocated, but if created must appoint not only advise, Anderson - - 59,941-8

Crown Agent should be consulted, Lewis 59,521-3 of Fully qualified law agents generally, H. H. Brown - - - - 57,366 not Ideal system, but results satisfactory, Anderson 59,935-6

by Lord Advocate, Dodds - - - 55,565, 55,605

by Lord Advocate:

Breadth of appointment since, H. H. Brown 57,467

Continuance advocated and question as to eliminating political considerations but possibility doubted, Anderson - - - 59,949-54

Preferred, H. H. Brown - 57,421, 57,433-40, 57,475-84

Sheriff should be consulted, Lewis - 59,540, 59,555-6

by Lord President, question of, Anderson 59,955-9

Method, H. H. Brown, 57,363; Macnochie, 58,284

Political considerations may have entered into, in some cases, H. H. Brown - - 57,371-3 a Political system, and majority of Council of Society of Law Agents object to, Anderson 59,937-40

Procurators Fiscal—continued.APPOINTMENT—continued.

by Promotion :

Advocated wherever possible, and proposal re keeping of list by Crown Agent, Horn

58,799, 58,829–31 would be Approved if with required qualifications, but clerks not likely to have, H. H. Brown

57,390–5

Cases, Bisset, 57,136; H. H. Brown, 57,366, 57,370; Maconochie, 58,282–4.

Opinion re, Salvesen - - - 58,991–2, 59,016–7

Possible without alteration of the law, H. H. Brown - - - - - 57,430–2

Preferred whenever possible, but hard and fast rule not advocated, R. Munro - - - 60,130–3 from Smaller district in some cases, H. H. Brown 57,370

by Promotion and transfer :

Approval of, if suitable, Fleming - - - 59,339–40

Difficulty, Dunedin - - - - - 58,432–4

Recent appointments, particulars re, R. Munro

60,125–33, 60,248–9, 60,294–6

Refusal by Crown to appoint Sheriff's nominee sometimes, Salvesen - - - - - 58,990

System approved, Fleming - - - - - 59,334

Systems, Dunedin - - - - - 58,424, 58,430

Assistant, question of, Mackenna - - - 57,520–4

Carrying out of prosecutions for local authorities by, question of, R. Munro - - - - - 60,290–3

CARRYING OUT OF PROSECUTIONS FOR PARISH COUNCILS, ETC. :

Approved, R. Munro - - - - - 60,200–4 and Question of continuance, Maconochie 58,377–8 to Some extent, and advocated as part of duties with increased salary, Scott-Dickson - 60,442–5 for Special charge, Sir T. Munro - - - 60,081

CLERKS :

Acquisition of qualifications as law agent while in office, question as to possibility, H. H. Brown

57,452–3

Allowance for :

Absence of Treasury control re expenditure, H. H. Brown, 57,447–8; Heath, 60,670–1 probable Expenditure in case of clerks going to the war; Heath - - - - - 60,672–3 no Reason seen for details being given as to expenditure, Salvesen - - - - - 59,018–24

System not considered satisfactory, and reference to report of Minor Legal Appointments Committee, Dodds - - - - - 55,627–35

Appointment :

Method, Dodds, 55,626; H. H. Brown, 57,374; Horn, 58,761.

Political considerations not involved, Anderson

59,960–1

Scheme, Horn - - - - - 58,794

Glasgow, special position of, and claim to increased salaries, Giles - - - - - 58,841–4

Inadequate salary, facts agreed with in one case, Salvesen - - - - - 59,045

Number, question of, Yeates - - - - - 58,821–2

Particulars re, and arrangement re payment, Dodds 55,565

Payment system, Fleming - - - 59,405, 59,430

Pensions advocated, H. H. Brown - - - 57,396

Promotion :

by Committee of Procurators Fiscal, possibility doubted, Maconochie - - - - - 58,318–9 to Higher posts advocated, Lewis - - - 59,511–2

by Transfer :

would be Approved, Lewis - - - 59,513–5

Possible, but rests with Procurator Fiscal, H. H. Brown - - - - - 57,416

no Security of tenure, and dismissal should not be possible without consent of Sheriff or Lord Advocate, Anderson - - - - - 59,962–70

Combination with office of Sheriff Clerk in small places, possibility doubted, H. H. Brown

57,457–61

Contact with Crown Office and Advocates Depute, H. H. Brown - - - - - 57,475–82

Conveyancing work, &c., by, for small local authorities, question of, Sir T. Munro, 60,084–8, 60,089–94; Shaw, 60,088–9, 60,094–5.

Procurators Fiscal—continued.DEPUTES :

Acquisition of qualifications as a law agent while in office, question as to possibility H. H. Brown

57,451–3

Appointment :

Method and position of, Horn, 58,761, 58,808–9; R. Munro, 60,208–10.

from Outside, case of, Giles - - - 58,801–3

by Selection from clerks advocated wherever possible, and, proposal re keeping of list by Crown Agent, Horn 58,795–9, 58,810–4, 58,829–31

Civil Service basis :

Claim to, with pensions, Horn - - - 58,762–73

Recommendation re, Horn - - - 58,823–36

Distinction from clerks of Procurators Fiscal, Horn - - - - - 58,753–5

Established service, appointment :

by Committee, proposal not approved, H. H. Brown - - - - - 57,421 by Lord Advocate with concurrence of Procurator Fiscal advocated, H. H. Brown 57,417–21

Fixity of tenure, claim to, but no case of dismissal by new Procurator Fiscal known of, Horn

58,762–8

Honorary appointments, H. H. Brown, 57,454–6; Horn, 58,824.

Number, Horn - - - - - 58,819–20 not Pensionable, H. H. Brown - - - 57,397

Pensions :

Advocated, H. H. Brown, 57,396; Anderson

60,012–5

Advocated for all whole-time officials, Horn, 58,825–7; Salvesen, 58,987–9.

Difficulty re, as not whole-timers, R. Munro

60,207–10

Private practice question, Anderson - - 60,019

Promotion by transfer :

Advocated, Anderson - - - - - 59,971–3

Claim to regular system of, and men would be prepared to move, Horn, 58,762–3, 58,774–90; Giles, 58,838–41.

no Difficulty in way of, H. H. Brown - 57,474

Possible, but rests with Procurator Fiscal, H. H. Brown - - - - - 57,416

Qualifications :

Law agent advocated, Anderson 59,927, 59,932–4

Raising of, suggested, H. H. Brown

57,379, 57,394–5

Remuneration system and objection to, and claim to fixing of scales by Treasury and direct payment by Lord Advocate, Horn 58,792–3, 58,805–7

Tenure of office, H. H. Brown - - - 57,357

Whole-time, number, H. H. Brown, 57,358–9; Horn

58,837

Disciplinary control by, Dodds - - - 55,581

Dismissal, power of, Dodds - - - 55,582

Duties, Dodds, 55,564; H. H. Brown, 57,328–35 few Duties of, statutory, but alteration not advocated, H. H. Brown - - - - - 57,428–9

Economies effected by, by improvements on system of criminal procedure, Mackenna - - - 57,509

Edinburgh, County of City of, post might be merged in that of Procurator Fiscal of Midlothian, Mackenzie

56,592–3

Efficiency of, H. H. Brown - - - 57,449–50

Established service and appointment by promotion, younger men would be appointed, H. H. Brown

57,414–5

Establishment, possibility of, without extra charge on Exchequer, H. H. Brown - - - 57,422–7

Experience required, Mackenzie - - - 56,596

History of office, H. H. Brown - - - 57,363 not a Law agent in one case, but no objection, Anderson - - - - - 59,930

LEAVE OF ABSENCE :

Hardship owing to lack of provision for, in small districts and question of remedy, Mackenna

57,520–3, 57,491–500

Peripatetic Procurators Fiscal, system might be feasible, Mackenna - - - - - 57,498–500

Sick leave, suggested provision for, Mackenna

57,509–12

Sheriff Maconochie's evidence agreed with, Fleming

59,332–3

Procurators Fiscal—continued.

Midlothian, staff and work of, and salaries, H. H. Brown 57,350-4 Number, Dodds, 55,565; H. H. Brown, 57,336-7.
 Number, reduction:
 Advocated, so that whole time should be taken up by official work, with system of ad hoc deputies when necessary, Anderson - - 59,995-60,003
 would be Approved, Lewis - - 59,509-10
 Assistance by highly qualified full-time deputies, scheme, H. H. Brown - - 57,379-86
 Proposal not agreed with, and reasons, Maconochie, 58,356; Horn, 58,791, 58,815-8; Salvesen, 58,977, 59,077-82; Fleming, 59,335, 59,428-9, 59,436-8
 Offices included in that of, H. H. Brown - 57,328 Offices, part of county buildings, H. H. Brown 57,347-8 not Pensionable, Mackenzie - - - 56,598

PENSIONS:

Advocated, H. H. Brown - - - 57,396-9
 Advocated for whole-timers, Salvesen, 58,985-6; R. Munro, 60,205-6.
 Desirable, but less important than for deputies, Anderson - - - 60,012-5
 Difficulty owing to cases in which work done for, and paid for by, local authorities, and taking over of, by Exchequer desirable, but difficulty of vested interests of Justices of the Peace Court, H. H. Brown - - - 57,400-11
 Economies effected by Procurators Fiscal would cover extra cost of, Mackenna 57,509, 57,529-31
 Fixed age for retirement would be necessary and suggestion re age, Mackenna, 47,505-8; H. H. Brown, 57,413-6.
 Grievance felt re non-carrying out of recommendations of Commission of 1871 re, Mackenna 57,489
 Inconvenience and hardship from lack of, Mackenna - - 57,490, 57,513-5, 57,524-8
 Taking over of all payments by Government would remove one difficulty, Mackenna - 57,509
 Politics not taken part in after appointment, R. Munro - - - 60,250-3 Position compared with that of other offices, Mackenna - - - 57,509
 Position of, and relation to Sheriff Court, Maconochie 58,268-9

PRIVATE PRACTICE:

Allowed in a few cases, H. H. Brown 57,360, 57,362, 57,363 should be Allowed unless salaries raised, Maconochie - - - 58,359-69 not Allowed with a few exceptions, Maconochie 58,357-8

Approved of, where whole-time not occupied by official duties, Scott-Dickson 60,377-9, 60,441 no Objection to, and advantage of, Salvesen, 58,977-84, 59,082; Fleming, 59,336-8.
 no Objection known to, but should not be allowed where salaries sufficient, Dunedin - 58,428-9

Restriction:

Advocated, but difficulty in case of part-time officers, Anderson - - 59,991-4, 60,009
 Advocated as far as possible, Lewis 59,505-8, 59,566-8
 Desirable, with possible relaxation in very exceptional cases, R. Munro - - 60,196-8
 Desirable in larger districts, H. H. Brown 57,376

Difficulty in small districts, and consolidation in districts suggested, Mackenna - 57,516
 Question as to reason for, Maconochie 58,360-2, 58,395-6

Reason, Dunedin - - - 58,424-7 in Recent appointments, H. H. Brown, 57,360, 57,363; R. Munro, 60,193-5.
 in Small districts, question of, and possibility of amalgamation, H. H. Brown - - 57,376-8

Promotion, Mackenzie - - - 56,596-9

PROMOTION BY TRANSFER:

Advocated, and would be approved, H. H. Brown, 57,387-9; Salvesen, 59,077-81; Anderson 59,974-5

Carried out regularly, and approval of, Scott-Dickson - - - 60,380-2

Prosecution of all statutory and common law offences should be undertaken by, R. Munro 60,073, 60,082

Procurators Fiscal—continued.PUBLIC APPOINTMENTS:

Allowed in some cases and no inconvenience known, Maconochie - - - 58,364-8
 Approval of, Anderson - - 59,992-3, 60,030-3
 Inadvisable generally, R. Munro - - 60,199
 if made Public appointments pensions should be given, Dunedin - - - 58,493 all Public prosecutions should be at instance of, and payment be made only by Treasury, Sir T. Munro, 60,069-70, 60,082-3, 60,095-7; Shaw, 60,094, 60,095.

QUALIFICATIONS:

Advocate or law agent advocated, Anderson 59,927-31
 Fully qualified law agent with certain number of years' practice advocated, H. H. Brown 57,365-9, 57,473
 Law agent desirable, Maconochie - - 58,271-5
 Legal knowledge needed, Maconochie - 58,270-1 no Statutory qualifications, H. H. Brown 57,364 Qualities and Qualifications required, H. H. Brown 57,441-6
 Regular service of, desirable, but doubt as to application of Civil Service conditions, Mackenzie 56,596

REMUNERATION:

Elements of, H. H. Brown - - - 57,340-4
 Payment by Counties for perusal of informations on which no proceedings taken:
 Ayrshire, position re, Shaw - - 60,076-7
 Lanarkshire, refusal of county to make payment to, Sir T. Munro - - - 60,067 Position re, Sir T. Munro, 60,067-72; Shaw 60,076-7

if Taken over by Treasury, compensation:

would only Apply to present holders, Sir T. Munro - - - 60,078 should be Paid on amount to which legally entitled, not on sum settled as compromise, Shaw - - - 60,075 would be Payable to Treasury from county, and need not increase salary of any future Procurator Fiscal, Sir T. Munro - 60,079-80

Payment by local authorities for certain class of work, Sir T. Munro - - - 60,069
 Payment by local authorities, and Government should take over, Mackenna - - 57,509 Payment should be wholly by salary from Treasury, and should cover any necessary clerical assistance, Sir T. Munro - 60,072-4

Salary:

Allowance for provision of clerk to write recognitions included in, in some counties, not in others, H. H. Brown - - - 57,349
 Decrease of, on occurrence of vacancies, Mackenna 57,504

Fixed on each appointment, H. H. Brown 57,338-9

Inclusion of salaries of clerks and office expenses in, and system, H. H. Brown 57,345-6, 57,353-4 no Increase with length of service and automatic increase advocated, Mackenna - 57,500-4 very Small in some of smaller districts, H. H. Brown - - - 57,361-2

Stationery allowance included in, in some counties, not in others, H. H. Brown - 57,349

Responsibility of, Dodds - - - 55,601-4

RETIREMENT:

Fixed age would not be objected to, if pensionable Dunedin - - - 58,496-7 at 70, clause:

was Illegal and unfair, H. H. Brown - 57,412 not in Present commissions, H. H. Brown 57,412

Tenure of office, H. H. Brown - - - 57,355-6

Use of police officers by, and inconvenience of, Sir T. Munro, 60,072; Shaw, 60,075.

WHOLE-TIMERS:

nearly All recent appointments have been, Mackenzie - - - 56,600

Desirable where enough work to occupy whole time, but not otherwise, Mackenzie - 56,600

as a Rule, but question considered on vacancy, Dodds - - - 55,568

Procurators Fiscal—continued.WORK:

Emergent nature of, Mackenna	-	57,499-500
Increase owing to recent legislation, Mackenna		57,501
Increase of, without increase of salary or more provision for help, Mackenna	57,500-3, 57,517-9

Promotion:

see also under particular departments.

Appointment by, see under Appointment.

from Bottom preferred to division into two grades, Muir Mackenzie	-	-	55,262-74
Clerks should have chance of, Haldane	-	60,918-9

COMMITTEE FOR:

Proposal not approved, mediocrity might increase as result of, Brickdale	-	51,211-8
Question of advantage or not, Muir Mackenzie		55,264-5

Suggestion, J. R. B. Gregory , 47,394-6; Loreburn , 50,575, 50,613-5, 50,692-5; Wrenbury , 54,866-8; Haldane , 60,927-8.
--	--	--

official Committee in each office to advise, recommendation of Royal Commission could also apply to Legal Departments, Muir Mackenzie 55,438 some Complaints heard, but generally of personal character, Muir Mackenzie - 44,109-11 between Departments possible but not general, Muir Mackenzie - 44,113 Direct appointment to higher classes instead of, see under Appointment.

ELIGIBILITY OF CLERKS FOR APPOINTMENT AS MASTERS OR REGISTRARS:

Advocated in case of very exceptional abilities, Haldane	-	60,934 not Advocated, Romer , 44,917-25, 45,107-8; Macdonell , 45,336; Baker , 45,776-9, 45,821-8; J. R. B. Gregory , 47,217-22, 47,354-7; Austen-Cartmell , 47,637-9, 47,669, 47,681-91, 47,699-700; Roscoe , 49,488-901; Hansell , 50,902-4.
not Advocated unless with 10 years' practice as solicitor, Fox	-	47,749-52
Advocated in case of taxing masters, but not in case of Chancery, Goodchild	47,477-85, 47,489
Desirable, and bar should be removed, Loreburn		50,669-80
no Objection to, Manson , 49,308-9; Neish		50,777-9, 50,799-800
in Some divisions, Muir Mackenzie		44,027-9, 44,032

Examination before, suggestions, Macdonell, 45,462, 45,487-8; Stringer, 49,675-80, 49,776-8

TO FIRST CLASS:

more by Selection advocated, and suggestion re consultation of senior clerks re, Townesend		52,355-6, 52,366, 52,382, 52,392-6
by Seniority advocated, with some regard to ability, Caunt	-	50,115-43
Inequality in rate of, in different offices, Muir Mackenzie	-	44,119-22, 44,377-80
men seldom Passed over except in Chancery Division, Muir Mackenzie	-	44,104-5
Passing over of men, Macdonell , 45,475-80, 45,485; Stringer , 49,864-5.

by Patronage, Mackenzie - 56,642-7
draft Regulations, Muir Mackenzie - App. XCIV.

BY SELECTION:

Advocated, some consideration being given to seniority, Wrenbury	-	54,880-91
Desirable, Loreburn	-	50,557-8
Difficulty of managing, Muir Mackenzie		55,263
Essential to efficiency, and suggested method, J. R. B. Gregory	-	47,267-78, 47,336-7
Present men would have no legal claim to promotion by seniority, Muir Mackenzie	-	55,370-1

BY SENIORITY:

should be Rule, and selection by special merit the exception, Loreburn	-	50,696
Tempered by selection, suggestion, Haldane		60,922-33
Service scale, question of, Brougham	-	49,157-62
System, Muir Mackenzie	-	44,096-108, 44,381-4
System believed to work satisfactorily, Muir Mackenzie	-	44,109-10

Promotion—continued.FROM THIRD CLASS CLERKS:

see also Self-contained class under Third class under Clerks.

Access to highest posts advocated, Loreburn		50,669-72 should be in Exceptional cases only, Goodchild		47,409-13, 47,418
to Higher classes should be possible, but must be on merit, Gregory	47,267-78, 47,336-7, 47,388-93
by Merit advocated, Oakshott	47,003-9, 47,130-2 should be in Same department only, Goodchild		47,418, 47,428-31

Rawle, Johnstone & Co.:

Organisation of office, J. R. B. Gregory	47,314-28, 47,382
Pensioning of clerks, J. R. B. Gregory	- 47,380-1
Read, James, former Clerk of Assize, reference	51,473-4

Record Office:CLERKS:

Legal knowledge required, MacDougall	-	55,693
Scales of pay, MacDougall	-	55,692
Combination with Register of Deeds, suggestion, Mackenzie	-	56,504-5
Deputy Clerk Register should have control over, Mackenzie	-	56,498-501

DEPUTY KEEPER OF RECORDS:

Appointment, method, MacDougall	-	55,744
Retirement, Civil Service rule applicable, MacDougall	-	55,745
Engrossing staff, rate of pay, Tolmie	-	58,854
Keeper, appointment, method, Dunedin	-	58,441-2
Promotion, satisfactory flow, Mackenzie	-	56,474-6
Records kept at, nature of, MacDougall	-	55,674-83
entirely Separate from Register of Deeds and Register of Sasines, Murray	-	57,911-5
Staff of, MacDougall	-	55,689-91
Well managed, Murray	-	57,928
Women indexers employed, MacDougall	-	55,870-1
Work of, Dodds , 55,539-41; MacDougall , 55,684-6, 55,729-32
Work of, and relation to Sasines Office system, MacDougall	-	55,674

Register House:

Administration of departments, praise of, Murray		57,992
Amalgamation of departments, no need for, MacDougall	-	55,849

APPOINTMENTS:Clerks:

Age limits, MacDougall	-	55,777
by Civil Service second division examination advocated, with exception of head of department, Mackenzie	-	56,514-9, 56,694-707
Competition among men with certain qualifications, system and success, MacDougall		55,773-88, 55,889-91
Examination, nature of, MacDougall		55,904-6
by Open competition, and special examination after training in office, might be advisable, but change not advocated at present, MacDougall		55,788-93
Proportions successful of candidates at open competitions, 1905-14, Leathes

Apps. CIV., CIV.

Vacancies, average number annually, MacDougall		55,794
Committee to advise Lord Advocate, one man preferred, Murray	-	57,956
Crown, number unnecessarily high, MacDougall		55,752-2

to Higher posts:

from Department advocated, MacDougall		55,754-5
Headships open to clerks, MacDougall		55,900
from Outside:
Consultation of Lord President and Lord Justice General, suggestion, MacDougall		55,759-66
of Men without previous Civil Service experience generally, MacDougall		55,754
by Secretary for Scotland on recommendation of Deputy Clerk Register advocated, MacDougall		55,756-66

Register House—continued.APPOINTMENTS—continued.to Higher posts—continued.

Varying methods, no reason seen for, and uniform method desired, MacDougall - 55,751, 55,897-903

Legal qualifications considered unnecessary, open competition advocated, Mackenzie - 56,509-20

Lord Advocate has no connection with, R. Munro 60,182

Method, Dodds, 55,613-5, 55,617; MacDougall 55,747-50

Political considerations:

Enter into, and system not approved, but good men appointed, Murray 57,899-902, 57,937, 57,950-9

Objected to by legal profession, Murray 57,954

Results satisfactory as regards way work done, Murray - - - 57,903-5, 57,910

Attendance-books kept, MacDougall - - 55,845

Buildings, accommodation, &c., MacDougall 55,859-62

Chancery Office, see that title.

CLERKS:

Class much the same as second division clerks, MacDougall - - - 55,892-6

Hours, recommendations of Committee of 1911 re, and carried out, Adam - - - 56,197

statutory Legal qualifications:
Nature of, MacDougall, 55,693, 55,773-5, 55,779-82

Possibility of men having failed in profession entering Register House, MacDougall, 55,784, 55,886-8

Nature of work, MacDougall - - - 55,907-14

Training of, same system as in judiciary office might be possible but not necessary, Crole 56,776

Transfers between Registers of Deeds and Sasines in Record Office, possibility, Mackenzie 56,502-3

CONTROL BY COURT OF SESSION:

Maintenance advocated, Lewis - - 59,488-9

Opinion re, Dunedin - - - 58,474-84

Departments of, particulars re, Dodds - 55,539-44

DEPUTY CLERK REGISTER:

Appointment, method, MacDougall, 55,733; Dunedin - - - 58,439

Combination of post with that of Registrar-General of Births, Deaths, and Marriages:

not Satisfactory and separation advocated, MacDougall - - - 55,825-9

Separate offices for Registrar-General's work of lower rank, under supervision of Deputy Clerk Register, suggestion, Murray - 57,857-61

Separation, no necessity seen personally, Mackenzie - - - 56,506-8

Control and supervision by:

Effective, MacDougall - - - 55,872-8

Full, over all other departments advocated, MacDougall - - - 55,830-2

Power re superintendence, MacDougall, 55,717-8, 55,722-8 over Register of Sasines, see under Control and Supervision under Register of Sasines.

Placing of Chancery Office under, would be approved, MacDougall - - - 55,852-4

Post instituted 1806, MacDougall - - 55,733 statutory Qualifications, MacDougall - 55,737

statutory Qualifications should be retained, and question of extension to include writers to the Signet, MacDougall - - - 55,767-72

Record Office should be controlled by, Mackenzie 56,498-501

Register of Deeds should be controlled by, Mackenzie - - - 56,498-501 also Registrar-General, MacDougall - 55,673

Tenure of office, and clause in warrant of appointment re retirement at 70 considered ineffectual, MacDougall - - - 55,733-6, 55,740-3

Work of, MacDougall - - - 55,719-21

Discipline, &c., administration system, Dodds 55,578-80

Disciplinary control, system and procedure, MacDougall - - 55,717-8, 55,722-8, 55,833-9

Register House—continued.ENGROSSING STAFF:

see also under Register of Deeds and Register of Sasines.

Appointment, by heads of departments, MacDougall 55,795

Earnings, MacDougall - - - 55,797

Holidays and absence on sick leave, hardship re, Mackenzie - - - 56,552, 56,556

Hours, MacDougall - - - 55,797, 55,879

Interchangeable between departments, MacDougall 55,797

Mutual sick benefit fund, Mackenzie - 56,553-6

Payment:

by Piecework, retention recommended by Committee owing to difficulty of deciding on better system, Mackenzie - - - 56,521-3 by Salary, with condition of certain amount of work to be done, question of, MacDougall, 55,881-2; Mackenzie, 56,532-7.

Penmanship, deterioration, MacDougall 55,797

Pensioning off of:
would be Feasible, MacDougall - - 55,810

Scheme prepared formerly, MacDougall 55,801

Pensions, contributory scheme, might be possible, Mackenzie - - - 56,550-1

Sick leave, arrangement desirable, Mackenzie 56,556

Unfortunate position of, MacDougall 55,797, 55,810, 55,880, 55,883

Extractor's Department, see that title.

Historical Department, see that title.

Hornings, inhibitions, adjudications, and entails, registers of, explanation, Ketchen - - 56,291-3

Hours, Murray - - - 57,990-1

Hours, overtime worked and arrangement re payment for, MacDougall - - - 55,840-4

Indexing of ancient records, no reason seen against employment of women, MacDougall - 55,918-9

Lord Clerk Register, post of, formerly, MacDougall 55,828

Lord Clerk Register of Scotland should supervise whole work of, Murray - - - 57,883

Organisation satisfactory on the whole, MacDougall 55,825

Pensions, all staff pensionable except engrossing staff, MacDougall - - - 55,846

PROMOTION:

in Hands of Deputy Clerk Register, MacDougall 55,748

System, MacDougall - - - 55,811-23

RECORDING OF DEEDS:

Change of method:

Approval of Court of Session would be necessary, Murray - - - 57,925, 57,938-9

Difficulty re engrossers would be solved, Mackenzie - - - 56,527

careful Investigation necessary before, and should be made by Deputy Clerk Register and Court of Session, Murray - - 57,941

Legislation would be necessary, Ketchen, 56,387-8, 56,404-9

Question as to authority required, Dunedin 58,476-8

Question under consideration since 1838, Ketchen 55,380

Mechanical method of, would solve difficulties re engrossing staff, Ketchen - - - 56,386

Photo-lithography:

Proposed by Lord Low's Committee, but opposed by legal bodies and Bill not passed, MacDougall 55,799-801

Use of, under consideration by Commission on Conveyancing, Ketchen - - - 56,381-4

Printing or photo-zinco-photography, Parliamentary sanction would be necessary, Murray 57,940

Typewriting:

Alterations, possibility of, an objection to, Murray 57,925-7

Considered, but permanency of record doubted, Ketchen - - - 56,385 would Cost less than present system, Mackenzie 56,528

no Objection to now, as ink indelible and typing into book possible, Mackenzie - - 56,529

Register House—continued.RECORDING OF DEEDS—continued.*Typewriting—continued.

Pensioning off of engrossers would be possible.

Mackenzie - - - - - 55,528

Substitution of, desired, MacDougall - 55,797,

55,801-8

should be Tried in Register of Deeds first, but would also be useful in Register of Sasines,

MacDougall - - - - - 55,806-8

Use of, might be possible, but careful consideration necessary before, Murray - 57,925-7

Typists, women:

Clerical work for, during slack season, question of, Mackenzie - - - - - 56,662-82

Women should be employed, Murray - 57,964

should be Employed on Civil Service basis, but question, owing to unevenness in amount of work, Mackenzie - - - - - 56,530-49

Only, question of, MacDougall - 55,863-9

Women could be employed in copying work,

Murray - - - - - 57,963-6

Zincography, as regards maps and plans, adoption advocated, Murray - - - - - 57,927

Relation to Court of Session, Dunedin - 58,440

RETIREMENT:

Age for, Dodds - - - - - 55,616

Civil Service rules applicable except to direct

Crown appointments, MacDougall - 55,847-8 must be kept Separate from Court of Session, Mac- kenzie - - - - - 56,496

Staff, interchange between departments, provided for, but no great amount of, MacDougall 55,814-6

Transfer of papers between Court and, system and inconvenience of, Adam - - - - - 56,066-71

WOMEN, EMPLOYMENT OF:

see also under Recording of Deeds above.

Accommodation difficulty, Mackenzie - 56,682,

56,685-8

would be Suitable for work if legal qualifications possessed, Murray - - - - - 57,966-71

Work of, and distinction from General Register

House, MacDougall - - - - - 55,672

Register of Deeds:AMALGAMATION WITH REGISTER OF SASINES:

not Advocated, MacDougall - - - 55,850-1

Possibility of, and some economies could be effected, Ketchen - - - - - 56,375-9

Question of, Mackenzie - - - 56,504, 56,505

no Reason seen for, but would not be impracticable,

Murray - - - - - 57,916-22

Suggestion, Mackenzie - - - - - 56,504-5

Deeds may be sent to, and copies returned from, by post, MacDougall - - - - - 55,917

Deputy Clerk Register should have control over,

Mackenzie - - - - - 56,498-501

Employment of, question as to extent, MacDougall

55,705-8

ENGROSSING STAFF:

see also under Register House.

Average earnings, Borthwick, Tolmie - 58,867-73

Combination with Register of Sasines, question of,

Mackenzie - - - - - 56,546-9

Gratuity on retirement, Borthwick - 58,876

Holidays, Tolmie, Borthwick - - 58,873

Hours, Tolmie - - - - - 58,870-2

Joining of sick society in Sasine Office not allowed,

Borthwick, Tolmie - - - - - 58,886-90

Mutual arrangement to provide for holidays and sick pay, impossibility, Tolmie, Borthwick,

58,861-6

Number, &c., and substitution of typists desired,

MacDougall - - - - - 55,710

Pensions, need for, and contributory scheme would be accepted, Tolmie, Borthwick - 58,874-6, 58,891-5

Rates of pay, Tolmie, Borthwick - 58,848-57,

58,882-5, 58,895-6

Sick pay and holiday pay, desired, Tolmie 58,860-6

Keeper of, appointment, method, MacDougall 55,746,

55,755

Making of record distinct from custody, Murray

57,911-5

Procedure, difference from Register of Sasines,

MacDougall - - - - - 55,701-4

Register of Deeds—continued.

Staff, MacDougall - - - - - 55,709-10

Typists, women employed, MacDougall - 55,797,

55,798

Work of, Dodds, 55,543; MacDougall, 55,700.

Register of Sasines:

Abridgment formed by Mr. Thomson, Murray 57,914

Amalgamation with Register of Deeds, see under

Register of Deeds.

Attendance-book kept, Ketchen - - 56,352

Certificates, Government guarantee of accuracy,

Ketchen - - - - - 56,289-90

Civil Service rules re discipline, &c., applicable,

Ketchen - - - - - 56,348

CLERKS:Appointment:*by Examination:

not Sufficient test, and selection by Keeper advocated, and scheme, Murray - 57,906,

57,944-9, 57,960-2, 57,972-89

System and nature of examination, and change, Ketchen - - - - - 56,321-3

Keeper of the Register of Sasines should have larger degree of control in, Murray 57,865,

57,870-1

Method, and qualifications required, Ketchen,

56,324-8; Murray, 57,866-8; Fisher

59,267-70

previous Professional knowledge necessary, and conveyancing clerks would be suitable, Murray

57,906-9

right Type of men obtained as a rule, and comparison with those appointed formerly without examination, Ketchen - - - 56,330-3

Chief, number and duties, Ketchen - 56,300

Comparison with men in law offices not apt,

Harrison - - - - - 59,292-305

Comparison with second division clerks, Fisher

59,271-83, 59,304, 59,310-21

Higher posts filled from, with exception of Keeper,

Fisher - - - - - 59,280-3, 59,306-9

previous Legal experience needed, Ketchen 56,334,

56,436-45

if made Pensionable and with fixed retiring age, more consideration would be required in appointment, Murray - - - - - 57,993-8000

Promotion, slow rate anticipated for certain number of years owing to bringing in of men from outside about 1899, Harrison - 59,284-7, 59,313-6

Qualifications, difficulty re, and regular apprenticeship as distinguished from clerkship would have been preferable, Ketchen - 56,329, 56,335-6

Report of Lord Low's Committee quoted re need for knowledge of conveyancing, Fisher 59,266

Second class, claim to special treatment re miniimum and maximum salary, Harrison 59,288-305

Transfer between Register House departments and, rare, and filling of vacancies from within office preferred, Ketchen - - - - - 56,417-20

Women, employment would be impossible without legal training, and Civil Service examination believed to be barred to, Ketchen - 56,421-31

Work, nature of, MacDougall - - 55,908-14

CONTROL AND SUPERVISION:by Deputy Clerk Register:

Advocated, and communications to Scottish

Office should be referred through, Mackenzie

56,498-501

Position re, and opinion, Ketchen, 56,358; Mur- ray, 57,878-82.

Proposal not approved, Ketchen - 56,359-60

Direct communication by Keeper with Secretary for Scotland, Ketchen - - - 56,359, 56,389-91

by Keeper, Ketchen - - - - - 56,295, 56,357

Recommendations of Lord Low's Committee re, and agreement with, Murray - - 57,873-4

Relations with Deputy Clerk Register, opinion re, and question of, Murray, 57,890-4, 57,942-3;

Dunedin, 58,472-3.

by Secretary for Scotland, should be confined to questions of discipline and appointment, Murray

57,883-4

System, Murray - - - - - 57,864

Register of Sasines—continued.CONTROL AND SUPERVISION—continued.

- by Treasury, extent of, and opinion re, and fees should be fixed by Court with approval of Treasury, Murray - - - 57,934-6, 57,885-8
 Unlimited control by Keeper not approved, Lewis 59,489
 Deeds may be sent and returned by post, MacDougall 55,915-7
 Delay in minuting of deeds, no complaint re engrossing, Murray - - - 57,921
 Drafting of minutes, distribution between clerks, Ketchen - - - 56,301-3

ENGROSSING STAFF:

- see also under Register House.*
 Appointment by Keeper, Ketchen - - 56,347
 Combination with Register of Deeds, question of, Mackenzie - - - 56,546-9
 Nature of work, Mackenzie - - 56,675-81
 Payment by piecework:
 All work now paid for, Ketchen - - 56,364-5
 Rate of pay, Tolmie - 58,854, 58,858-9
 Retention of system necessary for proper conduct of work, Ketchen - - - 56,363-4
 Pensions:
 would be Approved, Ketchen 56,368-9, 56,372
 Contributory scheme, difficulty as regards present old men, Ketchen - - 56,370-1
 Rate of pay increased by Treasury instead of granting, Ketchen - - - 56,366-7
 Women, possibility of employing, Ketchen 56,410-5, 56,422-3
 Entry in register, system, Ketchen - - 56,316-8
 Establishment of general register on new footing, 1869-70, and abolition of local registers, Ketchen 56,267
 Higher posts, appointment to, by promotion, and success of system, Ketchen - - 56,337-46
 Hours, Ketchen - - - 56,349-52

KEEPERS:

- all Advocates or solicitors with one exception, Ketchen - - - 56,321
 Appointment:
 from Department, unless no one suitable, desirable, MacDougall - - - 55,755-8
 Method, MacDougall, 55,738, 55,855; Ketchen, 56,319; Dunedin, 58,440.
 Particulars re present appointments, Ketchen 56,392-400

Assistant:

- Appointed by the Crown since 1881, Ketchen 56,319
 Number and duties, Ketchen - - 56,298-9
 Remuneration by fees formerly, by salary since 1845, Ketchen - - - 56,264-6 only Competent practising law agent should be appointed, Murray - - - 57,895-8
 Duties, Ketchen - - - 56,295-6
 Pension, no added years, Ketchen - - 56,401-3
 Political appointments, and system not approved although good men appointed, Murray 57,899-902, 57,937 statutory Qualifications, Ketchen - - 56,320
 Rejection of writ by, case of, and question should have gone before Deputy Clerk Register, Murray 57,890-4
 Remuneration by fees formerly, by salary since 1845, Ketchen - - - 56,264-6
 Tenure of office, MacDougall - - 55,739
 Making of record distinct from custody, Murray 57,911-4
 Overtime, and extent of, normally, Ketchen 56,353-5

PROMOTION:

- Satisfactory flow, Mackenzie - - - 56,474-6
 System, Ketchen - - - 56,340-6
 Registration, final, subject to appeal to Court, Ketchen 56,442-4

SEARCH SHEET:

- Abolition of, smaller staff would be possible, Murray - - - 57,923 previous Recommendations and bills re, Murray 57,924
 Searches, distribution of duties re, between clerks, and importance of work, Ketchen - - 56,304-15

Register of Sasines—continued.STAFF:

- Legal and technical knowledge required, MacDougall - - - 55,699
 Number of different classes, Ketchen - 56,294
 Numbers and pay, MacDougall - - 55,695-8
 Vacations, Ketchen - - - 56,356
 War vacancies, non-filling up of, and question of employment of women, Ketchen - - 56,432-5
 Work of, nature and details of processes, Dodds, 55,541-3; MacDougall, 55,694; Ketchen, 56,268-91

Registrar-General of Births, Deaths, and Marriages:

- Combination of post with that of Deputy Clerk Register, see under Deputy Clerk Register under Register House.

DEPARTMENT:

- Office accommodation, MacDougall - 55,861
 Promotion, system, MacDougall - - 55,823-4
 Women typists, replacement of men by, experiment, MacDougall - - - 55,919-21
 Work, increase of, MacDougall - - 55,826-8
 Registrars, see Masters and Registrars and under particular departments.
 Registration of title, see under Land Registry.
 Reid, R. C., appointment as secretary to Visitors in Lunacy, Loreburn - - - 50,663

Retirement:FIXED AGE FOR:*for Clerks:

- Advocated, and would be approved, Roscoe, 49,475-7; Aspinall, 50,850; Kershaw, 53,292; Lowe, 53,515-6.
 Advocated with power to extend, and question of age, Townsend, 52,310-20, 52,351-4; Davis, 53,127, 53,135; Wrenbury, 54,914.
 not Advocated, Romer, 44,969-73, 45,100-5; Baker, 45,786-8; Goodchild, 47,460-2; Kentish, 54,357, 54,362. not Advocated, unless with power of extension even over 70, Macdonell 45,528-32, 45,595-6 not Advocated, but men might be liable to be asked to resign after 65, Stringer 49,779-83
 Age, suggestions re, Fox, 47,876, 47,894-900; Brickdale, 51,281-93; Morton, 52,657; Kershaw, 53,293-4; Lowe, 53,516; Haldane, 60,938.
 Application of principles laid down in report of Royal Commission would be approved, Muir Mackenzie - - - 44,186-8
 would be Approved, subject to certain conditions, Musgrave - - - 44,689-95
 Civil Service rule advocated and would be approved, Leader, 46,557-65, 46,698-701, 46,707-12; Farmer, 46,795-7; Theobald, 48,481-6, 48,544-8; Mansfield, 48,744-7; Manson, Barnes, 49,344-9; Loreburn, 50,598-9; Mais, 52,475-7; Stewart-Wallace, 54,785-6; Heath, 60,513-4, 60,723-4; Haldane, 60,940.
 would be Desirable, Brocklesby, 52,208-9, 52,322; Overbury, 52,323
 Legislation would not be necessary, but question as to compensation, Muir Mackenzie 44,178-81
 None, and question of procedure in case of inefficiency owing to age, Muir Mackenzie 44,182-5 no Objection to, Hansell - - - 50,945-7
 Question of, Brougham - - - 49,116-9
 at Time at which man entitled to full pension suggested, Musgrave - - - 44,689-90 not Desirable, Caunt - - - 50,261-8 Difference of opinion re power re, Muir Mackenzie 44,173 a Few cases known in which fixed age would have been advantageous, Oakshott - - 47,065-6 Higher officers:
 no Advantage seen, Hansell - - 50,930-2
 Advisable, Loreburn, 50,598-600; Aspinall, 50,850-1; Kershaw, 53,294; Lowe, 53,510-4. not Advocated, and reasons, Romer, 44,969-73, 45,100-5; Baker, 45,781-5; Goodchild 47,460-2 not Advocated, but opinion might be modified if system of added years applied, Fox 47,876-81

Retirement—continued.FIXED AGE FOR—continued.*Higher officers—continued.

- Age, suggestions re, Muir Mackenzie, 44,189-90, 55,361; Farmer, 46,791-2; Fox, 47,881-93; Theobald, 48,481-91; Manson, 49,344; Roscoe, 49,475-8; Loreburn, 50,601; Kershaw, 53,294-5; Lowe, 53,512; Wrenbury, 54,914; Heath, 60,515-8, 60,725-6; Haldane, 60,939.
- Application of principles laid down in Report of Royal Commission would be approved, Muir Mackenzie - - - - 44,186-8
- Disadvantages of general rule, Disturnal 47,579-88
- no Objection seen if late enough for men to earn sufficient pension, and system of added years would be approved, Austen-Cartmell, 47,649-55, 47,692-5
- Present men would have no legal claims to compensation, Muir Mackenzie - - - 55,370
- no Public disadvantage from lack of, known in recent years, Disturnal - - - 47,583
- Question of, Brougham - - - 49,116-9
- Recommended in Chancery Report of 1885, Muir Mackenzie - - - - 44,188
- Vested interests would be entitled to compensation, Muir Mackenzie - - - 44,174
- Visitors in Lunacy:
- Advocated, Theobald - - - - 48,490-2
- not Advocated, Mansfield 48,735-7, 48,794-807
- for Inefficiency, with some pension, power desirable, Paulton - - - - 50,495-504
- Inefficiency owing to age, question as to steps taken re, Muir Mackenzie - - - - 44,389-98
- draft Regulations, Muir Mackenzie - App. XCIV.
- SCOTLAND:
- Civil Service rule:
- not Advocated, Paterson - - - 57,610-1
- no Reason seen against application of, Dodds, 55,650-1; Scott-Dickson, 60,384-5.
- Fixed age advocated, and question of age, R. Munro 60,211-4, 60,264-5
- Voluntary, any time after 30 years' service on proportionate pension, suggestion, Kentish - 54,357-63
- Value of long experience, Townsend - 52,315-9

RICHARDSON, RALPH, W. S., Commissary Clerk of Edinburgh - - - - 56,825-901

COMMISSARY CLERK OF EDINBURGH:

- Appointment by Crown - - - - 56,828
- Clerks:
- Appointment:
- Ages on - - - - 56,898
- by Commissary Clerk - - - - 56,849
- of Men with previous legal experience 56,855
- previous Education and experience 56,897-901
- Pension desired for - - 56,866-8, 56,874-8
- Salaries:
- Increase would be approved 56,866-8, 56,874-8
- Method of fixing - - - - 56,857-8
- no Trouble with, and public satisfied with work 56,856
- Correspondence, work by - - - 56,884-5
- Lump sum for expenses of, amount and system 56,859-65
- Preparation of Calendar of Confirmations and Inventories by - - - - 56,814
- Profit made by Treasury out of office - 56,872-3
- Public coming to office, accommodation for 56,887-9
- Staff:
- Particulars re, and work of - - 56,842-8
- not Pensionable, and no fixed age for retirement, but staff at present comparatively young 56,850-4
- Transfer of work to Sheriff Clerk of Midlothian, doubt as to any economy as result of 56,869-71
- Typewriting in office, no tendency seen of documents fading - - - - 56,894-6
- Women typists:
- Good work done by - - - - 56,891-2
- Promotion to other work, question of - 56,890-3
- Work:
- Amount of - - - - 56,879-83
- Nature of, procedure, &c. - - - 56,829-41
- Wills, keeping of copies, practice re, in Commissary Office of Edinburgh - - - - 56,834-8
- Rogers, Mr., first class clerk, reference - 50,265-8

ROMER, MASTER THOMAS ANSDELL, Senior Master of the Supreme Court, Chancery Division:

44,744-45,167, App. XCVI.

Appointment as master, supporters - - 45,108-9

CHANCERY CHAMBERS, CLERKS:

- Accommodation, satisfactory - - - 45,164-5
- Appointment:
- no Age limit known of - - - - 45,086
- Competition, question of, and no objection seen personally, provided man has certificate of legal and business capacity as solicitor's clerk 44,888-99
- Direct, to second and first classes:
- Appointments have been made - - 45,087-9
- Question of, but unfairness to third class clerks - - - 44,879-80, 45,015-22
- Method 44,855-7, 44,861-4, 45,032-4, 45,090-2
- all Recent appointments have been of men formerly solicitors' clerks - - - 44,882
- Class of men - - - - 44,974-7
- not Eligible for appointment as masters, and eligibility not advocated - - 44,917-25, 45,107-8
- First class:
- Number not excessive - - - - 45,106
- Proportion of, compared with proportion in Central Office, justification for - 45,026-31
- Work of - - - - 44,790-9, App. XCVI.
- Hours - - - - 44,978-80
- Leave - - - - 45,067-73
- Number, objection to decrease in - - 45,023
- Overlapping of work, extent of - - 44,811-6
- Promotion:
- Complaints made of slowness of - - 45,118
- Method and functions of sub-committee, and approval of - - - 44,915-6, 45,045-7
- Rate, comparison with Central Office, and reasons - - - - 45,118-9
- by Seniority unless men not fit - - 44,909-14
- Qualifications, five years' experience in solicitor's office, advantages 44,865-78, 44,881, 44,892
- Retirement, fixed age not advocated, and reasons 44,969-73, 45,100-5
- Second class, work of - 44,800-7, App. XCVI.
- Separate staff attached to each master, and advantages of arrangement - - - 44,927-39
- Third class:
- every Encouragement should be given to rise 44,908
- Salary, considered inadequate by masters, and increase advocated - 44,900-8, 45,093-5
- Some, not having served in solicitor's office 45,074-84
- Work of - 44,808-10, 44,870, 44,937-9, App. XCVI.
- Transfer from other Government Departments 45,096-9, 45,116
- Vacancies:
- no Public advertisement - - - 45,133
- Time taken to fill - - - - 45,134-9
- CHANCERY MASTERS:
- Administration actions, nature of work involved in 44,817-34, 44,843, App. XCVI.
- Appointment:
- by Judges formerly, and success of - 44,981-9, 44,990, 45,050-4
- Method and system approved, and committee would not be an improvement 44,837, 44,853, 44,858-60, 45,055-66
- Vacancies, no public advertisement or invitation of applications - - - 45,120-1
- formerly Called chief clerks - - - 44,748-9
- Debenture holders' actions, nature of work involved in - - - 44,817-9, App. XCVI.
- Distribution of work between - - 44,769-72
- Foreclosure proceedings, nature of work involved in 44,817-9, 45,167, App. XCVI.
- Hearing of cases:
- Average time allotted - - - - 45,140-53
- Clerk not present - - - - 45,159-63
- Hours, and large amount of work done after 4 o'clock - - - - 44,776-83, 44,992-9
- Jurisdiction re wards of court - - 44,848-52
- Number not excessive - - - - 45,106
- Office arrangements in vacations - - 45,000-6, 45,067-72

ROMER, MASTER THOMAS ANSDELL—*continued.*CHANCERY MASTERS—continued.

Orders made by, without reference to judge, nature of - - - - 44,788-9, App. XCVI.

Pedigree cases, nature of work involved in - - - - 44,817-9, App. XCVI.

Position of - - - - 44,750-4

Present, none were solicitors in provinces 45,122-8 statutory Qualifications, and retention of, considered desirable - - - - 44,835-48

Retirement, fixed age not advocated, and reasons 44,969-73, 45,100-5

Senior, a question of seniority - - - - 45,129-32

Shorthand secretary not necessary - - - - 45,048-9

Vacations - - - - 44,784-7

Work of - 44,750-68, 45,007-14, App. XCVI.

Chancery offices, amalgamation, certain advantages would be derived, but question as to best method 44,945-68

CHANCERY ORDERS:

Chamber orders, explanation and proportion settled by masters and by registrars - 44,802-7
Distribution between masters and registrars 44,945-9

Drawn up by registrars, question as to possibility of work being done in chambers - 44,945-68

Particulars re drawing up, &c. - - - - 44,955-61

Chancery registrars, work of - - - - 44,944

Clerks of the Supreme Court, would probably specify if desiring to go into King's Bench or Chancery
Divisions - - - - 45,111

Masters of the Supreme Court, meetings between, to keep practice uniform in all divisions - 44,773-5

Roscoe, C. S., clerk in Admiralty Registry, reference 49,534-7

ROSCOE, EDWARD STANLEY, Admiralty Registrar - - - - 49,395-545

ADMIRALTY REGISTRY:

Clerks:

Appointment to third class:

Ages, and lowering of, not advocated 49,448, 49,483-6

previous Legal experience not necessary
49,448-51

Method - - - - 49,439-46
by Open competition, no reason known against 49,459-61

Recommendation of candidates, system
49,534-7

Sitting again in case of failure to pass examination - - - - 49,481-2

Suitable men appointed - - - - 49,455 not Eligible to be registrars, and not advocated 49,488-901

Holidays - - - - 49,464-5

Number of different classes - - - - 49,445

Promotion, system - - - - 49,446-7, 49,487

Retirement, ordinary Civil Service rule would be approved - - - - 49,475-7

Temporary - - - - 49,498-500

Third class:

Examination at end of 12 or 18 months in procedure, suggestion - - - - 49,451-6 no Work of, could be done by cheaper type of official - - - - 49,533

Work of:

Arrangement of - - - - 49,480

Beyond hours, owing to war, but not in normal times - - - - 49,467-70 could be Done by cheaper type of official 49,533

Nature of - - - - 49,457-8

Connection with Probate and Divorce Courts, explanation - - - - 49,433-6

Filing of letters, and letter-book - - - - 49,523-4 present Form dates from 1873 - - - - 49,398-9

Hours in office - - - - 42,462, 49,466

Marshal's office practically the same - - - - 49,497

Organisation - - - - 49,400

Organisation satisfactory, and work well done
49,479-80, 49,501-2, 49,513-9

Prize Registry:

Accountant's Department - - - - 49,424-31

Work of - - - - 49,416-23

s (5)30320

ROSCOE, EDWARD STANLEY—*continued.*ADMIRALTY REGISTRY—continued.

Referring of cases to arbitration instead of 49,502-12, 49,518

Registrar:

Appointment, method and statutory qualifications - - - - 49,437-8

Assistant, appointment, method and statutory qualifications - - - - 49,441-4

Duties - - - - 49,406-32

Retirement, 70 suggested as age for - 49,475-8

Ship keepers under marshal, and posts should not be filled up on vacancy - - - - 49,538

Shorthand typist employed by the week, and question of ordinary assistant clerk 49,525-32

Taxation:

by Assistant registrar or registrar - 49,471

Transfer to Central Taxing Office, objections to proposal - - - - 49,472-4

Typewriting, use of - - - - 49,529 little Vacation work - - - - 49,463

Work of - - - - 49,401-5

Admiralty work in provinces, arrangements 49,539-45

Clerks not allowed by Inns of Court to enter as students, but should be - - - - 49,491-4

Rothery, Mr., late Admiralty Registrar, reference,
Aspinall - - - - 50,837-9

Rowe, Mr., former Deputy and Assistant Paymaster, reference - - - - 50,429-31

Royal Courts of Justice Staff:

APPOINTMENT:

Ages, Sartoris - - - - 54,529-30, 54,558-9

by Committee, no particular advantage seen,
Sartoris - - - - 54,571

Method, Muir Mackenzie, 44,003, 44,296; Sartoris
54,500-6, 54,540-52

without Regard to waiting list, possibility of,
Sartoris - - - - 54,543-50

Cleaning all done by men, Sartoris - - - - 54,569-70

Contributory pension fund, Sartoris - 54,521-8, 54,572-4

FEMALE ATTENDANTS:

Ages, Sartoris - - - - 54,559, 54,562-3

Appointment, method, and class of woman, Sartoris
54,551-3

Duties, Muir Mackenzie, 44,449-51; Sartoris
54,560-1

Pay, etc., Sartoris - - - - 54,534-5

not under Pension scheme, but possibility of,
Sartoris - - - - 54,554-3, 54,565-6

Number of different classes and pay, Sartoris
54,495-9

Pay, Muir Mackenzie - - - - 44,296

not Pensionable, Sartoris - - - - 54,513

Qualifications required, Sartoris 54,557-60, 54,567-8

Recommendations of Royal Committee re pensioner messengers should be applied, Muir Mackenzie 44,452-5

RETIREMENT:

Age, Sartoris - - - - 54,514-6 at 65 and 70, a few hard cases arising from, Sar-toris - - - - 54,520

Retiring gratuity, Sartoris - - - - 54,517-9

ex-Soldiers and sailors as, and opinions re, Muir Mackenzie, 44,297-8; Loreburn, 50,589; Sartoris 54,531-3

ex-Soldiers and sailors, &c., numbers, and number of pensioners, Sartoris - - - - 54,507-12

Superintendent, duties, Sartoris - - - - 54,492

System of appointment and control satisfactory,
Sartoris - - - - 54,536-7

Work of, Sartoris - - - - 54,493, 54,538-9

Rule Committee of the Supreme Court:

Acting Chairman, suggestion, Morton - 52,699

Amendment of rules, delays, Morton - 52,696

Assistant secretary, suggestion, Morton - 52,699

Constitution, and suggested alteration, Stringer,
49,580-8; Morton, 52,695-6, 52,700.

Meetings, no fixed dates, and suggestion re, Morton
52,696-9

Sub-committee with power to make practice regulations, suggestion re, Stringer - 49,589-603, 49,608-10

Summoning of, Stringer - - - - 49,604-8

Ryland, Master, reference - - - - 45,783
 Rynes, Mr., Principal Probate Registry, reference
 46,615-9

SALVESEN, LORD - - - - 58,897-59,118

APPOINTMENT:

Advisory committee, objections to proposal
 58,932-3, 58,937, 59,003-5, 59,097-9
 Canvassing for appointments takes place, and objection to - - - - 59,070-1
 Crown, retention not considered necessary
 58,951-4
 Entry age limit, question as to desirability 59,023-6
 Legal qualifications considered necessary 58,945-6
 by Lord Advocate:
 Question of possibility of improvement
 58,928-31
 Safeguards in public opinion of the profession,
 &c. - - - - 58,937-43, 59,038-41
 by Lord President:
 might be Preferable, but question of political bias in case of - - - - 58,909, 58,929-31
 Suggestion re, as alternative 59,048, 59,097-107, 59,115-8
 from Outside:
 Certain appointments should always be made
 from outside - - - - 59,060
 Detrimental to lower grades of service 58,910-1
 Objection to, that inferior may have to teach superior - - - - 59,057-9
 Political considerations:
 not Applicable as regards clerical appointments
 59,050-2
 Difficulty of preventing - - - - 58,906-9
 Effect on politics, question of - - - - 59,027-33
 Extent of - - - - 58,905
 not Ideal, but has worked reasonably well 58,902-3, 59,030-3, 59,046-7, 59,096 by Promotion desirable as far as possible 58,904
 Bill Chamber, assistant clerk, higher qualifications required than in other offices, and qualified law agent desirable - - - - 58,947-8
 Commissary Clerk of Midlothian, abolition of office and transfer of work to Sheriff Clerk of Edinburgh, no objection seen - - - - 58,996-9

COURT OF SESSION:

Clerks:

Appointment of Lord Advocate's clerk as, an inveterate custom - - - - 58,934-6
 Assistant, appointment from outside, from Lord
 Advocate's clerk and subsequent promotion to Clerk of Court, suggestion 58,916-24, 59,060
 Retirement, fixed age:
 if Adopted, 70 would be early enough, with power of extension - - - - 58,995, 59,065 not Advocated 58,993-5, 59,009-10, 59,061-6 Offices, transfer to Parliament House, would be advantageous, and economy of staff would result 59,001-2
 Promotion, general system of, certain offices could not be included - - - - 58,912-5
 Single service, extent to which possible 58,947-50, 59,056, 59,087-90

CRIMINAL SYSTEM:

Private prosecution, case of Coates v. Brown
 59,008, 59,108-14
 Success of - - - - 59,006-8

JUDGES' CLERKS:

Promotion rare, but qualifications as high or higher than Lord Advocate's clerks 58,925-6 as Reserve in case of illness of Clerks of Court, &c.
 58,927

Lord Advocate's Clerk, assistant clerkship should be given to, with subsequent promotion 58,916-24

MINOR LEGAL APPOINTMENTS COMMITTEE:

Extent to which recommendations carried out 59,036-7
 Lines of least resistance followed in report 59,034-5

PROCURATORS FISCAL:

Appointment:

by Promotion:
 should be in Exceptional cases only 59,016-7
 Generally, and approved of - - - - 58,991-2
 Refusal by Crown to appoint Sheriff's nominee sometimes - - - - 58,990

SALVESEN, LORD—continued.

PROCURATORS FISCAL—continued.

Clerks:

Allowance for, no reason seen for details being given as to expenditure - - - - 59,018-24
 Inadequate salary, fact agreed with in one case
 59,045

Depute, pensions advocated except when private work allowed - - - - 58,987-9
 Number, reduction not advocated 58,977, 59,077-82
 Part-time and private practice, no objection to, and advantage - - - - 58,977-84
 Pensions advocated except when private work allowed - - - - 58,985-6
 Promotion between posts approved - 59,077-81

SHERIFF CLERKS:

Appointment:

by Lord President with assistance, suggestion
 59,115-6
 by Promotion, could be in exceptional cases only, but then desirable - - - - 59,011-5
 Special class of deposes should be considered for promotion - - - - 58,963

Clerks:

Pensions, difficulty - - - - 58,971-2
 Promotion by transfer:
 by Committee of Sheriff Clerks, would probably be workable - - - - 58,968-70
 Difficulties - - - - 58,966-7

Deputes:

Appointment, by promotion advocated wherever possible - - - - 58,964-5
 Pensions, system of appointment would have to be changed - - - - 59,091-4 proposed Special class, question of number 58,957-8

Whole-time:

Grievance of - - - - 58,959-61
 Pensions advocated - - - - 58,962
 Number, reduction in, recommendations of Committee on Minor Legal Appointments re, best way of dealing with - - - - 58,911
 Private practice, advantage of - - - - 58,962
 Whole-time, pensions advocated - - - - 58,962
 Women, question of employment of - - - - 59,083-6

SARTORIS, LEONARD, Superintendent of the Royal Courts of Justice Staff: - - - - 54,488-574

ROYAL COURTS OF JUSTICE STAFF:

Appointment:

Ages - - - - 54,529-30, 54,558-9
 by Committee, no particular advantage 54,571
 Method - - - - 54,500-6, 54,540-52
 without Regard to waiting list, possibility of,
 54,543-50

Cleaning all done by men - - - - 54,569-70
 Contributory pension fund - 54,521-8, 54,572-4

Female attendants:

Ages - - - - 54,559, 54,562-3
 Appointment, method and class of woman, 54,551-3
 Duties - - - - 54,560-1
 Pay, &c. - - - - 54,534-5
 not under Pension scheme, but possibility of 54,554-5, 54,565-6

Number of different classes and pay - 54,495-9
 not Pensionable - - - - 54,513
 Qualifications required - 54,557-60, 54,567-8

Retirement:

Age - - - - 54,514-6
 at 65 or 70, a few hard cases rising from 54,520
 Retiring gratuity - - - - 54,517-9
 ex-Soldiers and sailors, satisfactory, and continuance of system desirable - - - - 54,531-3 ex-Soldiers and sailors, &c., numbers, and number of pensioners - - - - 54,507-12
 Superintendent, duties - - - - 54,492
 System of appointment and control satisfactory
 54,536-7

Work of - - - - 54,493, 54,538-9
 Sasines Office, see Registry of Sasines.
 Scotland, judicial system, summary - - - - 55,516
 Scott, Mr., second class clerk, Bankruptcy Taxing Office, reference - - - - 54,645-7

SCOTT-DICKSON, THE RIGHT HON. CHARLES,
K.C., Dean of the Faculty of Advocates:

60,340-469

APPOINTMENT:

Advisory Committee, not advocated - 60,358,
60,392-4

Crown, no need seen for retention of, as regards minor appointments - - - 60,386-91

by Lord Advocate:

Canvassing, extent of, and question of preventing 60,415-7

Change of system, difficulty of, and retention advocated - - - 60,356-7, 60,461

Safeguards - - - - 60,357

Open competition, objection to - 60,398-400,
60,412-4

Political considerations:

Attitude of profession as regards - 60,455-6 not Defensible on principle, but successful in results - - - 60,344-8, 60,463-4

Effect on politics, question of 60,347, 60,395,
60,411, 60,447-54

Elimination, would be an advantage if possible, 60,457-9

by Promotion:

Advocated wherever possible 60,348-50, 60,355,
60,420

Hard and fast rule not advocated - 60,359-60

Practice of, increasing - - 60,348, 60,351

System disregarded in some cases - 60,359

Results of system as regards keeping appointments within legal profession - - - 60,401-10

COURT OF SESSION:

Clerks:

Acquisition of law agent's qualifications, question of possibility - - - - 60,432-40

Appointment of Lord Advocate's clerks as:

Capable men appointed - - - 60,352-3

Removal of tradition would be an advantage
if possible - - - - 60,460

Tradition of - - - - 60,354

Offices, transfer to Parliament House or close proximity, a matter of practical convenience for agents, advocates not affected by - 60,361-4

Single service, impossibility of - - 60,387-8

Criminal system, private prosecutions allowed, but small number of - - - - 60,296-7

CROWN AGENT:

Amount of time given to official duties - 60,370

Political office, question of advantage - 60,371-4

Post considered essential - - - 60,365

Crown Office, question of extension to all Government civil business - - - - 60,365-9

Lord Advocate, permanent legal secretary, objection to proposal - - - - 60,467

PROCURATORS FISCAL:

Private practice approved of, where whole time not occupied by official duties 60,377-9, 60,441

Promotion by transfer, carried out regularly and approval of - - - - 60,380-2

Prosecuting work done for Parish Councils, &c., to some extent, and advocated as part of duties with increased salary - - - 60,442-5

Retirement, fixed age, no reason seen against ordinary
Civil Service rule - - - - 60,384-5

SHERIFF CLERKS:

Promotion of deputies by transfer, carried out regularly and approval of - - - 60,381-2

Staff:

Establishment question - - - 60,421-3

Promotion by transfer, question of - 60,424-8

Scottish Land Court:

APPOINTMENT:

to Higher posts would be by promotion when possible, Kennedy - 59,643-6, 59,682, 59,740-8

Method, Dodds, 55,620; Kennedy, 59,624-34, 59,717-21.

Open competition, not advocated, Kennedy 59,641-2 no Political considerations involved, Kennedy 59,657-8, 59,722

by Secretary for Scotland advised by Committee, no objection seen to, but not advocated unless adopted in other departments, Kennedy 59,655-6

Selection, method, Kennedy - - - 59,659-63

Scottish Land Court—continued.

APPOINTMENT—continued.

System satisfactory, Kennedy - - 59,639-40

Vacancies, question of giving public notification,
Kennedy - - - - 59,664-6

ASSISTANT CLERKS:

Acquisition of law agent's qualification while in office, question as to possibility, Kennedy
59,647-54, 59,685-91

Duties, Kennedy - - - - 59,614-5, 59,630

Junior, overtime allowance, Kennedy - 59,670

Qualifications required, Kennedy - - 59,629

Clerk of Accounts, duties, &c., Kennedy - 59,618-9

Clerks, interchangeability, Kennedy - - 59,674-5

Composition of, and division of work between members, Kennedy - - - - 59,598-601

Constitution, Dodds - - - - 55,549-51

DEPUTE CLERKS:

Number, salaries, and duties, Kennedy - 59,609-13

Qualifications required, Kennedy 59,627-8, 59,692,
59,743

Discipline, &c., control, Dodds, 55,583; Kennedy
59,667-8

Draughtsman and Surveyor, duties, Kennedy 59,617

Duties, Dodds - - - - 55,548

Financing of, Kennedy - - - - 59,749-50

Formation of, Dodds, 55,547-8; Kennedy, 59,591-3.

Grazings Officer, duties, Kennedy - - 59,621-2

Hours, Kennedy - - - - 59,669-71

KEEPER OF THE ROLLS:

Appointment of man of 61, particulars re. Kennedy
59,698-716, 59,751, 59,755-61

Duties, &c., Kennedy - - - - 59,620

Members, position and salaries, Kennedy - 59,676-81

Pensions, position of staff re. Kennedy - 59,635-8

Orders in Council regulating Civil Service apply generally, Kennedy - - - - 59,762-4

PRINCIPAL CLERK AND SECRETARY OF COURT:

Appointment, method, and statutory qualifications,
Kennedy - - - - 59,626, 59,719-21

Duties, Kennedy - - - - 59,607-8

Sitting of Court as a whole, Kennedy - 59,602-5

STAFF:

Civil Service certificate need not be obtained unless appointment pensionable, Kennedy - 59,752-3

Particulars, re. Kennedy - - - - 59,606-7

Salaries, fixing of, Kennedy - - - - 59,754

Vacations and arrangement re. work during, Kennedy
59,672-3

WOMEN TYPISTS:

Position, method of appointment, &c., Kennedy
59,635, 59,693-7, 59,723-9

Promotion to assistant clerkships, possibility of,
Kennedy - - - - 59,730-7, 59,739

Work of, and organisation of, Kennedy 59,594-605

Scrivenery Department, Royal Courts of Justice:

BOARD:

Composition, Stringer - - - - 53,742

Control of department by, Stringer - 53,741-5

Copying, variations in amount of work, Stringer
53,839-40

Formation of, account of, Stringer - - 53,764

History of, Stewart - - - - 45,853-9

Plan copying, Stringer - - - - 53,771

Profit made by Treasury from, Apps, Stewart,
45,963-9; Stringer, 53,863, 53,871, 53,990.

Separate copies of documents, Stringer - 53,795-7

Superintendent, work of, Muir Mackenzie 55,329-30

TYPEWRITING:

Alteration possible, and consequent objection to,
in law offices, Stringer - - - - 53,981-7

Extended use of, question of, Stringer - 53,873-91

Judges opposed to, Stringer - - - - 53,876-8

Prohibited for certain documents by Committee of Control, Stringer - - - - 53,888-9, 53,891

Women typists:

might be Employed, Loreburn - - - 50,709-11

Pay, Stringer - - - - 53,760-2

Question of increased employment of 53,890-1, 53,900-8

WOMEN:

Increased number might be employed, Muir
Mackenzie - - - - 44,443, 55,382-6

Question as to increased employment for copying as well as typing, Stringer - 53,900-16

Scrivenery Department, Royal Courts of Justice—
continued.

Work of department in Probate Registry compared with that of, Musgrave - - - 46,299-300

WRITERS :

Accommodation, &c., no complaints re, Stewart 46,064
Ages and lengths of service, Stringer 53,756-9, 53,964-5

Appointment :

Age on, Apps - - - 45,990-1
Method, Stewart - - 45,948-9, 46,004-9 no Preference given to relatives of scriveners or officials, Stringer - - - 53,966
Selection, method, Stringer - - 53,747-8
Appointment to third class clerks in Registrars Office, former system of giving copying after, till 160*l.* reached as clerk, and hardship of stopping of by Treasury, Stringer 53,752-4, 53,973-5

Appointment to clerkships in some cases, Apps 45,954

Average amount of copying per hour, Stringer

Civil Service certificates: [53,812-5

Non-obtaining of, owing to refusal of head of department to apply, Stewart - 45,837-47
Offer to take examination for, sent to writers by mistake, Stringer - - - 53,855-60

Counting of folios by men incapacitated from other work, and payment for, Stewart, 46,013-6;
Stringer - - - 53,957-63
certain class of Drafts sent to, considered unfair, Stringer - 53,804-8, 53,917-37, 53,953-6

Establishment :

Claim to, Apps - 45,904, 45,975-80, 46,061
Work would not be better done, but larger staff would be required and would be more expensive, Apps - 45,961-3, 45,970-1, 46,067-8
Examining work and pay, Stewart, Apps, 45,929-42;
Stringer 53,767-70.

Gratuity on retirement :

Position under Superannuation Act 1887 as regards, Stewart, Apps - - 45,909-19
System and injustice of, and payment on average of whole service advocated, Stringer 53,843-54, App, CI.

Holidays, arrangement re, and grievance, Apps 46,065-6

Hours, Stringer - - - 53,793-5, 53,809-10

Hours worked, and question as to number of folios that can be copied per hour, Stewart, Apps 45,888-902, 45,905-8, 46,002

Insurance Act as applied to, working of, Stringer 53,820-35

Legal knowledge not required, Stringer 53,798-803 on different Level from writers working for law stationers, Apps, Stewart - - 45,927-31

no Medical inspection, but would be necessary if pension system introduced, Stringer 53,749-50 many Men probably anxious to enter department, Stewart - - - 45,950-2

Need for experience in law stationer's office, or for men to come into office very young, Apps, 45,861;
Stewart - - - 46,865-72, 46,017-21

Numbers, Apps, Stewart, 45,833, 45,944; Stringer 53,746

Payment by piecework, advantages over salary system, Stringer - - - 53,836-42

Pensions :

Advocated, Stringer - - - 53,861-4
Claims to be made pensionable, Stewart, Apps 45,832, 46,081

Contributory scheme :

would be Approved for future, but pensions advocated for present men, Stringer 53,988-92

Treasury proposal :

Better terms obtainable from insurance company, Stringer - - 53,865-70
Impossibility of, Apps - - 45,921-7
Non-carrying out of, question of reason, Stringer - - - 53,866-72
Difficulty re, Heath - - - 60,602-8
statutory Position re, Stewart, Apps 45,848-52
Whole of past service should be taken into account, Stewart, Apps - - 45,985

Scrivenery Department, Royal Courts of Justice—
*continued.WRITERS—continued.

Permanency of employment, Apps, Stewart, 45,943-7, 45,953-5, 45,981-2, 46,047-8; Stringer, 53,751

Position compared with that in law stationer's or solicitor's office, Stewart - - 46,031-49

Provident fund, no steps taken to start, Apps, Stewart - - - 45,956-60

Qualifications, Stewart - - 45,949, 46,017-21

Rates of pay, and average earnings and possible maximum, &c., Apps, Stewart, 45,873-87, 45,892, 45,933-42, 46,003, 46,062-3; Stringer, 53,763-92.

Salary system :

Graded system would be approved, and could start at less than present average, Apps 45,989-99

Lower salary than present earnings would be unfair, Apps - - - 45,987, 46,051-7

Scheme formulated by, re pensions and pay during holidays, but no results, Apps 45,981, 46,076-81

Sickness, arrangement re pay during, Stringer 53,817-9

Sickness fund, private and voluntary, Stewart, Apps 45,920

Sunday work, Apps - - - 45,973

Vacations, arrangements, Stringer - 53,816

Work of, Apps - 45,860-72, 45,903-4, 46,022-30

Work done decreases in quantity with age, but not in quality, Apps - - 46,061, 46,070-2 no other Work done during Long Vacation, Stewart - - - 46,010-2

Secretary of Scotland, appointment by, see under Appointment, Scotland.

SELLAR, HENRY, see PAULTON, JAMES MEL-LOR, and SELLAR, HENRY - 50,322-536

SHADWELL, W. H. L., District Probate Registrar, Bodmin, see ALMS, EDWARD, &c., 52,732-53,074
Sharp, Mr., former Deputy Paymaster, reference 50,425, 50,431

SHAW, JAMES E., County Clerk of Ayrshire, see MUNRO, SIR THOMAS, and SHAW, JAMES E., 60,063-97

Sheriff Clerks :

Allowance to, extent of Treasury control re expenditure, W. Brown - - - 58,728-9

APPOINTMENT :

no Alteration suggested unless department put on Civil Service basis, Bisset - 57,095, 57,268

Candidates, no lack of, Bisset - - 57,026-7

Committee :

not Advocated, but if created must appoint, not only advise, Anderson - - - 59,941-8

Objections to proposal, Maconochie 58,298-304

Consultation of Sheriff re, Dunedin - 58,421 from Deputes, no political considerations involved, Harrison - - - 59,253-4 not an Ideal system, but results satisfactory, Anderson - - - 59,935-6 of Local people always, Dunedin - - 58,434-5

by Lord Advocate :

Alteration, question of, and committee to advise would be applicable, Bisset - - 57,134-9

Consultation with Sheriff advocated, Lewis, 59,517-9, 59,536-40

Continuance advocated, and question as to eliminating political considerations, but doubt as to possibility, Anderson - - 59,949-54

Retention advocated, Andrew 58,019-30, 58,099

by Lord President, question of, Anderson 59,955-9

Method and opinion re, Dodds, 55,622-3; Bisset, 57,002-4, 57,094, 57,253-4; Maconochie, 58,276-8, 58,285; Dunedin, 58,443-5.

from Outside in almost all cases, Bisset 57,028

Political, Harrison - - - 59,165 of Political agents in some cases, Harrison, 59,245-52; Fleming, 59,412-6.

Political influences :

Abolition of, no general desire for, heard of, but would not be resented, Bisset - 57,268-72

Appointments good, and difficulty of change of system, Andrew - - 58,022-30, 58,080-2

Extent of, but no bad appointments as result, and opinion re, Maconochie - 58,279-82, 58,288-97

Sheriff Clerks—continued.APPOINTMENT—continued.*Political influences—continued.

not Ideal, but results satisfactory on the whole,

Fleming - - - - - 59,367-71

Recognised as basis of, and example, Bisset, 57,028-33, 57,209-11, 57,255-6

a Political system, and majority of Council of Society of Law Agents object to, Anderson

59,937-40

for Political reasons, tendency to leave work to depute, Harrison - - - - - 59,260

by Promotion:

Desirable as far as possible, and question re qualifications and obtaining of, Fleming

59,344-9

could be in Exceptional cases only, but then desirable, Salvesen - - - - - 59,011-5 might be Possible in future, and probability of,

Bisset - - - - - 57,127-33, 57,136

Preferred when possible, Maconochie 58,285-90, 58,379-82

from Qualified law agents advocated, Bisset
57,034-5

Recent appointments, particulars re, R. Munro
60,297-303, 60,308-9

Restriction to deputes not advocated, Fleming
59,355-6, 59,364-73

Special class of deputes should be considered for promotion, Salvesen - - - - - 58,963

Appointment of staff by, political appointments not known of, Harrison - - - - - 59,259-61

Attendance in courts, approved in spare time,
Maconochie - - - - - 58,322

AS AUDITORS:

not Advocated, Murray - - - - - 58,051 should be Allowed unless in large city, and should be only extra work, Lewis - - - - - 59,563-4

Approved in country districts, Maconochie
58,374-5

Auditing of private accounts by, no great objection to, Lewis - - - - - 59,577-9

CARRYING OUT WORK ALMOST ENTIRELY BY DEPUTES:

Discovery of, by superior authority, question of,
Bisset - - - - - 57,240-7

probably Exceptional cases where office held under old system, and in part-time appointments, Bisset 57,081, 57,240

in Some cases, Mackenzie, 56,582; Harrison, 59,260.

of Chancery, duties, Mackenzie - - - - - 56,594

CLERKS AND STAFF:

Age of entry, Harrison - - - - - 59,140-2

Allowance system, Bisset - - - - - 56,949-53, 56,956
57,216-23

Allowance system not considered satisfactory, and reference to report of Minor Legal Appointments Committee, Dodds - - - - - 55,627-35

Appointment:

by Competition, objection to, Andrew, 58,110-4;
Maconochie, 58,400-2.

Direct from school generally, J. Hamilton
58,611-3

of Junior clerks direct from school with no definite prospect of promotion, Bisset - 57,051-4

by Lord Advocate, consultation with Sheriff advocated, Lewis - - - - - 59,517-9, 59,536-40

by Lord President with assistance, suggestion,
Salvesen - - - - - 59,115-6

of Lower grades by Sheriff Clerks and deputes by Sheriffs and Secretary for Scotland suggested, Harrison - - - - - 59,175-9, 59,192-202

Method, Dodds - - - - - 55,624

Political considerations not involved, Anderson
59,960-1

by Sheriff Clerk, Bisset - - - - - 56,954, 57,002

Appointment and dismissal should be dealt with by Committee of Sheriff Clerks Association,
J. Hamilton - - - - - 58,630-6

Apprenticeship with Sheriff Clerk should be equivalent to apprenticeship with law agent, for enabling apprentice to go up for Law Agents' examination, Bisset - - - - - 57,157-60

Civil Service basis advocated, Bisset - - - 57,185, 57,202-5

Sheriff Clerks—continued.CLERKS AND STAFF—continued.

good Class obtained, but proposed scheme might improve, Bisset - - - - - 57,288-90

Consolidated service, would be advantageous, but difficulties, Mackenzie - - - - - 56,566-75

Debarred from qualifying as law agent by Law
Agents Act 1873, and change advocated, Andrew 58,077-9

Difficulty of obtaining and keeping, Bisset, 57,055-9; Crosbie, 58,654-8, 58,672-8; J. Hamil- ton, 58,613-6; Harrison, 59,148-9; Fleming, 59,351; Anderson, 60,016-7, 60,036

Difficulty of obtaining boys in smaller towns, but would be avoided if boys could become law apprentices, Fleming - - - - - 59,362-3

no Difficulty in obtaining satisfactory recruits,
Andrew - - - - - 58,041

Discipline and control should be dealt with by Sheriff Clerk with appeal to Committee and Lord Advocate or Secretary for Scotland, Bisset
57,161, 57,171-3

Dismissal:

Approval of some higher power should be required, Maconochie - - - - - 58,397-8

Cases of, Bisset - - - - - 57,039-41

Power of, possessed by Sheriff Clerk, Bisset
56,955

Distribution of work between, and example of in Forfarshire, Bisset - 56,957-80, 56,987-7001

Establishment question, Scott-Dickson 60,421-3 generally Familiar with all branches of work in office, Bisset - - - - - 57,300-3

Glasgow, personal clerks to resident Sheriff Substitutes, responsibility of work and inadequacy of pay, A. Hamilton - - - - - 58,638-47

Hours, J. Hamilton, 58,701, 58,665-6; Crosbie, 58,667.

Legal knowledge desirable, Bisset - - - 57,304

Official experience more important than legal knowledge, Maconochie - - - - - 58,260, 58,393

Particulars re, Dodds - - - - - 55,561-3

Payment:

Strictest control by King's Remembrancer advocated, Maconochie - - - - - 58,331-3

System, Fleming - - - - - 59,405-8

not Pensionable and no fixed age for retirement,
Bisset - - - - - 57,065-7

Pensions:

Advocated for whole-timers, R. Munro 60,189-90 not Advocated, Andrew, 58,065-9, 58,094-7;
Maconochie, 58,335-8.

Advocated for whole staff after few years' service at bottom, and could also apply to part-timers, Harrison - - - - - 59,203-12 not Advocated generally, except to few special senior clerks, Fleming - 59,391-3, 59,431

Application of contributory scheme to part-time officers might be possible, Mackenzie 56,575-7

Civil Service scheme advocated, Harrison
59,229-35

Clerks might be examined as to health, &c., before being made pensionable, Harrison
59,211-2

Desirable, and reasons, Anderson - 60,016-8

Desirable if salaries not increased, J. Hamilton
58,695-6

Difficulty, Salvesen - - - - - 58,971-2

Promotion, from upward, system suggested, Murray
58,054-60

Promotion and transfer:

Advocated with Treasury grant towards cost of removal, R. Munro - - - - - 60,185-6

Clerks would be willing to move, Crosbie 58,659

Committee of Sheriff Clerks:

would be Approved, Anderson - 59,977-85 no Difficulty seen, and approval of, Murray
58,061-4, 58,121

Objection to proposal, Dunedin, 58,498-500;
Harrison, 59,180-91.

no Objection seen, Maconochie, 58,307-17;
R. Munro, 60,187-8.

would Probably be workable, Salvesen
58,968-70

Difficulties, Salvesen - - - - - 58,966-7

Sheriff Clerks—continued.

CLERKS AND STAFF—continued.

Promotion and transfer—continued.

- General system of, advocated under Committee of Sheriff Clerks Association, J. Hamilton 58,620-37, 58,660-3
- Men should have chance of, without acceptance being compulsory, Harrison - - 59,143-9, 59,155-6
- proposed Method of working, Harrison 59,160-74, 59,221-6
- Present position and extent of, Bisset, 57,046-50; Andrew, 58,034-40; Maconochie, 58,305-6.
- Prospects of, would improve service and question as to possibility, Anderson - - 60,038-43
- Question of, Scott-Dickson - - 60,424-8
- Question of, and difficulty of cost of removal, Fleming - - 59,351-4, 59,356-61
- Regular system of, question of advantage or not, Andrew - - - - 58,042-4
- Want of, J. Hamilton - - - - 58,620
- Promotion to higher posts should be possible, and apprenticeship in office should be equal to apprenticeship in law agent's office, Lewis 59,496-9, 59,580, 59,520
- Reappointment by incoming Sheriff Clerk invariably, Bisset - - - - 57,038-9
- not Represented before Minor Legal Appointments Committee, J. Hamilton - - - 58,679-80
- Retirement, fixed age necessary if pensions given and 70 suggested, Harrison - - 59,213-5
- Salaries :
- Comparison with law agents' offices, Bisset, 57,317-20; Anderson, 60,044-5.
- Fixing of, question as to method, Bisset 57,291-6
- Inadequacy of, Bisset, 57,212-5, 57,286-7; Harrison, 59,150-4.
- and Inadequacy of, and comparison with second division clerks, &c., and private offices, Crosbie, 58,648-53, 58,683-8; J. Hamilton, 58,589-606, 58,617-9, 58,664-5, 58,668-71, 58,681-2, 58,697-700
- proposed Scheme will result in increased cost, Bisset - - - - 57,297-9
- no Security of tenure, and dismissal should not be possible without consent of Sheriff or Lord Advocate, Anderson - - - - 59,962-70
- Single service:
- Appointment:
- Entrance examination under Regulations for admission of Law Agents or leaving certificates suggested as qualification, Bisset 57,117-22, 57,130, 57,186-91
- from Existing staff at first and then from non-established staff advocated, Bisset 57,107-27
- to Higher posts:
- from Outside, should be possible if no member of staff eligible and with approval of Secretary of State or Lord Advocate, Bisset - - - - 57,125-6
- by Promotion, would probably be tendency, Bisset - - - - 57,127-33, 57,136
- Selection should be in hands of Sheriff Clerk, Bisset - - - - 57,123-4
- would be Approved, and no real difficulty seen, Bisset - - - - 57,096-8
- Control and promotion by Committee of Sheriff Clerks under Presidency of King's Remembrancer, scheme, Bisset 57,099-106, 57,192-201
- Established staff should be pensionable, Bisset 57,140
- Retirement, fixed age would be necessary, and question of age, Bisset - - - 57,141-3
- would be Whole-time employees only, but certain official appointments might also be held, Bisset - - - - 57,144-51
- Subordinate, inadequacy of salaries, Mackenzie 56,577-81
- Suggestions re, summary, Bisset - - 57,157-61
- System, Maconochie - - - - 58,332
- System and opinion re, Dunedin - - 58,423
- Tenure of office, Bisset - - - - 57,036-7
- Training, comparison with training in outside offices, Andrew - - - - 58,112

Sheriff Clerks—continued.

CLERKS AND STAFF—continued.

- different Treatment from ordinary law clerks, with right of competition in profession not necessary, Andrew - - - - 58,111-4, 58,124-5
- Vacancies in higher posts, filling of, promotion or rearrangement of places, generally, seldom from outside, Bisset - - - - 57,042-5
- Varying numbers, &c., in different districts, Mackenzie - - - - 56,566
- Work outside office, question as to possibility, J. Hamilton - - - - 58,702
- Combination of office of Procurator Fiscal with that of, in small places, possibility doubted, H. H. Brown 57,457-61
- Court work only, and not Process Clerks, opinion re recommendations, Fleming - - - 59,377-82
- Custody of fees and consignations, Bisset 56,981-6
- DEPUTES :
- Appointments:
- by Consultation with Sheriff after consultation with Sheriff Clerk would be approved, and preferred to Committee of Sheriff Clerks, Andrew - - - - 58,088-90, 58,106-9
- should be on Nomination of Sheriff or by Secretary for Scotland from Assistant Sheriff Clerks if possible, Harrison - - 59,175-9, 59,192-9
- from Outside, cases of, J. Hamilton, 58,609-12, 58,691-4; D. Brown, 58,709-10, 58,726.
- by Promotion:
- Advocated wherever possible, Salvesen 58,964-5
- Desirable as far as possible and question re qualifications and obtaining of, Fleming 59,344-9
- Restriction to clerks in office not advocated, Fleming - - - - 59,355-6, 59,364-76
- by Sheriff preferred, Maconochie - 58,388-9
- by Sheriff after consultation with Sheriff Clerk, no objection seen, and possible advantage, Anderson - - - - 60,056-8
- from Staff, and approval of, Andrew 58,039-40, 58,054-6
- Appointment as auditors approved and should continue, Murray - - - - 58,051
- Auditing of private accounts by, no great objection to, Lewis - - - - 59,577-9
- Carrying out of work almost entirely by, see that heading above.
- Dismissal not advocated without right to appeal to Secretary for Scotland, Andrew - - 58,087
- Distinction of functions from those of clerks attached to Sheriffs, Bisset - - 56,992-7,000
- Duties of, re registration of voters and elections, Andrew - - - - 58,083-5
- Improvement of position advocated, R. Munro 60,190-1
- Insurance of, W. Brown - - - - 58,715-8
- previous Legal experience, importance of, Andrew 58,016-8
- Number holding other appointments and carrying on separate business, Bisset - - 57,152-6
- Pay inadequate, Maconochie - - - - 58,387
- Pensions:
- Advocated, Anderson - - - - 60,012-5
- Advocated, and should apply also to part-time offices, Fleming - - 59,385-92, 59,409-10
- Advocated for whole-timers, Maconochie, 58,407; Salvesen, 58,962.
- Question of, Dunedin - - - - 58,494-5
- System advocated, and suggestions re, Andrew 58,065-75, 58,095-7, 58,103-5, 58,115-6
- System of appointment would have to be changed, Salvesen - - - - 59,091-4
- Position of, Andrew, 58,091-3; Maconochie 58,383-6
- Private practice:
- should not be Allowed where whole time taken up by official work, but difficulty in case of part-timers, and suggestion, Anderson - 60,019-21
- should be Avoided as far as possible, Lewis 59,502-4
- Restriction of, desirable and practicable, Murray 58,052-3
- Promotion of clerks to, desirable, and service as clerks should count towards pension, Fleming 59,432-3

Sheriff Clerks—continued.DEPUTES—continued.*Promotion and transfer :

Advocated, Anderson - - - - 59,974-6

Carried out and approval of, Scott-Dickson
60,381-2

Chance of, but acceptance should not be compulsory, Harrison - - 59,143-9, 59,155-6 by Committee of Sheriff Clerks would be advantageous, Anderson - - - 60,047-8

by Lord Advocate in consultation with Sheriff preferred, Dunedin - - - 58,501-3

System desirable and would work satisfactorily, Murray - - - - 58,045-6, 58,054

Public appointments approved, Fleming 59,439-41

Qualifications :

Law Agents examination or equivalent and certain experience advocated, Lewis - 59,492-5

Qualified law agent not advocated as hard and fast rule, Anderson - - - 59,924-6

Retirement, fixed age would not be objected to, if pensionable, Dunedin - - - 58,496-7

Salaries, memorial re fixing of, and increase in Commissary fees handed in, W. Brown 58,719-23 proposed Special class, number, question of, Salvesen - - - - 58,957-8

Special class :

Recommendation of Lord Salvesen's Committee approved, W. Brown, 58,711-3; Harrison, 59,159; Lewis, 59,501; R. Munro, 60,183.

Retirement, fixed age, 70 would be early enough, Maconochie - - - - 58,410

Suggestion, Maconochie - 58,324-9, 58,335-6 58,407, 58,410

no Statutory qualification, and actual experience in offices of the Court considered more important, Harrison - - - - 59,133-9

Tenure :

Fifty desired, Andrew - - - 58,086-7

Reappointment or not by new Sheriff Clerk, recommendation re, Fleming - - 59,350

no Security of, and Sheriff Clerk should not have absolute power of dismissal, Anderson 60,053-5

Whole-time, grievance of, Salvesen - 58,959-61

Difficulty in obtaining, in country districts, Maconochie - - - - 58,265-7

Dundee, staff, Bisset - - - - 57,060-4

Duties, &c., Dodds, 55,561-3; Bisset, 56,928-35, 56,943-6; Andrew, 58,083-5.

of Edinburgh, County of City of, post might be merged in that of Sheriff Clerk of Midlothian, Mackenzie - - - - 56,592-3

Holding of public appointments, approval of, Anderson - - - - 60,030-3

Law agent as, not essential, Maconochie - 58,260 previous Legal experience, importance of, and should be qualified law agent, Andrew 58,016-7, 58,100-2

Sheriff Maconochie's remarks generally agreed with, Fleming - - - - 59,341

MIDLOTHIAN :

Employment of temporary typist, Harrison 59,236-40

Staff and organisation of office, Harrison
59,125-32, 59,255

Number, Bisset - - - - 56,926

NUMBER, REDUCTION :

would be Approved, Bisset, 57,082-91; Murray
58,047-50

would be Approved, and promotion throughout consolidated service would be facilitated, Mackenzie - - - 56,567-74, 56,582-3 must be Gradual, and men having office at present should have first claim to any vacancies, Bisset

57,092-3

Recommendation of Lord Salvesen's Committee :

Agreed with, Maconochie, 58,320-1; Dunedin, 58,467-9; Salvesen, 58,911; Harrison, 59,157-8;

Lewis, 59,500, 59,560-2; Anderson, 59,986-90; R. Munro, 60,183-4.

not Agreed with, Fleming - - - 59,377-83

Whole time would be occupied by official work, Maconochie - - - - 58,322

OFFICES :

doing of Private business in, would be matter for arrangement with Court-house Commissioners, Bisset - - - - 57,315-6

Provided by Government, Bisset - - 57,310-4

Sheriff Clerks—continued.

peripatetic Official to supervise work of, objection to proposal, Muir Mackenzie, 55,398-400; Maconochie, 58,370-3; Dunedin, 58,465-6.

One head of service, objections to proposal, Andrew
58,118-20

Oppressive treatment of staff by, in a few cases, Harrison - - - - 59,241-4, 59,257-8

Organisation of offices satisfactory, Andrew 58,076 not Pensionable, and no fixed age for retirement, Bisset - - - - 57,065-7

PENSIONS :

Advocated, Maconochie - - - 58,334, 58,407

Advocated, and should apply also to part-time officers, Fleming - - 59,385-92, 59,409-10

Advocated for whole-timers, Salvesen - 58,962

Desirable for, but less important than for deputies, Anderson - - - - 60,012-5

System for deputies advocated, and suggestion re, Andrew - 58,065-75, 58,095-7, 58,103-5, 58,115-6

Personal attendance during office hours in larger counties, Bisset - - - - 57,077-81

PRIVATE PRACTICE :

Advantage of, Salvesen - - - 58,962 should not be Allowed if whole time can be taken up by official work, not approved otherwise, Fleming - - - - 59,384, 59,394

Permitted in some cases, Bisset - - 57,069-76

Prohibition :

Advocated, but holding of public appointments might be allowed, Harrison, 59,216-8; Lewis, 59,502-4, 59,569-72, 59,572-6; Anderson, 59,991-4, 60,010-1, 60,059-62 would be Approved if salary made sufficient, Bisset - - - 57,082, 57,248-52

Required in recent appointments and important counties, Bisset - - - 57,069

Right to, of present men should not be interfered with, Bisset - - - - 57,179

Promotion, difficulty re, Maconochie - 58,390-4

PROMOTION BY TRANSFER :

Advocated, Anderson - - - 59,974-6

by Lord Advocate in consultation with Sheriff preferred, Dunedin - - - 58,501-3

Possibility of, W. Brown - - - 58,714-5

System of, desirable, but some present men would not care to move, Bisset - - - 57,022-5

no System of, and cases rare, Bisset - 57,020-1

System among, desirable and would work satisfactorily, Murray - - - 58,045-6, 58,054

if made Public appointments pensions should be given, Dunedin - - - - 58,493

PUBLIC APPOINTMENTS :

Approved, Fleming - - - - 59,439-41

Permitted in some cases, Bisset - - 57,073-5

Prohibition of, would be approved if salary made sufficient, Bisset - - 57,082, 57,248-52

Right to, of present men, should not be interfered with, Bisset - - - - 57,179

QUALIFICATIONS :

Law Agents examinations or equivalent and certain experience advocated, Lewis - - 59,492-5

Legal training considered desirable, official experience can be picked up as regards smaller towns, Fleming - - - - 59,342-3, 59,417-26

Official experience and procedure more important than legal knowledge, Maconochie - 58,260-4 in Practice, and solicitors considered more suitable than clerk in office, Bisset - - - 57,006-16

Qualified law agent with considerable experience of Sheriff Court business advocated with possibility of execution, Anderson 59,919-23, 60,049-52

Special, required, Andrew - - - 58,015

no Statutory qualifications, Bisset - - 57,005

Recommendations in report and evidence of Lord Salvesen's Committee, non-carrying out of, Bisset, 57,262-5; W. Brown, 58,724-5, 58,730-3.

Remits from Sheriff, approval of system, Maconochie
58,376

Responsibility of, Dodds - - - - 55,600-4

RESPONSIBILITY FOR ACTS OF STAFF :

should not Continue if method of appointment, & c., changed, Bisset - - 57,161, 57,169-70

Sheriff Clerks—continued.RESPONSIBILITY FOR ACTS OF STAFF—continued.

Extent of, and cases, Bisset - - -	57,162-8
Fidelity guarantee or insurance not common, Bisset - - -	57,170
Question as to extent of cases of enforcement, Maconochie - - -	58,349-52
Retention important, Maconochie - - -	58,345-8
	58,353-4
Staff in Lanarkshire required to find caution or insure, Maconochie - - -	58,355

RETIREMENT:Fixed age:

Advocated, and 70 suggested, Fleming - - -	59,385-8
should not be Compulsory on present men, and suggestion re , Bisset - - -	57,179-84
would not be Objected to if pensionable, Dunedin - - -	58,496-7
70 would be early enough, Maconochie - - -	58,410
at 70, Paragraph in commissions re , and condition not known of when appointment accepted, Bisset - - -	57,067-8

SALARIES:

Inadequacy in some cases, Maconochie - - -	58,339-44
Small, but no claim to increase, Fleming - - -	59,394
Size of districts of, and salaries, great variations in, Bisset - - -	57,018-9
Suggestions re , summary, Bisset - - -	57,157

WHOLE-TIME:

Difficulty in smaller counties and reduction in number of Sheriff Clerks would be approved, Bisset - - -	57,083-91
Increase not advocated unless work sufficient, Fleming - - -	59,426-8
Question considered on vacancy, Dodds - - -	55,568
not necessarily Whole-time officers, Dodds - - -	55,566
Work re book-keeping, Maconochie - - -	58,262-3
Work done by, for Scottish Land Court, and payment by fees, Kennedy - - -	59,750
Sheriff Clerks Depute Association, membership, W. Brown - - -	58,708

Sheriff Clerks of Scotland Association:

Explanation, J. Hamilton - - -	58,660
Membership, &c., Bisset - - -	56,906-8
Representative, see Bisset , Christopher Johnston - - -	56,902-57,320

Sheriff Courts:

Applications for confirmation or appointment of executors, court for, determined by domicile of testator, Bisset - - -	56,919-20
---	-----------

AUDITOR:

Holding of post by Sheriff Clerk or Sheriff Clerk Depute, and approval of, Bisset - - -	57,144-5
Private work, practice of, and approval, and same accounts would not afterwards be audited in official capacity, Bisset - - -	57,224-39
Remuneration by fees, work might be included in that for which salary paid, if salary increased, Bisset - - -	57,146-51

Civil Service system not suitable for, Harrison

	59,219-20
Consignations, explanation, Bisset - - -	56,942-8
Cost supported by local funds, Dodds - - -	55,555-6
Discipline, &c., control, Dodds - - -	55,581
Forfarshire, system, Bisset - - -	56,958-80
Jurisdiction, Bisset - - -	56,910-5
Lanarkshire, staff, Bisset - - -	56,988
Recommendations in Report and evidence of Lord Salvesen's Committee, non-carrying out of, Bisset - - -	57,262-5

RECORDS:

Custody of, &c., Bisset - - -	56,915-8, 57,273-80
no General index, but deeds relating to particular county registered in that county, Bisset - - -	57,281-5
Transfer to Register House desirable, MacDougall - - -	55,678-9

Register of Deeds, Bisset - - -	56,936-41
System, Dodds - - -	55,552-7
Work, increase in volume and complexity, Lewis - - -	59,490-1

Work well done, Anderson - - -	60,022-3
---------------------------------------	----------

Sheriffs:

always Advocates, Dodds - - -	55,553
Appointment by promotion preferred wherever possible, R. Munro - - -	60,130-3

Sheriffs—continued.

Clerk attached to, distinction of functions from those of deputies, Bisset - - -	56,992-7,000
Consultation of, re appointment of Procurators Fiscal advocated, Lewis - - -	59,540, 59,555-6
Depute, always advocates, Dodds - - -	55,553
Dumfries and Galloway sheriffdom, organisation and staff, &c., Fleming - - -	59,325-6, 59,328
Fife and Kinross sheriffdom, organisation and staff, &c., Fleming - - -	59,326-31
Functions, Dodds - - -	55,552
Non-resident except in Edinburgh and Glasgow, Bisset - - -	56,922
Non-resident in jurisdiction, Dodds - - -	55,554
Pension system, Andrew - - -	58,069-72, 58,098
Politics not taken part in after appointment, R. Munro - - -	60,250-5

Sheriffs Substitute:

not Appointed by Sheriff, and work could not be covered by, Bisset - - -	57,266-7
---	----------

APPOINTMENT:

Method, Dodds , 55,621; Dunedin , 58,444-5.
Personally by promotion and transfer, irrespective of political considerations, Dunedin - - -	58,420, 58,431-2
Jurisdiction, &c., Dodds - - -	55,661-2
Lanarkshire, attachment of clerk to each, and duties of, Bisset - - -	56,991-7,001
Pension system, Andrew - - -	58,069-72, 58,098
Number and jurisdiction, Bisset , 53,924-7; Dodds , 55,554
Salary, Dodds - - -	55,660
Sick leave, provision for, Mackenna - - -	57,509-12
Whole-time officers, Dodds - - -	55,567
Short, F. H., clerk in Central Office, reference - - -	49,796-8
Shuttleworth, Mr., former Clerk of Assize, reference - - -	51,477

Signet Office:

Keeper of the Signet, functions, Dodds - - -	55,545-6
Receipts, sources of, and covering of expenses of office by, and leaving of margin, Jameson - - -	58,252-5

SIMPSON, GORDON, District Probate Registrar
York, see ALMS, EDWARD, &c. 52,732-53,074,
Skinner, Mr., former Deputy Paymaster, reference

	50,425-6
Small Debt Courts, jurisdiction, Bisset - - -	56,914-5
Smart, John, Depute Clerk, references, 56,088-94, 56,162-3, 56,170, 56,637-8, 60,137-9, 60,315-21

Solicitors' Offices:BOYS:

Age of appointment, Kentish - - -	54,460-1
further Education possible, but no steps taken re , Kentish - - -	54,462-3

CLERKS:

Pensions:
Law Clerks Society, and extent of membership, Kentish - - -	54,307-12
Practice re , J. R. B. Gregory , 47,380-1; Worley , 48,290-1; Winterbotham , 49,935-7; Morton , 52,660; Alms , 52,875-81; Kentish , 54,301-6.
Provident or pension societies in some large towns, Morton - - -	52,662-3
Practice re , when becoming inefficient, Morton - - -	52,658-9

Salaries, Winterbotham 50,036-7; Kentish - - -	54,298-300
--	------------

Selection of, Winterbotham - - -	49,945-6
Hours, holidays, &c., Oakshott , 47,124-5, 47,134-50, 47,164-9; Goodchild , 47,503-4, 47,526-9; Caunt , 50,241-9; Kentish , 54,293-6; Murray , 58,007-9.

Important posts believed to be generally filled by seniority, Caunt - - -	50,118-23
--	-----------

MANAGING CLERKS:

Appointment to important Government posts of solicitors only, best men might be excluded, Kentish - - -	54,396-400
Claim to special consideration in appointments as clerks in legal offices, Worley - - -	48,257-302
Explanation, position, &c., Worley - - -	48,227-37
Salaries, Winterbotham - - -	49,932-4
Work of, hours, &c., Oakshott 47,106-25, 47,138-48
Organisation of work, J. R. B. Gregory - - -	47,314-28, 47,382

Solicitors Managing Clerks Association, objects, membership, &c., Worley - - - 48,225-6, 48,238-56
 Stephen, Sir Herbert, Clerk of Assize, reference 51,469

STEWART, W., and APPS, WESTON, writers in Scrivenery Department, Royal Courts of Justice :
 45,832-46,081

SCRIVENERY DEPARTMENT, ROYAL COURTS OF JUSTICE:

History of - - - - - 45,853-9
 Profit made by Treasury from, 1910 - 45,963-9

Writers:

Accommodation, &c., no complaints re 46,064

Appointment:

Age on - - - - - 45,990-1

Method - - - - - 45,948-9, 46,004-9

Appointments to clerkships in some cases 45,954

Civil Service certificates, non-obtaining of, owing to refusal of head of department to apply - - - - - 45,837-47

Counting of folios by men incapacitated from other work, and payment for - 46,013-6

Establishment, claim to 45,904, 45,975-80, 56,061

Examining work - - - - - 45,929-42

Holidays, arrangement re, and grievance
 46,065-6

Hours worked, and question as to number of folios that can be copied per hour 45,888-902, 45,905-8, 46,002

on different Level from writers working for law stationers - - - - - 45,927-31

Many men probably anxious to enter department
 45,950-2

Need for experience in law stationer's office, or for men to come into office very young 45,861, 45,865-72, 46,017-21

Number - - - - - 45,833, 45,944

Pensions:

Claim to be made pensionable 45,832-46,081
 statutory Position re - - - 45,848-52

Scheme suggested by Treasury, 1910, of deductions from earnings, and impossibility of - - - - - 45,921-7

Whole of past service should be taken into account - - - - - 45,985

Permanency of employment 45,943-7, 45,953-5, 45,981-2, 46,047-8

if Permanent officials, work would not be better done, but larger staff would be required and would be more expensive 45,961-3, 45,970-3, 46,067-8

Position compared with that in law stationer's or solicitor's office - - - 46,031-149

Position under Superannuation Act, 1887, as regards gratuity on retirement - 45,909-19

Provident Fund, no steps taken to start
 45,956-60

Qualifications - - - - - 45,949, 46,017-21

Rates of pay, and average earnings, and possible maximum 45,873-87, 45,892, 45,933-42, 46,003, 46,062-3

Salaries, graded system would be approved, and could start at less than present average 45,989-99

Salary basis, lower salary than present earnings would be unfair - - - 45,987, 46,051-7

Scheme formulated by, re pensions and pay during holidays, but no result - 45,981,
 46,076-81

Sickness fund, private and voluntary - 45,920

Sunday work - - - - - 45,973

Work of 45,860-72, 45,903-4, 46,022-30

Work done decreases in quantity with age, but not in quality - - - 46,061, 46,070-2 no other Work done during Long Vacation

 46,010-2

STEWART-WALLACE, J. S., first class clerk,
 Land Registry: - - - - - 54,651-836

LAND REGISTRY:

Assistant Registrars, appointment:

by Committee, would be a safeguard - 54,827

Method, and statutory qualifications - 54,828-9

from Outside, no guarantee against, and present first class clerks should be recognised as eligible 54,717, 54,762-5, 54,807-17, 54,826

STEWART-WALLACE, J. S.—continued.

LAND REGISTRY—continued.

Clerks (Registration of Title Department):

Claims of, refusal believed to be owing to small surplus of revenue over expenditure

First class: 54,666-88, 54,789

All barristers, and number having practised
 54,695, 54,699-701, 54,696

All entered in second class, not third 54,694

Average age, professional standing, public service, &c. - - - - - 54,728

Comparison with solicitors' managing conveyancing clerks - - - - - 54,818-21

Creation of seven additional posts, 1911, reduction of minimum salary on 54,780-3, 54,669-88

Dealings with staff - - - - - 54,721

Distribution of work between - 54,724-7

Duties, and responsibility of work 54,702-13, 54,720-1, 54,769-78, 54,799-802 no Lower class clerks specially attached to individuals - - - - - 54,722-3

Non-professional class of, to which third class clerks could be promoted, scheme 54,731-58

Position not analogous to that of first class clerks in Royal Courts of Justice 54,720-1, 54,825

Promotion, small prospect of 54,728, 54,783

Prospects not commensurate with those in other branches of the Civil Service 54,692

Prospects and position worse than expected on entering department - - 54,768

Questions now dealt with which would formerly have been referred to council 54,774-8

Replacement by equally good men for same salaries would be difficult - - 54,822-4

Salaries, scale - - - - - 54,720

Temporary, years spent as, should count for
 pensions - - - - - 54,784

Title, change to "Acting Assistant Registrar" advocated 54,713-9A, 54,728-30, 54,830

University and legal qualifications - 54,692

Work now done by, formerly done by Assistant Registrars - - - - - 54,769-73

Resignations owing to discontent at small prospects - - - - - 54,766-7

Second class, number with university and legal qualifications - - - - - 54,735, 54,739

Third class:

Abolition of, and substitution of second division clerks, suggestion 54,751-8, 54,831-6

no Barristers or solicitors - - 54,735

One with university standing - - 54,740

Transfers to other departments, grievance re working of - - - - - 54,759-61

Two divisions and lines of promotion, professional and non-professional, scheme 54,741-58 universal Discontent in - - - - 54,664-5

Fees:

Alteration - - - - - 54,787-8 smaller Estimate for 1915-16 than receipts in 1914-15, question of reason - - 54,803-6

Formation of - - - - - 54,697

Registration of Title:

Attitude of legal profession towards system and effect on staff - - - - - 54,689-91

Expansion of work - - - - - 54,698

Staff, 1900, and now - - - - - 54,780

Retirement, application of ordinary Civil Service rules desirable - - - - - 54,785-6

Revenue, question as to likelihood of increase

Staff: 54,790-8

Particulars re, April 1915 - - - App. CII

Reorganisation, 1911 - - - - - 54,669-84

STRINGER, FRANCIS AUGUSTUS, first class clerk in Central Office of High Court of Justice, &c.: 49,546-886, 53,740-992

CENTRAL OFFICE:

Associates Department:

Clerks:

Number of each class - - - - - 49,615-6

Third class, often no previous legal experience and question as to method of learning work 49,617-20

Work of - - - - - 49,611-4

STRINGER, FRANCIS AUGUSTUS—*continued.*CENTRAL OFFICE—continued.

Attendance-book, no custom of men signing earlier than actual time of arrival - 49,827-33

Clerks:

First class, work and position, comparison with solicitors' managing clerks but scales of pay should not be determined by pay of 49,693-707

Hours:

Longer than hours to public, little need for 49,770

Normally and during vacations - 49,752-7

Work sometimes done after - 49,758-68

Leave, method of arranging - 49,732

Number of different classes in each department 49,621-8

Pay:

Comparison with other Government departments - 49,709-17

Extra payment in connection with foreign processes - 53,967-72

Scales proposed by clerks, approved 49,681-717

Retirement, fixed age not advocated but men might be liable to be asked to resign after 65 49,779-83

Second class, promotion, suggestion re qualifying examination - 49,677-80

Third class:

Appointment:

Ages:

18-25 suggested - 49,644

20-30, and defect of - 49,642-3

Civil Service examination:

Educational standard of, considered sufficient - 49,670-4, 49,771-5

Failures in, men allowed to sit again and paid as temporary clerks in meanwhile 49,802-12

Legal procedure instead of digesting of returns, suggestion - 49,665-71

Open competition, not advocated on the whole - 49,754-5, 49,882-6

Secondary school leaving certificate, if adopted, would be good test for, and Civil Service examination might perhaps be dispensed with - 49,874-8

Selection by committee, suggestion and question of constitution 49,652-61, 49,881-6

Sons of men already in office 49,784-801, 49,836-8

System not satisfactory 49,638-9, 49,662-3

Class of men required - 49,646-51, 49,771

Dismissal, possibility of, but no case known of, for incapacity - 49,854-63

Increments, automatic, but certificate of efficiency before, would be approved - 49,868-73 previous Legal experience not necessary or desirable - 49,640-1, 49,645

Promotion:

Qualifying examination, suggestion 49,675-6, 49,776-8

System, and men passed over occasionally 49,813-5, 49,864-5

Self-contained body, objections to proposal 49,740-51, 53,976-80

Work, not mechanical only - 49,746-50

Transfer between departments, system, and should be more thoroughly carried out 49,629-37

Committee of Control - 49,727-31

Discipline, &c.:

Administration, system - 49,733-9

Appointment of chief clerk to be responsible for, proposal approved - 49,729-39

Writ, Appearance, Judgment, and Execution Department:

Clerks:

Number of different classes, and question re large proportion of second class 49,816-26

Salaries - 53,948-51

Work of, re judgments, and difficulty 49,565-76, 53,937-47

Rules of Court governing work of, and difficulty experienced re - 49,577-80

STRINGER, FRANCIS AUGUSTUS—*continued.*CENTRAL OFFICE—continued.

Writ, Appearance, Judgment, and Execution Department—continued.

System of working - 49,551-2

Work, nature of - 49,553-76

Work done sometimes after office closed to public - 49,759-62

Chancery clerks, previous experience as solicitor's clerk would be useful - 49,880

CLERKS, THIRD CLASS:

proposed Intermediary class between scriveners and, no opening seen for - 53,893-9

Mechanical part of work, combination with work of Scrivenery Department not considered possible - 53,895-9

Legal departments, question as to control of, possible under- or over-staffing - 49,839-52

MASTERS:

should have Power to try certain actions in court 49,718-9

Work, devolution of certain parts of, to principal clerks, suggestion - 49,719-26

RULE COMMITTEE OF THE SUPREME COURT:

Constitution and addition of master of King's Bench and of Chancery Division and registrar of Probate Division advocated - 49,580-8

Sub-committee with power to make practice regulations, suggestion re - 49,589-603, 49,608-10

Summoning of - 49,604-8

SCRIVENERY DEPARTMENT, ROYAL COURTS OF JUSTICE:

Board:

Composition - 53,742

Control of department by - 53,741-5

Copying, variations in amount of work - 53,839-40

Formation of, account of - 53,764

Plan copying - 53,771

Profit shown by - 53,863, 53,871, 53,990

Separate copies of documents - 53,795-7

Typewriting:

Alteration possible, and consequent objection to, in law offices - 53,981-7

Extended use of, question of - 53,873-91

Judges opposed to - 53,876-8

Prohibited for certain documents by Committee of Control - 53,888-9, 53,891

Typist, woman, pay - 53,760-2

Women typists, question of increased employment of - 53,890-1, 53,900-8

Women, question as to increased employment for copying as well as typing - 53,900-16

Writers:

Ages and lengths of service 53,756-9, 53,964-5

Appointment:

Permanency of - 53,751

no Preference given to relatives of scriveners or officials - 53,966

Selection, method - 53,747-8

Appointment to third class clerks in Registrars Office, former system of giving copying after, until 160*l.* reached as clerk, and hardship of stopping of by Treasury 53,752-4, 53,973-5

Average amount of copying per hour - 53,812-5

Counting of folios:

by Men incapable of other work - 53,962-3

Rates of pay - 53,957-61

certain class of Drafts sent to, considered unfair - 53,804-8, 53,917-37, 53,953-6

Earnings, particulars re - 53,783-92

Examining work, and pay - 53,767-70

Gratuity on retirement, system and injustice of, and payment on average of whole service advocated - 53,843-54, App. Cl.

Hours - 53,793-5, 53,809-10

Insurance Act as applied to, working of 53,820-35

Legal knowledge not required - 53,798-803

no Medical inspection, but would be necessary if pension system introduced - 53,749-50

Number - 53,746

Offer to take Civil Service examination for certificate sent to writers by mistake - 53,855-60

Payment by piecework, advantages over salary system - 53,836-42

STRINGER, FRANCIS AUGUSTUS—continued.

SCRIVENERY DEPARTMENT, ROYAL COURTS OF JUSTICE—continued.

Writers—continued.

Pensions:

Advocated - - - - - 53,861-4

Contributory scheme:

would be Approved for future, but pensions advocated for present men - 53,988-92

Treasury proposal:

Better terms obtainable from insurance company - - - - - 53,865-70

Non-carrying out of, question of reason 53,866-72

Rates of pay, and comparison with prices paid outside - - - - - 53,763-82

Sickness, arrangement re pay during - 53,817-9

Vacations, arrangements - - - - - 53,816

Writing clerks, Ireland and Scotland, position of, and pensions desirable for - - 53,861-3, 53,991

Stringer, F. R., clerk in Central Office, reference 49,784-93

Stubbs, Dr., Clerk of Assize, reference - - 51,469-70

Supreme Court:

Acts of Parliament regulating, list of, Muir Mackenzie - - - - - 43,940-6

Central Office, see that title.

Clerks, see that title.

Departmental Committees on, list of, Muir Mackenzie 43,954-7

Divisions of, Muir Mackenzie - - - - - 43,901-22

Fees, amount determined so as to pay all expenses with exception of judges' salaries, Muir Mackenzie 43,933-6

History of, and list of documents referring to, Muir Mackenzie - - - - - 43,928-61

Masters and Registrars, see Masters and Registrars of the Supreme Court.

all Officers appointed since date of Judicature Acts, 1873, with one exception, Muir Mackenzie 43,928-32

Organisation, Muir Mackenzie - - - - - 43,962-89

Reform of 1873, Muir Mackenzie - - - - - 43,928-40, 44,468-70 draft Regulations for, Muir Mackenzie 44,159, 44,171-2, App. XCIV.

Rules and Orders of, Muir Mackenzie - 43,948-53

Salaries, source of, change by Salaries and Funds Act of 1869, Muir Mackenzie - - - - - 43,933

Self-supporting, except that judges' salaries paid in principle out of Consolidated Fund, Muir Mackenzie - - - - - 43,934-5, 55,372-8

Self-supporting, fact of being, should be remembered in considering organisation, &c., Muir Mackenzie 44,239, 55,372

SICK LEAVE:

Continued, question as to steps taken in case of, Muir Mackenzie - - - - - 44,392-5

draft Regulations, Muir Mackenzie App. XCIV.

System re salaries during, Muir Mackenzie 44,419-21

Taxing Office, see Taxing Office of the Supreme Court.

Taxing Masters:

Amalgamation with Chancery masters advocated, and no inequality in work anticipated, Caunt 50,144-83

APPOINTMENT:

from Clerks, not advocated, and reasons, Baker, 45,776-9, 45,821-8, J. R. B. Gregory, 47,217-22, 47,354-7; Austen-Cartmell, 47,699-700.

from First class clerks in Taxing Office and managing clerks advocated, Goodchild 47,477-85, 47,489

Method, and opinion re, Baker, 45,711, 45,715-9; Muir Mackenzie, 55,450-1.

Standing Committee to advise on, suggestion not agreed with, Baker - - - - - 45,717-8

Appointment on Rule Committee, suggestion and question of, Stringer, 49,580-8; Morton, 52,695-6.

Barristers appear before, occasionally, Austen-Cartmell - - - - - 47,702-3

Deputies, system and appointment generally as taxing master or Chancery master on vacancy, Baker 45,715-6

all London men, Baker - - - - - 45,807-10, 45,818-20 statutory Qualifications, Baker - - - - - 45,707

Taxing Masters—continued.

RETIREMENT, FIXED AGE:

not Advocated, Baker - - - - - 45,781-5 no Objection seen if late enough for man to earn sufficient pension, and system of added years would be approved, Austen-Cartmell 47,692-3

SOLICITORS AS:

would be Approved if they had had experience of taxing bills, Kentish - - - - - 54,325-6

Essential, J. R. B. Gregory, 47,207-13, 47,398-401; Austen-Cartmell, 47,695-9; Morton, 52,652.

Experience most valuable on the whole, but one or two members of the Bar as, useful, Baker 45,712-3 in all Recent appointments, Baker - - - - - 45,708-10

Solicitors' managing clerks as, would be most suitable, Kentish - - - - - 54,325-39

Vacations, two masters for about three weeks after commencement of, advocated, Kentish - 54,350-6

WORK:

no substantial Arrears, Gregory - - - - - 47,224-5

Delegation to clerks:

Extent of, at present, and examples, Bannehr, 55,104-7, 55,118-21; Porter, 55,114-6, 55,121-2; Blake, 55,121.

Suggestion re, and clerks to receive higher pay for, Bannehr - - - - - 55,104-7 certain Subsidiary parts of work might be performed by clerks, Macdonell - - - - - 45,567

Uniformity in, between different masters, steps taken to secure, Baker - - - - - 45,830-1

Well and fairly done, Gregory - - - - - 47,223

Taxing Office of the Supreme Court:

Amount of costs taxed, decrease owing to war, Baker 45,701-3

CLERKS:

Appointment:

Age of, Baker, 45,733-4; Porter, 55,001.

practically Confined to clerks in solicitors' offices, Austen-Cartmell - - - - - 47,739-41

Method, and success of, Baker - - - - - 45,725-32

Assigning of certain work to each class of, would be possible, but reduction in staff would not result, Bannehr - - - - - 55,100-2

Attachment to particular masters:

possible Advantage of change of system, Blake, Porter, Bannehr - - - - - 55,110-7

Necessary, Baker - - - - - 45,771-4

Attendance-book, Baker - - - - - 45,798-9 more Difficult for clerk to tax bills than master, Blake - - - - - 55,108-9 previous Experience in solicitor's office considered essential, and all men appointed recently have had, Baker - - - - - 45,735-9

First class, appointment direct of solicitor's managing clerk, suggested, Kentish - - 54,319

High standard of ability and capacity, Baker 45,732, 45,738

Higher classes, proportion lower than in other offices, Porter - - - - - 55,006-12

Holidays, and comparison with solicitor's office, Porter - - - - - 55,002-3

Hours:

Shorter than in solicitor's offices, Porter 55,002

Work frequently taken home, Baker - 45,796-7

Junior, work of, and responsibility, Baker 45,751-2, 45,815 previous Legal experience desirable, Kentish 54,313-5

no great Legal knowledge or experience necessary, Kentish - - - - - 54,443-53

all London men, Baker - - - - - 45,808-10

Number, Baker - - - - - 45,720

Order of Lord Chancellor and Treasury in 1881, and alteration of classification since without alteration of duties, Bannehr - - - 55,079-94

Organisation, Baker - - - - - 45,742-50, 45,811-4

Organisation, explanation, and reason, Muir Mackenzie - - - - - 55,275-80

Pooling of, masters should be consulted before any decision made, Muir Mackenzie - - - 55,281-2

Principal:

All, should be first class clerks, Bannehr 54,998, 55,079-96, 55,101

Taxing Office of the Supreme Court—continued.

CLERKS—continued.

Principal—continued.

having Served 11 years as second class clerk should be subject to promotion to first class
Baker - - - - - 45,766-70

Work of, Baker - - - - - 45,753-5

Promotion:

Method, Baker - - - - - 45,740-2, 45,762-5

Passing over of men in some cases, Baker
45,763-5

Retirement, age limit not advocated, Baker 45,786-8

Salaries:

Comparison with solicitor's office, Porter
55,004-5

Initial, no change considered necessary, Baker
45,816-7

Second class, length of service of man at top of,
Porter - - - - - 55,028

Sitting master's clerk, work now performed by third class clerk, and claim to higher position, Porter, 55,074-6, 55,087-91, 55,093; Bannehr
55,091-2

Skilled work done by both first class and junior,
Caunt - - - - - 50,285-93 should have been Solicitors' clerks, Gregory 47,214-6

Third class:

Checking of bills, work cannot be done in office hours, Porter - - - - - 55,063-73

previous Legal experience, Porter - 55,001 not considered Necessary, Goodchild - 47,485-8

Pay, claim to higher scale, Porter - 55,077

Promotion:

Rate of, and comparison with other offices,
Porter - - - - - 55,013-27

Small prospects of, and comparison with other offices, Porter - - - 55,006-12, 55,030

Restoration to position of second class, claim to,
Bannehr - - - 54,998, 55,079-99, 55,101

Selection from solicitor's office, advantage and disadvantage, Caunt - - - 50,288-91 having Served 11 years as, should be entitled to promotion to second class, Baker 45,770, 45,787-8

Work of, nature and importance, Porter
55,030-76

Formation 1902, Baker - - - - - 45,682-3

Hours, Baker - - - - - 45,795-7

Hours, question of extension, Caunt - 50,239-40

ONE, FOR WHOLE OF SUPREME COURT:

would be Possible now, but not much importance attached to, Muir Mackenzie - - - 44,156

Recommended by Lord Alverstone's Committee,
and carrying out of as regards King's Bench and Chancery divisions, Muir Mackenzie 44,154

Staff, Baker - - - - - 45,687

System, Muir Mackenzie - - - - - 44,154-5

Taxation under Solicitors' Acts, explanation, and procedure, Baker - - - - - 45,829

Taxing bills, particulars re work involved in, and procedure, Baker - - - - - 45,751-62

Total amount of costs taxed 1902-1904 and yearly average, and amount taken off, Baker - 45,700-1

Transfer of Admiralty work to, not advocated, and reasons, Baker, 45,802-3; Roscoe, 49,472-4;
Aspinall, 50,853-7.

Transfer of Bankruptcy work to, not advocated, and reasons, Baker, 45,806; Brougham, 49,126-7;
Hansell, 50,991-3.

TRANSFER OF LUNACY WORK TO:

no Advantage seen, and not advocated, Theobald
48,316, 48,494-8

Advocated by all the masters, but difference of opinion as regards other departments, Baker 45,800-6

TRANSFER OF PROBATE WORK TO:

not Advocated, Bayford - - - - - 48,151-3

Objection to, Musgrave - - - - - 44,617-27

VACATIONS:

Work, Baker - - - - - 45,789-91

Work practically stopped, Caunt - 50,258, 50,260

WORK:

no Delay in, Baker - - - - - 45,792-4

Taxing Office of the Supreme Court—continued.

WORK—continued.

Distribution between masters, method, Baker

45,704-6, 45,720-4

Nature of, Baker - - - - - 45,678-99, 45,706 specially Suited to solicitors, Winterbotham

49,997-9

Well done, Winterbotham, 49,996-7; Kentish
54,322-3

Teinds Office;

Clerk, appointment by promotion from another office, impossibility, Dunedin - - - - - 58,414-6

INCLUSION IN SINGLE SERVICE WITH COURT OF SESSION:

Impossibility, Salvesen, 58,949-50, 59,087; R.
Munro, 60,179; Scott-Dickson, 60,387-8.

Question as to possibility, Adam, 56,084-5, 56,257;
Mackenzie, 56,492-3.

Interim Clerk of, and assistant, not pensionable, Adam
55,997

Keeper, appointment, method, Dunedin - 58,441-2

Position of, Adam - - - - - 55,956-8 under Supervision of Clerk of Session in theory, Adam 56,085

Work of, Dodds - - - - - 55,528-30

Work diminishing, Mackenzie - - - - 56,494-5

THEOBALD, MASTER HENRY STUDDY, K.C.,

Senior Master in Lunacy - - - - - 48,303-649

Evidence referred to - - - - - 49,974

LUNACY DEPARTMENTS:

Amalgamation of Master, Visitors, and Board of Control:
certain Advantage that would be derived 48,378-9

Legislation passed by Parliament without dealing with - - - - - 48,322-8

Scheme of Lord Chancellor for - - - 48,317-21

Board of Control:
Functions, and certain overlapping with visitors
48,331-2, 48,370-7

two Lady members - - - - - 48,649

Clerks:

Appointment:
Competition among persons with certain legal experience would be approved - 48,422-4

Method and results satisfactory - 48,394-7, 48,541-2

to Third class generally, but occasionally to second - - - - - 48,391-3

Appointment as master would be possible if statutory qualification possessed - 48,513-6

no Attendance-book and question as to hours clerks arrive - - - - - 48,568-73

Chief, duties - - - - - 48,398-9

Competent men obtained - - - 48,397, 48,421

First class, importance of work and nature of 48,425-35

Legal experience, importance of - 48,424

Legal experience of some, and value of, but not essential - - - - - 48,632-8

Number in different classes - - - 48,385-8 not Overworked - - - - - 48,416-8

Promotion, system, and approval of 48,506-11,
48,543

Retirement, fixed age advocated strongly and ordinary Civil Service rule would be approved 48,481-6, 48,544-8

Salaries - - - - - 48,389-90

Third class:
Length of service - - - - - 48,628

Promotion: to Higher offices, found satisfactory
48,438-40, 48,562-7 to Second class - - - - - 48,614-25

Work of, and mechanical nature of, 48,436-8, 48,557-61

no regular Waiting list - - - - - 48,578-82

History of - - - - - 48,307

Masters:
Appeals from, rare - - - - - 48,367-8

Appointment, method, and qualifications
48,381-2

Classes of persons under care of, and number
48,334-54

Duties - - - - - 48,329-30, 48,354-7

THEOBALD, MASTER HENRY STUDDY, K.C.—
*continued.*LUNACY DEPARTMENTS—*continued.*Masters—continued.

- History of - - - - 48,307, 48,366
 Incompetence from ill health, &c., question as to possibility of dismissal - 48,593-600
 Number of lunatics dealt with by 48,333-4
 One, only:
 Economy of labour would result - 48,601-4 would be Sufficient, and question of method of organising work - - - 48,443-54
 Relation of visitors to, and satisfactory on the whole - - - - 48,455-63
 Retirement, fixed age advocated strongly and 72 suggested - - - - 48,481-9
 Salary - - - - - 48,383-4
 Two co-ordinate masters, unsatisfactoriness of system - - 48,441-54, 48,512, 48,551-6
 Office hours and work sometimes taken home 48,400-1, 48,419-20
 Orders, difficulties in forms of, and need for technical knowledge - - 48,427, 48,608-13
 Shorthand writer typists, recommendation of Master of the Rolls Committee in 1912 re employment of, not carried out, and question of reason - - - - 48,574-7
 Taxing work:
 System, and nature of work - 48,499-505
 Transfer to Central Taxing Office, no advantage seen and not advocated - 48,316, 48,494-8
 Transfer of administrative work to Chancery Division, reports of Commission, &c., for, and against - - - - 48,310-5
 Vacations and arrangement re work during 48,401-10, 48,588-9, 48,630-1
 Visitors:
 Appointment for 10 years only with option to continue would be approved 48,492, 48,550 in Country, desirable - 48,463-9, 48,474
 Duties - - - - 48,358-61, 48,533-6
 Legal, an anomalous position 48,530-2, 48,538-40
 Medical, salary - - - - 48,525 periodical Meetings with masters - 48,470-4, 48,639-40, 48,642 Number and question of - 48,464, 48,527-9 no Private practice - - - - 48,523-4
 Reports by:
 on Lunatics so found by inquisition not sent to masters unless asked for - 48,362-5
 Procedure on - - - - 48,475-7
 Retirement, fixed age advocated strongly 48,490-2 no Selection made of any particular visitor as a rule - - - - 48,517-21
 Suggestions perhaps made by, on visit, not embodied in reports - - - 48,478-80
 Women, would be useful in many cases 48,643-8
 Work, increase and reasons, and no increase in staff 48,410-6, 48,629

LUNATICS:

- Procedure by inquisition - - - 48,335-8
 Procedure by medical certificates - - 48,339-44
 Resignation tendered on becoming blind, but not accepted, 48,583-7; Loviburn - - 50,658

THOMSON, EDWARD PETER, Principal Extractor of the Court of Session: - - - 59,765-914
 Court of Session, transfer of offices to Parliament House or immediate neighbourhood, question of, but Extractor's Department would not be affected 59,832-4

EXTRACTOR'S DEPARTMENT:

Assistant Extractor:

- Appointment by Extractor should be discontinued and question of alternative method, legal experience must be secured - 59,800-8
 Hardship of position, and refusal of Treasury to allow retirement on pension or superannuation 59,795-9, 59,848-53
 Omission from Bill making appointment Crown appointment owing to intervention of then Principal Extractor - 59,797, 59,900-2
 Salary, arrangement re extra 100*l.* a year for certain period - - - - 59,880-8

THOMSON, EDWARD PETER—*continued.*EXTRACTOR'S DEPARTMENT—continued.

Clerk of the Records:

- Appointment by Extractor should be discontinued and question of alternative method, legal experience must be secured - 59,800-8
 Omission from Bill making appointment Crown appointment owing to intervention of then Principal Extractor - 59,797, 59,900-2
 Remuneration, recommendation of Committee of 1911 re improvement not carried out 59,809-11
 Clerks, reduction in number and payment by salary instead of by piece, and results 59,775-80, 59,782 under Control of Principal Clerk of Session 59,821, 59,841-6

Extracts:

- Acceleration of work - 59,794, 59,908-13
 final Custody of extracts by Deputy Clerk Register - - - - 59,772-4
 Long warrant, shortening not carried out, and legislation necessary - - - 59,783-4
 Preparation by Clerks of Session and deputies, impossibility, and separate department must be continued - - - - 59,819-20
 Shortening of - - - - 59,781-2
 Pensions advocated and 70 suggested as age for retirement - - - - 59,903-7

Principal Extractor:

Appointment:

- Crown, and fixed age limit - - 59,785-6 from Outside from members of the profession, should be continued - - - 59,914
 Political considerations - - - 59,894-9
 Personal performance of duties now - 59,793-4
 Private practice not allowed now - 59,790-3
 Promotion by transfer with certain other departments, desirable 59,821-3, 59,876-9, 59,889-93

Staff:

- Ages of, and periods of service - - 59,780
 Particulars re - - - - 59,775
 Position of - - - - 59,787-8, 5, 795

Typewriting:

- to be Introduced in future, and question of lady typists - - - - 59,811-8, 59,835-40
 Possibility of alteration not a practical difficulty 59,867-75

Women typists:

- should be Civil Service appointments, and some legal experience would be required 59,854-7, 59,861
 Promotion, no prospects seen - 59,859-66
 Work of - - - - 59,768-74

Interim Director of Chancery, amalgamation of office with that of Extractor not advocated 59,825, 59,827-9

Minute book, transfer to Extractor's Department desirable - - 59,824, 59,825-6, 59,829-31

Thomson, Mr., District Registrar, Wakefield, reference - - - - 46,601-6

Thrapston and Oundle County Court, see under County Courts.

Timmis, Mr., clerk in Chancery Registrars Office, reference - - - - 46,837-42, 46,926-8

TOLMIE, JOHN, and BORTHWICK, ANDREW L., engrossing clerks in Register of Deeds: 58,845-96
 Record Office, engrossing staff, rate of pay 58,854

REGISTER OF DEEDS, ENGROSSING STAFF:

- Average earnings - - - - 58,867-73
 Gratuity on retirement - - - - 58,876
 Holidays - - - - 58,873
 Hours - - - - 58,870-2
 Joining of sick society in Sasines Office not allowed 58,886-90
 Mutual arrangement to provide for holidays and sick pay, impossibility - - - 58,861-6
 Pensions, need for, and contributory scheme would be accepted - - - - 58,874-6, 58,891-5
 Rates of pay - 58,848-57, 58,882-5, 58,895-6
 Sick pay and holiday pay, desired - - 58,860-6
 Register of Sasines, engrossing staff, rate of pay 58,854, 58,858-9

Townesend, G. W., clerk in Central Office, reference 49,794-8

TOWNESEND, J. F., BROCKLESBY, A., and OVERBURY, R. L., clerks in Central Office :

52,199-459

CENTRAL OFFICE :

Chief of the staff, proposal approved - 52,402-8

Clerks :

Appointment :

Age of :

17 or 18, desirable - - - 52,367

17 to 25, advocated - 52,332, 52,380-1

20 to 30, drawback of - - - 52,374

Civil Service examination, standard should be raised - - - - - 52,346-9

Competition :

Higher class of man would not be obtained

52,365

no Objection seen - 52,350, 52,362-6

Method - - - - - 52,368-71

Nomination of man by each nominator, and competition between the three suggested

52,377

Professional examination not necessary 52,379

Vacancies, intimation of, no advantage seen

First class : 52,370

Proportion lower than in Chancery Division

Retirement: 52,273-5, 52,279-80

Fixed age :

Advantage of, but extension beyond 65 should be possible - - - 52,310-20

Enforcement might be for general good of the Service, &c. - - - 52,351-4

Value of long experience - - - 52,315-9

Salaries, little comparison possible with clerks in solicitors' offices - 52,333-7, 52,345First and second classes, work, comparison with that of solicitor's managing clerk - 52,340-2previous Legal experience not essential, public school man the class required - 52,333-4,

52,364, 52,372-6

Lump sum on retirement, decrease for every year in service after 65 - - - 52,399

Promotion :

to First class, more by selection advocated, and suggestion re consultation of senior clerks re 52,355-6, 52,366, 52,382, 52,392-6

small Prospects of, compared with other offices

52,332

Third class, rate of promotion, 1907-1913

52,299-305

Retirement, fixed age would be desirable for office - - - - - 52,208-9, 52,322-3Salaries, extra payment in addition to, in some cases - - - - - 52,450-4

Second class, salaries :

should be Raised - - - - 52,025-32 proposed Scale - - - - - 52,269-72

Third class :

Promotion :

Decrease in rate - - - - - 52,307

Effects of transfer to Court of Criminal Appeal - - - - - 52,255, 52,284-306to Second class, qualifying professional examination before, suggestion - 52,378,

52,382-91

probable Slow rate of, in future - 52,251-68

Salaries :

Inadequacy of, compared with other departments - - - 52,222-44, 52,439-49

proposed Scale - - - - - 52,250

Sitting in courts in capacity of registrar or associate - - - - - 52,455-9Four posts at 700*l.* suggested, to be filled by selection chiefly - - - 52,355, 52,357-61Judgments, clerks dealing with, question as to knowledge required - - - - 52,431-8Summons and Order Department, third class clerks, duties and knowledge required 52,413-30

Work, comparison with work in Chancery Division

52,275, 52,276-8

TRATMAN, W. S., AND PLEASS, G., Mapping staff,
Land Registry: - - - - - 55,189-248

LAND REGISTRY, MAPPING BRANCH :

Men transferred from Ordnance Survey :

Claim to be made pensionable - 55,192-213

no Reversions to Ordnance Survey - 55,208

TRATMAN, W. S., AND PLEASS, G.—continued.

LAND REGISTRY, MAPPING BRANCH—continued.

Pensions :

Suggestion - - - - - 55,247-8

same Terms as granted to Ordnance Survey officers would not be satisfactory - 55,243-5

Urgency of question - - - - 55,224

Superintendent, pay, increase of maximum advocated - - - - - 55,246

Superintendent surveyor, and assistants :

Claim to be made pensionable - - 55,229-37

Work of, and importance and responsibility of 55,231-42

Surveyors, salary - - - - - 55,215

Surveyor and assistant superintendent, work of 55,214-23, 55,223

Ordnance Survey, grant of pensions - 55,209-10,

55,225-8

Typewriting :

*see also under Particular Offices.*Advantages to be derived from use of, in office of Lunacy visitors, Mansfield - 48,748-52, 48,756

ALTERNATION :

no Importance attached to suggestion, MacDougall

55,803

Possible, and consequent objection to, in law offices,
Stringer - - - - - 53,981-7no greater Possibility seen than in manuscript, Kentish - - - - - 54,391, 54,455-6in Central Office, and use might be extended, Mac- donell - - - - - 45,618-20Desirable in district probate registries, but application not allowed, Shadwell - - - 52,866-8

INCREASED USE OF :

would be Possible in Probate Registry, Musgrave

46,200

Question of, Stringer, 53,873-91; Muir Mackenzie

55,385

no Reason seen against, and advantages of, Ken- tish - - - - - 54,385-91, 54,454Judges opposed to, Stringer - - - 53,876-8None in Bankruptcy Department, and question of,
Brougham - - - - - 49,064-75, 49,146-52Question of, Barnes, Manson - 49,337-43, 49,391-4found Satisfactory, Musgrave - - - 44,703-6Use of, in Admiralty Registry, Roscoe - 49,529Use of, extending rapidly in lawyers' offices, Mac-
Dougall - - - - - 55,884-5United Law Clerks Society, superannuation fund,
Worley - - - - - 48,292-5,

Upjohn, Mr., first class clerk, reference - 50,265-8

Vacations :

Attendance of witnesses and counsel and solicitors difficult to obtain, Macdonell - - 45,525ordinary Civil Service rules should apply as far as possible, Heath - - - - - 60,519-20no Complaints heard of undue length, Admiralty Registry, Aspinall - - - - - 50,844-9Draft regulations, Muir Mackenzie - App. XCIV.

LONG :

Courts should be continually open, Muir Mac- kenzie - - - - - 55,404-6Office hours during, Muir Mackenzie - 44,167Recommendation of Royal Commission on Delay in the King's Bench Division re offices being open after and before sittings of Courts :

would be Advantageous, J. R. B. Gregory

47,298-306

not Advocated, Goodchild - - - 47,458Two masters instead of one might sit during, J. R. B. Gregory, 47,293-4; Goodchild, 47,458-9;Caunt, 50,250-5.Two taxing masters for about three weeks after commencement of, advocated, Kentish 54,350-6

"Vacation business" :

Explanation, Muir Mackenzie - - 44,161-7more Liberal interpretation might be put on,
J. R. B. Gregory, 47,292-7; Goodchild, 47,457;Caunt, 50,256-7.Scope considered sufficient, Kentish - 54,356Particulars re, Muir Mackenzie - - 44,168Work during, little complaints re arrangements, but sitting on Monday, and 11-3, would be advantageous, Oakshott - - - - 47,076-7, 47,087-91

WADE, E. H., see HEMMONS, A., CROSS, F. W., &c. 51,908-52,198

Wade, Mr., clerk of assize, reference - 51,469-71

WALLACE, W. R., chief clerk, Privy Council (in attendance) - 50,730-812

Welbank, Mr., entry clerk, Chancery Registrars Office., reference - 46,923, 46,943-5

Whitelock, Mr., County Court Registrar, Birmingham opinions of, expressed in witnesses' evidence, Lowe 53,634

Whyte, Mr., Assistant Extractor:
 Hardship of position and refusal of Treasury to allow retirement on pension or superannuation, Thomson - 59,795-9, 59,848-53, 59,880-8
 Non-retirement at 70, question of, R. Munro 60,270-2

Wilde, Mr., clerk of assize, reference, Denman 51,482

Wilde, Mr., District Probate Registrar, Derby, reference - 52,753

Williams, Master B. Watkin, reference - 50,661

Williams, Mr., first class clerk, reference - 50,265-8

Wills:
 Keeping of copies, practice re, in Commissary Office of Edinburgh, Richardson - 56,834-8
 System of recording, Mackenzie - 56,587-91

WINTERBOTHAM, WILLIAM HOWARD, Official Solicitor - 49,887-50,056

CHANCERY DIVISION, WORK:
 Decreased, and possibility of office being over-staffed - 49,980-4
 Well done on the whole - 49,978-9

CHANCERY OFFICES, AMALGAMATION:
 Advocated and advantages to be derived 49,994, 50,046-50 no Reason seen against - 49,985-91

CHANCERY ORDERS:
 Drawing of minutes by counsel - 49,991
 Drawing of, work not difficult or complicated 49,991

Chancery Registrars, no necessity seen for attendance in court every day - 49,987-90

Law Courts, no rooms overcrowded - 50,002

LUNACY DEPARTMENTS:
 Masters, two co-ordinate masters, certain differences of practice, but no serious difficulty, and change of system not advocated - 49,973-7
 Staff, commendation of, and success of method of appointment - 49,971-2

OFFICIAL SOLICITOR OF THE SUPREME COURT:
 Chief assistant, salary - 49,902

Clerks:
 Appointment, retention of power of selection desired - 50,014-5
 Class of men - 50,010
 Comparison with other clerks in Law Courts 50,009

Difficulty of position of official solicitor with regard to - 49,961-8 not Employed on private work of official solicitor - 49,943-4

Establishment as permanent clerks:
 after Four or five years' experience on recommendation of Committee advocated and scheme 49,946-53, 49,956-60, 49,967-8
 Pensions to present men, question of counting past service - 50,051-6 previous Experience as solicitors' clerks not found necessary - 49,946

Holidays - 50,039-41

Number - 49,913

Position of, and unsatisfactoriness 49,914-25, 50,057-8 no Retiring allowances, and consequent difficulty of dispensing with services - 49,954-5

Salaries:
 Increase desired and reasons - 49,928-34
 System re payment and difficulty owing to 49,912, 50,004-6, 50,033-4

Training of, no difficulty experienced 50,009-13

Uncertainty of position in case of threatened radical changes - 50,044-5

Work, nature of - 50,009

Work and position, comparison with solicitors' managing clerks - 49,930-8

WINTERBOTHAM, WILLIAM HOWARD—cont.

OFFICIAL SOLICITOR OF THE SUPREME COURT—cont.

Hours - 50,038-9

Office, well ventilated, &c. - 50,000-1

Position of - 50,003-4

Private practice allowed and advantage of 49,890-2

Remuneration and arrangement re 49,902-11, 49,963-4

Solicitors on staff of, salaries - 49,939-42

Women employed sometimes to visit lunatics and fees paid - 50,016-22

Work of - 49,893-901, 50,016-32

SOLICITORS' OFFICES:

Clerks:
 Salaries, increase yearly unless reason to contrary 50,036-7

Selection of - 49,945-6

Managing Clerks:
 Pensions, varying practice re - 49,935-7
 Salaries - 49,932-4

TAXING OFFICE, WORK:
 specially Suited to solicitors - 49,997-9
 Well done - 49,996-7

Women:

EMPLOYMENT OF:

As many offices as possible should be thrown open to women, Haldane - 60,943 in Birmingham County Court, Bridgeman 51,871-3 in Central Scrivenery Board should be possible, Muir Mackenzie - 44,443 in County Courts Department of the Treasury, not considered and doubt as to possibility, Bridgeman - 51,874-80

Desirable, Muir Mackenzie - 55,379-88, 55,382-6

Example of working with male staff and with outside public, and no objection to, Neish 50,792-5 in Land Registry, see that title.

no Objection to; if admitted to legal profession, Muir Mackenzie - 44,443-4

Openings for, more women as typists, question of, Muir Mackenzie - 44,447-8 in Principal Probate Registry, see that title.

Question of, Salvesen - 59,083-6

Regular method of appointment would be necessary, Haldane - 60,964-5

OPENING OF LEGAL PROFESSION TO:

Advocated, Loreburn, 50,703-6; Haldane 61,003-4 would not be Objected to, Adam - 56,161

Suitability of conveyancing work for, Murray 57,969

WORLEY, THOMAS JAMES, President of the Solicitors' Managing Clerks Association: 48,224-48,302

Central Office, third class clerks, question as to time required to learn work - 48,265-76

CLERKS, APPOINTMENT:

Direct, to second or third class:
 Advocated, and solicitors' managing clerks should be specially considered for - 48,257-302

Age limit, 50, suggestion, and question in connection with pension - 48,283-9

Solicitors' managing clerks should not be compelled to obtain Civil Service certificate, and medical examination need not be retained 48,299-301 to Higher classes, if opportunity to be given to third class clerks, candidate should satisfy official that he is fully qualified to perform duties 48,297

Method, petitions by Solicitors' Managing Clerks Association to Lord Chancellor re - 48,257

Principal Probate Registry, previous legal experience considered desirable for clerks - 48,258-63

Solicitors' Managing Clerks:
 Claim to special consideration in appointments as clerks in legal offices - 48,257-302

Explanation, position, &c. - 48,227-37

Solicitors' Managing Clerks Association, objects, membership, &c. - 48,225-6, 48,238-56

Solicitors' offices, pensions on retirement would be rare - 48,290-1

United Law Clerks' Society, superannuation fund 48,292-5

WRENBURY, THE RIGHT HON LORD: 54,861-982

APPOINTMENT:

Committee:

to Advise Lord Chancellor, desirable, and suggestion - - - - - 54,864-5

Appointment by one person preferable 54,864

Competition, would be approved for junior posts, but must be combined with personal interview and inquiry 54,871-9, 54,942-6, 54,959-76

to Higher classes by promotion or from outside advocated, according to where better man obtainable 54,880-91, 54,929-41, 54,947-51, 54,980

by Lord Chancellor:

no Objection seen to - - - - - 54,870 should be Ultimate authority - - - - - 54,864-69

by Open competition as in Civil Service generally, question of - - - - - 54,965-76

Secondary school leaving certificate would be valuable - - - - - 54,960

Barristers' clerks, competency of, and avenues of employment should be opened to - - - - - 54,920-8

Chancery Masters, question of assistant masters 54,913

CHANCERY OFFICES:

Amalgamation of:

One office, with masters and registrars in close touch, suggested, distribution of work to be left to men themselves - - - - - 54,892-3

Possibility of one man performing work of registrar and master - - - - - 54,892, 54,899

Higher posts, no opinion re proportion of, dependent on work - - - - - 54,909-12

CHANCERY ORDERS:

Drawing of minutes by counsel - - - - - 54,995-8

Skilled body of men necessary for drawing up 54,892

WRENBURY, THE RIGHT HON. LORD—continued.

CHANCERY REGISTRARS:

Attachment to groups of masters, system not approved - - - - - 54,980-2

Attendance in Court:

Necessary in all but witness actions 54,900-8, 54,925-7 not Necessary from point of view of consultation by judge - - - - - 54,903-4

CLERKS:

Retirement, fixed age advocated, with power to extend and question of age - - - - - 54,914

Third class as self-contained body, proposal not approved, clerks should have access to highest offices - - - - - 54,880-91, 54,929-41, 54,977-9

JUDGES' CLERKS:

Appointment by judges important - - - - - 54,863

Competency of, and avenues of employment should be open to - - - - - 54,916-28

MASTERS AND REGISTRARS, FIXED AGE FOR RETIREMENT:

Advocated, with power to extend - - - - - 54,914

70 suggested - - - - - 54,914

PROMOTIONS:

proposed Committee to advise Lord Chancellor re appointments should also deal with - - - - - 54,866-8

by Merit advocated, some consideration being given to seniority - - - - - 54,580-91

Writing clerks, Ireland and Scotland, position of, and pensions desirable for, Stringer 53,861-3, 53,991

YEATES, J. R., Procurator Fiscal Depute, Dumbarton, see HORN, W., &c. - - - - - 58,746-58,844

